With regard to the first issue the lower Court ordered the defendant [plaintiff?] to pay the sum of Rs. 328-8, being the difference between the stamp on an application and the Court-fee on a plaint for property of the value of the subject-matter of the award. On the second and third issues the Court made the following remarks:—"It is to be observed that the plaintiff seeks in this case to have an arbitration award filed under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant contends that the award is collusive and fraudulent, the arbitrator guilty of corruption, and that matters, which were not intended to be referred to arbitration, have been included in the award. These objections of the defendant are such as are contemplated by ss. 520 and 521 of the Civil Procedure Code. When such objections are raised against an attempt to file an award under s. 525, the rule laid down by PONTIFEX, J., in the case of Siceeram Chowdhry v. Dinobundhoo Chowdhry (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 490), must be followed. His Lordship says. But in my opinion this goes to show that it was not intended that an award should be filed under s. 525 if either of the parties to the reference showed cause against it by affidavit or verified petition within the provisions of s. 520 or s. 521. In such cases I think it would be the duty of the Court, without enquiring into the validity of the cause so shown, to refuse the application to file the award, and to leave the applicant to his remedy by suit." In this case the defendant's objections amount to those mentioned in ss. 520 and 521, and when such objections have been [13] made, the plaintiff's prayer for filing the award must, under the above precedent, be refused.

"On all these accounts I am of opinion that the relief claimed by the plaintiff cannot be allowed to him in this case, and that his case must fail both on facts and law."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Kali Kissen Sen for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and TOTTENHAM, J.J.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that in this case there is no appeal, because the proceedings in the lower Court were held under ss. 525 and 526 of the Civil Procedure Code. While rejecting this appeal upon this ground, we are at the same time of opinion that the lower Court has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, in deciding the question raised in the second issue mentioned in its judgment, viz., whether the defendant did not agree to the terms of the ekrarnama, and they were fraudulently made. It appears from s. 526 that the Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate only upon the grounds of objection mentioned in ss. 520 and 521. Now, the defendant's objection that he did not agree to the terms of the ekrarnama, and that he was imposed upon in being persuaded to put his signature to the particular ekrarnama, which was the foundation of the award in this case, is not one which comes within the purview of ss. 520 and 521. When an objection of this nature was raised it was the duty of the Court to reject the application under s. 525, and refer the parties to a regular suit. No doubt the defendant also raised certain other objections which came within the purview of ss. 520 and 521, but the lower Court has not disposed of them, being of opinion that the mere fact of their having been mentioned in the petition of objection would oust it of its jurisdiction to deal with the case under ss. 525 and 526. Whether this view of the law is correct or not, it is not necessary to determine, but it is quite clear to us that the lower Court was not competent in this case to adjudicate upon the second issue raised before it, [14] viz., "whether the defendant did not agree to the terms of the ekrarnama and they were fraudulently made." We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Court by which the plaintiff's suit was dismissed, and direct that the application under s. 525 should be rejected upon the ground that the defendant had raised an objection which the Court under ss 525 and 526 could not dispose of. It further appears that the lower Court, upon the objection of the respondent before us on the 28th March 1881, directed that the plaintiff should pay a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 328-8-0 to make up the deficiency in the Court-fee stamp required for the plaint. The lower Court was evidently under the impression that this being a suit the plaintiff was bound to pay the Court-fee for a plaint according to the value of the suit as required by the Court Fees Act, but it has evidently overlooked the provision of the law that the application for enforcing an award under s. 525 shall be simply numbered and registered as a suit between the parties. It is not considered a suit, but it is to be numbered and registered as a suit. Therefore, under the Court Fees Act, the plaintiff appellant was only bound to pay the Court-fee for an application to the lower Court. The order of the lower Court, dated 28th March 1881, directing the plaintiff to pay Rs. 328-8 Court-fee stamp to make up the deficiency is therefore erroneous, and in making that order the Court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally. We, therefore, set aside that order also. That order being set aside the plaintiff will be entitled from the lower Court to a certificate for the refund of that stamp. Under the circumstances of this case, we think that in the lower Court each party should bear their own costs. In this Court the respondent is entitled to recover his costs from the appellant.

Fuseehun. Defendant

Kajo and others ... Plaintiffs.

Guardian—Guardianship of female minor—Mahomedan law—Regulation X of 1793, s. 21—Act XL of 1858, s. 27—Act IX of 1861.

The effect of s. 21 of Regulation X of 1793, and of s. 27 of Act XL of 1858 is, that no person other than a female shall in any case be entrusted with the guardianship of a female minor

* Appeal from Original Order No 316 of 1882, against the order of H. Beveridge, Esq., District Judge of Patna, dated the 31st July 1882.

Held, therefore, where a Mahomedan mother had by marrying a stranger forfeited her right to the guardianship of her children, that in the case of her female children their grandmother was entitled to be appointed guardian to the exclusion of male relatives. And the fact that the proceeding in which the right is sought to be established is under Act IX of 1861 does not affect the rule.

THIS was a suit under Act IX of 1861 for the guardianship of infant children, brought by their maternal grandmother, one Mussamut Kajo, against their mother, Mussamut Fuseehun, and their paternal uncles, Abu Saleh and Abu Mahomed. One of the children was a boy over the age of seven years, one a girl aged twelve years, who, according to Mahomedan law, had attained the age of puberty, and the other two children were girls under twelve years of age. The plaintiff claimed the guardianship of the children, on the ground that their mother had married a stranger.

The District Judge held that the mother had by marrying a stranger forfeited her right to the guardianship of the children, and appointed the uncles guardians of the boy and the eldest girl, and appointed the plaintiff guardian of the younger girls. Mussamut Fuseehun appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Branson and Baboo Saligram Singh for the Appellant.

Mr. Amir Ali and Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and WILKINSON, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—This case was once before this Court, and was remanded to be retried with reference to the observations made in the remand judgment.

[16] The proceeding in the lower Court was commenced by a suit under the provisions of Act IX of 1861 brought by Mussamut Kajo, the mother of Fuseehun, claiming the custody of her four grandchildren, i.e., the children of Fuseehun. One of these children is a boy, and the other three are girls. They are all admittedly under age.

The District Judge finds that the boy is over seven years of age, and the eldest girl, Beebee Sulima, is nearly twelve years old, and has arrived at puberty in the sense in which that term is used in the Mahomedan law.

There was a counter-application made by Abu Saleh and Abu Mahomed, their uncles, and Mussamut Sobi, their father's mother, in which they opposed Mussamut Kajo's claim, and set up their right to the guardianship of these minor children.

The Judge has found that the other two girls, viz., Surah and Habilea, have not yet arrived at puberty. Upon these findings he has declared that Mussamut Kajo is entitled to the custody of these two girls, and the uncles to the custody of the boy and Beebee Sulima. It was admitted before the learned Judge that the mother Fuseehun, having contracted a second marriage with a stranger, had forfeited her superior right of guardianship under the Mahomedan law.

In this appeal the order of the lower Court as regards the two younger girls is not questioned, but it has been contended that Mussamut Kajo is also entitled to the guardianship of the other two children.

So far as the question of guardianship of the boy is concerned, we see no reason to interfere with the order of the lower Court. It is in strict accordance with the provisions of the Mahomedan law on the subject.

But as regards the girl Sulima, we are of opinion that the order of the lower Court is not correct. It seems to us that the law upon this subject has been laid down by the Legislature, which, if it has modified the Mahomedan law, must govern our decision.

In s. 21, Regulation X of 1793, it was enacted that the guardianship of a female minor shall in no instance be entrusted to a person other than a female.

[17] This law was applicable to persons whose estates were under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards. But as regards minors, whose property could not be brought under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, it was enacted by s. 2 of Act XL of 1858 that the care of the persons of such minors, and the charge of their property, shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. Section 27 of that Act says that nothing in this Act shall authorize the appointment of any person other than a female as the guardian of the person of a female.

Whatever may have been the provisions of the Mahomedan law upon the subject, the two legislative enactments referred to above have laid it down that a person, other than a female, shall in no case be entrusted with the guardianship of a female minor. The District Judge, referring to s. 27 of Act XL of 1858, says that the parties were not bound by the provisions of that section, because the proceeding before him was under Act IX of 1861. But this latter Act only lays down the procedure regulating a suit for the custody of minor children by guardians or other person entitled to their custody.

The Regulation and the Act referred to above on the subject of the guardianship of the person of a female minor laying down the substantive law with reference thereto must be followed in a suit under Act IX of 1861.

Although the order of the lower Court is in strict accordance with the Mahomedan law, as laid down in Baillic's Digest and Hamilton's Hadya, we may as well point out here that the law laid down by the late Mahomedan Jurists is more in accordance with the spirit of the legislative enactments referred to above. This is pointed out in a recent work of Mahomedan law by Syed Amir Ali, who, in page 196, says: "Among the Hanafis the mother is entitled to the custody of her daughter until she arrives at puberty. Among the Maliki Shafees and Hanabalīs the custody continues until she is married. According to the judgment of the Court of Algiers it appears that in several notable instances the Hanafi Kajis have followed the Maliki doctrines, and decided that the mother is entitled to the custody of her daughters until their marriage."

[18] The result is that the order of the lower Court as regards Beebee Sulma will be set aside, and Mussamut Kajo will be declared entitled to the guardianship of her person. The parties will bear their own costs.

NOTES

[GUARDIANSHIP—

All the enactments referred to in the judgment of this case (Regulation X of 1793, Act XL of 1858, Act IX of 1861) have been repealed by the Guardians and Wards Act (Act VIII of 1890) which lays down both the law and the procedure to be followed.

Section 17 says:—(a) In appointing or declaring the guardians of a minor, the Court shall subject to the provisions of this section, be guided by what, consistently with the law to which the minor is subject appears in the circumstances to be for the welfare of the minor.

(b) In considering what will be for the welfare of the minor, the Court shall have regard to the age, sex and religion of the minor, the character and capacity of the proposed guardian and his nearness of kin to the minor, the wishes if any of a deceased parent, and any existing or previous relations of the proposed guardian with the minor or his property

(c) If the minor is old enough to form an intelligent preference, the Court may consider that preference. The above provisions are in conformity with the Mahomedan law and the Courts are bound to administer strictly in all questions affecting the custody of Moslem children the provisions of the Mussalman law regarding Hizanat (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. II, p. 803.)

In the matter of the petition of Anand Lall Bera and others

Anand Lall Bera and others

versus

The Empress, on the prosecution of Azim, peon

Public servant—Resistance to public servant—Warrant—Return of warrant—Penal Code, s 183.

A person was convicted under s 183 of the Penal Code for offering resistance to the attachment of property by a public servant. The offence was committed on the 4th of February 1883, but the warrant under which the public servant acted was returnable on or before the previous day. Held that the conviction was bad.

IN this case the accused were found guilty by the Deputy Magistrate of Tumlook, in that they offered resistance to the taking of property by the lawful authority of a public servant, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s 183 of the Penal Code. The facts were that one Azim, a revenue peon in the service of Government, was charged with the execution of a warrant under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1880, for the attachment of the moveables of one Tulseeram Bera. On the 4th of February last, the peon proceeded to execute the warrant, and while doing so, he met with obstruction and resistance from the accused. The warrant under which the peon acted was returnable on or before the 3rd of February.

The accused moved the High Court to quash the order of the Magistrate.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey and Baboo Dwarkanath Mookerjee for the Petitioners.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by [19] Prinsep, J.—The petitioners were convicted under s 183 of the Penal Code for offering resistance to an attachment of the property of one Tulseeram Bera, which the Deputy Collector had ordered in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Beng Act VII) of 1880. The warrant under which the peon acted stated that the return should be made on or before the 3rd February.

The resistance, it has been found in the present case, was offered on the 4th February, and it is contended before us that under such circumstances, no lawful order was in force, and consequently the prisoner has committed no offence. It appears to us that, having regard to the terms of the second clause of s. 251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this objection is fatal to the conviction, and that the conviction, therefore, must be set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded.

* Criminal Motion No. 166 of 1883, against the order of Baboo U. C. Batavyal, Deputy Magistrate of Tumlook, dated the 6th April 1883.

Conviction set aside.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Probate—Application for order revoking probate—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 243—Locus standi of attaching creditor of next-of-kin to apply for revocation.

A will, on the evidence, was held duly proved. An application for revocation of probate was made by a judgment-creditor who had attached his debtor's right, title, and interest in family estate, whereof a one-fourth share would, but for this will, which made other dispositions, have been inherited by such debtor. Whether such an attaching creditor can oppose the grant of probate, or apply to have it revoked, is a matter of grave doubt, at least, in a case which is not founded on the ground that the probate has been obtained in fraud of creditors, Baynath Sahar v. Desputty Singh (I L R 2 Cal., 208, s c, 25 Suth W. R., 189) referred to, and Komolochun Dutt v Nilruttun Mundle (I. L R., 4 Cal., 360) distinguished.

[20] APPEALS consolidated and heard as one from two decrees of the High Court (10th September 1880), founded on one judgment, reversing decrees of the Judge of the Nuddea district (24th March 1879).

The judgment of the High Court, against which these appeals were preferred, disposed of two suits relating to the execution of the Will of the late Bamundas Mookerjee of Nuddea. One of the suits had been instituted on the 1st April 1876 by Bhoyharini Debi, wife of Tarachurn Mookerjee, to obtain a declaration of her right to a four annas share of a zamindari under the Will of Bamundas Mookerjee, her husband's father. The latter died on the 5th of January 1876, having devised by Will his zamindari and other property to his sons (of whom one was the respondent, Umanath Mookerjee), and grandsons, but excluding from the inheritance, except as to a house for residence and a small legacy for maintenance, his son Taranath. This son's share, had it gone to him, would have been absorbed in payment of his debts; and accordingly it was withheld from him, and was given instead to Bhoyharini, his wife, as a provision for herself and her family. Bhoyharini's suit was brought against the Raja Nilmoni Singh Deo, who, holding decrees against Taranath for rent, had immediately, on his father's death, attached his share in the immoveable property understood to belong to the family.

This attachment had been held good, so far as that objection filed against it under s 246 of Act VIII of 1859 had been disallowed on the 11th February 1876.

The other proceeding out of which this appeal arose was an application by the Raja as Taranath's creditor, made on the 22nd December 1876, under s. 234 of Act X of 1865 (The Indian Succession Act), to obtain revocation of the probate of the Will of the said Bamundas, which on the day before, on the 21st December, had been granted to his sons (excepting Taranath), his grandsons, and Bhoyharini.

On the 20th February preceding, the same parties had obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 for collecting the debts due to the deceased Bamundas.

The Raja's petition for revocation, and Bhoyharini's suit, were heard together [21] On the 3rd September 1877 the Judge of the Nuddea district gave judgment in both, and treating the question as being one between the Raja on the one side and Bhoyharini on the other, regarding the genuineness of the Will, he pronounced against it. He made an order revoking the probate. This order was, however, defective in this, that the Court had acted in disposing of the case in the above manner, without due notice to the members of the family, other than Bhoyharini, interested in the Will.

An appeal to the High Court (MARKBY, J., and PRINSEP, J.) resulted in a remand on July 9th, 1878, in regard to the above defect. On a re-hearing the Nuddea Court, then represented by another District Judge, gave a similar decision against the Will on the 24th March 1879.

This decision was reversed by the High Court on the 10th September 1880. in the judgment under appeal, delivered by MORRIS, J. (with the concurrence of PRINSEP, J.), the Will, on a complete view of the evidence, being held to have been duly executed. So much of that judgment as related to the right of Raja Nilmoni Singh to come forward as attaching creditor of Taranath and contest the factum of his father's Will, is reported under the title of In the Matter of the Petition of Nilmoni Singh, Umanath Mukhopadhyaya v. Nilmoni Singh (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 431).

The two Judges of the High Court were of opinion that a judgment-creditor who has attached property of his debtor, believed to have been inherited from his deceased father, may, where a Will of such father, at variance with the debtor's interests, is set up, apply for revocation of the order granting probate, if he has reason for disputing the genuineness of the Will. The High Court followed the law laid down in Komolochun Dutt v. Nibruttun Mundle (I. L. R., 4 Cal. 360).

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the Appellant, the Raja Nilmoni Singh Deo, Bahadur.

Mr. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Respondents, Umanath Mookerjee, Bhoyharini Debi, and others.

Mr. R. V. Doyne was heard upon the question of fact, whether the Will had been duly executed. He argued that the conclusion [22] of the two District Judges, given at distinct times, was correct, and that the deceased Bamundas Mookerjee had not executed it, whatever his intention might have been in having the draft prepared • Counsel for the respondents were not called upon.

• Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—The question in these appeals relates to the execution of the Will of Bamundas Mookerjee, a large landed proprietor in the district of Nuddea, in Bengal, who died on the 7th of January 1875. He had at the time of his death three sons living, Umanath, Taranath, and Srinath, and three grandsons, Girendronath, Horendronath, and Norendronath (the sons of a deceased son named Arundas). The respondent Bhoyharini is the wife of Taranath. The appellant, the Raja, had in the years 1863 and 1864 obtained decrees against Taranath for over Rs. 60,000 in the district of Manbhoom, which had in 1872 been transferred into the district of Nuddea for execution

Immediately after the death of Bamundas, namely, on the 11th of January 1875, Umanath, Srinath, the three grandsons, and Bhoyharini presented a petition to the District Court of Nuddea, stating that Bamundas had given the whole of his property to them, by a Will dated 24th Pous 1281 (7th January 1875), and praying for a certificate for collecting the debts due to the deceased under Act XXVII of 1860. A deposition of Norendronath, one of the witnesses to the Will, proving its execution, was made on the 5th of February, and on the 20th of February the certificate was granted. On the 2nd of February the Raja, the appellant, applied for the attachment of the right, title, and interest of Taranath in certain immoveable property of the deceased Bamundas, and the attachment was made a few days after. Thereupon Umanath, Srinath, the grandsons, and Bhoyharini presented a petition to the District Court of Nuddea, under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 (the then Procedure Code) claiming to be in possession under the Will. On the 29th of June their claim was disallowed by the Officiating Judge, but by an order of the High Court, dated the 7th of September 1875, the order of disallowance was set aside, and the Court was instructed to take up the claim again, with special [23] reference to the question of possession. The Officiating Judge having called upon Bhoyharini to prove the execution of the Will (which he ought not to have done), and tried the case as if the question was the validity of the Will. The result of the hearing on the remand was that, on the 11th of February 1876, three-fourths of Bamundas' share and interest in the estates under attachment were released, and the attachment was held good as to the remaining one-fourth. The s. 246 provides that the order passed by the Court under that section shall not be subject to appeal, but the party against whom the order may be given shall be at liberty to bring a suit to establish his right within one year from the date of the order. Accordingly, on the 1st of April 1876, Bhoyharini filed her plaint in the District Court of Nuddea for a declaration of her right under the Will to a fourth share of the Zamindaries, etc., mentioned in the schedule thereto, left by Bamundas Mookerjee, situated within the jurisdiction of the Court. The suit was brought against the Raja, and against Taranath as a pro forma defendant. The Raja in his written statement, filed on the 7th of June 1876, objected that, as no probate had been taken out under the Will, as was required by law, the plaintiff was not entitled to bring a suit for declaration of her right, and alleged that Bamundas did not execute the Will, and that it was fabricated after his death by Taranath and his co-sharers in order to deprive him of the money due to him.

Before this Umanath, Srinath, Bhoyharini and the grandsons had, on the 14th of March 1876, presented a petition to the Judge of Nuddea, praying that probate of the Will, or if the Court thought they were not appointed executors under it, letters of administration with the Will annexed might be granted to them. The 24th of March was fixed for the hearing, and notice was ordered to be issued. On that date an order was made for granting probate, but before it was given Bhoyharini was to put in her husband's consent to her taking probate. It was not until the 21st of December 1876 that the Judge granted the certificate of probate, and what caused the delay in granting it did not appear. On the next day, the 22nd of December, the Raja presented a petition to the Judge of Nuddea, under [24] s. 234 of Act X of 1865, praying for an order setting aside the probate, on the ground that as by the Will the right of his debtor Taranath had, in a manner, been destroyed, and the Will had been got up with a view to defraud him, he ought to have had notice of the application for probate, and he had not had notice. Bhoyharini in her petition in answer, said that the Will was genuine, and was duly executed by Bamundas, and that the Raja could not become an objector in the probate case, and, consequently, was not entitled to apply to have it set aside.

It may be well to mention here that by Act XXI of 1870, the Hindu Wills Act, certain portions of Act X of 1865, the Indian Succession Act, are made applicable to Wills of Hindus in the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and these portions include the different sections of the Act of 1865, which have been referred to in the course of this litigation.

The petition of the Raja for revocation of the probate and the suit by Bhoyharini were heard together, and issues were framed by the first Court on the 7th of June 1876.

The principal, and now the only material one is, was any Will executed by Bamundas on the 7th of January 1875? Evidence was given on both sides, and the Officiating Judge of Nuddea, on the 3rd of September 1877, ordered the probate to be revoked and dismissed Bhoyharini's suit against the Raja. Bhoyharini appealed to the High Court, which, on the 9th of July 1878, set aside the order as irregular, on the ground that notice of the application to revoke the probate had not been given to all the members of the family who were interested under the Will, the parties being at liberty to take fresh proceedings upon the original petition of the Raja. The decree in the suit by Bhoyharini was also set aside, and the case remanded to the lower Court to be reheard.

Fresh proceedings were taken and more witnesses were examined, and on the 24th of March 1879, the Judge of Nuddea gave his judgment. He first considered the question whether the Raja was entitled to be heard against the Will, and held that holding a decree against Taranath, and having attached Taranath's supposed share of the paternal estate immediately after the death of the father, the Raja did acquire such an interest in it as entitled him to oppose probate of the Will, which he contended was not executed by his debtor's father, and which purported to disinherit the debtor. He then held that the Will was not genuine, saying he concurred generally in the reasons for the conclusion that the Will was not executed by Bamundas given by the Officiating Judge in the judgment of the 3rd of September 1877. He said, however, that the propounders of the Will had succeeded in showing, beyond a doubt, that Bamundas did certainly contemplate the execution of such a Will, and that he caused a draft to be made. The probate granted on the 21st December 1876 was ordered to be cancelled, and the suit by Bhoyharini was dismissed with costs. The parties appealed to the High Court, which gave judgment on the 10th of September 1880. The Court held that the Raja had such an interest in the property of the deceased as entitled him to dispute the genuineness of a Will which purported to divert the succession from Taranath to another, but that the Will was duly executed by Bamundas, and made an order in the application for revocation of the probate, and a decree in the suit by Bhoyharini accordingly, from which order and decree the Raja has appealed to Her Majesty in Council. The following passage from the judgment of Mr. Justice MORRIS states the reasons for the decision upon the former question:—

“ The first question that arises is, whether Nilmoni Singh, as a creditor of Taranath, has any locus standi, whether he has such an interest in the estate of the deceased Bamundas as gives him a right to apply for revocation of the probate granted of his Will. In support of the proposition that he cannot apply for revocation of probate, several authorities have been cited. In the matter of Mee Tsee (15 W. R., 351), petitioner, Mr. Justice NORMAN, delivering the judgment of the Court, says, ‘ We have no doubt of the soundness of the proposition that a person who is not next-of-kin, and who has no interest in the estate of a testator, has no right to oppose the grant of the probate or dispute the validity of the Will. In England it has been held, that even a creditor cannot controvert the validity of a Will, because it is a matter of indifference whether he should receive his debt from the executor or from an administrator.’ Then the case of [26] Barj Nath Sahar v. Desputty Singh (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 208, 25 W. R., 489) is quoted to show that the learned Judges there considered that, in this country too, creditors of the next-of-kin to the deceased are not entitled to have citation served upon them under s. 250, Act X of 1865, calling upon them ‘ to come and see the proceedings before the grant of probate or letters of administration.’ But this case came subsequently under the consideration of another Bench of this Court of whom a member of the present Bench was one, in connection with the case of Komollochun Dutt v. Nibruttun Mundle (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 360), and Mr. Justice MARKBY, in giving the judgment, made the following observations:— ‘ If we thought that the decision in Barj Nath Sahar v. Desputty Singh (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 208, 25 W. R. 489) went as far as to hold that a purchaser or an attaching creditor could not apply for revocation of a probate, we should, as at present advised, refer the point to be settled by a Full Bench, because we should disagree from such a ruling.’ We entirely concur in the opinion here expressed, and consider that it is applicable to, and meets the circumstances of, the present case. There is no question that Nilmoni Singh, immediately after the death of Bamundas, and before probate of his alleged Will had been taken out, attached the property, which is the subject of the suit of Bhoyharini, as the property of his judgment-debtor, Taranath, to which he had succeeded on the death of his father owing to the devolution of the property of Bamundas by natural succession to Taranath.”

In the case of Barj Nath Sahar v. Desputty Singh (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 208, 25 W. R., 489), a Hindu testator died, leaving B, alleged to be his adopted son, and C, who would be his heir in default of adoption, and made a Will of which B applied for probate, and it was held under the Succession Act and Hindu Wills Act that creditors of C were not parties having any interest in the estate of the deceased, and were therefore not entitled to oppose the grant of probate. Their Lordships think this was a right decision.

In Komollochun Dutt v. Nibruttun Mundle (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 360), the facts were that Komollochun and Joynarain, two brothers, originally held possession of certain joint properties in which they each had a half share. On the 8th of January 1872 Joynarain died childless, leaving a widow, who would, therefore, under the Hindu law, succeed to his estates. It did not appear that she ever got into possession of her husband's property, and on the 13th [27] November 1875 Komollochun obtained probate of a Will, executed by Joynarain shortly before his death. Before the grant of probate, namely, in June 1875, the widow had sold her interest in her husband's estate to the plaintiff, Nilruttun, who brought a suit to recover her share of the property upon the strength of his purchase, alleging the Will to be a forgery. Komolochun, who was in possession, defended the suit, upon the ground that the Will was genuine, and that by it the property was bequeathed to himself for certain purposes therein specified. The Will having been found to be a forgery, the District Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for the share of the property which had belonged to the deceased. The High Court held that the probate was conclusive, and that an application should have been made to revoke it, and they postponed the final decision until the plaintiff had had an opportunity of making one. The whole passage, from which Mr. Justice MORRIS quotes a part, is as follows —

• “ If this procedure be followed we do not see what are the disastrous consequences of holding probate to be conclusive, to which the District Judge alludes. It was said that the plaintiff in this case would be remediless, because according to the decision in Bainath Sahai v. Desputty Singh (I L R, 2 Cal. 208, 25 W R, 489) he could not apply to revoke the probate. The point is not directly before us but, as at present advised, we think that the plaintiff could apply to revoke the probate. He is interested by assignment in the estate of the deceased, and if there be no Will he has a good title, at any rate, against Komolochun, as far as the Will is concerned, whether the sale by the widow Bogolamoye would be good as against the reversioners does not appear to have been raised and tried, we do not, therefore, see why he should not apply to revoke the probate. The ground of the decision in Bainath Sahai v. Desputty Singh (I. L R, 2 Cal., 208, 25 W. R., 489) was that the party there, a creditor of one of the next-of-kin, had no interest in the estate of the deceased. A purchaser from the next-of-kin is in a very different position from a creditor. If we thought that that decision went as far as to hold that a purchaser, or an attaching creditor, could not apply for revocation of a probate, we should, as at present advised, refer the point to be settled by a Full Bench, because we should disagree from such a ruling ”

The case in which this judgment was given was that of a purchaser from the heir, but no distinction is made between a purchaser and an attaching creditor. Assuming that a purchaser can oppose the grant of a probate, or apply to have it revoked [28] (which their Lordships do not decide), they entertain grave doubts whether an attaching creditor can do so, at least in a case which is not founded on the ground that the probate has been obtained in fraud of creditors. But as, after hearing the appellant's Counsel upon the question of the execution of the Will, their Lordships did not consider it necessary to hear the Counsel for the respondents, the question whether the Raja could apply for the revocation of the probate has not been argued before them, and therefore they give no final opinion upon it.

They consider that the appeal should be decided in favour of the respondents, on the ground that the High Court was right in holding that the Will was duly executed by the testator. The effect of the Will is to give the share of Taranath to his wife Bhojharini, and it is expressly stated in it that it is the object of the testator to prevent Taranath's share falling into the hands of his creditors. Some time before his death the testator had had a draft Will prepared, and sent it to be inspected by two members of his family, and a vakeel named Parasaram Mustafi. The latter drew up a revised draft Will, and took it to Bansbaria, where Bamundas then resided. He approved of it, and directed Chunderkant Surbogy to take and show it to his sons at Birnuggur, where the family residence was. This he did, and returned with it to Bansbaria. On the day of his return, and the next day, Bamundas was unwell; but on the day after he asked him about the draft, and on Chunderkant saying that he had shown it to his sons and grandsons, who had no objection to offer, he directed him to make a fair copy of it. The fair copy was made, and was read and approved by Bamundas, and then entrusted to his grandson Norendronath to keep. This was done a fortnight before his death, and the respondents' case was that, on the evening on which he died he asked for the Will and duly executed it. The Raja's case was that he died without having executed it, being too unwell to do so, and that it was taken to Birnuggur, and his signature put to it there on the next day. The Will was attested by Norendronath and Chunderkant Mookerjee, who was the gomashita at Birnuggur, and they deposed to its execution as required by the Hindu Wills Act. Dinonath Sen, the gomashita at Bansbaria, did not attest it, but he deposed to having [29] seen it executed. It was argued that his not attesting showed that the signature of Bamundas was forged, and that the signatures of the witnesses were put to the Will at Birnuggur on the next day when Dinonath was not there. Other circumstances of a similar character were relied upon as suspicious, and a case to prove that Bamundas died suddenly under entirely different circumstances from those described by the witnesses of the respondents was at first set up by the Raja, but it broke down, and was not pressed either in the first Court or in the High Court. After a full examination of the evidence and the judgments of the first Court on the original hearing and the remand, the High Court came to the conclusion that there was no sufficient reason for disbelieving the testimony of the attesting witnesses and Dinonath Sen, and that it was impossible to discredit the direct and indirect evidence which was presented to prove the genuineness of the Will. Their Lordships have come to the same conclusion. Looking at the facts which are not disputed, it appears to them that, so far from there being ground for disbelieving the witnesses, it is more probable that Bamundas carried out his intention to make the Will, and did execute it in the manner stated, than that he died so suddenly as to be unable to do so.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court, and to dismiss the appeal, the costs of which will be paid by the appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[WHO MAY APPLY FOR THE REVOCATION OF A PROBATE—

An application for the revocation of a probate can only be made by a person claiming an interest in the estate (i.e.) whose interest would be affected if the will in question was the legal will of the testator, 15 W. R. C. R. 351. See also 21 Cal. 697. An heir or one who is interested to support a previous will (17 Mad. 373) a presumptive reversioner even during the lifetime of the widow (8 Cal. 570 21 Cal. 539), a widow, though the testator may have left sons, (11 Cal. 492 1 C. W. N. 602) an assignee or mortgagee of an heir's interest in the estate (4 Cal. 360 20 Cal. 37)—all these were held to be persons claiming such an interest in the estate.

But an ordinary creditor of an heir of the testator would not, as such, have any interest to apply for revocation, 2 Cal. 208 17 Mad. 373... 25 W. R. C. R. 489. The Privy Council in 10 Cal. 19 entertained grave doubts whether an attaching creditor can apply for a revocation of probate at least in a case which is not founded on the ground that the probate has been obtained in fraud of creditors. In a subsequent case the Calcutta High Court purporting to act on the opinion expressed by the Judicial Committee held that an attaching creditor was entitled to oppose the grant of probate on the ground of forgery and that it was in fraud of creditors. See also 28 Cal. 441, 16 C. W. N. 1099=15 I. C. 686=17 O. L. J. 230.

A creditor of the testator would not as such have any interest to oppose the will, nor a person disputing the right of the testator to deal with certain property as his own, 17 Cal. 48.

The objections referred to above should be taken at the earliest opportunity, 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 268.]

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

*Mortgage--sale of perpetual lease, with conditional agreement to sell back to vendor, not amounting to mortgage—Reservation of

A purchaser of land, another person advancing the purchase-money for him, granted to the latter a mokurari potta or perpetual lease, not as a security for the debt, but as an absolute acquittance of it. At the same time an ekrarnama was executed, whereby it was stipulated that when the grantor or his heirs should pay to the grantee or his heirs the amount of the above debt without interest, out of his or their own moneys without borrowing from any other person then the potta should be cancelled, the grantor having no claim to mesne profits during the possession of the mpkuraridai

Held that, with regard to the terms of the instruments, and the circumstances under which they were made, this transaction was not a contract of mortgage, but evidence of a sale and acquittance of a debt with power reserved to the vendor to repurchase under certain conditions personal to him

Two appeals, consolidated and heard as one, from two decrees (21st July, 1880) of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, affirming two decrees (2nd and 3rd July 1879) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore.

The first of these appeals arose out of a suit brought on 19th March 1879, by the appellant against the respondents, and one Chuknarain Singh, since deceased. The second arose out of proceedings taken in execution of a decree obtained by the appellant against the last-named person, in which the respondent, Luchmi Purshad, had intervened as objector. Both related to interests in fifty-two villages, part of taluk Barasha in the Bhagulpore district, and both raised the question whether the appellant, Situl Purshad, in the one case, as purchaser of an interest in part of that estate, and in the other case, as decree-holder who had attached another part, had or had not acquired through Chuknarain a right to treat the property as subject to a mortgage which he was entitled to redeem.

[31] A mokurari potta of all the abovementioned villages had been executed by Chuknarain in favour of the predecessor in estate of Luchmi Purshad, the respondent, a right being reserved to Chuknarain, by ekrarnama of even date with the potta, to cancel the lease on making a certain payment out of his own money without borrowing for the purpose. Whether this transaction was in effect a mortgage from which the estate was redeemable by Chuknarain's assignee was the question in dispute.

Chuknaram was half-brother of Ramchurn Singh, who was father of Luchmi Purshad, and had a brother Chundi Purshad Singh. In 1857 these three brothers purchased for Rs. 1,30,000 a fourteen-annas share in taluk Barasha, Ramchurn taking a ten-annas share, and the other two each taking two annas. Ramchurn furnished the whole purchase-money, and for the price of the others' shares he obtained a decree in September 1862. This not being paid, Ramchurn took from Chuknaram, on the 15th January 1864, a mokurari potta of his share, consisting of fifty-two villages. The potta contained a statement that Rs. 30,005 were paid as consideration for it, this sum being made up of Chuknaram's debt under the decree of 1862, other amounts due by him, and a sum of Rs. 10,000 paid in cash.

On the same date Ramchurn Singh by ekrarnama bound himself and his heirs to restore the property to either Chuknaram or his heirs, whenever he or they should pay the Rs. 30,005 without interest.

In May 1865 Chuknaram mortgaged his share above mentioned to the plaintiff (nominally to another person) for Rs. 50,000. This was paid off by sale to the plaintiff of Chuknaram's share in twenty-one of the fifty-two villages. The present question was not affected by an alteration, on a family allotment of the villages forming part of Chuknaram's share, nor by disputes which occurred in 1864 as to the terms of the ekrarnama, nor by the deaths of Ramchurn and of Chuknaram.

In the first of the present proceedings Situl Purshad, offering to pay the Rs. 30,005 mentioned in the potta of 1864, claimed, as assignee of Chuknaram, to redeem the twenty-one villages. The defence was that the stipulation in the ekrarnama was personal to Chuknaram and his heirs, admitting repurchase by him or [32] them, but giving no right to an assignee to redeem as upon a mortgage transaction. And this defence the Subordinate Judge held good. The High Court on appeal upheld the decree dismissing the suit.

In the other proceeding Situl Purshad had obtained a decree on the 8th December 1876 against Chuknaram Singh and his sons for Rs. 2,25,280, in execution of which decree he applied to the Court to bring to sale "the rights and interests of the debtors in the profits of the mokurari property," so far as regards thirty-one of the villages included in it. Afterwards, on the 3rd February 1879, he applied for the sale, in execution of "the entire right and interest of the debtor, and the right to obtain back exclusive possession by repaying Rs. 30,005 the amount of nazurana bearing no interest according to the ekrarnama of 1864." Luchmi Purshad intervened as an objector under s. 247 of Act VIII of 1859 on the grounds taken in the defence above mentioned. This objection was allowed by the Subordinate Judge whose order was confirmed by the High Court.

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, and Baboo Otool Chunder Mullick appeared for the Plaintiff.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., Mr. R. V. Doyne, Mr. J. D. Mayne, and Mr. H. Cowell for the Respondents.

For the appellant it was argued that the potta and ekrarnama of 1864 constituted a mortgage, and that according to the rule of equity, which maintained the right of redemption in all such transactions, the Courts should have held that a right to redeem had passed to the appellant as assignee of the mortgagor. The ekrarnama showed that this transaction was not a mere grant of a perpetual lease on the payment of a premium, with a condition for surrender on repayment. The true construction was that the re-transfer was to be on the footing of redemption. Reference was made to Lord HARDWICK'S dictum in Longuet v. Scawen (1 Vesey Sen, 402), that equity leans extremely against contracts of repurchasing where the right of re-purchase is created at the same time, concomitant with the grant. Such a right as was reserved by [33] the ekrarnama was not of a purely personal character, only exercisable by those in whose favour it was stipulated, in this case Chuknarain and his heirs. Once established as a mortgage, a stipulation precluding the right of an assignee of the mortgagee would be void and ineffectual. According to Story's Equity Jurisprudence, para. 1019, if it should be expressly stipulated that unless the money should be paid by a particular person the estate should be irredeemable, the stipulation would be void—Story's Eq. Jurisp. 12th edition. Reference was made to the judgment in London and South-Western Railway Company v. Gomm (L. R., 20 Ch. D., 562), Cummins v. Fletcher (L. R., 14 Ch. D., 699, 708), Dookchore Rai v. Hajeer Hidayat Ulla (Agra H. C. F. B., 7), Arman Pande v. Naurutton Koonwur (3 Sel. Rep., S. D. A., 78), Ichumbit Singh v. Kesho Lal (20 W. R., 128).

By Regulation XV of 1793, s. 10, all mortgages are to be considered as in effect redeemed whenever the principal with simple interest due upon it shall have been realized from the usufruct or otherwise, and the same rule applies in zuripeshgi leases to the latter, the present transaction being closely analogous—see Tewarce Loll v. Kasseenauth (2 Hay, 256), Macpherson on Mortgages, Chap. VIII, Reg. XVII of 1806.

Counsel for the respondent were not called upon.

Sir R. P. Collier.—The sole question to be decided in both these appeals is whether the plaintiff, in the first appeal as assignee, in the second appeal as execution-creditor, of one Chuknarain Singh, derived from Chuknarain a right to redeem certain villages which he alleged to have been mortgaged by Chuknarain. On the part of the respondents it is not disputed that if he is correct in his interpretation of these deeds, and the villages were mortgaged, he has the right which he claims. But it is contended that the deeds in question did not create a mortgage, but were a sale of the property with a provision for its re-purchase on certain conditions personal to the mortgagee.

In order to determine this question it is necessary to consider the circumstances under which the two documents which are relied [34] upon, namely a potta and an ekrarnama of the 15th January 1864, were executed, as well as to examine the documents themselves.

The circumstances were shortly these. Ramchurn was the eldest of three brothers, Chuknarain being a half-brother of the other two. Chuknarain purchased a 14-annas share of some 52 villages in a zamindari in the joint names of himself and his two brothers. It was intended that he should have 10 out of the 14 annas, and that each of his brothers should have two annas. He paid the greater part of the purchase-money, the brothers paid a comparatively small part of it, and they were indebted to him. In order to recover that debt, amounting with interest to upwards of Rs. 40,000, he brought an action, and obtained judgments against both of them for something more than Rs. 20,000. These were the transactions between the brothers at the time of the deeds being entered into.

On the 15th January 1864 a potta was entered into by Chuknarain Singh, in which he purports to grant in mokurari on perpetual tenure, to his brother Ramchurn, his two annas share in the 52 villages, at an annual rental of

Rs. 497. The deed contains these recitals. It speaks of the sum of Rs 30,005 as the consideration or peshkas nazurana money, "out of which," Chuknarain says, "I have taken Rs. 10,000 in cash for payment of the debt due to Baboo Ramchurn Lal Mahajun,"—that is another Ramchurn,—and the balance, Co.'s Rs. 20,005, was paid on account of the decretal monev, principal with interest, and costs incurred in the Zillah Court and the Sudder Court, as contained in the decision of the Principal Sudder Amin of Zillah Bhagulpore, dated the 10th September 1861, which was confirmed by the decision of the High Court of Calcutta, dated 10th September 1863, due to Baboo Ramchurn Singh, plaintiff decree-holder, from me, the declarant, defendant, judgment-debtor, after deduction of Rs 1,323 remitted out of the decretal money due to the said decree-holder, and of the amount of costs incurred in the Zillah Court, and also after deduction of one-half of the decretal money due from Baboo Chundi Purshad Singh, second defendant. and whereas a deed of acquittance of this date, with a receipt stamp affixed thereto, has been obtained by me from the said [35] decree-holder. I, the declarant, have, from the beginning of 1271 Fasli, executed this potta of perpetual mokurari lease," and so on. The potta, therefore recites that his mokurari lease was given upon an absolute acquittance of the debt, and not as a security for its payment

The ekrarnama of the same date must now be taken to be in these terms (there has been a dispute about the terms, which it is not necessary now to refer to). It was stipulated between the contracting parties that when Baboo Chuknarain Singh, or his heirs, paid off the said nazurana monev of Rs. 30,000, without interest, from their own pocket, without taking money from any other person, to Baboo Ramchurn Singh and his heirs, then Baboo Ramchurn Singh, or his heirs, would without demanding interest, return the said potta or perpetual lease to the said Baboo Chuknarain Singh, and Chuknarain Singh should have no claim in respect of the mesne profits for the period of the mokuraidar's possession

Now the question is, whether, as contended by the appellants. these documents, though they purport on the face of them to be a sale with a power of re-purchase, really amount to a mortgage, or whether, as contended by the respondents, the real intention of the parties was that which appears upon the face of them, namely, that there should be a sale, that the debt should be acquitted, and that there should be a power of re-purchase under certain conditions personal to Chuknarain.

Both Courts have found in favour of the contention of the respondents. Such finding, in the first place, is entirely consistent with the terms of both documents. The opposite finding would not be consistent with the terms of either, certainly not with the terms of the potta, which speaks of the debt having been acquitted and discharged. To hold that it was not acquitted and discharged, but that these documents were really a security for it, would be to contradict the terms of the instrument.

Then, again, looking at the surrounding circumstances, among other things, at the value of the property, which appears to have been fairly ascertained, and at the relations of the parties, their Lordships are of opinion that the Courts have come to the right conclusion, that this transaction is in fact what it purported to be, [36] and there is no sufficient ground for holding it to be what it did not purport to be, namely, a mortgage.

Under these circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that these appeals be dismissed, and the judgment be affirmed. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeals, but as they have been consolidated, there will be only one set of costs

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 3rd May, 1883

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE MITTER and MR JUSTICE WILKINSON

Abdool Hossein.....Plaintiff

versus

Lall Chand Mohtan Dass. . . Defendant.

Beng Act VIII of 1869, s. 38—Measurement of land—Fractional proprietor.—Parties

A part proprietor of an estate is competent under s 38 of Beng Act VIII of 1869 to apply for measurement of its lands after making the remaining proprietors parties to the proceedings.

Mr. Twidale and Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Appellant

Baboo Ras Behary Ghose for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER and WILKINSON, JJ.) which was delivered by Mitter, J.—The question in this appeal is, whether a part proprietor of an estate is competent under s. 38 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 to apply for measurement of its lands after making the remaining proprietors parties to the proceeding. The plaintiff in this case had a fractional share in a certain estate. He applied for measurement of its lands under the aforesaid section, making his co-sharers defendants, alleging that they had colluded with the tenants. His application was allowed by the Collector. On appeal, the District Judge, relying upon a ruling of this Court, [37] in Baba Chowdry v. Abedooddeen Mahomed (4. L R., 7 Cal. 69), has reversed the order of the lower Court, holding that it had no jurisdiction to order a measurement on the application of a fractional owner of an estate.

It is contended before us that the ruling quoted is not applicable, inasmuch as it is not clear from it that all the proprietors were made parties in that case.

It seems to us that this contention is well founded. It does not appear from the report of the case cited that all the proprietors of the estate were parties to it. In another case—Ishan Chunder Roy v. Busaruddeen (5 C. L. R. 132), in which this question was raised and discussed, the learned Judge said: "It is contended that here the co-sharer proprietor has been made a party to the suit, and, therefore, the Court having all the parties before it is not prevented from dealing with the rights of the parties, and determining whether the lands can be measured or not, we are not prepared to say that there are not cases in which co sharer proprietors being made parties to the suit the right of the plaintiff to measure the lands may not be determined, but we think that under the special circumstances of this case it is unnecessary to determine this point."

* Appeal from Appellate Order No 281 of 1882, against the order of H. Beveridge, Esq., District Judge of Patna, dated the 31st August 1882, reversing the order of C. Vowell Esq., Collector of that district, dated the 22nd April 1882.

It is clear that in this decision too the point now before us was not determined. The application of the plaintiff was dismissed upon certain special circumstances which are not applicable to this case. The same reservation was made in the case of Moolook Chand Mundul v. Madhoo Soodun Bachasputty (10 B. L. R., 398, note, 16 W. R. 126)

The point, therefore, comes up for decision before us for the first time. In Chuni Singh v. Hera Mahata (1 L. R., 7 Cal., 633), a question similar to the present was discussed and decided. That question was whether a suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rate brought by all the shareholders will lie, notice under s. 14 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 having been issued at the instance of some of the persons entitled to the rent. The majority of the Judges on the Full Bench decided this [38] question in the affirmative. It appears to us that the reasons given by the learned Judges in that case will equally apply here, and will warrant us in deciding this question in favour of the plaintiff. Referring to the injustice of not allowing a part proprietor to make an application for the notice of enforcement being issued at his instance alone in a case where his co-sharers would not join him, GARTH, C.J., said "The reason of their refusing to join may be that they are colluding with or influenced in some way by the tenant. Are these recusants to be allowed to deprive their co-sharers of the means of enforcing their just dues or, on the other hand, to drive them to expensive, tedious, and inconvenient alternation of a butwara? I think not. The simple and obvious remedy for such a state of things is to allow the co-sharers, who wish to sue, to do so, by making the recusant co-sharers defendants in the suit. The Court will thus have all the parties before it and the means of doing justice between them." In another part of his judgment His Lordship says "The notice is to be given to the persons in receipt of the rent, which is the phrase used generally in the rent law, as signifying the landlord or landlords, and I think that those persons who are entitled to sue as landlords have also the right under this section to give the necessary persons notice."

These reasons equally apply to a fractional shareholder of an estate applying for measurement on the ground that his co-sharers have refused to join him. If the co-sharers are made parties, the tenants can have no reasonable ground of complaint. The proceedings will have the effect once for all of settling all questions regarding the measurement between themselves and all the landlords. As regards the question of costs, if it appears that the necessity for the application arose, not from the recusancy of the tenants, but of the co-sharers, the latter will be made liable for them.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the lower Court upon this point is erroneous. We accordingly set it aside, and remand the case to be tried upon the other points.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

Attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 266 —Property exempted from attachment—Execution of decree

Before property of a judgment-debtor can be exempted from execution as falling under the head of the property described in s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is necessary that the Court should first express its opinion that such property is necessary to enable the execution-debtor to earn his livelihood, and the Court which must decide this point is the Court which issues the execution.

Section 14 (a), part II, chapter V, of the General Rules and Circular Orders of the High Court commented on.

THIS was a suit for recovery of possession of an ox (or for the value thereof), which had been seized and sold by a peon of the Court, in execution of a decree obtained by the first defendant against the plaintiff, the ox was purchased by defendant No. 2

The plaintiff, who was a cultivator, alleged in his plaint that the ox seized was one of a pair, which were kept by him for agricultural purposes, and that, as such, it was exempt from attachment under s 266 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Small Cause Court Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 15, the value of the ox, with proportionate costs against defendant No. 1, but dismissed the suit against defendant No 2, at the same time referring the question to the High Court, whether the plaintiff should be given a decree for damages, such a decree being of no use to him, inasmuch as it would be liable to be attached by defendant No. 1 in execution of the very decree in which his exempted property had been seized.

No one appeared for either party in the High Court.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.) was given by Garth, C.J.—It seems to me that in this case the plaintiff had no right of action.

* Civil Reference No 6 of 1883, from Baboo Jagaddurlabh Mozoomdar, Judge of Small Cause Court of Furrreedpore, dated the 23rd February 1883.

As a general rule, the defendant (the execution-creditor) would [40] have had a right to sell any moveable property of the plaintiff's for satisfaction of his debt, but amongst the exceptions to this rule are such cattle as, in the "opinion of the Court, are necessary to enable the execution-debtor to earn his livelihood as an agriculturist"

In order, therefore, to exempt from execution any cattle of the execution-debtor, it is necessary, as I take it, that the Court should first express its opinion that such cattle are necessary to enable the execution-debtor to earn his livelihood, and I also think it is clear that the Court which has to decide this point is the Court which issues the execution

If this is so, it follows that neither the execution-creditor nor the execution-debtor, nor any Court except that which issues the execution, has any right to determine this point, and in order that such Court may decide it, I think that the execution-debtor should have made some application to the Court on that ground

It may be that the rule laid down by the High Court renders it difficult, if not impossible, that the execution-debtor should make this application in proper time, and it is probable that this rule requires amendment. But this is not the fault of the execution-creditor, and it seems clear to me that, until the Court which issued the execution had declared the bullock in question to be necessary to enable the plaintiff to get his living, the bullock was not protected from execution

Furthermore, it does not appear that the plaintiff before the sale ever represented, either to the defendant or to the officer of the Court, that the beast was privileged from execution. This, I think, he was clearly bound to do.

Apart, however, from this first difficulty, which appears to me an insuperable one in the plaintiff's way, there is another, which arises upon the question of damages

Assuming that the sale was wrongful, still the proceeds of it were devoted to the payment of the judgment-debt due from the plaintiff to the defendant. The price of the bullock, Rs 15, which the Small Cause Court considers to be its full value, was paid to the defendant in execution pro tanto of the decree, and whatever may be the result of this suit, that money cannot be paid back again.

[41] As, therefore, the plaintiff has had full value for his beast in the shape of the Rs. 15 which was produced at the sale, it seems to me that even if the suit were maintainable the damages would be only the difference, if any, between the Rs 15 produced at the sale, and the value of a bullock of the same kind in the bazaar, plus the expenses of the sale, which of course the plaintiff had to pay.

The real truth seems to be that the High Court rule in this respect requires alteration. Those beasts used in agriculture are not privileged, until the Court has expressed an opinion that they are so, and the rule should be so framed as to allow of the execution-debtor making a claim in every case to have his beasts released, and to give the Court time to decide what may sometimes be a difficult question.

I think that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed, but without costs.

Suit dismissed.

Landlord and Tenant - Ejectment, Suit for -- Denial by tenant of his landlords' title.

To a suit brought to recover rent in 1877, the defendant set up his lakeraj title, this suit was dismissed. In 1880, in a suit brought by the same plaintiff to obtain khas possession of the land in question in the former suit against the same defendant and three others claiming under the same title as himself the defence that the land was lakeraj was set up by all.

Held, that the case fell within the principle of the case of Sullyabham Dassee v Krishna Chunder Chatterjee (I L R, 6 Cal 55), and that the plaintiff, who had successfully proved that he had collected rents from the predecessors of the defendants, was entitled to evict them as trespassers on their failure to prove their lakeraj title.

IN 1880 the plaintiff (who formerly was a co-sharer with others [42] in, amongst other lands, the land in dispute in this case) brought this suit against the four defendants to establish his right and title to one bigha five cottahs out of the above-mentioned lands, and for the recovery of khas possession of the same.

In 1877 the present plaintiff had brought a suit against defendant No 1 (who had been registered as owner in the place of his deceased father, the former owner) for arrears of rent. In that suit defendant No 1 denied the tenancy, and set up a lakeraj title. This suit was dismissed, and the plaintiff thereupon obtained partition of the property from his co-sharers, and then brought this present suit against the four defendants for the recovery of the share which fell to him on partition.

All four defendants set up a lakeraj title to the land claiming under the same title.

The Munsiff found that the land was 'not the defendants' lakeraj land, but that it belonged to the plaintiff, and that he had formerly collected rent from the defendants' predecessors, and gave the plaintiff a decree declaring his right to the share claimed by him, but declined to evict defendants 2, 3 and 4, as no notice to quit had been served. Both parties appealed to the Additional Judge. As regards the defendants' appeal the Additional Judge found that they had failed to make out a lakeraj title, and dismissed their appeal. As regards the plaintiff's appeal the Additional Judge held that no notice to quit was necessary, inasmuch as the defendants had denied the plaintiff's title, but he further held that as the land sued for was held by the defendants as a single tenure under the plaintiff and his co-sharers, the plaintiff could not at his sole instance, turn out the defendants, but that his co-sharers should (notwithstanding that partition had been come to) be made co-plaintiffs in the suit, inasmuch as the defendants were no parties to the partition proceedings. He therefore held that the plaintiff was not entitled to khas possession, and dismissed their [his?] appeal.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 1915 of 1881, against the decree of H. Beverley, Esq., Additional Judge of the 24-Pargunnahs, dated the 27th June 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Uma Churn Dutt, First Munsiff of Baraset, dated the 28th July 1880.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court and the defendants filed a cross appeal.

[43] The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—I confess I have had some doubt during the arguments, whether this case comes within the principle which has been so frequently acted upon in this Court, and of which the case of Sattiyabhama Dassie v. Krishna Chunder Chatterjee (I L. R. 6 Cal, 55) forms an example.

But on a closer investigation of the facts, and having regard to the way in which the defendants have framed their defence in the present suit, I am satisfied that it does come within that principle.

In the year 1877, one of the four defendants, who had registered himself as the owner of the property in the place of his deceased father, the former owner, was sued for rent by the plaintiff in respect of his, the plaintiff's share of this very land, and the defendant's answer in that suit was a denial of the plaintiff's title, and an assertion that he (the defendant) and his father had a lakeraj title to the property.

It is perfectly true that in his written statement in that case he also alleged that the land was so imperfectly described in the plaint, that he did not know for what rent the plaintiff was suing, but there was evidently nothing in that point, because there was no question at the trial as to the identity of the land in dispute any more than there has been in this suit. Any insufficiency of description, therefore, could not have misled the defendant.

It then appears that for some time before this former suit was brought, the plaintiff and his co-sharers had not obtained rent from the defendants, although their predecessors had done so in former years, when, therefore, the defendant in that suit denied the plaintiff's title, and set up a lakeraj title in himself, the plaintiff thought fit to proceed no further with his suit but he withdrew it, with the intention of bringing a fresh suit, for khas possession.

But before he brought this fresh suit, he and his co-sharers obtained a formal partition of the property, and he is now solely entitled by virtue of that partition to the particular area in the estate in respect of which he now sues for ejectment, and he brings his [44] suit against all the four defendants, who claim under the same title.

The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit upon the ground that the plaintiff's co-sharers should have been joined as co-plaintiffs, but I cannot understand upon what principle, because, since the partition, the plaintiff and his co-sharers have had no joint interest in the property, and the area, which the plaintiff now seeks to recover, belongs to himself alone, and his co-sharers have no interest in it.

Had the suit been for rent, it might have been different, because then, notwithstanding the partition, the obligation to pay rent would, in the absence of any separate collection, have been to the plaintiff and his co-sharers. But here the plaintiff sues to eject the defendants as trespassers from land which belongs to him alone; and to have joined his former co-sharers in such a suit would have been nothing short of a misjoinder of plaintiffs.

The real question in the case, which has been argued before us here, appears to be this—whether, in consequence of what the one defendant did when he was sued by the plaintiff in the year 1877, or in consequence of the defence which has now been set up in this suit, the plaintiff has any right to treat all the defendants as trespassers.

The point, I confess, which has rather weighed on my mind throughout the discussion has been, whether the three defendants, who were not sued in 1877, ought to be made answerable for the conduct of their co-defendant, so as to forfeit with him their rights as the plaintiff's tenants and if those three defendants in their defence to this suit had contended that they were the plaintiff's tenants, and that he could not sue to eject them without a proper notice to quit, I should be much disposed to hold that they had a good defence on that ground.

But instead of that line of defence these defendants are now urging here up to the very last the selfsame defence, which the one defendant raised in 1877, and taking that into consideration, I cannot doubt that what the one defendant did in the former suit was really the act of all the four and that he was in truth, as the registered owner defending the suit on behalf of them all.

[45] They now moreover set up an adverse title in their written statement. They say, and they have endeavoured to establish throughout, that they have a lakeraj (rent-free) title to the property.

This point has been found against them, and it being also found that formerly their predecessors in title did pay rent to the plaintiff or to his predecessors in title, it seems to me that the plaintiff's case is completely made out.

I have already said that I think the Court below was wrong upon the point of non-joinder of plaintiffs, and I consider that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the property in question. There appears to be no claim made here for mesne profits.

The judgment of the lower Courts will therefore be reversed, and the plaintiff will have his costs in all the Courts.

In accordance with this decision the Appeal No. 2142, which is a cross appeal by the defendants, will be decided in favour of the plaintiff.

That appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Cross appeal dismissed

Right of occupancy, Acquisition of—Occupation by ryot as malik—Rent Act (Beng Act VIII of 1869), s 6

It is only the holding of the father or other person from whom a ryot inherits that can be deemed to be the holding of the ryot within the meaning of s 6 of the Rent Act. Occupation by the predecessor in title is not such an occupation as will create in the holder of land any right of occupancy. Nor can the period during which the occupant of land is in possession as malik be included in considering whether he has acquired a right of occupancy such a right must be acquired against somebody, and cannot be acquired by a man against himself.

[46] Mr. Evans, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Munshi Mahomed Yusuf for the Appellants

Mr. Trudale and Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Respondents

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER and WILKINSON, JJ) which was delivered by

Mitter, J.—This was a suit to recover possession of 113 beegahs 5 cottahs of land in mouzah Mozufferpore. It appears that mouzah Mozufferpore was the estate of Koer Singh. It was confiscated for his rebellion, and was sold by Government in the year 1861. At that sale the defendants' predecessor in title, Mr. R. Solano, became the purchaser. The estate then continued in the possession of Mr Solano till the year 1878, when it was sold for arrears of Government revenue, and purchased by the present plaintiffs. This suit was commenced on the 23rd May 1879, and there is no dispute between the parties that the plaintiffs, after their auction-purchase, did not receive any rent on account of the land in suit from the defendants, who are the executors of the estate of Mr Solano. The defence in the case was that, although the estate was sold for arrears of revenue, Mr. Solano had another interest in the land in suit, viz. a gijashtadaree interest. In the second paragraph of the written statement the facts upon which this defence was raised are stated as follows — "That in 1222 Fasli (1814), the then proprietor of mouzah Mozufferpore settled with Mr Dalton, indigo planter of the Nonour Factory, 221 beegahs 15 cottahs 14 dhooors of land then covered with jungle. Mr Dalton cut down the jungle and brought the land under cultivation at his cost, and since that time Mr. Dalton and other owners of the Nonour Indigo Factory, one after another, continued to hold possession all along as ryots, and to pay the rent to the malik or proprietor and his representative. In 1264 Fash (1856), Mr. A. Louis conveyed by sale the Nonour Indigo Factory, together with the disputed and other lands, to Mr. Cole, who again transferred the same by sale to Mr R. Solano, since deceased, ancestor of the defendants. The old papers relating to the disputed land were destroyed during the Mutiny by the rebels, along with other papers of the factory. Mr R Solano, [47] since deceased, ancestor of the defendant, purchased in 1861, mouzah Mozufferpore, wherein the disputed land lies, and, as shown above, he had before his purchase of the mouzah held an absolute gijashtadaree and occupancy right in the said land, which did not in any way become extinct or null and void after his purchase of the proprietary right and estate "

The lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. They have held that it was proved on the evidence that at least from the year 1263 (1855), the land in suit has been in the possession of Mr Solano and his predecessors in title as ryots, and that the ryotee interest of Mr Solano in the aforesaid 113 beeghas was kept up after he became the proprietor of the estate. Upon this finding of facts the lower Courts, being of opinion that the defendants are in possession of the land in suit as ryots holding a right of occupancy under s 6 of the Rent Act, have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It is contended before us that, accepting this finding of facts as correct, the lower Courts are in error in holding that any right of occupancy under s 6 of the Rent Act have been acquired by the defendants. This contention is based upon two grounds. 1st, that as before the purchase of the estate by Mr Solano it is not found by the lower Courts that he himself had been in possession of the lands in suit from the year 1263, but what has been found is that he and his predecessors in title had been in possession of it under s 6, the occupation by the predecessor in title is not such an occupation as would create in the holders of the land in suit any right of occupancy. The second contention is that supposing Mr Solano was entitled to tack on the possession of his predecessors in title to his own possession, yet the possession of Mr Solano between 1861 and 1878 could not be added to it so as to create a right of occupancy, because during that time he was in possession of the whole estate as mahik. We are of opinion that both these contentions are correct. It is quite clear that under s 6 of the Rent Act it is only the holding of the father or other person from whom a ryot inherits that can be deemed to be the holding of the ryot within the meaning of the section. That being so, Mr Solano could not rely upon the holding of his predecessors in title. Two cases have been cited before us in order to show that the contrary view [48] has been taken of this section. We have examined these cases, and we do not think that there is any foundation for the contention—Huro Chunder Guha v Dutt (5 W R Act X, Rul 55), Watson & Co v Sharat Soondaree Dabee (7 W R, 395). Then, as regards the question whether Mr Solano could rely upon his possession and holding as a ryot between the years 1861 and 1878, it seems to us that the decisions that have been cited before us are all one way. In an unreported case, viz., Regular Appeal No. 152 of 1877, decided on the 25th February 1879—Kishen Pershad Singh v Rajah Radha Pershad Singh, GARTH, C.J., with reference to the contention put forward in that case, viz., that one of the parties was entitled to a right of occupancy as he had held the lands in suit in that case in the double capacity of a ryot and as proprietor, said: "But we think that this view is contrary both to the letter and the spirit of the Rent law. A man cannot occupy the double character of landlord and ryot, or make a pretence of paying rent to himself for the purpose of acquiring an occupancy right against other people." It was held in that case that under the circumstances no right of occupancy could be acquired. The Chief Justice was of opinion that a ryotee holding would merge in the proprietary interest after the purchase of the latter. It is not necessary for us to express any opinion upon this question viz., whether a ryotee interest merges and becomes extinguished as soon as the ryot purchases the estate in which the ryotee holding is situated, but the learned Chief Justice held in that case, for the reasons given in his judgment, that the ryots could not acquire a right of occupancy under the circumstances set forth above. In the case of Savi v. Panchann Roy (25 W. R., 503) it was held that, although a ryotee right would not merge, still it would remain in abeyance so long as the ryot would be in possession of the estate in another capacity. Mr. Justice AINSLIE, who delivered the judgment in that case, was also one of the Judges in another case of Mokoondy Lall Doobey v. Crowdy (17 W. R., 274). That case was decided by Mr. Justice LOCH and Mr. Justice AINSLIE. At first sight it would appear that that case was inconsistent with the decision of the learned Chief Justice [49] referred to above, but the explanation that Mr. Justice AINSLIE gave of his views upon the subject in the later case of Savi v. Panchann Roy (25 W. R., 503), goes to show that, so far as the actual decision of the subject is concerned, there is no inconsistency between the decision in Mokoondy Lall Doobey v. Crowdy (17 W. R., 274), and the unreported case cited above. Both in the cases of Mokoondy Lall Doobey v. Crowdy and Savi v. Panchann Roy, the Judges held that though the ryotee interest did not merge, yet so long as the ryot remained in possession of the land in a double capacity, that is as landlord and as ryot, he could not acquire a right of occupancy under s. 6, Beng. Act VIII of 1869. In this view we entirely concur. Section 6 says: "Every ryot who shall have cultivated or held land for a period of twelve years shall have a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him." This section, therefore, provides that cultivation or holding for a period of twelve years confers upon a ryot a right of occupancy, that is, a right to remain upon the land against the will of the landlord. This right of occupancy must, therefore, be acquired against somebody, and if a ryot is in possession of the land in a double capacity, both as a ryot and as a malik, it is almost impossible to conceive how he can, under these circumstances, acquire a right of occupancy against himself. Therefore, a reasonable view of the law is, that during the time a ryot remains in possession of the land in such double capacity, the operation of the acquisition of the right of tenancy remains in abeyance. In this view of s. 6, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, it is quite clear that, taking the finding of the lower Court as correct, the defendants cannot be considered to have acquired a right of occupancy. The decisions of the lower Court, therefore, upon this point are not correct. But having regard to the defence raised, we think that this does not wholly dispose of the case. The defendants have relied upon their guzashta right, and under s. 37, Act XI of 1859, an auction-purchaser of a revenue-paying estate has no right to eject any ryot having a right of occupancy at a fixed rent, or at a rent assessable according to fixed rules under the laws in force. The right of occupancy mentioned here is not necessarily the right of occupancy under s. 6, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, and the defendants' claim as guzashtadar rests upon ground [50] quite independent of the right of occupancy under s. 6, Act VIII of 1869. But it appears that the lower Courts have not inquired into this matter. We, therefore, remand the case to the Court of First Instance for re-trial upon the following questions: (1) whether Mr. Solano, at the time of his purchase in the year 1279 (1872), had any guzashtadaree right in the disputed land, (2) whether, if he had such guzashta right, it conferred upon him any right of occupancy, (3) whether that guzashta right was kept up during the years he was in possession of the estate as malik, viz., between 1861 and 1878.

The parties will be allowed to adduce evidence upon all these three points, and with reference to the second issue now laid down the lower Court will allow evidence of custom to be given, if such evidence be tendered. Costs to abide the result.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 3rd July, 1883

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR JUSTICE MACPHERSON

Rakhal Churn Mundul Defendant

Watson & Co Plaintiffs

Onus of proof—Obstruction to execution of decree by a claimant—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859, s. 229) (Acts X of 1877 and XIV of 1882), s. 34—Settlement of julkur—Right in the soil.

In a suit under s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859 (s. 331 of Acts X of 1877 and XIV of 1882) the onus is on the plaintiff to establish a prima facie case of possession, and it is then incumbent on the claimant to answer that case and show, if possible, a better title.

There is no such broad proposition of law, as that the settlement of a julkur implies no right in the soil.

THIS was a suit under s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859.

The land in dispute was situated in mehal Bheel Bharat Gobindpur, and was a ryoti holding formerly owned by one Umakant Mozundar and others, and had been sold by them to Messrs Watson & Co., who after purchase sued Raja Pramatha Nath Roy, Zamindar of Dhulari, a contiguous mehal, for recovery of [61] possession of some land of which he was said to have wrongfully taken possession. In that suit Watson & Co., in 1871, obtained a decree for possession of the land sued for. In being put into possession by the Court, delivery of possession was obstructed by one Radharaman, who claimed a portion of the land as part of his patni taluq, Bheel Julkur Gobindpur. Watson & Co. complained to the Court of the resistance to their possession, stating that it was in point of fact made on behalf of the judgment-debtor. The Court held there was no substantial resistance to the delivery of possession, and directed a fresh warrant to issue for delivery of possession. Radharaman appealed from this order, and the Appellate Court, conceiving the case to be one falling under s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859 remanded it to the lower Court with directions to try it on the merits.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 684 of 1882 against the decree of A. J. R. Bainbridge, Esq., Judge of Moorsheedabad, dated the 9th December 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Robi Chunder Gangooly, Munsiff of Azimgunge, dated the 12th January 1881.

At the remand hearing the Court found that Radharaman was the real claimant and not the judgment-debtor, but was of opinion that he had no right or title to the disputed land, and that he had never held possession of it, and finding that the land appertained to Mehal Bheel Bhaat Gobindpur and was comprised in the tenure of Messrs Watson & Co, made a decree in their favour directing possession to be given to them in execution of their decree.

Radharaman appealed, and the Court holding that the first Court had left the real question between the parties untried, remanded the case again for re-trial on the merits. In the meantime, under the order of the Appellate Court, the Civil Court Amoen delivered to the decree-holders actual possession of the undisputed property and nominal possession of the disputed portion of it.

Subsequently to the remand Radharaman's patni taluq, Bheel Julkur Gobindpur, was sold in execution of a decree, and was purchased by one Radhamadhub, who again sold it to Brojolah Mundul. Brojolah Mundul died, leaving a widow Shyama Sundari Das and a minor son Rakhai Churn Mundul, and he was substituted as defendant at the application of his mother who was his guardian.

The Munsiff found that the land claimed by the plaintiffs as part of Mehal Bheel Bhaat Gobindpur was formed more than 30 [52] years back by the drying up of the water, or by the silting up of the bed of the water of Bheel Julkur Gobindpur, and that possession of it was taken first by the plaintiffs' vendors and then by Raja Pramatha Nath Roy against whom the plaintiffs obtained their decree, and also found that Radharaman had no right or title to his land, it never having been proved that he had ever been in possession and that it had not been proved to have been part of his patni taluq, Bheel Julkur Gobindpur.

The defendant appealed to the District Judge who gave the following judgment: "Upon the local surveys and evidence it is clear that the decree under execution includes the entire block of land in dispute. That being so, the claimant has to satisfy the Court that he is entitled to ask it to abstain from delivering the land to the decree-holder. At most, the claimant can only show that he has acquired the julkur right over it, when submerged. The soil is now dry, and with the water the right over it, in other words, the subject of the julkur lease vanishes. Prima facie the very fact of the settlement of a julkur as such implies exemption of the sub soil because the soil would carry everything on it. As to the claimants' title by mere possession since the soil dried up, I concur with the Munsiff's finding against the fact. I dismiss the appeal."

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Gouri Das Banerjee and Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, for the Appellant, contended that the Judge was wrong in holding that the mere fact of the land being included in the decree under execution was sufficient to throw on the defendant the burden of proving his title to the land, and that in construing the defendant's patni potta the Court ought to have held that the defendant's title was not limited to the julkur of Bheel Gobindpur as distinguished from the bed

Baboo Bhowani Churn Dutt for the Respondents

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J. and MACPHERSON, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J. - The suit out of which this proceeding arose was commenced some ten years ago. It was brought by the present plaintiffs against Raja

Pramatha Nath Roy to recover certain [53] land which they had purchased from Umakant Mozumdar and others

The plaintiffs obtained a decree for possession in 1874 and were proceeding to execute it when they were opposed by one Radharaman Munshoe, who claimed it as part of a patni taluq which he held under a potta from Raja Krishna Chund, which was granted in the year 1211 (1834)

Radharaman's claim was at first rejected, but he appealed, and after two remands this case came on to be tried between the plaintiffs and Radharaman under s 229 of the Code of 1859

It has now been tried by the two lower Courts, and comes up to this Court on second appeal but meanwhile, pending the proceedings, Radharaman sold his patni to one Radhamadhub, who again sold it to one Brojolah Mundul, who has since died and his widow Shivama Sundari is the present defendant

The land in dispute is a plot of deora land, which the plaintiffs claim under a darpatri lease as part of a mehal called Bheel Bharat Gobindpur, and the Munsiff finds that it was formed many years ago by the drying up of the water, or the silting up of the bed of Bheel Julkur Gobindpur, the defendant's taluq Bheel Bharat Gobindpur and Bheel Julkur Gobindpur are mehals held under different patnis from the same zamindar

The Munsiff further finds that this silting up occurred more than thirty years ago, and that possession was taken of it first by the plaintiffs' vendors, and then by Raja Pramatha Nath Roy, against whom the plaintiffs brought their suit, and obtained the decree

He also finds that there is no reliable evidence that Radharaman, the claimant, ever had possession of this land, that it has not been proved to form a part of Bheel Julkur Gobindpur

He, therefore, gave the plaintiffs a decree

The District Judge, as we understand, agreed with the Munsiff as to the question of possession, and confirmed his decree

Having now heard the case argued on appeal, we have no reason to believe that the conclusion at which the lower Courts have arrived is otherwise than correct

[54] But it has been contended by the appellant that the Judge has made two mistakes in point of law

(1st)-- That he has thrown the onus of proof on the wrong party, and

(2nd)-- That he has erroneously laid it down as a rule of law that the settlement of a julkur as such implies exemption of the sub-soil or, in other words, that the grant of julkur carries with it prima facie no right to the soil

As regards the first of these points we see no sufficient ground for impugning the lower Court's judgment

The Judge says, if we understand him rightly, that upon the question of possession he agreed with the Munsiff, and the Munsiff finds that upwards of thirty years ago the land in question silted up or became dry, and that since that time Radharaman had never held possession of it.

On the other hand, he finds that the persons who had possession of it during that time were first the plaintiffs vendors, and afterwards Raja Pramatha Nath Roy, against whom the plaintiffs brought their suit in 1874, and obtained a decree.

It is argued that under s. 229 the onus of proof is thrown upon the plaintiffs, and no doubt that is so. The onus of proof was thrown upon the plaintiffs in this case. They had to prove, to the satisfaction of the Court, that they, or the judgment-debtor, whose rights they had acquired by the decree, either had or were entitled to have possession as against the claimant. They proved this to the satisfaction of both the lower Courts, and so established a prima facie case, and it was then incumbent upon the claimant to answer that prima facie case, and show, if he could, a better title.

It does not at all follow that because the Court considers the claim of the claimant under s. 229 to be a bona fide one, the claimant is in point of fact in possession of the property. Bona fide claims to possession are constantly made by persons who never had possession and who are not entitled to it.

Whether the claimant really had or was entitled to the possession which he claimed under s. 229 was a question to be tried in this suit, and the plaintiffs, as I consider, fulfilled prima facie the onus which the law casts upon them, when they proved [55] that the judgment-debtor, whose rights they had acquired, held possession as against the claimant at the time when the latter made his claim.

If this were not so, s. 229 would be productive of the greatest injustice. A man who holds possession of property has a right to retain his possession, until some other person can show a better right to it. But if a man who merely claims possession under s. 229, without in fact being in possession, is to be entitled in law to possession as against the actual possessor, unless the latter proves his title, the consequences would be serious indeed. A claimant under that section, although he had no possession, would then be in a better position than the actual possessor.

The section may often operate unjustly enough against the decree-holder as it is, but the injustice would be far greater if the appellant were right in his contention.

The plaintiffs in this suit, having shown that at the time when the question arose in the execution proceedings they and then judgment-debtor, whose rights they had acquired, had held possession of the land for 30 years, and that the claimant had never been in possession, were prima facie entitled to a decree, but then comes the second point, that the Judge was wrong in laying down as law, that the settlement of a julkur implies no right in the soil. We quite agree that the Judge laid this down too broadly, more specially as, in the present case, we find that in the defendant's patni potta, the julkur mehal in question is called a mouza.

If, having regard to the acts found by the lower Court, we considered this question to be material to the determination of the suit, we should be disposed to remand the case to the Court below, to ascertain what passed by the patni grant. That question might depend in great measure upon what was the state of the locality at the time when the grant was made.

But as the lower Courts have found that the land in dispute silted up from the julkur more than 30 years ago, and that since that time the only persons in possession of it have been the plaintiffs and the Raja, against whom they obtained their decree, and that the claimant has never been in possession of it, it seems to us that [56] whatever the rights of the latter may have been under the patni they must long ago have become extinguished by lapse of time (See s. 28 of the Limitation Act of 1877)

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Inspection of documents -Practice- Affidavit of Documents--Insufficiency of affidavit--Alteration by letter of notice already served- Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss 131 and 133

Before the Court will make an order under s. 133 of the Code of Civil Procedure the preliminary steps mentioned in s. 131 must be taken by the party applying for the order

THE plaintiff had filed a suit against the defendant on 1st December 1882, praying for dissolution of partnership, and for an account of the sale of a right to a certain patent medicine. The defendant put in an appearance, and the plaintiff, on the 19th December, obtained the usual order for the inspection of the defendant's documents. In pursuance of this order the defendant filed a verified list of documents with the usual affidavit on the 5th January 1883. The plaintiff objected to the sufficiency of the affidavit of documents filed by the defendant, and one Poomo Chunder Dawn, an uncle of the plaintiff, who was employed as a general assistant in the firm, made an affidavit stating that certain books of account had been kept by the firm, and that these were to his personal knowledge now in possession of the defendant, and had been last seen by him on the 22nd September 1882 when he had been refused further admittance to the shop by the defendant, he further stated that certain of the account books produced by the defendant imperfectly showed the sales of certain articles of the partnership, and that without the production of the books of account, which he alleged to be in the defendant's possession, and which were unproduced, the account could not be fully proceeded with. That the plaintiff's attorney had written to the defendant's attorney as to the production of these [57] books, and had threatened if they were not produced to take out a summons to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit of the defendant

The defendant failed to produce these books, and on the above affidavit of the plaintiff's uncle, the Court granted a summons calling upon the defendant to appear on the hearing of an application on the part of the plaintiff for an order to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit of the defendant filed on the 5th January 1883 as to the possession of documents pursuant to the order dated 19th December 1882

* The hearing of the motion was postponed from time to time, and on the 21st May 1882 the plaintiff's attorney wrote the following letter to the defendant's attorney —

" The summons herein was intended to be for production under s 132 of the Civil Procedure Code, but in accordance with the Registrar's opinion as to the proper form of summons the present summons was issued. But I am advised that the application should have been under ss 130 to 133 of the Code, and I propose to ask the Court to treat it as such, and if you are willing that the motion should be so treated my clients prepared, and hereby offers to pay any costs you may have incurred in consequence of the present form of the summons not sufficiently indicating that the motion is intended to be under ss 130 to 133 "

In answer to this letter the defendant's attorney returned the following answer — " Referring to your letter of date I cannot consent to your treating the application in any other way than that the notice contains. If you wish you can allow the present application to be refused with costs, and then make such fresh application as you may be advised "

The matter came on for hearing on the 11th June

Mr Phillips in support of the summons

Mr Bannerjee contra

Pigot, J.—This application must be refused. The reason why I dismiss it is a short one—the matter comes before me on summons for a better affidavit, and it is sought to alter the application into one under ss. 131, 132 and 133. I think that would [58] involve a power of making an order under s 133 more extensive than the Court has. Without expressing an opinion as to what order the Court would make in a case under s 133, in a case appropriate to it, I do not think that the Court would make any order under that section unless the preliminary steps had been taken by the party such as are set out in section 131, and I think that no notice purporting to be a notice under s 131 having been given, save the letter of the 21st May, and there having been no omission to give notice of the time for inspection and no objection to give inspection having been made, I am disqualified from acting under s 133. I dismiss the application on the simple ground that I am not clothed with authority to act under s 133.

Application refused

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 12th August, 1883.

PRESENT:

MR JUSTICE PIGOT

Peacock and others

versus

Byjnath and others.

Practice—Consolidation of suits on application of plaintiffs.

- Consolidation of suits on application of plaintiffs allowed.

THIS was an application made on behalf of the plaintiffs on notice to the defendants for the consolidation of two suits pending in the High Court, and for an order that the evidence in the one suit be received as evidence in the other

The notice of motion served on the defendants was as follows:—

“Take notice that an application will be made on behalf of the plaintiffs in the suit of Peacock v. Byjnath for an order that this suit may be consolidated and heard along with suit No. 557 of 1882 which is now pending in this Honourable Court between the same parties, and that the evidence to be taken in the said suit may be read and filed as evidence in this suit, and that the time for the return of the commission in the said suit No. 557 of 1882 may be extended for three months, and that the plaintiffs and the defendants Byjnath may be at liberty to adduce such further evidence under the said commission as they may deem necessary for the purposes of this suit.”

[59] Mr. Stevenson, a member of the firm of Graham & Company, and the constituted attorney of the plaintiffs on affidavit stated, that the plaintiffs had had business transactions with the defendants, both in England and Calcutta, for the last eight years; the course of business being that the plaintiffs consigned piece goods to the defendants' firm at Calcutta, for sale by them upon special terms as to remittance of the proceeds of sale to the plaintiffs. That on or about the 27th September 1882, one of the partners of the defendants who was in England suspended payment, and on the 3rd October 1882, the firm of Graham & Company in Calcutta received a telegram from the plaintiffs directing them to bring a suit and obtain an injunction for protection of their goods in the hands of the defendants' firm in Calcutta, that such a suit was filed on the 5th October 1882 to recover 226 bales of piece goods, the suit being numbered 557 of 1882, that an agreement was come to between the plaintiffs and defendants, which was recorded in an order of Court, dated 30th October 1882, regarding the custody and future sale of the goods sued for, and the deposit of certain Government securities endorsed in the joint names of the plaintiffs' and defendants' solicitors, with the plaintiffs' attorneys to be held by them until the determination of the said suit and of any other suit or suits, that might, within six months from the date of the said order, be brought for the purpose of determining the rights of the plaintiffs or defendants, or of any persons claiming as consignors or vendors of all goods appearing by the books of the defendants' Calcutta firm to have been consigned from England to them and to have been sold and delivered since 1st January 1882. That the plaintiffs within the aforesaid period of six months filed the present suit on the 28th April 1883, which related to goods which were consigned by the plaintiffs to the defendants for sale, and which had not been accounted for, and which it was believed had been disposed of by the defendants since January 1882, and asked for an account of the dealings between the plaintiffs and defendants, and for an enquiry as to damages, and that the securities deposited under the order of the 30th October 1882 might be applied towards payment of the amount due, and that that suit might be taken as supplemental to the suit 557 of 1882.

[60] The affidavit further set out that the defendants' written statement filed in the last suit advanced the same claim to the goods the subject of the suit as had been advanced by them to the goods, the subject of the Suit No. 557 of 1882, and repudiated the plaintiffs' claim on the same grounds, and further raised an objection to the later suit on the ground that the relief sought ought to have been claimed in suit No. 557 of 1882. That on the 27th January 1883 an order in suit No. 557 of 1882 was made that a commission should issue to take the evidence of one Evangelo Vasilopulo then in Calcutta, and that the defendant should within three months apply for another commission to England for the further examination of the said witness. That such further commission was issued in April 1883.

The defendants declined to consent to the consolidation of the two suits, and to the admission of the evidence in the one case as evidence in the other.

Mr. Jackson for the applicants cited an unreported case of Khetter Mohun Doss v. Behari Lall Doss, No. 264 of 1881, Cecil v. Briggs (2 Term. Rep., 639), Amos v. Chadwick (L. R., 4 Ch. D., 869), The Melpomene (L. R., 4 A. and E., 129), as showing that the application may be made by a plaintiff, Nehal Singh v. Syud Ali Ahmed (15 W. R., 110). The unreported applications in Suit No. 511 of 1881, and Suit No. 637 of 1881, heard on the 2nd March 1882, and in Suit No. 258 of 1880, viz., Rumessor Dass v. Surrosuty Dass were also referred to. The last was an application by defendants for consolidation, plaintiffs opposing, and there the order was made for consolidation, and the cases on consolidation cited in 1 Seton on Decrees, 326, were referred to.

Mr. Phillips for the Defendant Byjnath

Pigot, J., ordered the suits to be set down and heard together commission to be varied and to be considered as taken in both suits. Both parties to be at liberty to adduce such witnesses as they may be advised; plaintiffs to furnish defendants, and defendants to furnish plaintiffs in second suit, with list of documents duly verified by the plaintiffs' agents within ten days. Inspection to be given [61] immediately of all documents so set out, and, if necessary, order to be transmitted by plaintiffs, plaintiffs, if requested by defendants, to transmit order by wire to enable inspection of such documents as may have been transmitted to England at all reasonable times and places. Costs reserved, in dealing with which it should be considered whether plaintiffs were in default in not including all causes of action in one suit, or whether their conduct is susceptible of explanation.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 15th July, 1883

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE.

Kali Prosad Banerji. ... Judgment-debtor

versus

Messrs. Gisborne & Co ... Decree-holders.*

Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870), cl 17, s 19—Stamp on memorandum of appeal by judgment-debtor in custody from order refusing application to be declared insolvent.

A judgment-debtor, whilst in custody applied to the Court, under Chapter XX of the Civil Procedure Code, to be declared an insolvent. The application was refused, and the judgment-debtor appealed against the order rejecting his application. No Court-fee was affixed to the memorandum of appeal.

Held, that no Court-fee was leviable, under cl. 17 of s. 19 of the Court Fees' Act

IN this case Messrs. Gisborne & Co, originally sued the appellant for rent of an ijara held under them by him, and obtained a decree, at the request of the appellant, they agreed to take satisfaction by instalments. The appellant failed to pay one instalment, and was on the application of Messrs. Gisborne & Co., arrested in execution of their decree.

Having been so arrested, the appellant, whilst in custody, applied to the District Judge of Bankurah* to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure. The District Judge heard the application, and rejected it with costs on the ground that the applicant had fraudulently transferred his property to friends previous to the application.

The judgment-debtor, whilst still in custody, appealed against the order of the District Judge, but no Court-fee was affixed to the memorandum of appeal.

The Deputy Registrar was of opinion that cl. 17 of s. 19 of Act VII of 1870 applied only (1) to criminal matters, and (2) to petitions by a prisoner personally, and not to petitions presented on his behalf by his vakeel, and that the Court-fee was leviable under art. II sch II of the Court Fees' Act, as an appeal not from an order rejecting a plaint, or from an order having the force of a decree.

The Taxing Officer, on the matter being referred to him, was of opinion that the Court Fees' Act applied to both civil and criminal Courts, and that cl. 17 of s. 19 applied to the case of a person in duress, or under restraint of a Civil Court, and that the contention of the Deputy Registrar was erroneous.

He, therefore, was of opinion that as there was no appeal from an order directing the arrest of a judgment-debtor, and as the only way that a person under duress by order of a Civil Court, can get released from such duress, when the District Judge refuses to declare him an insolvent, was to appeal to the High Court against the District Judge's order as provided by s. 588, cl. 17 of the Code, the appeal was directly connected with the appellant's duress, and that consequently no Court-fee was required under cl. 17 of s. 19 of the Court Fees' Act.

The Taxing Master, however, referred the following questions to the Chief Justice under s. 5 of the Court Fees' Act:—

(1) Are the provisions of cl. 17 of s. 19 limited to petitions directly connected with the duress?

(2) If so, would the present appeal come within that category?

Garth, C.J.—I think that clause 17, of s. 19, Act VII of 1870 is applicable to a case of this kind, and consequently that no Court-fee is payable on the appeal.

[63] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th June, 1883.

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE,
AND MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Amirunessa Khatoon and another..... Plaintiffs

versus

The Secretary of State for India in Council and others. . . . Defendants.*

* Sale for arrears of revenue—Act XI of 1859, s. 33—Notification of sale—Fraud.

It is unnecessary to specify in the notification of sale the names of the mouzahs included in the property sought to be sold. All that is necessary is, to specify the estates, or shares of estates, and the number they bear in the Collector's Office.

Section 33 of Act XI of 1859 should not be read as meaning that under no possible circumstances can a suit be brought to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud.

For the purposes of the report the facts of the case are sufficiently set out in the Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.) which was delivered by Garth, C.J.—In this case, which we heard yesterday, the suit was brought to set aside a revenue sale under Act XI of 1859.

For this purpose the plaintiffs relied upon certain irregularities, which are said to have occurred in carrying out the sale itself: and also, as the plaintiffs alleged, that their tehsildar had colluded with the servants of the defendant

*Appeal from Original Decree No. 152 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Bani Madhub Mitter, Second Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 27th March 1882.

No. 1, who was the purchaser, to make default in payment of the revenue so as to bring about the sale of the property, and enable the defendant No. 1 to buy it at a low price.

The lower Court dismissed the suit upon the ground that the alleged irregularities were not (for various reasons) available to the plaintiffs, and with regard to the alleged fraudulent collusion the Court said this:

"It was argued that there was fraud on the part of the purchaser at the sale, inasmuch as he colluded with the servant of the plaintiffs, who made default in the payment of Government revenue; but under s. 33, Act XI of 1859, no sale can be set aside on the ground of fraud, so no issue was raised upon that point. If there was any fraud, on the part of the plaintiffs' [64] servants, or the defendant No. 1, the plaintiffs might sue them for damages if they liked."

On appeal to this Court two points only have been argued with regard to the alleged irregularity, which we think it necessary to notice.

It is said that the notice in the Sudder Cutchery was served on the 1st of March 1880, and the sale was advertised for the 30th of March, and as, therefore, notice was given less than 30 days before the sale, it was contended that the sale was bad. In support of that view a decision was referred to of Justices MITTER and NORRIS in Bal Mokoond Lal v. Jirjuthun Roy (I. L. R. 9 Cal. 271).

With this decision we entirely agree. But we find that this point was neither taken in the proceedings before the Commissioner, nor in the plaint in this suit, nor before the lower Court. And when we come to enquire into the facts, it is pretty clear why it was not taken, because it appears that the notice in question was not one of the two principal notices which have to be stuck up, the one in the Collector's Cutchery and the other in the District Court, but the notice which has to be put up in the Sub-divisional Court, under Beng. Act VII of 1868 with regard to which no particular time is mentioned. We think, therefore, that there is nothing in this point.

Another irregularity complained of was, that the names of certain mouzahs, which were included in the property, were not specified in the sale notification.

We think it clear, however, that the Subordinate Judge was quite right in the view which he took of that objection. He says that it is only necessary to specify the estates or shares of estates in the sale notification, and the number which they bear in the Collector's office. It was not necessary to specify the names of the mouzahs which were included in the property.

Then, as regards the allegation of fraud, as that point is of a novel character, and we have been referred to some authorities upon it, we think it right to notice it more particularly.

The lower Court took such strong view upon the subject that it refused to frame any issue, or to receive any evidence with reference to it.

[65] The Subordinate Judge considered that s. 33 of the Act of 1859 prohibited any suit being brought to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud

The section says "No sale for arrears of revenue shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except upon the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of this Act, and as the Act says nothing about fraud, it would seem that the Legislature intended that no sale should be set aside on that ground."

It is not necessary for us to go the length of saying that under no possible circumstances (such for instance, as fraud on the part of the Collector or his officers) could such a suit be brought, but when we consider the way in which the alleged fraud is sought to be used in this case, we think it clear that it could be no ground for setting aside the sale.

The sale is one made by the Government, and it is not suggested that the Government or its officers had anything to do with the fraud. The fraud alleged is, that the sale was brought about by the plaintiffs' servant making default in payment of the revenue in collusion with the servants of the defendant No 1.

The appellants' pleader contended that a revenue sale might be set aside on the ground of fraud and in support of that view we were referred to a case of Joy Dooran Debba v. Gopal Chunder Banerjee (9 W R 538) decided by Justices JACKSON and MITTER, in which Mr Justice JACKSON says "This suit in point of form was a suit to set aside a sale in the Collector's Court. There is authority for the opinion that a sale by order of a Revenue Court can be set aside by a decree of the Civil Court upon the ground of fraud, this having been directly ruled by a decision of the Full Bench in the case of Nibman Burnack v. Puddolochun Chuckerbutty (B L R Sup. Vol, 379, 5 W R. Act X, 20)

But when we refer to that Full Bench case we find that the learned Judge could not quite have apprehended its meaning; because no question arose there as to setting aside a revenue sale. The question was, whether, when a decree in the Collector's Court had been obtained by fraud, a Civil Court could, in a regular suit duly constituted for that purpose, set aside the decree, whether, in fact, a fraudulent decree in the Collector's [66] Court could be set aside by the Civil Court, and the Full Bench decided that it could. But this has nothing to do with setting aside a revenue sale on the ground of fraud. In fact, there is nothing in that decision, as far as we can see, which has the least reference to revenue sales.

The case which more nearly supports the plaintiffs' views in point of law is one of Bhobun Chunder Sen v. Ram Soonder Swarna Mozoomdar (I L R, 3 Cal., 300) decided by Justices BIRCH and MITTER. In that case one of several co-sharers had brought about the sale of a revenue paying estate, by not taking steps, as he was bound to do, to prevent the sale. In this he was found to have acted fraudulently to his co-sharers, and in order that he might buy up the whole property himself at a small price. The suit was brought to set aside that sale, and the Court below made a decree to that effect, but when the case came up here on appeal, we find that both learned Judges considered that the sale itself could not be set aside.

Mr. Justice MITTER says. "Although in the plaint there is a prayer for reversal of the auction sale, I do not think that under the circumstances of the case that prayer can be granted," and the decree made by the Judges was to the effect that as between the parties the defendant, who bought the properties in fraud of his co-sharers, should reconvey it to them upon being paid his purchase-money; or, in other words, that the defendant should take nothing by his purchase, and that the parties should be placed in the same position inter se as they were before the sale. Whilst, therefore, this Court refused to set aside the sale, it gave the plaintiffs the relief which they sought, by restoring them to their former position.

It is possible, that in this case, the plaintiffs may have a similar cause of suit, as between them and the defendant No. 1, founded upon the fraud, which they allege in the plaint. But if so, that is not a claim of which they could avail themselves in the present suit, because they here sue to set aside the sale on various grounds of irregularity and illegality in the sale itself.

If the plaintiffs wish to avail themselves of the fraud which [67] they allege, they must make it the subject of another suit, and we think we ought to allow them an opportunity of doing so.

We, therefore, give them leave to bring another suit of that nature, though of course we say nothing as to their prospect of success.

This appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1882, ss 253, 259.*

A Magistrate is not competent to pass an order of dismissal or discharge in consequence of the absence of the complainant in warrant cases not coming within s. 259 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, except in cases coming within the last clause of s. 253 of the same Code.

In this case a complaint was made before the Magistrate of Rungpore, on the 13th of July 1883, charging a Police constable with extortion. The hearing of the complaint was first fixed for the 23rd July, and afterwards postponed till the 3rd of August. On the latter day, neither the complainant nor his witnesses appeared, and the Magistrate discharged the accused on that ground.

* Criminal Reference No. 117 of 1883 and letter No 417S, from J. R. Hallett, Esq., Sessions Judge of Rungpore, dated the 28th August 1883

The case was then referred to the High Court under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by the District Judge of Rungpore, who was of opinion that the course taken by the Magistrate was contrary to the provisions of s. 259 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the case not being a compoundable one.

No one appeared to argue the case

We think that the Magistrate was not competent in this case—a warrant case not compoundable—to dismiss it because the complainant was absent

It appears that on the day first fixed for the trial the complainant attended with his witnesses, but in consequence of the [68] inability of the accused, a Police officer, to attend, it was postponed, the complainant and witnesses being bound over to attend on the day to which the trial had been postponed. On that day the accused alone appeared, and the Magistrate dismissed the case. Having regard to the terms of s. 259 we are of opinion that in warrant cases not coming within that section, except under the last clause of s. 253, which is not applicable, a Magistrate is not competent to pass an order of dismissal, or discharge in consequence of the absence of the complainant. The Magistrate should, in the case before us, have admitted the accused to bail, and as the complainant and his witnesses had given recognizances for their appearance, he should have enforced their attendance.

The case must, therefore, be tried.

Limitation Act (IX of 1871), sch. II, arts. 135¹, 145¹—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 135².—Possession under mortgage.

Under a mortgage deed, which by its express terms allows the mortgagee a right to take possession upon default by the mortgagor in payment of the mortgage money, the mortgagee, as absolute owner of the property, has twelve years from the time at which his right to possession commences, in which he may bring his suit for possession.

But where there is no such stipulation in the mortgage, the right of the mortgagee to take possession does not accrue until after the expiration of the year of grace

Suit instituted in a Court not established by Royal Charter by a mortgagee for possession of immoveable property mortgaged.	Twelve years	When the mortgagor's right to possession determines.]
---	--------------	---

The sole question in this case was one of limitation, and the facts sufficient for the purposes of the report will be found set out [69] in the Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.), which was delivered by Garth, C. J.—The plaintiffs in this case sue for possession of certain immoveable property. They claim under a deed executed by the defendant on the 13th Falgoun 1261 (28th February 1855), which is called in the plaint a kutka-balk, but which, upon the face of it, appears to be an absolute sale to the plaintiffs, for the sum of Rs 275.

It seems, however, that there was a verbal arrangement between the parties that the transaction should really be a mortgage, and that the money advanced should be paid off with interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem in Bysakh 1262 (April 1855); the acts and conduct of the parties appear to have been entirely in favour of that view, and both the lower Courts concur in finding that the transaction was a mortgage and not a sale.

That being so, the question comes to be one of limitation, and it arises in this way.

It appears that in the year 1263 (1856), the plaintiffs took the usual proceedings to foreclose the mortgage, and after the year of grace had expired, they brought a suit to recover possession, but they were then defeated on account of some irregularity in the foreclosure proceedings.

They then, on the 27th Pous 1285 (13th January 1879), took fresh foreclosure proceedings, and at the expiration of the year of grace from that date they have again brought this suit for possession.

The first Court held that the plaintiffs were barred by limitation, upon the ground that limitation began to run against them from Bysakh 1273 (April 1866), when the first foreclosure proceedings came to an end.

The Subordinate Judge has reversed that decree, and has given the plaintiffs a decree for possession.*

On appeal to this Court it has been contended that, assuming the transaction to have been a mortgage (about which there is no question), the plaintiffs' right to possession accrued at the time when default was made in payment of the mortgage money, [70] that is to say, in Bysakh 1263 (April 1856), and that if it accrued then, the plaintiffs' right of action was barred in 1275 (1868), and that no subsequent foreclosure proceeding could revive their right

In support of that contention, we were referred to the case of Denonath Gangooly v. Nursing Proshad Doss (14 B. L. R., 87, 22 W. R., 90), decided by Justices MARKBY and MITTER..

In that case the mortgage was by conditional sale, and there was a stipulation in the deed, that if default should be made in payment of the mortgage money, the mortgagee should be at once entitled to possession without any foreclosure proceedings.

The mortgagor failed to pay on the day named, and foreclosure proceedings were taken more than twelve years after default. Then, after the expiration of the year of grace, a suit was brought by the mortgagee for possession, and it was held by this Court that the plaintiff was barred, because he ought to have brought his suit for possession within twelve years from the time when his right to possession accrued.

* Deciding that the case was governed by Article 135 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, but that under the Act of 1871 the suit was not barred

Mr. Justice MITTER explains the ground upon which that case was decided in this way. He says, "from the terms of the conditional sale set forth above, it is evident that, on default of payment within the stipulated time, the mortgagee was entitled to take possession of the properties sold, unless restrained by any legislative enactment. It is said that he was so restrained by Regulation XVII of 1806. This argument entirely proceeds from a misapprehension of the provisions of that law. It is quite clear that parties are ordinarily bound by the terms of their contract, unless by legislative interference one or both of them are set at liberty to modify or annul any of its provisions to which they have mutually consented. The kutkabala in question expressly reserved to the mortgagee the right of entry upon the mortgaged premises on default of payment within the stipulated time. Regulation XVII of 1806, or any other law, does not render such a stipulation inoperative between the parties. I am, therefore, of opinion that the mortgagee in this case, immediately on default of payment which occurred on the 9th of July 1855, was entitled to take possession of the properties mortgaged."

[71] And Mr. Justice MITTER further goes on to say that, although the mortgagee took proceedings for foreclosure and so became entitled to the property as absolute owner, those proceedings gave him no fresh right to sue for possession.

That case was followed by another to the same effect—Lall Mohun Gungopadhyaya v. Prosunno Chunder Banerjee (24 W. R., 433), decided by Mr. Justice JACKSON and Mr. Justice McDONELL, and both decisions were reviewed in a case which occurred in this Bench—Noonoo Opadhyaya v. Lalla Gouree Churn (1 Shome, 21), in which we agreed with the law laid down by Mr. Justice MITTER.

It will be observed that, in order to make these decisions applicable in any case, the mortgagee must, by the express terms of the mortgage, have a right to take possession upon default by the mortgagor in payment of the mortgage money, and unless there is that express provision in the deed, it has been held over and over again that the right of the mortgagee to make possession does not accrue until after the expiration of the year of grace.

It has been contended that the Subordinate Judge did not understand those cases, and from the fact of his saying that they have been dissented from by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX and other Judges in two cases—Ghinaram Dobey v. Ram Monaruth Ram Dobey (7 C. L. R., 580), and Bromhomoy Das v. Jugobundhu Ghose (7 C. L. R., 583), we think it very possible that he did not comprehend their true meaning.

The first of these cases—Ghinaram Dobey v. Ram Monaruth Ram Dobey (7 C. L. R., 580), was decided by Justices PONTIFEX and McDONELL; and it will be found not to conflict in any way with the authorities to which I have referred.

In that case no doubt the mortgagee had a right, by the terms of the deed, to take possession upon default of payment by the mortgagor. He did not take possession upon default, but he took proceedings for foreclosure; and the year of grace expired within twelve years from the time of default.

Within twelve years after the expiration of the year of grace he brought his suit for possession, not as mortgagee, but as absolute [72] owner of the property, and it was held that he was entitled to recover.

The case was governed by the Limitation Act of 1871, and as explained by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX, the plaintiff, if he had sued as mortgagee, had twelve years (under Article 35)† from the time when, as mortgagee, his right to possession accrued.

Before this period had expired, he had, by the foreclosure proceedings, clothed himself with a new character, that of absolute owner, and Article 145† gave him twelve years from the time when his title accrued to sue in that character.

The other case—Bromhomoyi Das v. Jugobundhu Ghose (7 C. L. R. 589), which was heard by Justices McDONELL and BROUGHTON—was decided upon precisely the same principle, so that neither of these cases conflict in any way, as the Subordinate Judge seems to think they do, with the authorities to which we have referred.

But whether he quite understood the distinction between the cases or not he appears to be quite right in his conclusions.

It is clear that limitation did not run, as the Munsif says it did, from Bysakh 1273 (April 1866), because the first foreclosure proceedings were void for irregularity, nor could the cases of Dinonath Gangooly v. Nursing Proshad Doss (14 B. L. R., 87; 22 W. R., 90), and Lall Mohun Gungopadhy v. Prosunno Chunder Banerjee (24 W. R., 433), apply here, because there was no stipulation in this case that the mortgagee should be entitled to possession on default of payment by the mortgagor.

The only time, therefore, from which limitation could run was the expiration of the year of grace, after the foreclosure proceedings in 1879.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[MORTGAGEE—SUIT FOR POSSESSION—

It has been held that if a mortgagor, who may, under the terms of the mortgage, on default of payment or otherwise, sue for possession as mortgagee, within the time allowed by art 135 of Act XV of 1877, commences foreclosure proceedings under Bengal Reg. 17 of 1806, and thus takes steps to alter his character he will under art. 144 be entitled to another 12 years from the date of such change of character.—7 C. L. R. 550. In 10 Cal. 68 it was held that this change of character into an absolute owner (by the expiry of the year of grace under the regulations) should be within the 12 years allowed by Art. 135, else he could not claim a fresh start of limitation from the date of foreclosure (10 Cal. 68).

As regards England, see Pugh v. Heath (6 Q. B. D. 345) 7 A. C. 235

Where art. 135 is applicable and the mortgagee has perfected his title under Reg. 1806, he has twelve years from the year of grace against the mortgagor and those deriving title from him after the application for foreclosure but not against those deriving title before such application.—(1885) 12 Cal. 644, (620) on appeal 16 Cal. 684 P. *Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 148—Right to officiate as priest,

A right to officiate as priest at funeral ceremonies of Hindus is in the nature of immoveable property, and a suit to establish such right therefore falls under art 148 and not under art. 145 of the Limitation Act

Baboo Kashi Kant Sen for the Appellants.

Baboo Kuruu Sundhoo Mookerjee for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER and TOTTENHAM, JJ), which was delivered by Mitter, J.—This is a suit for redemption of a certain share of Brit Jugmanka. It is a right to officiate as priest at funeral ceremonies of Hindus. The Munsif awarded a decree in favour of the (plaintiffs) appellants. The lower Appellate Court has reversed that decree, holding that under art. 145† of the present Limitation Act (No. XV of 1877), the claim is barred. It is of opinion that the right claimed is in the nature of moveable property.

It is contended in appeal that the right claimed is in the nature of immoveable property, and therefore the present suit falls under art. 148,† and not under 145.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1669 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Dwarka Nath Mitter, Extra Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated the 27th of June 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Mohendro Lal Ghose, Second Munsif of Gya, dated the 6th of February 1882.

Provided that all claims to redeem, arising under instruments of mortgage of immoveable property situate in British Burma, which have been executed before the first day of May 1863, shall be governed by the rules of limitation in force in that province immediately before the same day.]

There is no doubt that the right in question ranks amongst immoveable property according to Hindu law. We need not here refer to the texts of the Hindu law bearing upon this question, as they are all collected in the two judgments of the Bombay High Court cited below, one of which was cited before us in the course of the argument, Krishnabhat bin Husgange v. Kapabhat bin Mahalbhāt (6 Bom. H. C., A. C., 137) and Balvantrav v. Purshotram Sideshwar (9 Bom. H. C., 99).

In Futtehsangji, Jaswantsangji v. Desai, Kallian Sangji [74] Hukoomut Razi (L. R., 1 I. A., 34, 13 B. L. R., 254), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, after referring to the rule of construction adopted by the Bombay High Court in the two cases cited above, observe (p. 50). "To the application of this rule within proper limits, their Lordships see no objection. The question must, in every case, be whether the subject of the suit is in the nature, of immoveable property or of an interest in immoveable property, and if its nature and quality can be only determined by Hindu law and usage, the Hindu law may properly be invoked for that purpose."

In this case "the nature and quality" of the property in suit can be only determined by Hindu law, because it is not recognized as property in any other system of law.

Adopting this principle of construction, therefore, we must come to the conclusion that the present suit falls under art. 148 and not under 145.

We reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court for the determination of the other question arising in it. Costs to abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[In construing the term 'immoveable property' in Act XIV of 1859 which did not define the same, the Bombay High Court laid down that the term included hereditary offices in a Hindu community when such offices were incapable of being held by any person not a Hindu and the Privy Council approved of the Bombay rulings (21 W. R. 178 P. C.; 5 Bom., 322) where the cases are discussed.]

The term was, however, defined in Act I of 1868.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Hurronath Chowdhry.....Defendant

versus

Nistarini Chowdrani and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Appeal—Arbitration—Application to file award, Objections to—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 525, 520 and 521.

When an application is made to a Court to file an award under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and an objection is made to the filing of it upon any of the grounds mentioned in s. 520 or 521, the proper course for the Court to pursue is to dismiss the application, and to leave the applicant to bring a regular suit to enforce the award in which all the objections to its validity may be properly tried and determined.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 281 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 15th December 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Tara Prosunno Ghose, Second Munsif of Attia, dated the 1st March 1880.

Where no such ground of objection is made to the filing of the award, [75] and the Court consequently orders it to be filed, no appeal lies against that order.

Baboo Sreenath Das for the Appellant

Baboo Saroda Prosono Roy for the Respondents.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear in the Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and MACPHERSON, J.), which was delivered by Garth, C. J.—This appeal comes before us under rather peculiar circumstances.

A dispute arose between the parties to the suit with regard to the boundary of their respective properties. The dispute was referred privately (without the intervention of a suit) to three arbitrators.

These arbitrators, having taken evidence and made a local investigation, made an award in favour of the plaintiffs on the 7th of Srabun 1286 (22nd July 1879).

The plaintiffs then petitioned under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code that the award should be filed in Court.

To this petition objections were made on the part of the defendant, stating various reasons why the award should not be filed, and, amongst others, that the arbitrators had been guilty of partiality and other misconduct, which would be grounds for impugning the award under ss 520 and 521 of the Code.

Upon these objections being made, the first Court (apparently with the full consent of both parties) fixed an issue for trial in this general form. "Whether the award could be filed and enforced?" Under this issue all the questions raised between the parties with regard to the validity of the award appear to have been fully discussed, and tried. Evidence was called by both sides, and in the result a decree was made, that the suit should be dismissed, and the application disallowed, the Munsif being of opinion that the arbitrators had proceeded to decide the matters in dispute in a manner not warranted by their authority, and that all the arbitrators were not present at the time when the ameen made a measurement of the land. This decision was appealed to the Subordinate Judge, and it appears that he also has again heard the whole case, and has come to the conclusion [76] (for reasons which in point of law appear to be unobjectionable) that the award is good, and that it ought to be enforced.

He, therefore, reversed the decree of the first Court, and ordered the award to be enforced; and he gave the plaintiffs their costs in both Courts with interest at 6 per cent.

The case now comes up to this Court on second appeal, and it has been contended by the appellant that, as the arbitration was a private one, and as the objections to the award, or some of them, were such as are mentioned in s. 520 or 521, the Courts below had no right in a proceeding of this kind to try the question as to the validity of the award, and that the proper course for the Court of First Instance to have pursued was to have dismissed the application, and left the plaintiff to bring a regular suit to enforce the award.

It was further contended that no appeal could in that case have been preferred from the order of the Munsif rejecting the application, and that the lower Appellate Court has acted without jurisdiction in entertaining an appeal at all.

Our attention has been called to a good many authorities, and specially to Sashti Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chunder Chatterjee (8 B. L. R., 315; 15 W. R., F. B., 9); Rajchunder Roy Chowdhry v. Brojendro Coomar Roy Chowdhry (21 W. R., 182); Mudhusudan Das v. Adasta Charan Das (8 B. L. R., 316 note; 12 W. R., 85), and Boonad Mathoor v. Nathoo Shahoo (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 375).

The result of these decisions is not very clear, but we are disposed to think that when an application is made to the Court to file an award under s. 525, and an objection is made to the filing of it upon any of the grounds mentioned in s. 520 or 521, the proper course for the Court to pursue is to dismiss the application, and to leave the applicant to bring a regular suit to enforce the award, in which all the objections to its validity may be properly tried and decided.

We also think, that where no such ground of objection is made to the filing of the award, and the Court consequently orders it to be filed, no appeal lies against that order.

[77] If either of the parties in this case had taken exception in proper time to the course which was pursued by the Munsif, and had applied to this Court under s. 622, it is probable that we should have stayed the proceedings.

But what has really taken place is this. Instead of dismissing the application, as he ought to have done, the Munsif has proceeded to try the questions at issue between the parties, precisely as if this had been a regular suit brought to enforce the award.

Both parties, so far as we can see, have consented to that course, and have brought forward all the arguments and evidence on both sides which they could have brought forward in a regular suit.

Moreover, the decision of the Munsif has been appealed to the Sub-Judge without any objection on the part of the respondents, and the case has been again heard on appeal before him, with the result that the Munsif's judgment has been reversed, and the award has been ordered to be enforced.

We are now asked on second appeal to say, that both the lower Courts have acted without jurisdiction, and to reverse the lower Appellate Court's judgment on that ground.

Now it appears to us in the first place, that if both Courts have acted without jurisdiction, and if this proceeding is not a suit at all, we have no more right to try the case on second appeal than the lower Courts had to try it. We ought, therefore, in that case to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction to hear it.

But then it is argued that, if we cannot deal with it on second appeal, we ought at any rate to allow the appellant to apply to set the proceedings aside under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. The answer to that is, that we have at present no application before us under s. 622, and if we had, I for one should certainly not be disposed to help the appellant, inasmuch as both parties have consented to try the cause as it has been tried, and I see no reason to believe that any injustice has been done.

But the proper view to take of the matter we consider to be this; it is clear that both parties have treated these proceedings, from first to last, as a regular suit to enforce the award. Both the Judges who have tried the case, and the parties themselves, have all dealt with it upon that footing; and the appellant is [78] wholly unable to suggest that, if these proceedings were set aside and the cause were tried again, it would be tried in any other way, or upon any other materials, than those on which it has been tried.

He has himself brought the case here on second appeal, as he could only have done in a regular suit, and the only difference which we can see from first to last between this proceeding and a regular suit, is that the plaintiff's application to the first Court is called a petition instead of a plaint, and that the case has been allowed to proceed without the payment of an institution fee.

The revenue is really the only sufferer. The error, if any, is a mere matter of form, which has not affected the trial of the case upon the merits, and which, therefore, (under s. 578 of the Code) we consider ourselves bound to disregard.

We find no reason to suppose that there is any error of law in the lower Court's judgment, except this informality, and we, therefore, think it right to entertain the appeal, and to dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd October, 1883.

PRESIDENT.

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

In the matter of Obhoy Chandra Mookerjee.

Obhoy Chandra Mookerjee v. Mohamed Sabir.

Possession, Order of Criminal Court as to—Dispute likely to cause breach of the peace—Duty of Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145.

It is the duty of a Magistrate, before taking proceedings under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to satisfy himself whether there is any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, and that the suggested apprehension of a breach of the peace is not merely colourable and made to induce him to deal with the matters properly cognizable by the Civil Court.

Mr. Bell for Petitioner.

Mr. Gregory for Opposite Party.

* Criminal Motion No. 248 of 1883, against the order of Baboo Dwarkanath Roy, Deputy Magistrate of Barisal, dated the 16th July 1883.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment delivered by Mitter, J.—I am of opinion that the basis on which the jurisdiction of Criminal Courts under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is founded does not exist in this case.

[79] Section 145 says that, "whenever a Magistrate is satisfied from a police report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, &c., &c.," then a proceeding under this section may be instituted.

In this case what happened was this: A police report was submitted to the Magistrate on the 8th November 1882, and in that report the police officer stated as his opinion that there was a dispute between the parties to these proceedings relating to a chur, and that in his opinion there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. This opinion was based upon this ground. The police officer says that if one of the parties would attempt to collect rent forcibly from the ryots, there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. Upon that, both the parties to these proceedings were called upon to show cause why they should not be bound down to keep the peace. They appeared and asked the Magistrate to allow them time to settle the matter amicably. For some reason or other this amicable settlement did not take place, and they were directed to enter into recognizances to the amount of Rs. 500 each, not to commit a breach of the peace for four months.

Then on the 15th Pous 1289 (corresponding with the 29th December 1882) an application was made by Mohamed Sabir, the opposite party, alleging that the applicant before us, viz., Obhoy Chandra Mookerjee, was about to commit acts of oppression upon his tenants, and in that application Mohamed Sabir also stated that some of the tenants had complained against the servants of Obhoy Chandra. On that very day his deposition was taken and he confirmed the statements made in his application. The Magistrate, without any further enquiry as to whether all these statements were correct or not, on the 2nd January 1883, upon this petition and the deposition of Mohamed Sabir, ordered the proceeding now before us to be instituted.

It appears to me that it was the duty of the Magistrate to see whether there was any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning this chur land before instituting these proceedings. He has acted simply on the statement of Mohamed Sabir, that is to say, he has assumed jurisdiction without really satisfying himself as to whether there was a dispute between [80] the parties. It may be that Mohamed Sabir was anxious to have the question of possession decided in a cheap way, but it was the duty of the Magistrate, under s. 145, to satisfy himself that really there was a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning this chur land.

On the whole, I am of opinion that the foundation upon which the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts under s. 145 is based was wanting in this case. We therefore set aside the order, dated 16th July 1883, and the rest of the proceedings.

Pigot, J.—I entirely agree. I only wish to add that it seems to me that Magistrates ought to be very careful in acting under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, so as to guard themselves from the danger of assuming jurisdiction in cases not really contemplated by the section, and where the suggested apprehension of a breach of the peace is little more than colourable, and made to induce the Magistrates to deal with matters properly cognizable by the Civil Courts.

Order set aside.

NOTES.

[The Magistrate should, before taking proceedings under sec. 145 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, satisfy himself whether there is any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace; and any evidence taken in the course of trial cannot give him jurisdiction which he does not otherwise possess.—10 Cal. 71; 7 Cal., 385; 20 Cal., 513; 20 Cal., 520; 23 Cal., 557.]

Review—Grant of application. Notice of—Hearing by successor—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 624.

An application for review of judgment, upon a ground other than those mentioned in s. 624 of the Civil Procedure Code if presented to the Judge who delivered it, and who thereupon directs notice to be given to the opposite party, may be heard and disposed of by his successor. Pancham v. Jhinguri (I. L. R., 4 All., 278) dissented from.

THIS was a suit for possession of land. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant appealed to the District Judge who reversed the Munsif's decision. The plaintiff then applied for a review, and the District Judge ordered notice to be given to the defendant. Before the hearing of the application the Dis-[81]trict Judge was transferred. His successor, considering that he was not debarred by s. 624 of the Civil Procedure Code from doing so, heard the application and reversed the judgment in appeal, restoring that of the Munsif. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Ram Churn Mitter for the appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—The question for decision in this case is, whether an application for review of judgment upon a ground other than those mentioned in s. 624 of the Civil Procedure Code, if presented to the Judge who delivered it, and who thereupon directs notice to be given to the opposite party, may be heard and disposed of by his successor.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1627 of 1882, against the decree of H. Beveridge, Esq., District Judge of Patna, dated the 14th of August 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Kedarnath Roy, Additional Munsif of Patna, dated the 31st of August 1881

The learned pleader for the appellant contends that this question should be answered in the negative, and relies upon the provisions of s. 624 as construed in Puncham v. Jhinguri (I. L. R., 4 All., 278). The decision cited fully supports him. But with deference to the opinion of the learned Judges who decided that case we are unable to concur in the view taken by them. The learned Judges have pointed out the inconvenience and hardship which may ensue in certain cases if their interpretation of the section be adopted, but they nevertheless felt themselves bound to adopt it as they could not get over the plain language of the section. It appears to us that if the word "made" be literally construed, it would not ordinarily include a hearing and determination of the application for review. We quite agree with the learned Judges that if the word "made" be construed to include a mere physical presenting of the application, it would be reducing the provision of the section to an absurd and useless one. But s. 626 provides that the Court shall reject the application if it appear to it that there is not sufficient ground for review. Therefore, before the notice provided in clause (A) of this section is directed to be issued, the Judge who delivered the judgment [82] is required to consider judicially the merits of the application, and unless he is satisfied that there are prima facie grounds for review, he would not direct notice to issue.

The position of s. 624 lends some support to the contention that the word "made" does not include the hearing and the determination of the application for review. If it did, it would have been naturally placed after s. 626, which provides for the hearing and determination of an application for review.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the question raised before us should be answered in the affirmative.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT ·

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Korban Ally Mirdha(Plaintiff)

Sharoda Proshad Aich and others.....(Defendants)*

Registration—Act (III of 1877), s. 17—Bond under Rs. 100—Compulsory Registration—Priority—Mortgage bond—Duties of Subordinate Court—Conflict of opinion in High Courts.

A mortgage bond for Rs. 99, repayable in nine months and eleven days, with interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, does not require registration, but a registered mortgage bond for Rs. 195, subsequently executed, will have priority over it.

The lower Courts are bound to follow the concurrent decisions of the Court to which they are subordinate, and are not at liberty to adopt a contrary opinion expressed by another High Court.

IN this case the plaintiff alleged that the defendants, on the 19th of Bysack 1278 (May 1, 1871), borrowed from him Rs. 99 on a mortgage of certain property. The mortgage deed, which was not registered, stipulated that the loan should bear interest at 2 per cent. per mensem, and be repaid in Magh 1278 (January-February 1872). The plaintiff instituted the present suit on the 13th December 1881, dating his cause of action from the 1st of Falgun 1278 (12th February 1872). On the 14th of February 1882, one Sharoda Proshad Aich intervened in the suit, and was made a defendant on the allegations that the properties covered [83] by the plaintiff's deed had been mortgaged to him on the 20th of July 1881, to secure the repayment of Rs. 195, that his mortgage had been duly registered; and that, therefore, he was entitled to priority over the plaintiff, assuming the latter's mortgage was genuine, which he denied. The original defendants, the plaintiff's alleged mortgagors, denied the plaintiff's claim, and asserted that his bond was a forgery.

The Munsif fixed four issues, but, the only issues material for the purpose of this report were: (1) "did the plaintiff's bond create any lien on the property, the amount secured up to due date being more than Rs. 100, or is it admissible in evidence, (3) whether the registered kobala of Sharoda Proshad Aich is entitled to precedence. Both these issues [the first on the authority of,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2557 of 1882, against the decree of the Officiating District Judge of Burdwan, dated the 28th of September 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Gobind Deb Moorkerjee, Munsif of Bood-Bood, dated the 30th of June 1882.

Himmat Singh v. Sewaram (I. L. R. 3 All., 157)] the Munsif found against the plaintiff, and he dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff appealed. On appeal the District Judge said :—

“ In the view I have taken of this case, it will only be necessary to consider the decision on the first issue. The Munsif has held that the bond sued on was a document of which registration was compulsory, and that the plaintiff's case thus wholly fails. He cites the authority of a Full Bench decision of Himmat Singh v. Sewaram (I. L. R. 3 All., 157), the facts of which were very closely analogous to the present case. It appears to me that the question is completely settled by the decision referred to, and I must therefore dismiss this appeal with costs. On the other points raised, such as the relative priorities of the plaintiff and the purchaser, Sharoda Proshad Aich, it is unnecessary to offer any opinion.” The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Joygopal Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff in this case sues on an unregistered mortgage bond, the consideration of which is Rs. 99. The defendants, stated to be the mortgagors, denied the execution [84] of the mortgage bond. There is another party who appeared and was brought on the record, who claims this property as having been bought under an unregistered conveyance from the other defendants, the admitted owners.

Both the lower Courts, on the authority of the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, in the case of Himmat Singh v. Sewaram (I. L. R., 3 All., 157), have dismissed the case, holding that the plaintiff's mortgage bond was one of which registration was compulsory, and, therefore, cannot be made the subject of suit.

In our opinion the judgments of the lower Courts are erroneous, not being in accordance with a series of decisions delivered by this Court. The High Courts of Madras and Bombay, it may be observed, have adopted the same view of the law. The lower Courts are bound to follow the concurrent decisions of the Court to which they are immediately subordinate, and are not at liberty to adopt a contrary opinion expressed by another High Court.

We find, moreover, that the judgment of the Chief Justice of the High Court of Allahabad, in the case on which the lower Courts rely, refers expressly to a decision of this Court on the point in issue, so that the lower Courts had the means of ascertaining, if they did not otherwise know it, what rule they should follow. We would, however, refer the lower Courts to the judgments of this High Court in Isham Chandra v. Soojan Bibee ; (7 B. L. R., 14 ; 15 W. R. 331) ; Rohinee Debia v. Shib Chunder Chatterjee (15 W. R., 558) ; Parchi Das v. Ahmedula (12 C. L. R., 444) ; Ram Doolary Koer v. Thacoar Roy (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 61). The judgments of the other High Courts to the same effect are Vasudev Moreskhar v. Rama Babaji (11 Bom. H. C., 149) ; Satra Kumaji v. Visram Hasgauda (I. L. R. 2 Bom., 97), Nana Bin Lakshman v. Anant Babaji (I. L. R., 2 Bom. 353) ; Narasaya Chetti v. Guruvappa Chetti (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 378) ; and Kattarmuri Jagappa v. Padalu Latchappa (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 119).

But although the grounds upon which the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's case are untenable, it is unnecessary [85] to remand the case for trial on the merits, because on another point we think that the suit must fail.

The plaintiff is opposed by defendant No. 5, whose title depends upon a registered conveyance, and this, it is settled law, must prevail over his unregistered mortgage-deed.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed, the orders of the lower Court being affirmed, but on grounds different from those stated in their judgments.

We allow no costs in this Court. The defendants will receive one set of costs in both the lower Courts.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Jurisdiction—Officer invested with special powers—Sections 30, 34 and 209, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

An officer invested with special powers under s. 34 of the Criminal Procedure should rarely if ever try a case himself under s. 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure where it appears from some of the evidence that the accused might have been charged with an offence beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take cognizance of.

In this case the accused were charged with culpable homicide not amounting to murder, before the Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagar, an officer exercising the special powers conferred upon him under s. 34 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The accused were convicted and sentenced by the Deputy Commissioner, but when this finding and sentence were submitted to the District Judge of the Assam Valley for confirmation he considered from some portions of the evidence that the accused might properly have been tried on a charge of murder. He therefore, submitted the case to the High Court, recommending that the conviction should be annulled, and that the Deputy Commissioner be directed to commit the case for trial to the Sessions Court.

No one appeared to argue the case.

* Criminal Reference No. 118 of 1883 and letter No. 1083 from C. J. Lyall Esq., Officiating Judge of the Assam Valley District, dated the 21st August 1883.

The prisoner has been convicted under s. 304 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by an officer invested with the special powers described in ss. 30 and 34, of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Sessions Judge, to whom the sentence has been submitted for confirmation, has referred the case to this Court, as a Court of Revision, to have these proceedings set aside, and the Deputy Commissioner directed to commit the case for trial in this Court.

Section 209 empowers a Magistrate holding an enquiry to try the case himself if he thinks that only an offence within his jurisdiction has been committed. This is the course which we understand the Deputy Commissioner has taken, and we cannot, therefore, hold that it is not authorised by law, or that he has acted without jurisdiction merely because there is some evidence which, if believed, would substantiate the charge of murder an offence beyond his jurisdiction. At the same time we think that this course should be very rarely, if ever, taken by any officer invested with special powers under ss. 30 and 34, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that in adopting it, any such officer incurs a very grave responsibility. Looking to the evidence on the record, especially the medical evidence, we are not inclined to doubt the correctness of the finding of the Deputy Commissioner, and, therefore, we are unable to set aside the proceedings. The Sessions Judge will, therefore, proceed according to law.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Deo Prosad Sing.....Plaintiff

versus

Pertab Kairee.....Defendant.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 14—Deduction of time during prosecution of suit with due diligence—Defect of jurisdiction—Cause of like nature.

On the 2nd of September 1869 a suit was instituted for, among other things, the possession of land claimed under a kobala dated the 31st October 1867. This suit was dismissed on the ground of misjoinder of [87] causes of action. On the 14th of April 1881, the plaintiff sued for possession of the land only.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1863 of 1882, against the decree of the Judge of Shahabad, dated the 27th July 1882, reversing the decree of the First Munsif of Berah, dated 27th December 1881.

Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation as the plaintiff had, within the meaning of s. 14, been prosecuting his claim in a Court which from a cause of "like nature" to defect of jurisdiction, was unable to entertain it—Ram Sahbag Das v. Gobind Prasad (1 L. R., 2 All., 622)—not followed

Mr. Twisdale and Baboo Anund Gopal Palit for Appellant

Baboo Mon Mohun Dutt for Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) which was delivered by Mitter, J.—This is a suit for possession of land covered by a kobala, dated the 31st October 1867, executed in favour of the plaintiff. The lower Courts find that the period of limitation in this case must be counted from the date of the kobala. This finding has not been questioned before us.

The suit was brought on the 14th April 1881, i.e. more than twelve years from the date of the kobala, and unless the time during which another suit relating to the subject-matter in dispute was pending be deducted, the claim is clearly barred by limitation.

It appears that the plaintiff, on the 2nd September 1869, brought a suit against the defendant and several other persons, for the recovery of possession of a plot of land, including the land in suit, and obtained a decree in the Court of First Instance. On appeal it was found that the plaintiff had joined together several causes of action. The Appellate Court, on the 30th March 1881, confirmed the decree as regards one of these causes of action, and dismissed the suit as against the present defendant and others on the ground of misjoinder of several causes of action.

The question which we have to decide is whether, under s. 14 of the present Limitation Act, the plaintiff is entitled to have the deduction of the time during which the former suit was pending. The District Judge, disagreeing with the Munsif, is of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to the deduction.

So far as the question before us is concerned, the language of the 14th section of the present Limitation Act is similar to the [88] language of the 14th section of Act XIV of 1859, with this exception that, after the words "other cause," the words of a like nature have been added in the former Act. But in the Full Bench decision of Chander Madhub Chuckerbutty v. Ram Coomarr Chowdry (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 553, 6 W. R., 184) Sir BARNES PEACOCK, C. J., held that in s. 14 of Act XIV of 1859 the words "other cause" meant other cause of a like nature. The cases decided under Act XIV of 1859, with reference to this point, will therefore be of help to us in determining the question before us.

The District Judge is of opinion that misjoinder of parties is not a cause "of a like nature" with defect of jurisdiction, because it was in the plaintiff's own power to avoid it. But it is equally in the plaintiff's own power to avoid suing in a Court which, for defective jurisdiction, is unable to entertain it. This is not, therefore, the correct test for determining the question, whether an alleged cause is one of a like nature with defective jurisdiction or not. For this reason we are unable to follow the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Sahbag Das v. Gobind Prasad (1 L. R., 2 All., 622) cited by the Judge.

It appears to us that "misjoinder of parties" and "defective jurisdiction" are causes of a similar nature. In Mohun Chunder Koondo v. Azam Gazer (12 W. R., 45) Sir BARNES PEACOCK, C.J. held that bringing a suit against a person who had died before the suit was instituted was a cause of a similar nature within the meaning of s. 14 of Act XIV of 1859. In the case under our consideration the similarity is certainly greater than it was in the case just cited. There, in the former suit, the plaintiff obtained a decree in the Court of First Instance. It is therefore reasonable to hold that the first suit was instituted in good faith, and prosecuted with due diligence. The present suit is, therefore not barred by limitation.

We reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court for the determination of the other questions arising in it.

The costs will abide the result

Appeal allowed

NOTES

[The Limitation Act of 1908, by explanation III to section 14, has declared that for the purposes of section 14 misjoinder of parties or of causes of action shall be deemed to be a cause of a like nature with defect of jurisdiction. Second Appeal—Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (Beng. Act I of 1879), ss. 37, 137—Arrears of Rent and Ejectment, Suit for.

In suits instituted under Beng. Act I of 1879, for arrears of rent and ejectment on account of the non-payment of arrears of rent, a Second Appeal lies to the High Court, this class of cases not being within the provision of s. 137 of the same Act.

Effect of a previous decree, as evidence in a subsequent suit stated

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 710 of 1881, against the decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpore dated 5th February 1881, reversing the decree of the Deputy Collector of Hazaribagh, dated the 30th July 1880.

Baboo Juggut Chandra Banerjee for the Appellant

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case are sufficiently set forth in the Judgment of the Court (O'KINEALY and BOSE, JJ.), which was delivered by O'Kinealy, J.—In this suit plaintiff sued for arrears of rent under Beng. Act I of 1879, called the "Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act," and for ejectment by reason of non-payment of rent. A preliminary objection has been raised that no appeal lies in such a suit, and in order to see whether an appeal is prevented it is necessary to look at the terms of the Act.

Section 37, cl. 4, describes one class of suits that are triable, under the Act—"all suits for arrears of rent due on account of land either rent-paying or rent-free, or on account of any rights of pasturage, forest rights, fisheries, or the like." Then comes cl. 5, which says "All suits to eject any ryot, or to cancel any lease on account of the non-payment of arrears of rent, or on account of a breach of the conditions of any contracts by which a ryot may be liable to ejectment, or a lease may be liable to be cancelled." When we turn to s. 88 we find, "any person desiring to eject a ryot, or to cancel a lease on account of non-payment of arrears of rent, may sue for such ejectment or cancelment, and [90] for recovery of the arrear in the same action, or may adduce any unexecuted decree for arrears of rent as evidence of the existence of such arrears in a suit for such ejectment or cancelment." It is thus clear from a comparison of s. 88 with cls. 4 and 5 of s. 37 that a suit for ejectment or cancelment of a lease is a distinct and separate suit from a suit for arrears of rent, but by the provisions of s. 88 the two may be brought against the same person in the same action. Then turning to s. 137 it is declared "In suits under cls. 2, 4 and 7 of s. 37, tried and decided by a Deputy Commissioner, if the amount sued for or the value of the property claimed does not exceed one hundred rupees, the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner shall be final," but suits under cl. 5 of s. 37 are not referred to, nor is an appeal under that clause barred by s. 137. We are, therefore, of opinion that the language of s. 88 of the Act clearly shows that suits under cl. 5 and cl. 4 are not of the same nature, but of a different kind, and, although s. 137 prevents a suit for arrears of rent being appealed, it certainly does not in any wise prevent an appeal lying from a suit for ejectment. A case has been brought to our notice—Parbutty Churn Sen v. Shaikh Mundari (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 594), in which it has, it is urged, been held by a Division Bench of this Court that a suit for ejectment or non-payment of rent does not, under Beng. Act VIII of 1869, give an appeal to this Court, unless the sum in dispute is more than Rs. 100. That is not a decision under the present Act, nor indeed does it support the contention put forward by the respondent. It was not an appeal in an ejectment suit, but from an order passed in execution of decree. With regard to the facts of the case it would appear that some time previous to the present suit plaintiff sued the present defendant for arrears of rent due for the years 1932-1933, and up to Pous 1934. That suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiff, and as it has not been set aside by any competent Court, it is still binding between the parties. In the present suit the defendant, as in the previous litigation, denied that the relation of landlord and tenant existed. He further also said that the land now sued for was not the land then in dispute.

In the first Court the Deputy Collector, taking into consideration [91] that the defendant had admitted that he was partly in possession of the land, compared the proceedings in the former case with those in the present suit, and on this ground held that the lands in dispute were identical in both cases. When the case went up in appeal, the Judicial Commissioner decided that the previous decree was of very little weight, and as there was no independent evidence to show that the lands in dispute were the same in both cases, he dismissed the suit.

We are of opinion that the Judicial Commissioner is wrong in the conclusion he arrived at. If, on a comparison of the papers in the former and in the present suit, it was clear that the lands in dispute were the same, no independent evidence was necessary. Moreover, we think that he has not given sufficient weight to the former decree. As we have already said, so long as it remained undisputed, it was binding between the parties, and showed that the relation of landlord and tenant existed up to Pous 1934. Since that time the defendant has not relinquished the land, nor has he shown that he has been dispossessed by a paramount title. If, therefore, his tenure is not transferable by the title-deeds or custom, he is liable to ejectment for non-payment of such arrears as the lower Court may find to be due from him.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside, and that of the first Court affirmed, in so far as it declares the defendant is liable to ejectment for arrears with costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed

[92] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 3rd August, 1883.

PRESENT.

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE
MCDONELL AND MR JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

In the matter of Act I of 1879

and

In the matter of a Reference to the Board of Revenue

Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 24 - Stamp on sale certificate - Property sold subject to a mortgage - Interest - Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), cl. 5 (d), s. 55.

Where property is sold subject to a mortgage or other charge, the payment of such mortgage or charge forms, under ordinary circumstances, no part of the consideration money for the purchase.

The Stamp duty payable on a document conveying such a property is an ad valorem duty on the amount of the money paid as consideration for the sale.

THIS was a reference from the Board of Revenue under s. 46 of Act I of 1879.

The Collector of Stamp Revenue impounded an unstamped certificate of sale, which had been granted in respect of property which had been sold in execution of a decree of the High Court by the Registrar of the Original Side of the High Court, for Rs. 5,000, subject to two mortgages, securing repayment with interest of Rs. 7,000 and Rs. 250.

The Collector considered that ad valorem stamp duty as for a conveyance was payable upon the certificate on the purchase money, amounting to Rs. 5,000, as well as on the amount charged on the property, i.e., on Rs. 12,250, and the amount of interest payable by the purchaser on the authority of the case of Shri Nagindas Jeychand v. Halalkore Nathwa Ghesla (1. L. R., 5 Bom., 470).

The Board of Revenue, to whom the Collector of Stamps referred the matter, having regard to the above case, and to s. 55, cl. 5 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, considered the opinion of the Collector of Stamps to be correct, but inasmuch as there was a decision conflicting with this view, viz., Reference under s. 49 of the Stamp Act (1. L. R., 5 Mad., 18) the matter was referred to the High Court.

Whether, with reference to the provisions of s. 24 and art. 16, sch. I of the Stamp Act, ad valorem stamp duty as for a conveyance is payable upon the

Description of instrument.	Proper stamp duty.
Certificate of sale, granted to the purchaser of any property sold by public auction by a Civil or Revenue Court or Collector or other Revenue Officer	The same duty as a conveyance (No. 41) for a consideration equal to the amount of the purchase money.]

instrument, on the purchase-money only, which amounts to Rs 5,000 or on Rs 12,250, the sum total of the purchase-money and of the mortgage debts payable in respect of the property, or on the latter sum plus the interest which has accrued thereon up to the date of the issue of the certificate ?

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) appeared for the Board of Revenue.

- No one appeared on behalf of the holder of the certificate.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C. J., McDONELL, J., and TOTTENHAM, J) was given by Garth, C. J.—In this case certain immoveable property was sold by the Sheriff of Calcutta in execution of a decree of this Court for Rs. 5,000. It was sold subject to two mortgages, securing repayment with interest of Rs 7,000 and Rs 250 respectively.

The Board of Revenue have referred to us the question whether the stamp on the sale certificate should be for Rs. 5,000, the purchase-money, or for Rs. 12,250, being the amount of the purchase-money plus the sum secured by the mortgages

- The Collector and the Board of Revenue consider that the stamp should be for Rs. 12,250, and we are referred to two Full Bench authorities, one of the Bombay High Court Shu Nagindas Juychand v Halalkore Nathua (theesta (I L. R., 5 Bom. 470), and the other of the Madras High Court—Reference under s. 49 of the Stamp Act (I L. R., 5 Mad., 18), which appeared to be in conflict

The Bombay Court decided that where a certificate of sale expressly stated that the sale was made subject to the mortgage right of a third party, the principal sum due upon the mortgage was to be deemed a part of the consideration for the transfer under s 24 of the Stamp Act.

The Madras Court decided that when property is sold under a decree of Court subject to a mortgage, it is not sold "subject [94] to the payment of the mortgage debt" within the meaning of s 24. They held that the section only applies, where it is part of the consideration for the transfer, that the mortgage debt should be paid off

Now s. 24 of the Stamp Act appears to be a re-enactment of a provision of the same effect under the title or article "conveyance" in Part I of the schedule to the English Stamp Act, 55, Geo. III, Cap. 184. This is pointed out in the judgment of the Bombay High Court

The construction which was put upon that enactment by the English Court of Exchequer in the case of The Marquis of Chandos v The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (6 Exch., 464) was entirely in accordance with the above decision of the Madras High Court, and it is noteworthy that this decision of the Court of Exchequer was not appealed against, as it might have been. It seems to have been taken for granted that the decision was correct, but the enactment in the Statute of Geo. III was afterwards amended by Parliament in the year 1853 by s. 40 of the Statute 16 and 17 Vict., Cap. 59.

That section, after reciting the concluding portion of the enactment of the Statute of Geo. III, which we have just referred to, and that it had been held and determined that the said ad valorem duty was payable in respect of any such sum or debt, only where the purchaser is personally liable or bound or undertakes or agrees to pay the same, or to indemnify the vendor against the same, and that it was expedient to alter and amend the law in that respect, enacted as follows -

“Where any lands or other property shall be sold and conveyed subject to any mortgage wadset, or bond or other debt, or to any gross or entire sum of money, such sum of money or debt shall be deemed the purchase or consideration money, or part of the purchase or consideration money, as the case may be, in respect whereof the said ad valorem duty shall be paid, notwithstanding the purchaser shall not be or become personally liable, or shall not undertake or agree to pay the same, anything in any Act or otherwise to the contrary notwithstanding.”

[95] Now it must be borne in mind that s. 24 of the Indian Stamp Act follows the language of the Statute 55, Geo. III, Cap 184, and not that of the amending Act 16 and 17 Vic, Cap 59, and therefore the decision of the Madras High Court is in accordance with English authority

And it seems also in accordance with reason and justice.

Where property is sold subject expressly to the payment or transfer by the purchaser of any money or stock, whether such money or stock be charged upon the property or not, such payment or transfer becomes the consideration for the sale, and as soon as it is paid or transferred, and not till then, the purchaser is entitled to his conveyance. In such a case it is perfectly fair that the ad valorem stamp duty should be calculated upon the amount of such money or stock.

But where a property is merely sold subject to a mortgage or other charge, the payment of such mortgage or charge forms, under ordinary circumstances, no part of the consideration for the purchase. The vendor simply sells, and the purchaser buys an encumbered property, and it is in no way essential to the validity of the sale that the mortgage or charge should be paid off.

Thus, take the case of a property worth Rs 50,000, which is mortgaged for Rs. 45,000. The equity of redemption is sold under a decree for Rs. 5,000. It surely would be unjust to oblige the purchaser to stamp his sale certificate with a duty of Rs 50,000, when the value of the thing which he buys is only Rs. 5,000. It is observable that the Bombay High Court, although it quotes the English authority, and apparently decides in opposition to it, points out the difficulties and injustice to which s. 24 of the Stamp Act may give rise, and considers apparently that, if the fact of an existing charge upon the property sold appeared upon the proclamation only and not upon the certificate of sale, s. 24 would not apply, and yet if a charge exists upon the property, it is of course sold subject to that charge, whether it is mentioned in the sale certificate or not. There seems no doubt that the observations of the Bombay High Court, with reference to the difficulty and injustice to which the section may give rise, are only too well founded.

[96] We observe, however, that the opinion of the Collector of Stamps and also of the Board of Revenue seems influenced, in some measure at least, by a provision in the Transfer of Property Act, which has come into operation since the Madras Full Bench case was decided.

It is considered apparently, that s. 55 of that Act makes it obligatory upon the transferee of immoveable property (in the absence of any contract) to the contrary to pay off any mortgage or charge which may exist upon the property at the time of the transfer.

We believe that this section has not yet received any judicial interpretation; but it would seem to mean nothing more than this, that the transferee, as between him and the transferor shall take upon himself the burthen of any charge which may exist upon the property. This would leave the law in the generality of cases as it was before the Act passed. The transferee would, as a matter of course, have taken the property subject to the charge. The only burthen which he would not have taken upon himself would be the personal liability (if any) of the transferor, and it is possible that s. 55 may effect some alteration in the law in that respect.

But even if it does, it would only affect voluntary sales, and would not apply to sales effected in execution under decrees of Court. Section 2 of the Act expressly provides that the Act (same as provided in s. 57 and chap IV) is not intended to affect "any transfer by operation of law or any transfer in execution of a decree or order of a Court".

We think, therefore, that the judgment of the Madras Court is right, and that consequently in the present case the sale certificate is chargeable only with stamp duty on Rs 5,000.

NOTES

[There was a conflict of decisions between the Madras and the Calcutta High Courts on the one hand and the Bombay High Court on the other --(1882) 5 Mad 18 (1889) 10 Cal, 92, (1884) 7 Mad, 421, (1881) 5 Bom., 470.

The Stamp Act 1899 has set at rest the conflict by adding to sec 24 thereof this explanation, "In the case of a sale of property subject to a mortgage or other incumbrance any unpaid mortgage money or money charged together with the interest (if any) due on the same, shall be deemed to be part of the consideration for the sale, provided that, where property subject to a mortgage is transferred to the mortgagee, he shall be entitled to deduct from the duty payable on the transfer the amount of any duty already paid in respect of the mortgage."

Moreover as regards the duty to be levied in the case of a certificate of sale of property subject to an incumbrance sold by public auction, there was also a conflict of decisions --5 Mad 18, 7 Mau. 421, 10 Cal, 92 15 All, 107 5 Bom 470, 18 Bom., 175.

This was set at rest by Act VI of 1894 sec 5 which enacted that nothing in section 24 shall apply to any such certificate of sale as is mentioned in Art No 16 (18 of the Act of 1899) and added only at the end of the second column of that Article. These alterations were retained in the Stamp Act of 1899.]

[97] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th June, 1863.

PRESENT.

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
MACPHERSON.

Kirty Chunder Mitter.Plaintiff

Anath Nath Dey.....Defendant.*

Decree for partition—No return to Commission—Mortgage of share—Purchase by a stranger of portion of the lands included in the decree—Suit by him for partition.

A and B were the joint owners in equal shares of certain property. In 1869 B mortgaged his share to A under a mortgage deed drawn up in the English form. Later on, in 1869, A brought a suit against B for partition, and in 1870 obtained a decree appointing a Commissioner of partition and directing the partition. No return was made to this Commission, and no actual partition came to. In 1873, A obtained a decree for an account, and for payment, or in default for sale of the property. In 1878, B's share was put up for sale, and purchased by C, and C was put into possession. In 1881, C brought a suit against A for partition. Held, that the decree obtained by A in 1873 put an end to B's right to redeem unless he paid the amount found due against him, and therefore at the time of the sale to C, B's right to redeem had ceased to exist, and the property was no longer subject to partition under the decree of 1870 and therefore the partition asked for under the suit of 1881 could be granted.

ANATH NATH DEY and Monmotho Nath Dey, the adopted sons of one Promotho Nath Dey, deceased, were the joint owners in equal shares of certain garden land and premises situate in the district of the 24-Purgunnahs. On the 12th March 1869, Monmotho Nath Dey mortgaged to Anath Nath Dey his undivided moiety in the said premises under a deed of mortgage drawn up in accordance with the form of mortgage prevalent in England. Monmotho Nath Dey failed to pay the principal or interest due under the said mortgage, and Anath Nath, in the month of January 1872, instituted a suit in the High Court against him for the recovery of the money due under the mortgage.

On the 7th July 1873 the High Court passed a decree for an account, and directed that, if the said Monmotho Nath Dey should fail to pay what might be found due on such an account, the said mortgaged property should be sold. Monmotho Nath failed [93] to pay what was due on the finding of such account, and the property was therefore put up to sale, and at such sale the plaintiff in this case, one Kirty Chunder Mitter, became the purchaser for Rs. 31,000, and on the 10th March 1881 a regular conveyance was drawn up and entered into by the Registrar of the High Court.

It appeared from the record that in 1869 a suit (subsequently to the mortgage) had been brought by Anath Nath Dey and [against?] Monmotho Nath Dey for partition of certain properties, including the garden land and premises in question in the suit, and that in January 1870 the High Court passed a decree appointing Commissioners, and directing them to grant partition. It further appeared that no return was ever made to that commission, so that therefore no actual partition had been come to.

On the 11th July 1881 Kirty Chunder, having previously been put into possession, brought the present suit for partition of the properties.

The present defendant Anath Nath Dey contended that the present suit would not lie, inasmuch as the suit above mentioned brought by him against Monmotho Nath Dey in 1869 was for the partition of the same property, and, moreover, that that suit was still undisposed of, inasmuch as no regular partition had been come to, and therefore the plaintiff purchased pendente lite.

The Subordinate Judge found that the property in suit was the subject-matter of partition in the suit still pending before the High Court, and that no final order had been passed in such suit, and therefore under s. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code held that he had no jurisdiction to try it, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Evans (Baboo Rasbehary Ghose and Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry with him) for the appellants contended that s. 12 was only the correlative of s. 13. Section 12 provides, that if an issue be in course of trial in a pending case (the relief sought being the same), the Court shall not entertain another suit to try the same issue, and grant the same relief. Section 13 says, if any issue has been tried, it shall not be heard over again.

[99] Neither of these sections refer to cases like this, where there is no issue between the parties, but only administration of relief on admitted rights.

1st.—This section (12) does not cover the whole ground covered by the doctrine of lis pendens. The bar (if any) in this case is not under this section but under the general rule of lis pendens, that a purchaser pendente lite will be bound by the final decree, and need not be made a party, and the rule as to comity of Courts which prevents one Court taking up a matter which is being dealt with by another competent Court even in the way of administrative relief to partition. But the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply here, because there is no active prosecution of the suit—Kinsman v Kinsman (1 R. & M., 617), Fisher on Mortgages (3rd edn.), Vol I, p. 583, s. 962. cf. Transfer of Property Act, s. 52; and there is no want of comity because the High Court is not dealing with the matter and the High Court suit has abated, and is practically at an end.

2nd.—The plaintiff cannot obtain the relief he is admittedly entitled to in the other suit through the fault of the defendant who is plaintiff in that suit.

3rd.—The defendant (plaintiff in the old suit) has himself caused the alienation to be made by a sale by the High Court, which had cognizance of the old suit, and has thus discharged the property from the operation of the old suit with the assent of the High Court through which he sold, he therefore sold it clear of the lis pendens by his own act and cannot complain.

4th.—The defendant in the old suit had only the equity of redemption and the plaintiff in the old suit had the legal estate before the old suit commenced. He has transferred this estate to the plaintiff in the suit with the assent of the Court, and therefore cannot say that the plaintiff in this suit is a purchaser from the defendant in the old suit, and therefore to be bound by the proceedings in the old suit.

5th.—There is no letis contestatio, and there is nothing that the defendant can complain of.

6th.—There is not any suit pending before the High Court [100] except in name, and no interference with the High Court, and plaintiff cannot get any relief except by this suit

Bahoo Rajendronath Bose for the Respondent

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C J., and MACPHERSON, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—This suit was brought by the plaintiff for a partition of a large estate of which he purchased an eight annas share in the year 1878, under the following circumstances —

The estate in question was part of a much larger property situate partly in Calcutta, and partly in the Mofussil, which belonged jointly to the defendant and one Monmotho Nath Dey, in equal shares.

By a mortgage made in the English form, dated the 12th of March 1869, Monmotho Nath Dey mortgaged to the defendant his half share in the estate in question, subject to the usual proviso for redemption.

Default having been made in payment of the mortgage money, a suit was brought in this Court by the present defendant in the year 1873 against the mortgagor for the recovery of the principal sum and interest and for other relief.

On the 7th of July of the same year the High Court made a decree by consent of the parties, by which an account was to be taken in the usual way, to ascertain the amount due for principal and interest, and it was further ordered, that if the mortgagor failed to pay that amount by a certain day, the mortgaged estate should be put up for sale by public auction.

Under this decree the account was taken, and the sum found due to the defendant was not paid by the mortgagor and consequently the estate was put up for sale by auction, and purchased by the present plaintiff on the 24th of June 1878.

The plaintiff has since obtained possession, and he then, on the 11th of July 1881, brought this suit against the defendant for a partition.

The defendant's answer was, that in the year 1869 he brought a suit in this Court, against Monmotho Nath Dey for a partition of all the properties which belonged to them jointly, and amongst others of the estate in question, that a decree was made in that [101] suit for partition on the 21st of January 1870, and that a Commissioner was appointed under that decree, who has commenced, but only partially carried out, the partition.

The defendant, therefore, contends that as the estate in question was purchased by the plaintiff pending the partition proceedings, it is still subject to the former decree, and the plaintiff has no right to bring this suit to obtain a separate partition of it.

The lower Court holds that as the decree in the former suit directed this property to be partitioned, and as it has not been shown that the former suit has come to an end, the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed.

On appeal it has been contended that the lower Court is wrong upon the ground, that as the mortgage of 1869 was made previously to the partition suit in that year, and as by the proceedings in the mortgage suit any interest which Monmotho Nath Dey might have had is at an end, the property in question is no longer the subject of the former suit, and consequently there is no reason why a decree for partition in this suit should not be made.

We think that there is much reason in this contention. We have ascertained by a reference to the records of this Court that the mortgage by Monmotho Nath Dey to the present defendant in 1869 was made previously to the suit for a partition, and it therefore only remains to consider, whether, at the time when this suit was brought, the property in question, or any interest in it, was liable to be partitioned in the former suit.

The mortgage of 1869 being in the English form, the legal estate in the property passed to the mortgagee, and all that remained to the mortgagor at the time when the partition suit was brought in 1869, was an equity of redemption or the bare right to redeem the property on payment of the mortgage money and interest

It is possible that this right, if it had continued in the mortgagor, might have been made the subject of partition in the former suit, but we consider by the act of the defendant himself that the right has long ceased to exist. The decree which the defendant obtained in the mortgage suit in the year 1873 put an end to Monmotho Nath's right to redeem, unless he paid the amount [102] found to be due on the day named in the decree and therefore at the time when the property was sold to the plaintiff, Monmotho Nath's interest in it had ceased to exist. It follows, therefore, that at the time when this suit was brought, that property was no longer subject to partition under the former suit, and the defence which the defendant has set up to this suit cannot avail him

This result is certainly a fortunate one in the interests of justice, because it clearly appears, from the facts before us, that nothing has been done in the former partition suit for many years past and nothing more is likely to be done. One out of the two Commissioners appointed is dead, Monmotho Nath himself is dead also, and as the latter sold or squandered away all his property before he died, it seems improbable that any one will administer to his estate. So that had this defence been available to the defendant, the plaintiff might have had extreme difficulty in obtaining a partition of the property.

A decree will be made for a partition on the usual terms, and as the defendant has set up a defence which turns out to be unfounded, we think that he should pay the plaintiff's costs in both Courts, but not of course the costs of the partition

Appeal allowed.

[PARTITION DECREE—

“The right to partition being a continuing cause of action, it has been said that, so long as the property is jointly held, the dismissal of, or failure to carry on, the preliminary proceedings cannot bar a fresh suit. APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th September, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
MACPHERSON

Russick Das Bairagy and another Defendants

versus

Preonath Misree and another . . . Plaintiffs

*Minor, suit by—Permission of Court to guardian to sue—Discretion of
s. 440—Return of plaint.*

A volunteer guardian has no right to sue on behalf of a minor, the accord or refusal of permission to sue is a matter in the discretion of the Court

Where a suit is brought in violation of s. 440 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or of the provisions of Act XL of 1858, the proper course for a Court to pursue is to return the plaint, in order that the error may be rectified

[103] THIS was a suit brought to recover possession of a piece of land measuring 16 cottahs, and for wasilat, on the ground that the land was the lakhiraj property of the plaintiffs who were minors, and that they had been dispossessed therefrom by the defendants

The suit was instituted by one Jagadamba Dabee, an adult sister of the minors, who did not describe herself as next friend of the minor plaintiffs, but brought the suit as their guardian, although she had obtained neither a certificate under Act XL of 1858, nor permission of the Court to bring the suit.

The defendants contended that Preonath, one of the alleged minor plaintiffs, had attained majority. that Jagadamba Dabee had no right to bring the suit, as she had not obtained any certificate under Act XL of 1858, and that the disputed lands were the mal lands of one Dinanath Basu, the pro forma defendant in the suit

The Munsif found that the evidence disclosed that Preonath was about 17 or 18 years old, and that he, not having attained 21 years, was therefore a minor, and held that under s. 3 of Act XL of 1858, Jagadamba had a right to bring the suit as the property was small, and gave the plaintiffs a decree.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that in the case of Preonath, 18 and not 21 was the age of majority, but stated that the evidence of one Juggeshur Roy showed that Preonath had not completed the age of 18 when the suit was brought, and that therefore he was still a minor

The evidence of Juggeshur, however, was that "he was about 17 or 18 years old," and as regards the question of the certificate he found that "the Munsif had acted irregularly in allowing Jagadamba to bring the suit on behalf of the minors without making a formal application for permission to do so, but that the lower Court had given permission in its judgment on one of the grounds given in s. 3 of Act XL of 1858, and therefore he held that the defendants' contention failed, and further finding that the plaintiffs and their ancestors had been in possession for a considerable time without payment of rent to the zamindar, confirmed in this respect the Munsif's decree."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 576 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Amirto Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 16th of January 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Bhubun Mohun Roy Chowdhry, Second Munsif of Bongong, dated the 27th of December 1879.

The defendants appealed to the High Court

[104] Baboo Umbica Churn Bose for the Appellants.

Baboo Anund Gopal Palit for the Respondents

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.), was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—The plaintiff describing herself as "elder sister and guardian of the minors Preonath Misree and Uma Churn Misree," brought this suit to recover possession of certain land, the property of the minors, from which she, while acting as their guardian and in possession on their account, had been dispossessed.

The defendants, apart from the merits of the case, contended that Preonath Misree had attained majority and further, that, even if he and his brother were minors, the plaintiff had no right to sue on their behalf, as she held no certificate under Act XI of 1858, and had no permission from the Court to bring the suit.

It certainly does not appear that any permission, such as that contemplated by s. 3, Act XL of 1858, was asked for or given; but the Munsif, in disposing of the latter objection, says in his judgment "Managers of small properties are competent to bring cases without obtaining a certificate, thus the plaintiff is in no way debarred"

On the other point he held that Preonath's age was 17 or 18, and that as 21 was the age of majority, he was still a minor

The same objections were raised in appeal, and have again been urged before us.

The Subordinate Judge, while rightly holding, that in the case of Preonath 18 and not 21 years was the age of majority, says "The evidence of Juggeshur Roy shows that Preonath did not complete the age of 18 years when the suit was before the lower Court, that being so, the Munsif's final decision that Preonath was still a minor, when the case was before him, is correct."

On the other point he held, that though there was irregularity in allowing the case to be brought without a formal application for permission, still the judgment sufficiently showed that permission was given.

Now the Munsif did not decide that Preonath was a minor, in the sense that he had not completed the age of 18 years. The [105] witness whom the Subordinate Judge quotes, and on whose evidence the Munsif also relies, simply says "Preonath's age is 17 or 18 years." How, therefore, the Subordinate Judge concludes, that Preonath had not completed the age of 18 years, is not clear.

By s. 4* of the Majority Act (IX of 1875) a person completes that age at the beginning of the 18th anniversary of his birthday, when he is, as is commonly understood, 18 years old. So that, even if the plaintiff properly

* [Sec. 4.—In computing the age of any person, the day on which he was born is to be included as a whole day, and he shall be deemed to have attained

Age of majority how computed. ed majority, if he fall, within the first paragraph of section 3 at the beginning of the twenty first anniversary of that day, and if he falls within the second paragraph of section 3, at the beginning of the eighteenth anniversary of that day] represented the minors, the defendants' objection, that Preonath was not a minor, has not been properly determined, and the decree, assuming that it is one practically in favour of the minors, is bad.

The suit is also open to objection, on the ground that it is brought in disregard of the provisions of s 440 of the Procedure Code and of s 3, Act XL of 1858, which must be read together. The former section enacts that "every suit by a minor shall be instituted in his name by an adult person, who in such suit shall be called the next friend of the minor" By the latter, persons not holding certificates under the Act can only institute suits connected with a minor's estate with the permission of the Court. As pointed out in the case of Mrinamoyi Dabia v Jogodishuri Dabia (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 450), this permission should, if applied for before the suit is brought, and if granted, be formally recorded. The obtaining of permission should either precede or be contemporaneous with the institution of the suit.

A volunteer guardian has not, as the Munsif seems to suppose, any right to sue on behalf of a minor, and the giving or withholding permission is a matter of discretion with the Court. It has been held in several cases, where suits, though really directed against a minor, have been brought against a person described as his relative or guardian, and who has not been properly authorized to act for him, that the decision will not bind the minor, who is not properly on the record as a party.

The same principle would seem to apply in the case of a person suing in his own name, and without authority, as guardian of a minor. If the decision is adverse to the minor's interests, it might not bind the minor in any future litigation.

[106] That being so, it would be very unjust to compel a defendant to proceed with a suit, in which, if he succeeds, the decision would not bind his opponents, and it therefore seems to follow, that if an objection is made in due time by the defendant that the suit has been improperly brought, that objection should be allowed.

In this case we consider that the Munsif was very wrong in not returning the plaint to the plaintiff, in order that the error might be rectified. This is the course which should always be taken in those cases, where the suit is brought in violation of s 110 of the Code, or of the provisions of Act XL of 1858.

We interfere very unwillingly in this case, because it has been tried upon its merits in both the lower Courts, and there seems no reason to suppose that the conclusion at which they have arrived is otherwise than correct.

But as the question whether Preonath was a minor has not been properly tried in either Court, we feel bound to send the case back to the first Court for the trial of that question. If Preonath was a minor, the judgment may be in favour of both the minor plaintiffs. If he is not a minor, the lower Court, if it thinks fit, may dismiss the suit as regards Preonath (in which case he will be at liberty to bring a fresh one), and give a decree in favour of the other plaintiff only. The costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

NOTES.

[SUITS FOR OR ON BEHALF OF MINORS—

Where a suit is brought in violation of s 440 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882 (C P C, 908, O. 32, r 1) the proper course for the Court is to return the plaint for rectification :— 10 Cal., 102.

The practice is to take the plaint off the file when the defect is apparent on the face of the plaint (13 Cal 189; 13 Bom 7) and when the fact of minority is established only after evidence taken on the point and it is found that the plaintiff knew of the fact of minority and only intended to deceive the Court, the practice according to the Bombay decisions is to make an order directing the plaint to be taken off the file, 13 Bom, 7. According to the Calcutta decisions the Court should pass a decree dismissing the suit, 13 Cal 189. But when the plaintiff is found to have had no such knowledge or intention the Court will stay proceedings and allow sufficient time to enable the minor plaintiff to be represented by a next friend 13 Cal. 189, 13 Bom, 7.

The absence of a certificate is not such an irregularity as to entitle the minor, on coming of age to set aside the proceedings on the ground that he was not properly represented, 17 Cal. 347.—16 L. A. 195, PC

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 31st August, 1883

PRESENT

SIR RICEARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR JUSTICE
MACPHERSON.

Ram Coomar Ghose . . . Judgment-debtor
versus

Prosunno Coomar Sannyal and anotherDecree-holders.

Costs:—Practicer—Costs of printing and translation—Appeal to Privy Council.

Costs of printing and translation, certified by the Deputy Registrar of the High Court, are a necessary part of the costs of an appeal to the Privy Council

The amount of such costs is left to be ascertained by the High Court and is not assessed by the Privy Council Office.

THIS was an appeal from an order rejecting an application, asking that the costs of translation and printing, certified by the [107] Deputy Registrar of the High Court, should be disallowed to the decree-holders, inasmuch as they had not been allowed by the Privy Council when the case was before that Court on appeal

The District Judge rejected the application on the ground that such costs were, according to the practice of the High Court, as shown in the case of Saroda Prasad Mullick v. Lachmiput Singh (9 B L R., Ap, 23. 18 W. R., 89), realizable in addition to the sum allowed by the Privy Council

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Okil Chunder Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C J, and MACPHERSON, J.) so far as is necessary for the purposes of this report was as follows:—

* Appeal from Original Order No 102 of 1883, against the order of J F Browne, Esq., Judge of 24-Pargunnahs, dated the 3rd of March 1883

Garth, C.J.—We think that the District Judge was right in allowing to the respondents the costs of translation and printing in the High Court. These costs do undoubtedly form a necessary part of the costs of the appeal to the Privy Council, and we find that in practice the Privy Council have been in the habit, when they allow the costs of an appeal, of leaving the amount to be ascertained by the High Court. The only costs which are assessed in the Privy Council Office are those which are incurred in England.

This is explained in the case decided by Mr. Justice MARKBY, Saroda Prasad Mullick v. Lachmiput Singh (9 B. L. R., Ap., 23 · 18 W. R., 89), which seems to be a direct authority in favour of the respondents.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs, which we assess at two goldmohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal—Letters Patent, cl. 15—Difference of opinion between Judges in review

Where two Judges of a Division Bench have concurred in a final decree, the fact that there is a difference of opinion as to one point, amongst others, raised in review on the judgment on which such final decree is based, is no ground for an appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent.

THE plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of a fractional share of a temporarily settled estate called Mehal Bonarpur, alleging that he had been dispossessed from it by the defendants, who were the auction-purchasers of the rights and interests of certain other of the defendants in the suit.

The Court of First Instance gave a decision against the plaintiff.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, but died before the hearing, and his widow was substituted as appellant on the record. On this appeal the decision of the lower Court was reversed.

The defendants applied for and obtained a review of the judgment of the Appellate Court, on the hearing of the review one of the Judges was inclined to allow the whole case to be re-opened, whilst the Senior Judge thought that it should be limited to one point only, although both Judges agreed that the Court had power either to limit the review to one point, or to re-open the whole case.

* Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent No. 1 of 1882, against the decree of Mr. Justice MITTER and Mr. Justice MACLEAN, dated the 2nd March 1882, in appeal from Original Decree No. 25 of 1879.

In dealing with one of the questions raised in the review, both Judges were of opinion that the share awarded to the plaintiff by the decree of the 9th May 1881 should be reduced from one-half to one-third; as regards another point raised, Mr Justice MACLEAN differed from Mr. Justice MITTER, and on this point, therefore, the judgment of the Appellate Court remained untouched by the order on review, in accordance with s. 628 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The defendants appealed under s. 15 of the Letters Patent

[109] Mr. Branson and Mr. Twidale for the Appellants

Baboo Mohun Mohun Roy and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C J., and McDONELL and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Tottenham, J.—We think this appeal should be dismissed with costs upon the preliminary ground taken by the pleader for the respondent, viz, that the Judges of the Division Bench, having concurred in the final decree, no appeal lies under the Letters Patent

The fact that one of the Judges was inclined to let the whole case be reopened on review, while the senior Judge thought that it should be limited to one point, does not entitle the parties to an appeal from the order so limiting it; and it appears to us that we have no authority to pronounce any opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of that order.

Appeal dismissed.

The Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court at Fort William in Bengal

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Contempt of Court—Publication of libel reflecting upon a Judge in his judicial capacity—Offence not included in Penal Code—

Defamation—Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), s. 5—Power of Courts of Record under common law—Jurisdiction of High Court to punish summarily.

The High Courts in the Indian Presidencies are superior Courts of Record. The offence of contempt of Court, and the powers of the High Courts to punish it, are the same in such Courts as in the superior Courts in England. Those powers, which formed part of the common law, were conferred upon the Supreme Courts, when they were established in the Presidency towns.

The Indian Penal Code does not provide against a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel out of Court, when the Court is not sitting, and neither in chapter XXI

"of Defamation," nor elsewhere [110] provides for the punishment of a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel reflecting upon a Judge in his judicial capacity, or in reference to his conduct in the discharge of his public duties. Because the publisher can be punished for "defamation" under the Code, it does not follow that he cannot be punished summarily by the High Court for a contempt of Court. He can be so punished with fine, or imprisonment, or both.

The provisions of s. 5 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, relating to the procedure under which "all offences under the Indian Penal Code," and "all offences under any other law," are punished, do not include a contempt of the High Court committed by the publication of a libel out of Court, when the Court is not sitting, although such contempt may include defamation. Such a contempt is more than mere defamation, and is of a different character.

The jurisdiction of the High Court to commit for contempt has not been affected by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.

By the common law every Court of Record is the sole and exclusive judge of what amounts to a contempt of Court.

THIS was a petition for special leave to appeal from an order of the High Court, dated the 5th May 1883, whereby the petitioner, who was the editor and proprietor of a weekly newspaper published in Calcutta, and called the Bengalee, was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for two months in the Presidency Jail, for a contempt of Court.

The alleged contempt of Court was contained in the following article, which appeared in the Bengalee on the 28th April 1883 ---

"The Judges of the High Court have hitherto commanded the universal respect of the community. Of course, they have often erred and have often grievously failed in the performance of their duties, but their errors have hardly ever been due to impulsiveness or to the neglect of the commonest considerations of prudence or decency. We have now, however, amongst us a Judge who, if he does not actually recall to mind the days of Jeffreys and Scroggs, has certainly done enough within the short time that he has filled the High Court Bench to show how unworthy he is of his high office, and how by nature he is unfitted to maintain those traditions of dignity, which are inseparable from the office of the Judge of the highest Court in the land. From time to time we have in these columns adverted to the proceedings of [111] Mr Justice NORRIS, but the climax has now been reached, and we venture to call attention to the facts, as they have been reported in the columns of a contemporary. The Brahmo Public Opinion is our authority, and the facts stated are as follows:—

"Mr. Justice NORRIS is determined to set the Hughli on fire. The last act of zubburdasti on his Lordship's part was the bringing of a Salgram (a stone idol) into Court for identification. There have been very many cases both in the late Supreme Court and the present High Court of Calcutta regarding the custody of Hindu idols, but the presiding deity of a Hindu household has never before this had the honour of being dragged into Court. Our Calcutta Daniel looked at the idol, and said it could not be a hundred years old. So Mr. Justice NORRIS is not only versed in law and medicine, but is also a connoisseur of Hindu idols. It is difficult to say what he is not. Whether the orthodox Hindus of Calcutta will tamely submit to their family idols being dragged into Court is a matter for them to decide, but it does seem to us that some public steps should be taken to put a quietus to the wild eccentricities of this young and raw dispenser of justice."

On the 3rd May the petitioner, (together with one Raincoomar Dey, the printer and publisher of the Bengalee), was served with a rule calling upon him to show cause on May 4th why he should not be committed to prison, or otherwise dealt with according to law for contempt of Court, in his having published the above article, containing contemptuous and defamatory matters concerning Mr. Justice NORRIS. This rule was issued on affidavits, of which the petitioner obtained copies in the afternoon of the same day (May 3rd).

In reply to these affidavits, the affidavits of Ramcoomar Dey and Surendra Nath Banerjee were produced in the High Court. The affidavit of Ramcoomar Dey stated that he had no concern with any matter which appeared in the paper, nor any power to prevent any matter appearing therein, that he was imperfectly acquainted with the English language, and though able to set up works in English, he did not readily understand the sense and meaning of what he composed and set up, that he had no knowledge that the article in question contained [112] any contemptuous or defamatory matter, and so far as he had any hand in its publication, he expressed his regret that any such matter should have appeared in the paper of which he was printer and publisher, and submitted himself to the favourable consideration of the Court.

"I, Surendra Nath Banerjee, of No 33, Neogee Pookur East Lane in the Town of Calcutta, at present residing at Monihampoor in the district of the 24-Pergunnahs, inhabitant solemnly affirm and say as follows —

"1st — That on Thursday, the 3rd day of May instant, I was served with a rule issued by this Honourable Court in this matter on the day previous, calling upon the above-named Ramcoomar Dey, as the printer and publisher, and myself as the editor of the periodical work, the Bengalee, to show cause before this Honourable Court on Friday, the 4th day of May instant, at the sitting of the Court, why we should not be committed, or otherwise dealt with according to law, for contempt of Court alleged to have been committed by us in having unlawfully published a certain article in the said periodical work, the Bengalee, of the 28th day of April last, containing certain contemptuous and defamatory matters of and concerning the Hon'ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS, one of the Judges of this Honourable Court

"2nd — That, upon being served with the said rule, I bespoke and thereafter obtained office copies of the grounds upon which the said rule is based, which grounds I have perused

"3rd. — That I admit that, as is stated in the affidavit of Mr. Henry Adams Aikm, Officiating Solicitor to the Government of India, the abovenamed Ramcoomar Dey is the printer and publisher of the said periodical work, the Bengalee, and I am the proprietor and editor thereof

"4th — That the said periodical work is made up entirely under my superintendence, and that the said Ramcoomar Dey, who is but indifferently acquainted with the English language has no authority over any editorial matter appearing in the said periodical work, and further he could not, if he wished so to do, prevent any article or paragraph appearing therein.

"5th. — That the issue of the said periodical work of the said [113] 28th day of April 1883 was made up and published entirely on my responsibility, and to the best of my knowledge, information and belief, the said Ramcoomar Dey did not read anything contained therein in the editorial columns before the publication thereof.

"6th — I further say that, except as an honourable and learned Judge of this Honourable Court, I have no knowledge whatsoever of the said Hon'ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS, and that in writing and publishing what I did in connexion with his Lordship, I acted entirely bonâ fide, and, as I believed, in the interests of the public good

"7th.—That there appeared in the said issue of the 28th day of April 1883 two paragraphs in connection with the said Hon'ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS, one at page 194 under the heading of "News and Notes" of Tuesday, the 24th day of April 1883, and the other at page 199 amongst the Editorial notes. The said two paragraphs are as follows. [Here followed the above paragraph, on which the rule was issued, and another paragraph, relating to different matter, but also reflecting upon the conduct of Mr. JUSTICE NORRIS.]

"8th.—That the Brahmo Public Opinion referred to in the said paragraph is a periodical work published in Calcutta every Thursday, and is believed by the public, and I believe it, to be under the editorship of a gentleman practising as an attorney of this Honourable Court.

"9th.—That the matter of complaint made in the said first paragraph appeared in the said Brahmo Public Opinion, to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief, in its issue of Thursday, the 19th day of April 1883, and no contradiction thereof, nor any explanation thereof, appeared either in the said Brahmo Public Opinion, or, to the best of my knowledge, information and belief in any other newspaper

"10th.—That the matter of complaint made in the said second paragraph appeared in the said Brahmo Public Opinion in its issue of the 26th day of April 1883, and no explanation or contradiction thereof appeared in that paper, or in any other newspaper, before the publication of the said issue of the said periodical work.

[114] "11th —That I honestly believed the statements in the said Brahmo Public Opinion to be true, and the paragraphs aforesaid which were both written by me, were so written under such belief and under a sense of public duty that conduct, such as was imputed to the said Hon'ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS, should be brought to the notice of the public and censured

"12th.—That from the affidavits of Mr William Robert Fink, the Assistant Registrar, and the Officiating Chief Clerk of this Honourable Court, and of Baboo Baneynadhuh Mookerjee, one of the Interpreters of this Honourable Court, the truth of which I entirely and unhesitatingly accept, I now find that the statements contained in the said Brahmo Public Opinion relating to the production of the said Salgram in Court were inaccurate and misleading, and that the said Hon'ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS, instead of acting in a zabhdusti manner as alleged, acted under pressure from the parties, who are both Hindus, apparently against his own inclination

"13th.—That I have received contradictory statements with regard to the statements contained in the said first paragraph, some asserting that they are inaccurate and misleading, others maintaining the contrary, and I have not been able to ascertain which of these contradictory statements represent the truth.

"14th. —I say most emphatically, that if I had known, or had any reason to believe, that the statements of the Brahmo Public Opinion aforesaid were in any respect inaccurate, I would not have made the observations I have, and I am truly sorry that I was misled into making them, and I withdraw them unreservedly; but I repeat that my observations were made perfectly bonâ fide, and without any motive of any description whatsoever other than the motive to promote public good.

"15th.—That the circumstances of British India are such, that this Honourable Court and the other High Courts in the other Presidencies are looked upon, and I believe justly looked upon, as the staunchest, the most upright and the most impartial upholders of the just rights and privileges of all sections of the community, and any action on the part of any Honourable and learned Judge of these Honourable Courts tending to show the least disregard of such rights and privileges is viewed with [115] great alarm by the community, and I conceive that it is the duty of all journalists to maintain that no such disregard is shown.

"16th.—That I express my deep regret at having unwittingly endeavoured to cast an undeserved slur upon the said Hon'ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS, and I place myself unreservedly in the hands of this Honourable Court, being satisfied that the apology which is hereinbefore contained is, under the circumstances, due from me to the said Hon'ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS and this Honourable Court, and I further submit myself to the favourable and indulgent consideration of this Honourable Court."

"17th.—That I am advised that this Honourable Court has no jurisdiction to issue the said rule, or to deal with me or the said Rameoomar Dey summarily; but the question, I am also advised, is one of extreme difficulty, and I know it to be one of great public importance, and one which will require much time and attention to be dealt with as, in my judgment, it should be dealt with."

"18th.—That the said rule was served upon me at half-past eleven o'clock, and I received the said grounds at about a quarter after 2 P.M., and though my attorney and I have made our best endeavours to secure the services of counsel learned in the law to appear for me and argue the said question, I have not succeeded in getting one prepared to do so this morning, and I humbly pray that time may be granted to me sufficient to enable me to have the said question argued, and I make this prayer entirely subject to the apology which I have made and without in any way detracting from or weakening the same in any particular whatever." •

On the 4th May the rule came on for hearing before the Chief Justice and four Judges of the High Court (GARTH, C.J., MITTER, J., CUNNINGHAM, J., McDONELL, J., and NORRIS, J.)

Mr. Banerjee appeared to show cause, and after reading the portion of the affidavits containing the apology for having inserted the article, stated that he was not prepared to support the prayer for an adjournment contained in the 18th paragraph of the affidavit of the petitioner, that even if that prayer were granted, he would not be in a position to argue the question of the jurisdiction of the Court, and that if he were in a position to argue it, he would not do so.

GARTH, C.J. (CUNNINGHAM, McDONELL and NORRIS, JJ., concurring).—Baboo Surendra Nath Banerjee, you have been guilty of a gross contempt of this Court in publishing in the Bengalee Newspaper, of which you are the editor, the article which is the subject of this rule.

We understand from your counsel, Mr. Banerjee, that whatever your original intention may have been, you now admit that you have been guilty of such contempt, and you have submitted what professes to be an apology to the Court in the affidavit which was read yesterday by your counsel.

You have certainly acted wisely in not attempting to justify an act which you must be well aware is wholly unjustifiable, and your counsel has also exercised a wise discretion in not insisting upon a point which we observe is suggested in your affidavit, that this Court had no power to institute these proceedings.

It is impossible that any reasonable man who is acquainted with the real truth of the matter, can read the article in question which you admit to have been composed and published by yourself, without seeing that it is a most scandalous and wholly indefensible attack upon Mr. JUSTICE NORRIS.

You begin the article by accusing that learned Judge of neglecting in the discharge of his judicial duties the commonest consideration of prudence and decency, you go on to compare him with two of the most notoriously unrighteous Judges that ever disgraced the English Bench, and you denounce him to the Indian public as utterly unworthy of his high office, and unfitted by nature to maintain those traditions of dignity, which are inseparable from the position of a High Court Judge. As a climax to these accusations, you quote the following passage from the Brahmo Public Opinion, reflecting upon the learned Judge's conduct in a particular cause, which was then, and is now, pending in this Court: "Mr. JUSTICE NORRIS is determined to set the Hugh on fire. The last act of zuberidusti on his Lordship's part was the bringing of a Salgram (a stone idol) into Court for identification. There have been very many cases both in the Supreme Court, and the present High Court of Calcutta, regarding the custody of [117] Hindu idols, but the presiding deity of a Hindu household has never before this had the honour of being dragged into Court. Our Calcutta Daniel looked at the idol, and said it could not be a hundred years old. So Mr. JUSTICE NORRIS is not only versed in law and medicine, but is also a connoisseur of Hindu idols. It is difficult to say what he is not. Whether the orthodox Hindus of Calcutta will tamely submit to their family idols being dragged into Court is a matter for them to decide, but it does seem to us that some public steps should be taken to put a quietus to the wild eccentricities of this young and raw dispenser of Justice."

Upon the basis of that statement in the Brahmo Public Opinion, without informing yourself whether it was true or false, and without ever making enquiry into the circumstances of the case, you proceed recklessly to comment upon the conduct of the Judge and to hold him up to public execration in the following language:—

"What are we to think of a Judge, who is so ignorant of the people, and so disrespectful to their most cherished convictions, as to drag into Court and then to inspect an object of worship, which only Brahmins are allowed to approach, after having purified themselves according to the forms of their religion? Will the Government of India take no notice of such a proceeding? The religious feelings of the people have always been an object of tender care with the Supreme Government. Here, however, we have a Judge who, in the name of Justice, sets those feelings at defiance, and commits what amounts to an act of sacrilege in the estimation of pious Hindus. We venture to call the attention of the Government to the facts here stated, and we have no doubt due notice will be taken of the conduct of the Judge."

"Now so far from there being the least foundation for this tissue of abuse, it appears from the affidavits upon which this rule was issued (which are now admitted by yourself to be perfectly correct) that the account given in the Brahmo Public Opinion and your own comments upon it, were wholly without foundation.

The truth of the matter was this. In a case which was tried before the learned Judge, a question arose as to the identity of a certain thakoor or idol. It was necessary for the purpose of determining that question to ascertain whether a particular [118] thakoor, which was then in the custody of one Bluttock Nath Pundit in the Buria Bazaar, was the family thakoor of certain parties to the suit.

For the purpose of determining that question, it was suggested by the counsel on both sides that the thakoor should be brought into Court for the purpose of identification.

Mr. JUSTICE NORRIS hesitated to take that course, until he had enquired from the attorneys on either side, who were Hindus, whether there would be any objection to it. Their answer was that there would be none. His Lordship then further enquired from a person named Gouree Kant Burmun who was in Court, and who was an agent of the plaintiff, whether he saw any objection, and his answer was, that the idol could not be brought into the Court itself, on account of the coir matting with which the floor was covered, but that it might be brought without objection into the corridor.

The learned Judge then, in order to satisfy himself still further, sent for the Court interpreter, Baboo Banimadhub Mookerjee, who is an officer of great experience and a high caste Brahmin, and made the same enquiry of him. He asked whether the thakoor was a Salgram, and finding that it was, made the same answer as Gouree Kant, namely, that it could not be brought into Court on account of the matting, but that it might with perfect propriety be brought into the corridor.

Upon this his Lordship granted the application, and a subpoena duces tecum was issued to Bhuttock Nath Pundit to produce the thakoor the same day, and in order to ensure the orders of the Court being properly carried out, it was further ordered that the Interpreter himself should proceed with the officer to Bhuttock Nath Pundit's house, who was himself a Brahmin, and should see to the proper conveyance of the thakoor to the Court.

We have then the affidavit of Banimadhub Mookerjee himself, who, after confirming the above facts, informs us that in obedience to the order of the Court, the thakoor was duly conveyed into the corridor by himself and the Pundit, and the learned Judge, attended by counsel on both sides and the attorneys, left the Court and went into the corridor for the purpose of inspecting it.

It seems, therefore, impossible for any one, however strict his [119] religious views on such subjects may be, to say that Mr. JUSTICE NORRIS did not take the utmost pains, in the first place, to ascertain whether the thakoor ought to be brought to the Court at all, and in the next place to provide that it should be brought there with all due respect and propriety.

It may be perfectly true that European Judges, and more especially Barrister Judges, are often imperfectly acquainted with the religious views and feelings, of the Hindu community, and the utmost they can do, when occasion arises, is to consult those who are best informed upon the subject, and to be guided by their advice.

But we now understand from your own affidavit, as well as from your counsel, Mr. Banerjee, that you admit that the learned Judge did everything in his power to ascertain the truth of the matter, and to avoid giving the least offence to the religious feelings of your countrymen.

It therefore, only remains for us to consider what punishment we ought to inflict upon you.

It is, indeed, a very lamentable thing, and I trust that your own countrymen will also be of that opinion, to find a gentleman of your position and attainments, who was once a member of the Covenanted Civil Service, and is now an Honorary Magistrate of this city, making use of his influence as a newspaper editor to vilify and bring into public contempt, without any justification whatever, a Judge of the High Court.

If the offence had been committed by any young inexperienced man of no education or knowledge of the world, or by a person in the position of Ramcoomar Dey, who stands beside you, we might ascribe it, in some degree at least, to ignorance or want of consideration. But you have had great educational advantages. You know, or should know as well as any one, the duties and responsibilities of gentlemen connected with the Press. You profess in your affidavit to justify your offence by putting forward as the basis of your false charges against Mr. Justice NORRIS, a statement in the Brahmo Public Opinion which you say you believed to be true, and upon which you considered yourself at liberty to enlarge and comment with extreme severity.

*[120] Moreover, whilst you profess to admit that your charges were totally false and unfounded, and made without any sort of enquiry on your part, you still maintain that you made them "in perfect good faith, and in the interests of the public good."

Furthermore, you have made mention in your affidavit of another article, extracted from the Brahmo Public Opinion, which is also apparently intended to reflect upon Mr. JUSTICE NORRIS, and the subject of which has nothing to do with the present proceeding. Your counsel, though invited to do so, has wholly failed to explain to the satisfaction of the Court why that article was inserted. And you must have known perfectly well that the affidavits, upon which the rule was issued, were not directed to the subject of that article.

These matters in your affidavit, so far from extenuating your offence, appear to the Court to be an aggravation of it.

The Judges are at a loss to understand how a libel so gross could possibly have been inserted in your paper "in good faith," and they find great difficulty in believing that a gentleman of your education, and a newspaper editor, could be so utterly ignorant of the law of libel as to suppose that you were at liberty to publish these attacks upon the conduct and character of a High Court Judge, merely because you found them, though in a less virulent form, in another native newspaper.

The Court is quite willing to make some allowance for your affidavit having been drawn, as your counsel informed us was the case, in a hurry, and without consideration. But they cannot look upon it for the reasons which I have just mentioned, as any extenuation of your offence.

We feel that it is absolutely necessary to vindicate and maintain the authority of the Court, and to guard against the repetition of the grave offence which you have committed, by imposing upon you, (not a fine, which in your case would be a mere nominal penalty), but such a substantial punishment as may serve as a wholesome warning to yourself and others.

The Court's order is, that you be imprisoned on the civil side of the Presidency Jail for the space of two months.

[121] The majority of the Court regret, that in determining the award of punishment, my brother MITTER'S views should not be in accordance with theirs. We are, of course, fully aware of the precedents to which that learned Judge refers, but in the first place, we think the facts of those cases are very different from the present, and in the next place we find ample precedent in England in cases of gross libel, where a more severe punishment has been awarded.

We fail to see, why persons charged with contempt of Court for libel in a proceeding of this nature, should be subjected to a less severe punishment, than if the proceeding had been by criminal information, or by the more ordinary process at the criminal sessions.

Had your affidavit disclosed a more honest and candid avowal of your guilt, without making mention of those matters, which the Court cannot find to have been introduced for any useful purpose, or from any proper motive, they might have considered it sufficient for the ends of justice to have visited you with a more lenient punishment.

Ramcoomar Dey, you have also been guilty of a contempt of this Court for having been the means, as the printer and publisher of the Bangalee newspaper, of circulating the article in question.

We are, of course, by no means prepared to say that as a rule the printer and publisher of a newspaper is not fully responsible, both civilly and criminally, for everything that is inserted in that paper. But we find in this instance, not only from your own affidavit, but from that of Baboo Surendra Nath Banerjee, who has very properly done his best to protect you, that you know the English language very imperfectly, and that you have evidently been the mere instrument of the editor, under whose orders you acted.

We, therefore, think that you may with propriety be discharged.

Mitter, J.—I concur in the finding that both Ramcoomar Dey and Surendra Nath Banerjee are guilty of contempt of Court. But after giving my best consideration to the question of the punishment that should be inflicted, I am unable to agree in the view of the majority of the Court. There have been in this [122] Court two cases of a similar nature since its establishment. One is In the matter of Piffard (1 Hyde, 79). The other case is not reported in any authorized report, but is well known as Taylor's case. In both these cases at the first hearing the persons charged with contempt did not admit their guilt. The matter was discussed fully, and after the Court had pronounced its decision that they were guilty, suitable apologies were made.

In the case before us, the persons charged with contempt have at once admitted their guilt, and have expressed their deep regret at having unwittingly cast an undeserved slur upon a learned Judge of this Court.

In the first-mentioned case, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, C J, in delivering the judgment said: "Although the majority of the Judges were of opinion that both these gentlemen," etc., the persons charged with contempt, "have acted in contempt of Court, they did not wish to visit the offence with any punishment, the Court would be content with an apology, nor need the apology be an abject one, but simply such as would convey the expression of their sorrow at having committed that which the Court considered to be contempt." In accordance with this expression of opinion a suitable apology was made, and no punishment was inflicted.

In the other case the sentence of the Court was that Mr. Taylor should stand committed for one month to the civil side of the Presidency Jail, and that he should pay a fine of Rs. 500, and that he should be further imprisoned till the fine was paid.

There Sir BARNES PEACOCK, C J, referring to an apology which had been published by Mr. Taylor before this sentence was passed, said:

"If you think fit to add to the apology which you have already published, (and it is for you to decide whether you can conscientiously do so or not), the Court is willing to mitigate the sentence. If after what you have heard, you state that, upon reflection you find that the charges which you made against Mr. Justice DWARKANATH MITTER were unwarranted and wholly without foundation, and that you are sorry for having made them, you may do so, and you may add, if you wish it, either that you did not intend to cast any reflection upon any of the other Judges, or that the reflection cast was unfounded, and if you publish that apology in the Englishman you may apply on Monday, the 3rd of May next, for your discharge on payment of the fine."

This sentence was passed on Saturday, the 24th April 1869, and on the 27th April following Mr. Tayler, having made a suitable apology, was released, the remaining term of his imprisonment having been remitted.

I have gone into these details, because it seems to me that in determining the amount of punishment to be inflicted on Surendra Nath Banerjee, we should take these cases as our guide. The complexion of guilt in the case of Mr. Tayler is certainly not of a lighter character than that of Surendra Nath Banerjee.

On the question of punishment, therefore, I should have been inclined to adopt the course which was adopted in these cases.

From this sentence Surendra Nath Banerjee preferred a petition to Her Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal.

The petition, after setting out the facts, and the articles complained of, and referring to the matters stated in his affidavit as above set out, continued —

"That your petitioner immediately on learning from the affidavits the facts therein stated, determined to express fully and unreservedly his sincere regret at having through ignorance of the said facts written the article in the Bengalee, and in accordance with such determination, the affidavit filed by him in answer to the said rule, a copy whereof is appended to the memorial herein-after referred to, and hereto annexed, after setting forth the facts and circumstances stated, and exonerating Ramcoomar Dev from all responsibility for the article, which your petitioner admitted was composed by himself, and published on his own and sole responsibility, stated, that he found from the affidavits, the truth of which he entirely and unhesitatingly accepted, that the statements contained in the Brahmo Public Opinion were inaccurate and misleading, and that the said Mr Justice NORRIS, instead of acting in a zuberdist (violent) manner, as alleged, had acted under pressure from the parties to the said proceeding, who were both Hindus, and that had he known, or had he had any reason to believe that the statements of the Brahmo Public Opinion respecting the said Mr Justice NORRIS were in any respect inaccurate, he would not have made or published the observations respecting that learned Judge which he did, and that he was truly sorry he had been misled into making them." The petition, after setting forth matters to show that there had been no waiver on his part of the point of jurisdiction, inasmuch as his advocate had said what he did, "not under your petitioner's instructions or by his authority" further stated that "your petitioner is advised that, even if there had been any waiver by his counsel of your petitioner's right to question the jurisdiction of the High Court to proceed against him in a summary way, as for contempt of Court, by reason of his publication of the aforesaid article, such waiver does not, nor can affect your petitioner, or confer a jurisdiction upon the said Court, which it did not by law possess."

After setting forth the facts of the judgment and sentence upon him, and that he was advised that such sentence was passed without jurisdiction, he went on to state —

"That your petitioner upon being so sentenced and imprisoned prepared and presented to His Excellency the Viceroy a memorial" (a copy of which was annexed to the petition) "praying His Excellency in Council to forward the same to your most Gracious Majesty in order that your Majesty might, if graciously pleased so to do, refer the said memorial to the Judicial Committee of your Majesty's Privy Council under the provisions of the 3 and 4 Will.

IV. c. 41, s. 4 for hearing and consideration, and that your Majesty might also be graciously pleased to suspend the operation of the sentence passed upon your petitioner pending the hearing and consideration of the said memorial by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, should your Majesty be pleased to refer the matter of the memorial to them "

This memorial had (the petition stated) been forwarded to the Secretary of State for India in Council

On the hearing of this petition, -

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q C, (with whom was Mr J T. Woodroffe) appeared for the petitioner --The publication of this article did not tend directly to obstruct the course of justice in the determination of the then pending suit, nor was it a contempt committed in view of the Court. Although it affected the administration of [123] justice generally, it was not aimed at interference with the decision in a suit, but was a libel on a Judge in his judicial capacity in reference to his conduct at a trial. The question of jurisdiction might be thus stated. (a) whether in an Indian Court, which was a Court of Record, summary proceedings for contempt were the authorized course in the case of a libel, out of Court, on a Judge in his judicial capacity in reference to his conduct at a trial, (b) whether such proceedings were now authorized, regard being had to the terms of the Indian Codes, viz, the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Whatever might have been the powers of the Supreme Court to punish for a contempt in or out of Court, the only legal mode in which the High Court could punish such an act as that of the petitioner was by enforcing an appropriate section of the Indian Penal Code, upon proceedings taken according to the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. Viewed as a contempt this act was of the class of criminal contempts which, as explained in Wellesley's case (2 R. and M., 639), and In re Pollard (L. R., 2 P C, 106), were in the nature of offences. That there were provisions in chapters X and XI of the Indian Penal Code directed against contempts of the lawful authority of public servants, and against offences against public justice, affected the question whether the summary powers exercised at common law for the protection of Courts had remained in force, although insults and interruptions to a public servant sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, provided for in s. 228, Indian Penal Code, were restricted to such acts done in Court. Other provisions of the Indian Penal Code, viz, those of chapter XXI (of Defamation) would meet this case viewed as a libel. To these considerations must be added the apparent intention of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.

The Statute 13, Geo. III., c. 63, which authorized the issue of the Letters Patent of 1774, in s. 13, empowered the Court of which it authorized the establishment, "to do all such things as shall be found necessary for the administration of justice, and the due execution of all or any of the powers which by the said Charter may be granted and committed to the said Court." The same section enacted that "the Court shall, at all times, be a [126] Court of Record." The Letters Patent of 1774 declared, in s. 4, that "the Chief Justice and Puisne Justices of the Supreme Court should have such jurisdiction and authority as the Justices of the Court of King's Bench had, and might lawfully exercise in that part of Great Britain called England by the common law thereof" This conferred the ordinary jurisdiction, which alike on the Plea, Equity, and Crown sides, as well as the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical jurisdictions, were separately conferred. But neither in the Statute, nor in the Charter, was there any general clause declaring the general powers of the English Courts to belong to the Supreme Court [Srn

R. COUCH observed that the practice of issuing the writ of habeas corpus had been referred to this authority.] The exercise of that power was within the words to do all such things as might be necessary. And it might be noticed that Act X of 1882 provided for the issue of the habeas corpus. The summary process for contempt could hardly be put on the same ground after the legislation that had taken place.

The powers of the Supreme Court had not been quite co-extensive with those of the superior Courts in England. The learned counsel referred to the issue of the writ of mandamus from the Queen's Bench also to the judgment of COCKBURN, L., C. J., in The Queen v Lefroy (L. R., 8 Q. B., 134), who said that the superior Courts at Westminster were originally all divisions of the aula regia. There had been no office in the Supreme Court directly corresponding to that of the Master of the Crown Office, and it had been doubted how far the ex-officio powers of the Advocate-General extended in obtaining leave to file criminal informations.

He did not allege, having regard to Macdermott v. The Justices of British Guiana (5 Moore's P. C. N. S., 466), and other cases, that no Courts of Record other than the High Courts of Justice in England could exercise power to commit for contempt. But if these powers belonged to the Supreme Court, the question still remained whether they had been transmitted to the High Court. By s. 9 of the Charter of 1861, issued under the authority of the Statute 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, the High Court was to exercise jurisdiction, and every power and authority, in any manner vested in the Courts then abolished, with the reservation, important to the [127] argument, that "this was to be subject, and without prejudice, to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council." The legislative power had been exercised. The Indian Penal Code had come into force as XLV of 1860, enacting in s. 2 that no person should be liable to punishment for any offence otherwise than under that Code or "under any special or local law." In both the Charters of 1862 and of 1865 (in s. 29 in the former and s. 30 of the latter), it was declared that all persons brought for trial before the High Court charged with any offence for which provision was made by the Indian Penal Code should be liable to punishment under such Code, and not otherwise. Reference was made to chapters X and XI of the Indian Penal Code; also to chapter XXI, and it was argued that the contemplation of law, as shown in the legislation referred to, was that all offences capable of being dealt with under the Indian Penal Code should be so dealt with.

The introduction of the Code of Criminal Procedure within the local limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Court had followed. By Act X of 1882, s. 1, it extended to all British India, although, in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing therein contained was to affect any "special or local law in force," or any "special jurisdiction," or "power conferred," by any other law in force.

These terms "special law" and "local law," also used in the Indian Penal Code, to which, for their explanation, the last clause of s. 4 of Act X of 1882 referred, meant, the one, a law applicable to a particular subject, and the other, a law applicable to a particular part of British India. It was further enacted in s. 5, that all offences under the Indian Penal Code should be inquired into and tried according to the procedure enacted in this Code, and that all offences under any other law should be inquired into and tried according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment, for the time being in force regulating the manner, or place, of inquiring into or trying such offences. The conclusion was that the summary process for contempt was not a special or local law, within the meaning of the above, nor in force under any enactment regulating it. The Code of Criminal [128] Procedure was, therefore, applicable to this offence, not being excluded by its own provisions.

To this might be added an argument derived from s. 480 of Act X of 1882, which enacted that, when certain offences within ss. 175, 178, 179, 180 or s. 228 of the Indian Penal Code had been committed in the view of a Court, it might cause the offender to be detained in custody and punished with fine, itself taking cognizance of the offence. Part of the reasoning of the judgment in The Queen v. Lefroy (L. R., 8 Q. B., 134), was, that because special provision had been made in the Statute 9 and 10 Vic, c. 95, enabling County Courts to punish summarily contempts committed in their view, it was, therefore, not the intention of the Legislature that such Courts should possess the general powers exercised by the superior Courts to punish contempts committed out of their view. By analogy, the giving express power in s. 480 to punish in a certain class of contempts, excluded the inference that the Legislature intended that other powers of a similar sort should remain.

The general result was, that the provisions in the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, effected this; that an act, such as that of the petitioner, in the nature of a libel on a Judge in his judicial office, and in reference to his mode of conducting a trial, was remitted to the general head of defamation to be punished under chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code.

Mr Cowie, Q.C., said that his contention was, that unless the libel had a direct tendency to interfere with the course of justice in a pending case, the proper mode of proceeding was not to deal with it as a contempt. What constituted contempt was fully explained in the judgment of the Irish M. R. in Birch v. Walsh [10 Ir Eq Rep, (1847-48), 93]. Reference was also made to In re Pollard (L. R., 2 P. C., 106), In re Ramsay (L. R., 3 P. C., 427); R. v. Creevey (1 M. and S., 273), McDermott v. The Justices of British Guiana (5 Moore's P. C. C. N. S., 466), Smith v. The Justices of Sierra Leone (3 Moore's P. C. C., 361), [129] Rainy v. The Justices of Sierra Leone (8 Moore's P. C. C., 47). Reference was made to the opinion expressed in Morgan v. Leech (3 Moore's P. C. C., 368) in regard to the reservations contained in the Statute 3 and 4 William IV, c. 4, as covering a grant of leave to appeal in the case of matters not strictly an appealable grievance. Also to In re Skinner (L. R., 3 P. C., 451), in which it had been held that leave to appeal under the general powers of s. 4 of that statute might be granted, although the alleged grievance might not be appealable under the Letters Patent of the High Court. Also in connection with this, In re Ramsay (L. R., 3 P. C., 427) was referred to.

On a subsequent day, July 18th, their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir B. Peacock.—The only question to be determined is, whether the High Court had jurisdiction to commit the petitioner for a contempt of Court in publishing the libel set out in the petition.

Their Lordships took time to consider, in order that they might carefully examine the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, which came into force in January 1883. Having done so, they are clearly of opinion that, notwithstanding that Code, the High Court had jurisdiction.

The Penal Code for British India was referred to by the learned counsel for the petitioner, and in particular chapter XI, s. 228, and chapter XXI, "Of Defamation." But that Code merely defines the several offences thereby created, and provides the punishments to which offenders are to be liable. It does not at all affect the procedure by which offenders are to be brought to punishment. It is only by the Code of Criminal Procedure, read in conjunction with the Penal Code, that the jurisdiction of the High Court to commit for contempt was, if at all, affected.

Section 228 of the Penal Code, which was referred to in the argument, does not apply to the present case; it relates merely to insult or interruption to a public servant while sitting in a stage of judicial proceedings. It does not provide against a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel out of Court when the Court is not sitting.

[130] The chapter XXI, "Of Defamation," does not define "contempt of Court," or make any provision for the punishment of a contempt of Court by the publication of a libel reflecting upon a Judge in his judicial capacity, or in reference to his conduct in the discharge of his public duties. The offence, as a case of defamation, might doubtless have been punished under that chapter with simple imprisonment, not exceeding two years, or with fine, or with both. If the procedure of the Criminal Procedure Code had been adopted, and the petitioner had been convicted of simple defamation under chapter XXI of the Penal Code, and after his apology, had been sentenced by the Court to two months' imprisonment, there would have been no pretence for an application for special leave to appeal against the conviction.

But it is not because the publisher might have been punished for defamation, that he could not be punished summarily as for a contempt of Court.

Lord HARDWICKE, in the case of The Champion (2 Atkyn's Rep, 469), says. "To be sure, Mr Solicitor-General has put it upon the right footing that, notwithstanding this should be a libel, yet, unless it is a contempt of Court, I have no cognizance of it, for whether it is a libel against public or private persons, the only method is to proceed at law."

The libel in the present case was clearly a contempt of Court. It is contended, however, on the part of the petitioner that, by reason of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, the Court could not deal with it as a contempt of Court or punish the offender by commitment in a summary manner.

Several sections of that Code were referred to.

Section 198 enacts, amongst other things, that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code, i.e., the chapter "Of Defamation," except upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by such offence.

Complaint is defined in section 4a to mean "the allegation made orally or in writing to a magistrate with a view to his taking action," &c.

Section 195 enacts that "no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code," (i.e., [131] the offering insult to a public servant whilst sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding), "when such offence is committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any Court, except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of such Court, or of some other Court to which it is subordinate."

It is scarcely possible to suppose that the procedure above pointed out was intended to apply to the case of an insult to, or a libel upon, the High Court, or a libel upon one of the Judges thereof, imputing corruption or misconduct or incapacity in the discharge of his public duties, or a libel such as that set out in the petition.

Section 480 and the two following sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure were referred to in the argument in support of the petition, but they do not apply to a case of libel or defamation out of Court whilst the Court is not sitting, and have no direct bearing on the present case.

Section 5 was also referred to, and it was contended on the part of the petitioner that, according to the provisions of that section, the procedure provided by the Code of 1882 was the only one which could be adopted.

That section is in the words following—

“All offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be inquired into and tried according to the provisions hereinafter contained, and all offences under any other law shall be inquired into and tried according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of inquiring into or trying such offences”

Their Lordships are of opinion that a contempt of the High Court by a libel such as the present, published out of Court when the Court is not sitting, is not included in the words “offences under the Indian Penal Code,” although the contempt may include defamation. Such an offence is something more than mere defamation, and is of a different character. It is an offence which by the common law of England is punishable by the High Court in a summary manner by fine or imprisonment, or both. That part of the common law of England was introduced into the Presidency towns when the late Supreme Courts were respectively established by the Charters of [132] Justice. The High Courts in the Presidencies are Superior Courts of Record, and the offence of contempt, and the powers of the High Court for punishing it, are the same there as in this country, not by virtue of the Penal Code for British India and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, but by virtue of the common law of England (5 Moore's P. C. C., N. S., 497). The words “all offences under any other law” in s. 5 cannot be intended to include a contempt like the present, for which no provision is made by the Code. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider what is the true construction of the words “any special jurisdiction or power conferred by any other law now in force” in s. 1.

Their Lordships having decided that the libel was a contempt of Court, and that the High Court had jurisdiction to commit the petitioner for a period of two months, the case is not a proper one for an appeal to Her Majesty.

In the case of Dainy v. The Justices of Sierra Leone (8 Moore's P. C. C., 47, at p. 54) upon an application for leave to appeal to enable the petitioner to get rid of certain fines imposed upon him by the Court of Sierra Leone for contempts of Court, it was said “It is the opinion not only of the members of the Committee who heard the petition, but also of the other members who usually attend here to whom the petition has been submitted, and we have had the benefit of their judgment as well as our own, that we cannot interfere with such a subject. In this country every Court of Record is the sole and exclusive judge of what amounts to a contempt of Court.” That case was referred to as an authority by the Judicial Committee in the case of McDermot v. The Justices of British Guiana (5 Moore's P. C. C., N. S., 466).

In the latter case an application was made ex parte for leave to appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of Civil Justice in British Guiana, by which the petitioner was, for a contempt of Court in publishing certain libels commenting on the administration of justice, and upon one of the Judges of the Court, committed to jail for a period of six months or until further orders. See S. C., p. 490, and 4 Moore's P. C. C., N. S., 110, [133] 120. Leave to appeal was granted, without prejudice to the question of the competency of Her Majesty in Council to entertain an appeal from an order of a Court of Record inflicting punishment by fine or imprisonment for a contempt of Court, which question was to be open to argument on the hearing of the appeal. The case came on for argument, and it was contended by the Solicitor-General, that the leave to appeal ought not to have been granted, as a Court of Record is the sole judge of what constitutes a contempt. He stated, however, that he was prepared to support the order upon the merits, but he was not called upon to do so.

In delivering the opinion of the Judicial Committee, Lord CHELMSFORD, after stating that the leave to appeal was conditionally granted, said the respondents might have come in to discharge the order upon the very ground which had been taken, namely, that there could be no appeal against an order of a Court of Record committing a person for contempt, and that, in order to support the propriety of the leave to appeal, the appellant must show either that the Court was not a Court of Record, or that, if it was a Court of Record, yet that there was something in the order committing the appellant which rendered it improper, and therefore the subject of appeal. Then after deciding that the Court at Sierra Leone was a Court of Record, his Lordship says (498) "Not a single case is to be found where there has been a committal by one of the colonial Courts for contempt, where it appeared clearly upon the face of the order that the party had committed a contempt, that he had been duly summoned, and that the punishment awarded for the contempt was an appropriate one, in which this Committee has ever entertained an appeal against an order of this description." Again, after referring to the authorities, and amongst others to Rainy's case, his Lordship concluded by saying "Under these circumstances their Lordships entertain no doubt whatever as to the propriety of deciding that in this case the leave to appeal ought not to have been granted, that the Supreme Court of Justice was a Court of Record, and that, as a Court of Record, it had power to commit for the particular contempt. As their Lordships do not enter into the merits of the case, they will say [134] nothing as to the character of the libel upon which the Court thought it proper to commit the publisher for contempt."

Acting upon these authorities, and holding that the High Court had jurisdiction to commit the publisher of the libel in question for contempt, their Lordships will say nothing as to the character of the libel, or as to the extent of the punishment awarded. They will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the petition.

Solicitor for the Petitioners Mr T L Wilson

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th September, 1883

• PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR JUSTICE
MACPHERSON

Durga Churn Shaha and another.Two of the principal Defendants
versus

Nilmoney Dass and others...Plaintiffs.

next friend on behalf of minor—Act XL of 1858, s. 3—Certificate.*

The effect of s. 3 of Act XL of 1858 read with s. 440 of the Code of Civil Procedure is, that a minor plaintiff must not only always sue by his next friend, but when the suit relates to the minor's estate, the person representing the minor must either hold a certificate under the Act, or must obtain the sanction of the Court for the suit to proceed

The mere admission of a plaint by the Court does not sufficiently indicate that sanction is accorded.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Appellants.

Baboo Srinath Dass for the Respondents

THE facts sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J. and MACPHERSON J.), which was delivered by Garth, C.J.—We have great doubt whether we ought not to reverse the judgments of both Courts, and to dismiss the plaintiff's suit upon the ground that it is not properly brought.

[135] It is in form a suit by "Gour Monce Dasse, widow of Sumbho Nath Dass, deceased, and manager on behalf of her minor son Nilmoney Dass" But the real claimant is Nilmoney Dass, the minor, and the suit has been dealt with from first to last by the lower Courts upon that footing.

The suit, therefore, in point of form, is brought in the name of the wrong person.

We have had other cases before us, in which the same mistake has been made, and Courts of First Instance are very much to blame for not obliging plaintiffs to put their claims in proper shape, before they allow such suits to proceed.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 226 of 1882 against the decree of Baboo Jagaddurlabh Mozumdar, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Furrupore, dated the 20th February 1882, affirming the decree of Moulvi Mohabbat Ali, First Munsif of Goalundo, dated the 27th January 1881

The fact of the Munsiff having omitted to do this in the present case has been the means of causing the parties great delay and expense, and very nearly of defeating the plaintiff's claim altogether, although he has succeeded in both Courts upon the merits.

Under s. 440 of the Code, a minor plaintiff must always now sue by his next friend; and under s. 443 a minor defendant must defend by a guardian appointed by the Court. The effect of s. 3, Act XL, 1858, read with s. 440 of the Code is, that a minor plaintiff must not only always sue by his next friend, but when the suit relates to the minor's estate, the person representing the minor must either hold a certificate under the Act, or must obtain the sanction of the Court for the suit to proceed.

The form in which the plaintiff should have sued in this case is, "Nilmoney Dass, the minor son of Sumbho Nath Dass, deceased, by his mother and next friend Gour Monee Dassee, etc." The Courts of First Instance should always see that suits by minors are brought in this form.

We have had great doubt whether we ought not to dismiss the case on this ground; but we find that the Court of First Instance has construed the heading of the plaint as if it were a suit by the minor by his next friend, and both Courts have dealt with the case, and tried the merits of it, as if it had been brought in that form.

We think, therefore, that we are justified, under s. 578, as the objection is one which has not affected the determination of the suit on the merits, in confirming the judgments of the Courts below.

[136] It must be thoroughly understood, however, with reference to the final decree, that it is made in favour of the minor as plaintiff and not of his mother Gour Monee Dassee. As regards the contention that the suit is bad, because the Court never gave the sanction necessary under s. 3, Act XL, 1858, it seems that the Munsiff, on the defendant's objection, put in issue the question whether a certificate under the Act was necessary, and deciding, rightly enough, that the permission of the Court was sufficient, proceeded to hold that the mere admission of the plaint sufficiently indicated that sanction was accorded. In this we think he was wrong, but we may reasonably hold that the effect of the decision on the issue was in this instance to give permission. The appellants further urge that the Court was wrong in allowing the name of another minor plaintiff to be added at a very late stage. It is sufficient, however, to say that the objection was deliberately not pressed in the lower Appellate Court. Section 32 of the Code, moreover, gives a wide discretion to the Court.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 432—Suit by independent Prince in British India—Recognized agent for institution of suit.

Section 432 of the Civil Procedure Code does not prevent the institution by an independent prince of a suit in a Court in British India in his own name, and through a recognized agent other than one appointed under that section

THIS was a suit for rent and road cess instituted by the Maharajah of Hill Tipperah, an Independent State, in his own name, describing himself as " zamindar of Chakla Roshanabad, having a tahsil cutcherry at Comilla." The plaint was verified by the tahsil mohurr of the Maharajah. On the plaint being presented the Sub-Judge made the following order " The [137] plaintiff is the independent Rajah of Hill Tipperah. In a regular appeal in a case between him and Nobodip Chundra Bahadur it was held by the High Court that he is a Rajah of the description mentioned in s. 432 † of the Civil Procedure Code. Hence a suit instituted in the name of the Maharajah himself and not by an agent appointed under a special order of Government at the instance of the Maharajah cannot be maintained in a British Court. This plaint, therefore, cannot be accepted, being contrary to the provisions of the law. It is therefore ordered that the plaint be returned."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

as the independent Rajah of Hill Tipperah, but as Zamindar of Chakla Boshanabad, etc. The judgment to which the Subordinate Judge refers was a suit which was brought against the Maharajah qua Maharajah of Independent Tipperah, in respect of a subject of which our Courts could not take cognizance. The order of the lower Court is therefore reversed, and the suit will be tried by the Subordinate Judge.

Hindu law—Marriage—Custom—Sagai and Shunga marriages—Widow re-marriage.

A became a childless widow in the lifetime of her father. She afterwards contracted a Shunga marriage, and by this marriage she had two sons. On the death of her father A's claim to succeed to his property as his heir was disputed. It having been proved that the remarriage of widows was customary amongst the Nomosudras, the caste to which the parties belonged, Held, that such a custom was valid, and that A was entitled to succeed as heir to her father under the Hindu law.

THIS was a suit for possession of lands and mesne profits. The facts are thus stated in the judgment of the Court of First Instance—

"The lands in dispute belonged to one Radha Mohun Dass who died in 1284 (1877-78) leaving his brother, Sodanund Dass and a widow daughter, the first defendant, Doyamoye. Sodanund, representing himself as the only heir of his deceased brother, the said Radha Mohun, sold these lands to the plaintiff under a kobala, dated the 24th of March 1880. The plaintiff says that in taking possession of his purchase on the 5th of April 1880, he was resisted by the defendants. He, therefore, seeks to recover possession and mesne profits after a declaration of his title."

"It is alleged that Doyamoye became a widow during the lifetime of her father, and that Chandra Mohun and Tara Chand are her natural sons, and that they are therefore not entitled to succeed.

"Doyamoye admits that she became a childless widow during her father's lifetime, but she asserts that among her caste people widow marriage is in vogue from time immemorial, and that she was given in marriage a second time by her father, and that Chandra Mohun and Tara Chand are children of her re-marriage. She contends, therefore, that she is a widow daughter having sons of her own, and is therefore the only heir of her father."

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2074 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Kedar Nauth Mozoomdar, Sub-Judge of Midnapore, dated the 26th July 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Madhub Chunder Chuckerbutty, Munsiff of Tumlook, dated 28th November 1881.

[139] The Munsif fixed the following issue and other issues not material to this report. "Whether widow marriage is sanctioned by custom among the Nomosudras, and if so is it a valid marriage." He found that the custom relied on was in vogue amongst the Nomosudras, but he came to the conclusion that the marriage was not a valid one as its recognition depended upon payments of money to the zamindar, the barber, the brahmin and the village headman. He therefore gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal the Subordinate Judge came to the same conclusion as the Munsiff, and on the same ground. The defendants appealed to the High Court on the ground (amongst others) that the lower Appellate Court should have held from the evidence of both sides that Shunga marriage is prevalent among the Nomosudra caste, and the issue of such marriage are legitimate, and entitled to succeed according to Hindu law

Baboo Jadub Chunder Seal for the Appellants.

Baboo Bhoirub Chunder Bonnerjee for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—We think that this appeal should be decreed.

The question in this case is whether a marriage in the Sagar form is valid among the class to which the parties to this suit belong. The Munsiff says. "It is in vogue among them." The Subordinate Judge comes to the same conclusion. It appears therefore that the existence of the custom is proved. The only question then for decision is whether a marriage in pursuance of it is legal. The Subordinate Judge has found that "such a marriage is invalid on the ground that certain fines are paid to the zamindar, and no ceremonies of marriage are performed at Shunga, no priest officiates at it, and no rites take place as are necessary in marriage." In page 79 of Mr Mayne's Treatise on Hindu Law it is laid down that a marriage according to the custom of a particular caste or of a particular place is sufficient.

Here the Subordinate Judge is of opinion that no such marriage would be valid unless priests officiate, and the usual marriage rites were performed. In the case of Bissuam Kooree v. The [140] Empress (3 C. L. R., 410), this very form of marriage was recognized as existing among the lower castes of Hindus residing in Behar. In Kally Churn Shaw v. Dukhee Bibee (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 692) this form of marriage was considered to be valid among the Hulwais.

It seems to us that the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge are not valid reasons for considering that the custom contended for is not legal.

The very same objections that are taken by him were taken before WILSON, J., in the case of Kally Churn Shaw, to which we have referred and were overruled.

In this view of the case we decree the appeal with all costs.

Appeal allowed.

Right of reply—Witnesses not called for defence—Reply by Prosecutor—Reference to books on trial—Examination of prisoner by Judge—Nature of questions permissible—Questioning jury as to verdict—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 289, 290, 303, 307, 342.

At the close of the evidence for the prosecution, the attorney for the defence, in answer to the Judge, stated that he meant to call witnesses. The Court then adjourned, and on the following day the attorney stated that, on re-consideration, he did not intend to call witnesses. The Judge allowed the prosecutor to reply.

Held, that though the strict interpretation of ss. 289 and 292 of the Criminal Procedure Code would warrant this course, it was never meant by the Legislature that the prosecutor should have a reply when no witnesses are called for the defence, the object of the law being evidently to let each side have an opportunity of commenting on the evidence of the other, and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecutor in such a case as the present •

A well-known treatise, such as Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, may be referred to in the course of trial. Hatun v. The Empress (12 C. L. R., 86) followed.

[141] It is improper on the part of a Judge when examining a prisoner under s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code to cross examine him. The only questions which are permissible are such as will enable the prisoner to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him.

Although s. 303 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers a Judge to ask the jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is, it was never contemplated that, on ascertaining that the jury are not unanimous the Judge should make minute enquiries to learn the nature of the majority and its opinion so that he should have the opportunity of accepting or refusing that opinion as a verdict according as it coincides with his own opinion or not. Whatever may be the opinion of the Judge, if he goes so far as to ask the jury what is the exact majority, and what is the opinion of the majority, he ought to receive that verdict without hesitation, and if he differs from it, he should proceed as directed by s. 307.

A prisoner, or his Counsel, is at liberty to offer evidence or not, as he thinks proper, and no inference unfavourable to him can be drawn because he takes one course rather than another.

Mr. Amir Ali and Baboo Taruck Nath Sen for the Appellants

The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. White) for the Crown.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) which was delivered by

Prinsep, J.—The two appellants before us, Hurry Churn Chuckerbutty and Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty, gomasthas of two co-sharer zamindars, have been tried on charges of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, voluntarily causing grievous hurt under s. 325, and voluntarily causing hurt under s. 323. The jury unanimously acquitted them of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and by a majority of three to two convicted them on the second charge. The Judge, in accepting this verdict, expressed his disapproval of the acquittal on the first charge, but in view of the unanimity of the jury in respect of that acquittal accepted the verdict under both heads, and accordingly sentenced the prisoners to the extreme sentence of imprisonment allowed by the law, and also inflicted a fine.

* Criminal Appeal No. 399 of 1883, against the order of J. P. Grant, Esqr., Sessions Judge of Hooghly, dated the 31st May 1883.

There are many objections which have been taken to, and are indeed patent in, the Judge's proceedings, both as regards those during the trial and his summing up to the jury.

It appears that at the close of the evidence for the prosecution, [142] and before rising for the day, the Sessions Judge inquired and learnt from the attorney for the accused that he meant to adduce evidence for the defence. When the trial was resumed on the following day, the attorney intimated that, upon re-consideration, he did not intend to adduce any evidence. On this the Sessions Judge apparently informed him that the prosecutor would nevertheless have the right of reply, and on its being claimed, in spite of an objection raised, he conceded it.

Now, no doubt the strict interpretation of the terms of ss. 289 and 292 would warrant this, but we think that this was never contemplated by the Legislature, and certainly should not have been allowed by the Judge, when in fact no evidence was produced for the defence. The object of the law evidently is to let each side have an opportunity of commenting on the evidence of the other, and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecutor simply because the pleaders for a prisoner may, after consultation during an adjournment, have had an opportunity of considering what was best for the interests of their client. The incautious reply of the attorney at the end of the day should not have prejudiced his client on the resumption of the trial, and can properly be regarded only as the expression of an intention then entertained subject to further consideration.

Then, again, we think that when the attorney for the defence wished to read such a well-known book as Taylor on Medical Jurisprudence on a point so obscurely and unsatisfactorily determined by the medical evidence in this case, the Sessions Judge would have exercised a wise discretion if he had allowed a reference to that book to be laid before the Court. The case relied upon by the attorney of Hatim v. The Empress (12 C. L. R., 86) is an authority for referring to such a treatise, and although it may be that in an unreported case a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the Court may have held an opinion to the contrary, we think that in accordance with the usual practice the Judge should have followed rather the reported case, especially as it had been decided by a bench of two Judges.

Next we regret extremely to find that, in spite of repeated judgments of this Court on appeal against orders passed by the [143] Sessions Judge, he should still persist in the practice of conducting what is nothing else than a cross-examination of the prisoners. Section 342 of the Code of 1882 requires a Sessions Judge to put such questions to an accused generally on the case as he considers necessary after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, but that is to be done only for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. Now, in the present case, we find a very long cross-examination of the prisoner Hurry Churn Chuckerbutty. The questions are so put as to extend over the entire transaction relating to the present case, and, more than that, they are so directed as to obtain from him answers on matters really irrelevant to the matters in issue, but calculated seriously to prejudice him before the Jury, and also to incriminate the co-accused, Gopal Chunder, by connecting him with the execution of the decree which forms the foundation of the present case. Many of the questions are certainly what we should expect to find from a Counsel cross-examining an adverse witness. For instance, the accused was asked "how was Jadub hurt?" Answer: "How can I say." Question: "Are you of opinion then that Behary got Jadub hurt?" Answer: "No." Question: "If neither you nor Behary was instrumental in getting him hurt, while the Doctor maintains that Jadub was wounded severely, how then came he to be hurt?" Answer: "That I do not know." Question: "Why does the pleader say that he saw you, the Peadah, and Jadub go to his lodgings?" Answer: "He is Behary Sen's pleader; at the instance of Behary he says so." Then, again, the Judge asks many questions which are extremely irrelevant. Question: "After the deceased was brought to the Court did you pay his diet money, or was the amount of decree realised?" Answer: "He was neither sent to the jail nor was the amount realised." Question: "If he was not sent to the jail, and at the same time the amount of the decree was not realised, then tell me what followed?" Such questions are not, in our opinion, questions which are contemplated by the law for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. The tenor of the questions is clearly to entangle the accused, and so to prejudice him with the Jury.

Lastly, the manner in which the verdict was taken is, in our [144] opinion, objectionable. The summing of the Judge, to which reference will presently be made, clearly contemplates a conviction for culpable homicide, and it was so understood by all the members of the Jury except the Foreman, for they informed the Judge that they thought that they had only to consider this charge. This necessitated a further explanation from the Sessions Judge. The Jury then, after a short retirement, came back and said that they were unanimous on the first charge, but not on others, their verdict on the first charge being one of acquittal. The Judge thereupon asked: "How are you divided on the charge of grievous hurt?" Answer: "We are three to two on both the remaining charges." Question: "What is the verdict of the majority on the charge of grievous hurt?" Answer: "Guilty." Judge:—"I need not, therefore, take your verdict on the remaining charge." Now s 301 declares that when the Jury have considered their verdict, the Foreman shall inform the Judge what is their verdict, or what is the verdict of a majority. Section 302 says: "If the Jury are not unanimous, the Judge may require them to retire for further consideration." After such a period as the Judge considers reasonable the Jury may deliver their verdict, although they are not unanimous. Section 303, no doubt, empowers the Judge to ask the Jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is, but it was never, in our opinion, contemplated that on ascertaining that the Jury were not unanimous, the Judge should make minute enquiries to learn the nature of the majority, and its opinion, so that he should have the opportunity of accepting or refusing that opinion as a verdict according as it coincides with his own opinion or not. The manner in which the Judge has acted on the present occasion raises much doubt in our minds whether that was not the motive for the course he took, and inclines us to think that, if he had been told that the verdict of the majority was for acquittal on those charges, he would have accepted it. If we are wrong in concluding this, we think that we are at least bound to express our opinion on the matter so as to prevent any misconception regarding what we consider to be the proper practice. Whatever may have been the individual opinion of the Judge in this matter, if he went so far as to ask the Jury what was the exact majority [145] and what was the opinion of the majority, we think that he ought to have received that verdict without hesitation; and if he differed from it, he should have proceeded as directed by s. 307. If the Jury, in the present instance, had been required to retire without having informed the Judge as to the exact result of their deliberations, it is quite possible that on further discussion what was the majority might have become the minority, and we think that in all fairness to the prisoners the course indicated by us should be followed.

It next becomes necessary to consider the nature of the charge made by the Judge to the Jury. The general impression left by such a charge cannot be other than a painful impression that it is rather an address of the Counsel for the prosecution than a fair and impartial summing up of the evidence for and against the prisoner. None of the weak points in the evidence for the prosecution have been mentioned to the Jury, and many important considerations and inconsistencies have been entirely overlooked. One point in the case and a most material point, seems to have been altogether misapprehended by the Judge, and this notwithstanding that it was prominently brought to his notice by the attorney for the defence when the case had closed. The point in question is the exact time at which the deceased was found by his relative, Adari, and taken to her house, and the time of his death. This is an extremely important point, because from the unusual character of the injuries from which the deceased is said to have died it would seem doubtful on the medical evidence as recorded whether the ribs were broken before or after death. Although the medical officer states his opinion that these injuries were caused during life, he also intimates that they were recent, and if it had been pointed out to him (as it ought to have been) that it was alleged that these injuries were inflicted eight days before death, it is not improbable that he would have modified his opinion both as to the time at which they had been inflicted, and as to whether they caused the death of the deceased. The woman Adari is very positive in stating that she found the deceased lying under the Tal tree on Monday, the 4th Bysack. We find that this date was also stated in her [146] examination in the Magistrate's Court given within about ten days from the death, so that at that time at least, whatever may have happened in the interval before the Sessions trial, her memory was probably clear. In the Sessions Court, too, she not only repeats that statement but gives reasons for fixing the date. It is quite possible, as the Sessions Judge remarks in his charge to the Jury, that she has made a mistake, and that when she says the 4th of Bysack or 16th April she must have meant the 18th of April, the medical evidence showing that the deceased must have died on the 19th, but this discrepancy was never properly laid before the Jury. It is a most important allegation for the defence that the ribs were broken after death, for the interval between the assault and death would go very far to weaken the medical evidence given without knowledge of the fact that the beating was administered some eight days before the death. Then, again, supposing, as the Judge intimated to the Jury, that the woman did make a mistake, and that she really meant 18th when she said 16th of April, there was a previous interval certainly of two, if not more, days during which the movements of the deceased are altogether unexplained. The Judge has cursorily endeavoured to explain this away by referring to the evidence of Adari, that during this time the deceased was at Jehanabad, but even supposing that the deceased had stated to her that he had been kept at Jehanabad, it was the duty of the Judge to put it more prominently to the Jury so as to enable them to determine what weight was due to it. There are other very important points in the medical evidence to which reference might be made, which have been similarly overlooked or misapprehended by the Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury. At all events, with such evidence before him, given by a comparatively inexperienced medical officer, it is much to be regretted that the Sessions Judge having present in his Court the Civil Surgeon, did not think fit to examine him as an expert regarding the value of the testimony of his subordinate. But not only are the details of the Judge's charge to the Jury, and the manner in which he has presented the evidence to them objectionable, but the manner in which he has presented the entire case in its different parts is, in our opinion, one which [147] cannot but have seriously prejudiced the prisoner under trial. Before laying the evidence before the Jury in detail, he asks the Jury to consider whether, having regard to the previous relations between the deceased and the prisoner arising out of previous litigation, the accused were not likely to have committed the offence charged. This was certainly reversing the order in which such matters are usually laid before a Jury. It is the practice of our Courts first of all to lay before the Jury the direct evidence against the prisoners, and then to tell them that in determining the value of that evidence they should consider the evidence of the motive which is attributed as the cause of the offence. In presenting the case in the manner in which he has done, the Sessions Judge cannot but have seriously prejudiced the accused, because they are represented as decidedly inimical to the deceased, and, therefore, as prima facie guilty. As the Judge puts it, "This is important as supplying a possible motive for the subsequent treatment of the deceased, as deposed to in the evidence." There are also several parts of the evidence which materially affect the appellants now before us which have not been laid before the Jury, for instance the evidence, of the pleader describing what the deceased said when he was being brought under arrest to the Civil Court. In explaining to the pleader the treatment he had received, the deceased nowhere mentioned the prisoner Gopal as one of those who had been concerned in the assault. The Sessions Judge, however, has altogether overlooked this point, which was of very great importance to the prisoner Gopal. Next, in dealing with the evidence of Bhooth Nath Adhicari and Kedar Bagdi, the Sessions Judge pointed out that "Bhooth Nath Adhicari speaks from the point of the beating of the deceased under the eaves of his house, and Kedar from the point of deceased being brought to the bank of his own tank." The Sessions Judge adds, "I need not refer to the evidence of these witnesses at length." Now if we refer to the evidence of these two witnesses, it is to be found that the one man Bhooth Nath says that when he arrived he saw the deceased lying under the eaves of his house, and that neither then nor at any other time did he see the deceased beaten, although he saw him removed thence to the tank and on to the Chowkeydar's house in the village. Kedar, on the [148] other hand, speaks to beating on the bank of the tank and also to the further carrying off the deceased. Kedar's evidence, therefore, so far as regards the beating at the tank, is inconsistent with that of Bhooth Nath.

As regards the taking of the deceased in a dooly to the Civil Court, the case of the prosecution is that that was necessary in consequence of the severe beating that he had received; while for the defence it is alleged that the infirm state of health of the deceased prevented his walking to Jehanabad, a distance of five cos. The Judge, in reference to this point, says: "The next stage of the case is the acknowledged hiring of a dooly to take the deceased to Jehanabad as he could not walk. This is acknowledged even by the defence." This was hardly a fair way of putting this part of the case to the Jury. Then the return that the peon made of the arrest of the deceased on the 14th of April mentions the fact that he was taken in a dooly. The Judge in referring to this matter states: "It is to be observed that the return itself mentions that the man had to be brought in a dooly," but at the same time he omits to suggest to the Jury and leaves it for their consideration, as he should have done, whether it was likely, if a severe beating had been administered as stated by the prosecution, that the peon would have mentioned the fact of the deceased being carried in a dooly to corroborate, as it were, any complaint that might be made of such ill-treatment by himself.

Another very important part of the case seems to have escaped proper attention. The deceased was brought under arrest to the Civil Court at Jehanabad on the 13th or 14th April. The prisoner, Hurry Churn Chuckerbutty, in his first examination before the Magistrate, stated that the deceased had compromised the decree against him by executing a kabuliat in his favour, which was registered on the same date. No enquiry was made in the Registration Office regarding what took place on this occasion. The Judge seems to have thought it sufficient to comment on the position of the men who were witnesses to the registration, and to have made the Registrar's endorsement on the document a means of explaining the movements of the deceased between the 14th of April, the date of the presentation of the document for registration, and the 16th, when the registra-[149]tion being completed the document was returned. The Judge has assumed merely from these proceedings that the deceased remained all this time at Jehanabad with the prisoners. It is quite possible that this may have been the case, but in the absence of evidence on this point it was not a fair presumption, for it is quite as likely that if the gomashita desired to obtain the kabuliat after its registration, he should have attained this end by getting from Jadub, the executant of the deed, what is called the ticket or receipt of the registration office, a good return of which would entitle the holder to obtain the document after its registration.

Mr. Amir Ali, who appeared for the Appellants, next objects, and we think, with good reason, that in laying the evidence in this case before the Jury, if the defence did not have an opportunity to cross-examine his witnesses who had been examined in the Magistrate's Court, and had deposed in favour of the prisoners, it was the duty of the Sessions Judge at least to notice this matter for consideration by the Jury. We would next remind the Sessions Judge that in the case of Dhunno Kazi (I. L. R. 8 Cal., 121), which was an appeal from his own decision, as well as in a more recent appeal, two Division Benches of this Court have pointed out to him that the prisoner or his counsel is at liberty to offer evidence or not as he thinks proper, and no inference unfavourable to him can be drawn because he takes one course rather than another. Notwithstanding this instruction the Sessions Judge has taken to task the accused, or those who conducted the case for them, for having at one time stated that they meant to adduce evidence, and having on a subsequent occasion stated that they had changed their minds and intended to offer no evidence. The Judge says on this part of the case that the accused not having called such witnesses, "you," that is the jury, are entitled to presume that they could not contradict the prosecution as to this." It was, however, entirely open to the defence to adduce no evidence at all, but to rely upon the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, and certainly in this case there was room for forming two opinions. The Judge next states: "The only parts of the prosecution story which are denied are what incriminate the accused, the trespass into the house, the [150] dragging out and beating, the carrying off, the meeting with the pleader," but all these "if not true are capable of contradiction, and the accused had witnesses in attendance for some such purpose, yet they did not call a single one." He also comments on the fact that amongst these witnesses were present the Civil Surgeon and the Deputy Magistrate himself, who were not examined. Our regret has already been expressed that the Sessions Judge, in the exercise of his discretion in this case, did not for the ends of justice examine the Civil Surgeon. His evidence would have been important as an expert to test the evidence of the Assistant Surgeon. The reason for which, the Deputy Magistrate was called is not apparent. However that may be, the Judge was not at liberty to draw a presumption adverse to the accused from the circumstance that these witnesses were not examined. For these reasons we think that there have been serious misdirections in this case by the Judge to the jury which have caused a failure of justice, and that the prisoners must be retried on the charge on which they have been convicted. The proceedings in the Sessions Court of Hooghly are accordingly hereby set aside, and the appellants may be at large on bail pending retrial. Lastly, having regard to the very strong opinion which the Sessions Judge of Hooghly entertains in this case, we think it desirable that a new trial should be held by some other officer, and we accordingly direct that the case be tried by the Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs.

Conviction set aside and re-trial ordered.

A. B. Miller, Official Assignee of Bengal and of the estate of Kishen Chand Golecha. Plaintiff.

Insolvency—Attachment before judgment—Vesting order—Priority of claim of Official Assignee.

A creditor attached before judgment certain of his debtor's property. Between the date of attachment and the date of the decree subsequently [181] obtained by the creditor, the property of the debtor became vested in the Official Assignee under a vesting order. The Official Assignee brought a suit to remove the attachment, and for an injunction restraining the sale of the property. The Court of First Instance decreed the suit in favour of the Official Assignee. On the case coming up before a Full Bench, held

Per McDONELL, TOTTENHAM, AND PRINSEP, JJ, that, where there has been an attachment prior to decree and the property of a judgment-debtor subsequently becomes vested in the Official Assignee in insolvency previous to the decree, the vesting order will prevent such an attaching creditor from executing his decree against the property.

Per GARTH, C J, and MITTER, J, contra, that, under the 34th chapter of Act XIV of 1882, the Court had no power to remove the attachment before judgment, or stay the sale at the instance of the Official Assignee.

In this case Shib Kristo Shaha Chowdhry and others on 2nd March 1880 brought a suit against one Kishen Chand Golecha to recover a large sum of money, and applied under s. 483 of the Code of Civil Procedure for attachment before judgment, which application was granted. On the 9th April 1880, they obtained a decree against Kishen Chand Golecha, and on the 10th May 1880, applied for execution and sale of the attached property. On the 22nd May 1880, the Court fixed the sale for the following 1st July. On the 4th June the Official Assignee put in a claim to the property, on the ground that Kishen Chand Golecha, on the 22nd March 1880, before the judgment-creditors obtained their decree, had been adjudicated an insolvent under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act, upon which the usual vesting order had been made; the insolvent had, however, not filed his schedule.

On the 28th July 1880 the Subordinate Judge of Berhampur rejected the claim of the Official Assignee.

The Official Assignee then applied to the High Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code to have the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside. At the hearing of the rule, objection was taken that the case did not fall under s. 622, that the Official Assignee had mistaken his remedy, and should have brought a regular suit, as indicated by s. 283 of the Code, and it was also contended that the claim of the Official Assignee could not prevail against the judgment-creditor who had attached the property in a suit in which he afterwards obtained a decree.

[152] Mr. Justice WHITE and Mr. Justice FIELD, before whom the rule was argued, both agreed in deciding that the Official Assignee had failed to show that the Subordinate Judge had (1) exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or (2) failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested, or (3) acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

Mr. Justice WHITE was further of opinion that the application could not be brought under any section of the Civil Procedure Code, and that it was unnecessary to decide whether it could be made under s 49 of the Insolvent Act, and whether the application should be taken as made under that section, inasmuch as the section only applied after an insolvent's schedule had been filed, and in respect of a debt or demand admitted in the schedule. Mr. Justice FIELD based his order on the preliminary objection alone.

The Official Assignee then, on the 15th December 1880, brought a regular suit to remove the attachment, and for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from selling the properties of the insolvent. In this suit the Subordinate Judge held that the attachment before judgment could not have effect as against the Official Assignee, and that the vesting order had priority over the attachment before judgment. He, therefore, decreed the suit in favour of the Official Assignee.

The judgment-creditor appealed to the High Court. Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM and Mr. Justice MACLEAN thought it desirable to refer the question to a Full Bench, and the following was the order of reference.—

"In this case the point raised is as to the relative priority of the Official Assignee who has obtained a vesting order in insolvency, and a creditor who has attached before decree, the vesting order having been made between the date of attachment and the date of decree. The point being one of considerable importance, and differences of opinion having been entertained by several Judges of this Court on the point, we think it desirable that it should be referred for consideration to a Full Bench. The question accordingly which we refer is, 'where there has been an attachment prior to decree and the property of the judgment-debtor has subsequently become vested in the Official Assignee in insolvency [153] previous to the decree, does the vesting order prevent the attaching-creditor from executing his decree against the property?' The question was considered by Mr. Justice WHITE and Mr. Justice FIELD on a hearing under s. 622 on the 22nd November 1880, when different views were entertained by the learned Judges. The question was again raised before Mr. Justice MORRIS and Mr. Justice TOTTENHAM in Miller v Mon Mohun Roy (I. L. R., 7 Cal, 213), where the learned Judges considered that an attachment prior to a vesting order did not enable the judgment-creditor to execute his decree irrespective of the insolvency."

Mr. Evans (with him Baboo Mohun Mohun Roy and Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry) for the Appellants.

The case of Anand Chundra Pal v. Panchulal Sarma (5 B. L. R., 691) decides that where once a creditor has attached he has acquired a right to follow on to sale, and that a claim made by the Official Assignee before sale could not prevail; the Official Assignee being in no higher position than a gratuitous alienee, and being only created at the moment of insolvency. Anand Chandra Pal's case lays down the rights of the Official Assignee as regards a vesting order obtained after judgment. Section 489 of the Civil Code of Procedure has a limitation, reserving rights existing prior to attachment, and this section destroys the ratio decidendi of the Bombay case, Gamble v. Bholaqir (2 Bom. H. C., 150). [MITTER, J.—In Anand Chandra Pal's case, the question was whether the sale of the attaching creditor prevailed against the sale of the Official Assignee] In s. 489, the word "rights" refers clearly to the rights in the attached property. If the attachment had taken place after decree, under the decision in Anand Chandra Pal's case, the creditor would have had a right to satisfaction.

The case of Sruam Manik v. Tincowri Bai (4 B. L. R. F.B. 63, 13 W. R. F. B., 9) shows that there is a difference between attachments before and after decree, but this question has been set at rest by the new Code of Civil Procedure which lays down that it is not necessary to re-attach.

[154] The word "existing" in the section means "accrued," the phrase in this section must mean a right "previously existing against the attached property." The case is really on all fours with the case of Doe d. O'Hanlon v. Palologus (Morton's Dec. 323). A suit of sequestration under the Charter would have exactly the same effect as an attachment before judgment. Although the property may be in the Official Assignee, yet it is subject to the rights of the attaching creditor. The Official Assignee did not come in under s. 49 of the Insolvent Act, but he did so on his legal right as owner. The question in Doe d. O'Hanlon v. Palologus was whether the assignment to the Assignee overrode the sequestration. The Sub-Judge has based his judgment on cases prior to Anand Chandra Pal's case, and on a note to s. 489 given in Mr. Broughton's Code of Civil Procedure. The words of the new Code having cut away the ground from Gamble v. Bholaqir, and Anand Chandra Pal's case having cut away the ground from all older cases, I submit that an attachment before judgment is in the same position as an attachment after judgment.

Mr. Phillips (with him Baboo Nil Madhub Bose and Baboo Sahgram Singh) for the Respondents.

The suit was brought to determine whether or no the judgment-creditors had a right to proceed, and it would be idle to stop at the point as to whether they may realize the proceeds, they ought to be allowed to go on to the point as to who would be entitled to the proceeds. There are no conflicting decisions on this matter, none of the old cases to be found have been overruled by the Bombay case as regards attachments before judgment, whatever may have been its effect as to attachments after judgment. If there is anything to decide on the reference at all, the Court ought to decide the point as to who would be entitled to receive the proceeds of sale. We were entitled to stop the creditors from having the benefit of the property, because at the time the insolvency took place the appellants had no more right to the property than any other creditors. Before decree, a creditor has no right, and the Official Assignee has a right to restrain any creditor from getting a preference. As to the point, whether an [155] attachment before judgment is in the same position as an attachment after judgment, I submit that an attachment before judgment amounts at the highest to holding the property for the purpose of having it forthcoming to answer any decree that may be made. An attachment is called into play under s. 489, for the purpose of withdrawing the property out of the power of the Courts. In order to sustain the argument of the other side, it must be that the plaintiff has some right in the property which would prevent it passing to the Official Assignee.

The word "rights" in s. 489 is taken by Mr. JUSTICE WHITE to be "rights in the proceedings," and this is the view of the Full Bench case. I contend (1) that a security given by a defendant is on a different footing from an attachment of his property; (2) that the object of giving security is, that there should be no alienation of the property, and not to give plaintiff a lien upon it.

The view of the English law on the subject has no application, but we must look to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code

The Official Assignee, who represents all creditors, ought to be in the same position as other decree-holders, and under the Insolvent Act he ought to be able to share in the rateable distribution. Section 489 only refers to property attached and not to securities.

Under s. 344 of the Code any persons arrested or imprisoned under a decree may apply for a declaration of insolvency, and under s. 351 a Receiver may be appointed to the property, and under s. 356 distribution may be ordered. So the policy of the law is, that in the event of insolvency, the assets should be rateably distributed. From the fact that the law puts it out of the defendant's power to touch the property, you are not enabled to infer that the law gives any lien on the particular property

As to the case of O'Hanlon v Paliologus (Morton's Dec 323), there is a great difference between the sequestration referred to there and an attachment before judgment, because at pages 327 and 328 of the Report the nature of sequestration is described. The process is entirely confined to the English Court.

As to the case of Gamble v Bholagur (2 Bom H. C. 150), which does not agree with the case of O'Hanlon v. Paliologus, whatever the effect may [186] be, WESTROPP, J., says: "It is difficult to regard the writ of sequestration in a suit, as the inception of an execution, before there is, in that suit, any judgment in existence to be executed." Can it be contended that Mr JUSTICE WESTROPP thought that in the absence of a declaration that an attachment before judgment was to create a preferential right in a plaintiff, the rights of persons not parties to the suit should be affected? The view I take is supported by old cases which I submit have not been overruled, see the case of Petumber Mundle v. Cochrane (1 Ind. Jur., N S. 11).

Mr. Evans in reply.

The Opinions of the Full Bench were as follows —

Prinsep, J.—The question before us is whether a creditor, whose rights depend upon an attachment before judgment, is entitled to execute a decree subsequently obtained, in spite of a vesting order in favour of the Official Assignee of the insolvent debtor's estate passed after the attachment, but before the decree.

I am of opinion that, having regard to the terms of the present Code, he cannot execute such a decree. An attachment before judgment is obtained when a Court is satisfied that the defendant intends to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him, by disposing of or removing his property from the jurisdiction of the Court, or quitting such jurisdiction and is unable to furnish proper security. The attachment is to be removed if at any time the security is furnished or the suit is dismissed. It does not affect the rights of third parties already existing, nor does it prevent any decree-holder from applying for the sale of the property in satisfaction of his decree. It is further provided that on a decree subsequently obtained, the attaching creditor may proceed in execution without any re-attachment. The rights so conferred are clearly to prevent any alienation by the debtor, such as I may say amount to any fraudulent preference, if he were about to become insolvent. As I understand the argument, the only persons who can intervene are persons having rights prior to the attachment, or any decree-holder who may apply for execution, whether that decree may have been obtained before or after the attachment. If such decree-holder obtains a sale [157] and that sale is confirmed before the creditor who has an attachment before judgment gets a decree, he can obtain the whole sale proceeds, and the attachment before judgment affords no security. No doubt, this is an extreme case, but still it is a case that may happen. Then, again, what is the effect if in execution of such a decree, or if in execution of a decree obtained by the attaching plaintiff, the judgment-debtor applies under s 344 to become an insolvent? Execution is suspended until determination of that application. If he is declared an insolvent under s 351, a Receiver is appointed, the entire property of the insolvent is vested in that Receiver, and the attaching creditor gets merely the costs incurred in the execution proceedings, mortgagees are next paid, and then the assets are distributed among all other creditors. These are the rules prescribed by the present Code, and in my opinion they apply with equal force to all Courts, whether the debtor has been made an insolvent on the Original Side of this Court under the English Insolvency Statute or under Chapter XX of the Code. That chapter has been extended to proceedings on the Original Side of this Court. A vesting order under the statute is, as I understand its effect, of the same nature and force as the appointment of a Receiver under s. 351.

Then, again, if we consider the object of an attachment before judgment, and the position of the attaching plaintiff with respect to the Official Assignee or Receiver appointed under s. 351 of the Code, it seems clear that the former can have obtained no absolute right over the property attached before judgment such as to supersede the effect of a vesting order. The object of an attachment before judgment is to prevent any alienation or removal by a dishonest debtor (see s. 483), but when by the action of a Court, by means of the appointment of a Receiver under s. 351, or the passing of a vesting order in favour of the Official Assignee, that object is attained, there can be no possible reason why one who obtains an attachment before judgment, should, merely by force of that attachment, acquire a more favourable position than any other creditor. The attachment must be removed on security being given, and so far as the payment of the debt, which on decree subsequently passed may [158] be found to be due, that security is given by the appointment of a Receiver under s 351, or a vesting order under the Insolvency Statute. The security thus given may, no doubt, sometimes not be to the full amount—that would depend on the state of the insolvent's estate, but it would be a sufficient security having due regard to the claims of other creditors. This would be the result of proceedings taken under the Code of Civil Procedure, and I cannot suppose that it was ever intended by the Legislature that, under precisely similar circumstances, there should be any difference when a vesting order is passed under the Insolvency Statute by this Court in its Original Jurisdiction, especially when Chapter XX of the Code applies to that jurisdiction.

I would answer this reference accordingly.

Tottenham, J.—I would answer the question submitted to the Full Bench in the affirmative.

I consider that the provisions of Chapter XXXIV of the Code can have no operation in favour of a single creditor to the exclusion of others, when the debtor has, during the pendency of the suit, been declared an insolvent, and a vesting order has been passed by the High Court in favour of the Official Assignee.

Upon the occurrence of this event, it seems to me that the property of the insolvent, in whosoever custody it may be, becomes available for rateable distribution amongst the whole body of his creditors; and that the attachment before judgment obtained by one of them, but which has not yet been followed up by a decree, does not entitle him to any preference over the others. Section 7 of the Insolvent Debtor's Act provides that the vesting order "shall instantly, and without any conveyance or assignment, vest all the real and personal estate, effects and debts as aforesaid in the said Official Assignee, who shall have full powers for the recovery thereof, and shall hold and stand possessed of the same for the purposes and in the manner hereinafter mentioned."

It is true that the Official Assignee's right or possession is subject to any lien held by any other person in respect of any of the property, and that the Official Assignee acquires no right beyond what the insolvent himself had; but in my view the creditor, who has procured an attachment before judgment, does [159] not thereby acquire any lien entitling him to have his demand satisfied to the prejudice of other creditors. It is perhaps a different thing if the attaching creditor has obtained his decree and has applied for execution by the sale of the property attached before the insolvency has been declared, for in that case he has a complete lien upon the attached property for the satisfaction of his decree.

I cannot concur in the view that the alteration from the terms of s. 89 of Act VIII of 1859, by the addition of the words "existing prior to the attachment" in s. 489 of the new Code, must have been intended to alter the law laid down in the Bombay case of Gamble v. Bholagir, or to defeat the Official Assignee's right on behalf of the whole body of creditors in cases where the attaching creditor has obtained no decree at the time when the vesting order is made. For, if by so doing, the Legislature would correct one apparent inconsistency, it would create one still more glaring, by placing the creditor, who obtained an attachment before judgment, in a position of advantage over all the other creditors, which a creditor who has obtained a decree could not have either under the Insolvent Debtor's Act or under the insolvency provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure.

I am, therefore, disposed to concur with Mr. Justice PRINSEP in holding that the vesting order prevents the attaching creditor from executing his decree against the property attached.

As to its being incumbent on the Court to proceed to execution upon application, it seems to me that the fact of the vesting order having been passed prior to the decree, would authorise the Court under s. 250 to withhold its warrant for execution of the decree subsequently obtained.

McDonell, J.—I would answer the question submitted to the Full Court in the affirmative, and generally for the reasons given by PRINSEP and TOTTENHAM, JJ. It is certainly difficult to say why the words "existing prior to the attachment" have been inserted in s. 489 of the present Code, unless, as suggested by FIELD, J., when this very case came before him on a hearing under s. 622, they were put in merely to make it clear that alienations after an attachment before judgment and pendente lite are void, and that really there was no intention to interfere with, or alter [160] the law relating to, the priority of the Official Assignee as settled by a number of decisions upon the old Code. The policy of the new Code of Civil Procedure, as shown in Chapter

XX, and elsewhere, is that all creditors should share, and that no particular creditor should have a preference when there is a deficiency of assets, merely because he happened to obtain a decree first, and it would certainly be opposed to this policy to take away the priority given to the Official Assignee by the law as settled before the passing of the present Code.

Mitter, J.—I would answer the question referred to us in the negative.

It seems to me that if the Official Assignee, after the vesting order was made in his favour, was not entitled to have the attachment of the insolvent's property, made before judgment, removed, he cannot resist the right of the plaintiff, who has obtained a decree after the vesting order, to have his decree satisfied by the sale of the attached property. The first question that demands consideration is, therefore, whether the attachment before judgment in this case, under the 34th Chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure, was liable to be removed on the application of the Official Assignee, the defendant in the suit having been adjudged an insolvent before the decree was passed against him.

Under Act VIII of 1859 a similar question came under consideration in several cases, and, under the provisions of that Code, it was uniformly decided in favour of the Official Assignee. Of these cases, the question was exhaustively discussed in Sava Ramji v. Jadavji Nathu (2 Bom. H. C., 165) and Gamble v. Bholagir (2 Bom. H. C., 150). If we examine the reasons given in these two decisions in support of the conclusion to which the learned Judges came, and compare the provisions of Act VIII of 1859 regarding attachment before judgment with those of the present Code on the same subject, it would appear that the Legislature has altered the law as laid down in these cases with reference to the construction to be put upon the sections of the Code bearing upon this subject.

The main ground upon which these decisions rest is, that the provisions regarding attachment before judgment, laid down [161] in Act VIII of 1859, left it entirely at the discretion of the Court to remove the attachment whenever it appeared equitable and just to do so. And as in these cases it appeared to the Court more equitable that a debtor's property should be available equally to all his creditors, than that it should be applied solely for the advantage of one, the attachment was ordered to be removed at the instance of the Official Assignee.

But that under the present Code, this unfettered discretion has been taken away, will appear clear if we compare ss. 83, 84 and 89 of Act VIII of 1859 with the corresponding sections of the new Code, viz., 484, 485 and 489.

Both under ss. 83 and 84, the Court would direct the attachment of the debtor's property "until further order." The words "until further order" left to the Court ample discretion to deal with the question of the removal of the attachment on equitable grounds.

But in s. 485 of the new Code, which corresponds with s. 84 of the old Code, the words "until further order" have been omitted; and in the second paragraph of s. 484 of the new Code, instead of the words of the corresponding s. 83 of the old Code, the word "conditional" has been substituted. The condition referred to is evidently the success or non-success of the defendant to show satisfactory cause under s. 485, i.e., if the case falls under paragraph 1 of 485, the attachment is to be confirmed, but if it falls under the second paragraph, the attachment is to be withdrawn.

The language of s. 89 of the old Code was quite in unison with the provisions of ss. 83 and 84, which, as already shown, conferred ample latitude to the Court for exercising its discretion on equitable grounds. In s. 489 of the new Code, which corresponds with s. 89 of the old Code, between the phrases "attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights" and "of persons not parties to the suit," the words "existing prior to the attachment" have been introduced. The introduction of these words shows that the discretionary power of the Court has been curtailed. It seems to me that the ample discretion which the Court, under the old Code, had for [162] directing the removal of an attachment before judgment upon equitable grounds, is now cut down to cases falling under ss 488 and 489 of the new Code. The present case does not fall under either of those sections. Section 488 has evidently nothing to do with it, and s. 489 is not applicable, because the right of the Official Assignee came into existence after the attachment.

Therefore, under the 34th Chapter of the Code, the Execution Court had no power in this case to direct the removal of the attachment at the instance of the Official Assignee. Then, with the exception of s. 250 I do not find any other provision in the Code under which the Court, in the exercise of its discretionary power, could refuse to allow the defendant to proceed with the execution of his decree. But before the Official Assignee appeared in the Execution Court, it had directed the warrant for the execution of the decree to issue. The attachment before judgment in this case was made in accordance with the order, dated the 2nd March 1880. On the 22nd March following, the defendant in the suit was declared insolvent and the vesting order was passed. The suit was decreed on the 9th of April 1880, and the application for execution was made on the 10th of May 1880, and on the 22nd May 1880 the order for the sale of the attached property was made. Then on the 4th of June 1880 the Official Assignee made his application to stay the sale. These dates clearly show that the Official Assignee, in support of his application, could not rely upon the provisions of s. 250, because the warrant for the execution of the decree had been then already issued.

That being so under the provisions of the new Code the Execution Court had no power in this case to direct the removal of the attachment or stay the sale upon the application of the Official Assignee. In coming to this conclusion I have not at all taken into consideration the provisions of the chapter on Insolvency of the Code itself, because the present case does not fall under them.

Therefore there is no provision of the Civil Procedure Code, under which the Execution Court could grant the application of the Official Assignee. Nor do I find any provision in the [163] Indian Insolvent Act under which he could succeed in his application. The only section under which the execution proceedings could be stayed is s 49. But it only applies after the insolvent's schedule has been filed, and in respect of a debt or demand admitted in the schedule.

In this case it is admitted that the insolvent's schedule has not yet been filed. It being thus clear that in this case the Execution Court in the exercise of its discretion had no power, at the instance of the Official Assignee, either to remove the attachment or to stay the sale, it seems to me that the reasons upon which the Full Bench decision in Anand Chandra Pal v. Panchi Lal Sarma (5 B. L. R. 691) is based, would warrant us in holding that the defendant in this case has the right to have the attached property sold and the money realized by sale paid to him. Sir RICHARD COUCH, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the majority of the Judges of the Full Bench, holding upon the authority of decided cases of English Courts, that an Official

Assignee "has not a greater interest in the property than the insolvent had," says: "But, as I have said the question must be answered by a reference to the Code of Civil Procedure."

He then thus refers to these provisions:—

"By s. 15 of Act XXIII of 1861, substituted for s. 215 of Act VIII of 1859, it is enacted that 'if the application for execution of a decree be admitted, the Court shall order execution of the decree according to the nature of the application' Section 221 of Act VIII of 1859, says. 'When all necessary preliminary measures have been taken, where any such are required, the Court, unless it sees cause to the contrary, shall issue the proper warrants for the execution of the decree.' .

"Section 232 is 'If the decree be for money, and the amount thereof is to be levied from the property of the person against whom the same may have been pronounced, the Court shall cause the property to be attached in the manner following,' and thereafter the different modes of attachment are given. Section 242 says 'In all cases of attachment under the preceding sections, it shall be competent to the Court, at any time during the attachment, to direct that any part of the property so attached as shall [164] consist of money or bank notes or a sufficient part thereof, shall be paid over to the party applying for execution of the decree, or that any part of the property so attached as may not consist of money or bank notes, so far as may be necessary for the satisfaction of the decree, shall be sold, and that the money which may be realized by such sale, or a sufficient part thereof, shall be paid to such party'

"Now, it is a rule, that when a statute confers an authority to do a judicial act in a certain case it is imperative on those so authorised, to exercise the authority when the case arises, and its exercise is duly applied for by a party interested and having the right to make the application This has been often decided and it is sufficient to quote the cases of Macdougall v. Paterson (11 C B 755), Crake v. Powell (2 E and B 210), and Bowes v. Hope Life Insurance Company (11 II L C., 389) In those cases the word used in the statute was 'may' According to this rule, the words 'it shall be competent to the Court' in s. 242 must not be construed as giving to the Court a power which it may exercise or not as it thinks fit, but is obligatory and conferring on the attaching creditor a right to have the attached property sold, and the money realized by the sale paid to him "

Now, if we refer to the corresponding sections of the new Code of Civil Procedure, we find that the same process of reasoning leads us to the conclusion that the defendant in this case has the right to have the attached property sold, and the money realized by the sale, paid to him.

For facility of reference and comparison, the corresponding sections of the new Code are noted below Section 15 of Act XXIII of 1861, corresponds with paragraph 2 of s. 245 of the new Code; s. 221 of the old Code with s. 250 of the new Code, s. 232* of the old Code, and 273* of the new Code; and s. 242 of the old Code with s. 284 of the new Code

In s. 284, the word "may" has been substituted in the place of the words "it shall be competent to the Court." But as pointed [165] out by Sir RICHARD COUCH, C.J., according to a well-known rule of construction either of those expressions must not be considered as giving to the Court a power which it may exercise or not as it thinks fit, but as obligatory and conferring on the attaching creditor a right to have the attached property sold, and the money, realized by the sale, paid to him.

* These sections need not be considered, as the property has been attached, and under s. 490 of the new Code re-attachment is not necessary. Note per MITTER, J.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the question referred to us should be answered in the negative.

Garth, C.J.—I think that, having regard to the language of the present Code, my brother MITTER's view of the law is right

Had the wording of s. 489 of the new Code been the same as that of s. 89 of the old Code, I should have agreed with the view of the Bombay Court in the case of Gamble v. Bholagiri (2 Bom. H. C. 150).

But the language of s. 89, upon which the learned Chief Justice in that case founds his opinion, has been materially altered in s. 489 of the present Code.

The words of the old Code were "attachments before judgment shall not affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit" The words of the present Code are "attachments before judgment shall not affect the rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit"

It seems to me that the words "existing prior to the attachment" must surely have been introduced with some object, and I cannot help thinking that they were introduced for the express purpose of altering the law, as laid down in the judgment of the Bombay case

At the same time I am quite of opinion that the law ought to be as the majority of my learned brothers have held that it is, and I am very glad that they have seen their way to arrive at that conclusion

The result will be that the question referred to us is answered in the affirmative, and the plaintiff will have his costs in this Court. •

The India General Steam Navigation Co.... Defendants.' .

Carriers, liability of—Common carriers—English law—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 151, 152—Carriers Act (III of 1865)—Railways Act (IV of 1879), s. 101—Statement of objects and reasons of the Contract Act.

The common law of England regulating the responsibility of common carriers, was at the time of the passing of the Carriers Act, 1865, and is still, in force in this country, and is unaffected by the provisions of the Indian Contract Act Kuerji Tulsidas v. G. I. P. Ry. Co. (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 109) dissented from.

The plaintiffs entrusted to the defendants, who were common carriers under the Carriers Act III of 1865, certain goods which were lost in the course of their carriage on one of the defendants' steamers. On the facts it was found that the defendants took as much care of the goods as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed; and that the loss was not occasioned by the act of God or the Queen's enemies. There was no special contract of the nature provided for by s. 6, Act III of 1865. Held, that ss. 151, 152 of the Contract Act did not apply, and that the defendants were liable for the loss of the goods.

THIS was a case stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 55 of Act IX of 1850, and s. 617 of Act XIV of 1882.

The following is the case as referred by the Fourth Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court :—

"This suit was instituted on 26th June under Act IX of 1850. It was heard on 3rd, 4th, 5th and 10th July, after the present Small Cause Court Act had come into force.

"The plaintiffs sue the defendants for Rs. 296, being the value of 72 drums of jute out of 98 shipped on board the defendants' flat Delta at Kaligunge, on the 19th September last, under the bill of lading which accompanies this reference. The defendants are common carriers by inland navigation under the Indian Carriers Act III of 1865, and their liabilities are

* On a case referred by G. C. Sconce, Fourth Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes.

† [Sec. 10.—Every agreement purporting to limit the obligation or responsibility imposed on a carrier by railway by the Indian Contract Act, 1872, sections 151 and 152, in the case of loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, property shall, in so far as it purports to limit such obligation or responsibility be void unless—

(a) it is in writing signed by, or on behalf of, the person sending or delivering such property, and
(b) it is otherwise in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council.]

[167] governed by s. 6 of that Act. The plaintiffs recovered from the defendants at Calcutta 26 drums out of the 98 shipped at Kaligunge; the remaining 72 were lost in transit under the circumstances hereafter stated. There is no dispute as to the value of the lost jute, and the defendants had not limited their liability to pay for the jute by any "special contract signed by the owner of the jute delivered to them to be carried, or by any person duly authorized in that behalf by the owner." (See s. 6, Act III of 1865).

"The steamer Mirzapore left Debrooghur on the 10th September 1881, with the flat Delta in tow, containing a general cargo. After arriving at Kaligunge the plaintiffs' jute and a large quantity of jute belonging to other persons, was stowed on board the Delta. The steamer, and Delta, the flat being lashed to the portside of the steamer, proceeded on to Serajgunge, where another flat, the Lebong, was taken in tow and fastened to the starboard side of the steamer. They then proceeded on their voyage. All went well till the evening of Monday, the 26th September, when they arrived at a narrow part of the river, called the Atharah Bend or 18th Reach. Here at about quarter to 6 o'clock P.M. a severe shock was felt; the Delta trembled and was forced up against the side of the steamer, the engines were stopped, and it was found that the Delta had struck against some obstruction in the river, which had caused a great rent in the bottom of the flat Delta 'about the turn of the build reaching from the forepart of No. 1 hold to the after bulkhead of No. 2 hold, a distance of nearly 30 feet, rivets and plates were started, and the rent was about four to six inches wide, or about as wide as the palm of one's hand. Through this the water came in with great force and rapidity. Pumps were set going at once, and the Captain of the steamer went on again easy, in the hopes of being able to reach a nullah about two miles off, with which he was acquainted, intending to beach the flat in shallow water. He could not do this, because he found another steamer, the Dacca, anchored ahead of him, with a flat, and the river was too narrow to enable him to pass her. The steam of the Dacca was down, and could not have been got up for three hours. Haley, the Captain of the Mirzapore, then determined [168] to place the flat Delta close to the shore. This was done, and she was fastened up to the surrounding trees on the bank with chains and ropes. The banks here were precipitous and deep water close up to them. There were about two fathoms of water under the flat, where she was fastened up. There were no inhabitants of the country from whom they could get assistance. The crew of the Dacca came to their assistance with the pumps from that vessel. There were also pumps on board the Mirzapore and the Delta which had been vigorously employed from the first. Jute was crammed into the leak, the awnings from the steamer were taken down, and drawn under the hull of the flat in the hope of stopping the flow of water, and all the men that could be spared from pumping were employed in saving the cargo by putting it on shore and on board the steamer alongside. It was impossible to stop the leak, and finally the flat, heavy with the water in her, sank about 9 A.M. on the 27th September in five fathoms of water, breaking away from the chains and ropes which had sustained her. At the place where the accident took place the river was about 150 feet wide. The portside of the Delta was about eight or ten feet from the shore on her left hand, the Mirzapore was sixty feet wide, and each flat thirty feet wide, and there would, therefore, be fifteen or twenty feet between the starboard side of the Lebong and the bank on her side. It was then low water, and the river narrower than it would be at high water. The Mirzapore, with her flats, was going along with the last part of the ebb, and with such tide as there was to help them was going over the ground at about three miles per hour, leads going on both sides. The soundings at the time when the accident happened were 1½ fathoms on the portside of the Delta, and 2 fathoms on the starboard side of the Lebang. The Delta was drawing four feet three forward and four feet six after. The Dacca, which had preceded the Mirzapore with only one flat in tow a very few hours before, up this narrow reach, at a higher state of the tide, might very well have safely passed over, or on one side of the obstruction which caused the wreck of the Delta. A good look-out had been kept, but nothing could be seen above water which should have caused the Mirzapore to hesitate about proceeding on her journey. After the Delta had been sunk, and all the [169] cargo which could be saved had been saved out of her, Captain Haley went back to the place where the accident had happened, and with bamboos and ropes dragged the bottom of the river in the hope of finding out upon what object the vessel had struck, he could find nothing. The probability is that the Delta had struck upon a "snag" and the point of the snag sticking in the rent made in the vessel's bottom the "snag" itself had been carried on for a short distance by the impetus of the vessel till it sank again in deeper water. Captain Haley had never heard of such an accident happening in that part of the river before. A "snagboat" is kept up by Government for the purpose of clearing away such obstructions, towards the maintenance of which a high toll is said to be paid by the Company. I do not think it would serve any good purpose to quote the evidence at any length. The trial occupied four full afternoons. The examination-in-chief was minute, and the cross-examination searching. The plaintiffs undertook to prove that after the goods, which had been saved from the wreck, were brought to Calcutta, the defendants had given jute bearing the plaintiffs' mark to other persons instead of to themselves; in this they failed.

"After a careful consideration of the whole evidence, I find, as a fact in the terms of s 151 of the Indian Contract Act, that the defendants did 'take as much care of the goods bailed to them as a man of ordinary prudence would under, similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed.'"

"Mr. Sale on behalf of the Company contended,—

"1st —On the authority of Kuweri Tulsi Das v. G. I. P. Railway Company (1 L. R., 3 Bom., 109), that the defendants were not liable, and that they were entitled to the protection of ss 151, 152 of the Indian Contract Act

"2nd —That the damages arose from an 'act of God,' and the carriers were not liable, because they had done 'all that was reasonably and practically possible to ensure the safety of the goods.' He cited Nugent v. Smith (L. R., 1 C. P. D. 423), per COCKBURN, C. J., p. 437. Agreeing with Mr. Sale as to the latter part of his proposition, I think the accident, though inevitable and a peril of [170] navigation, was not of that class which can be called an 'act of God.'

"3rd.—That under the Carriers Act III of 1865, s. 6, no 'special contract signed by the owner of the goods, &c.,' was necessary, unless it was sought thereby to limit the carriers' liability for his own negligence. Having regard to the preamble and to s. 8 of the Indian Carriers' Act, I consider this argument to be altogether unsustainable.

"4th.—He referred me to Act IV of 1879, s. 10, where no doubt the Legislature accepts the proposition that so far as Railways are concerned, the carriers' liability is to be measured by ss. 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act. But nothing in the Carriers' Act, 1865, now applies to carriers by Railway.

"On the first point, as to whether ss. 151 and 152 apply, notwithstanding the great authority of Sir MICHAEL WESTROPP, I entertain respectful doubts whether Kuvern Tulsidas v. G.I.P. Railway Company (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 109), was correctly decided, and I desire therefore to state my reasons for those doubts. The High Court, Calcutta, has never, so far as I am aware, been called upon to consider the question with reference to persons who are common carriers under the Carriers' Act III of 1865. Act III of 1865 is intitled 'an Act relating to the rights and liabilities of common carriers,' and in its preamble 'recites that it is expedient not only to enable common carriers to limit their liability for loss of, or damage to, property delivered to them to be carried, but also to declare their liability for loss of, or damage to, such property occasioned by the negligence or criminal acts of themselves, their servants, or agents.' The preamble recognises the fact that the law as it then existed, i.e., the common law imposed such a burden of liability upon common carriers that it was expedient to enable them to limit it. 'The preamble,' as WESTROPP, C. J., says (see page 116) 'betrays no intention on the part of the Legislature to fix on the common carrier the character of an insurer against all risks, except the act of God or the Queen's enemies.' Precisely so—that was the liability which the common law imposed upon the common [171] carrier, and the first object of the Carriers' Act was not to fix such a liability upon the carrier, but to enable him to free himself from the liability which the common law had already fixed upon him. Section 6 of the Act points out the mode by which the common carrier to whom that section applies (the defendants in the present case), may limit his liability, viz., he 'may, by special contract, signed by the owner of such property so delivered as aforesaid, or by some person duly authorized on behalf of such owner limit his liability in respect of the same.' If the carrier neglects, or does not choose, to adopt the means pointed out by the Legislature, by which he may limit his liability, then by necessary implication the liability which the common law imposes on him shall continue unlimited. I apprehend that the maxim 'Expressio unius est exclusio alterius' would apply. By this way, and no other, may the common carrier limit the liability which the common law imposes on him. The defendants in the present case have neglected, or have not chosen, to follow the course pointed out by the Carriers' Act, and are, therefore, unless their position is altered or amended by the Indian Contract Act, insurers against all risks, except the acts of God or the Queen's enemies.

"At page 117 of the Report, WESTROPP, C. J., remarks 'The 6th section does not lay down what shall be the extent of the common carrier's liability if he do not limit it by special contract, but leaves that question to be dealt with by the common law.' If that liability has been varied by the Indian Contract Act, it is the common law and not the 6th section of Act III of 1865 which has been interfered with.' It is at this point I am unable to follow his Lordship's reasoning. I cannot help thinking he has stopped short at the very point where, if he had pursued the argument a little further, he would have been led to a different conclusion.

"At page 113 of the Report, WESTROPP, C. J., points out that the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) is, and purports to be, only a partial measure. Its preamble recites that 'it is expedient to define and amend certain parts of the law relating to contracts. Its first section repeals certain enactments specified in the schedule'—(of which Act III of 1865 is not one) but provides [172] that nothing contained in the Act 'shall affect the provisions of any Statute, Act, or Regulation not hereby expressly repealed.' I think it unnecessary to go further or quote the subsequent words of the section. If it can be shown that ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act 'affect' the unrepealed Act III of 1865 or any part of it, they are inapplicable to the present case.

"WESTROPP, C. J., (see page 117) admits that in the absence of a special contract limiting the carrier's liability, s. 6 of Act III of 1865 'leaves that question to be dealt with by the common law.' In defining the word 'bailment' it would be impossible to use other than general terms. Accordingly the definition of the word 'bailment' in the Contract Act is wide enough to cover a 'bailment' to a common carrier. The words 'in all cases of bailment' in s. 151 are also very wide. I apprehend, however, that those general terms must be read as qualified by the preamble and s. 1 of the Act, and 'all cases of bailment' mean all cases to which the Act applies. A general definition of the word bailment is one thing, liability in respect of a bailment is another and very different thing; and I can hardly think that a merely general definition of the word 'bailment' affords any ground for saying that the Legislature intended to substitute the Contract Act for the common law or to 'amend' that particular part of the law relating to contracts which, as regulating the liability of a special class of bailees, viz., common carriers for hire, in respect of a bailment, had already seven years before been made the subject of an Act, then (in 1872) and still in force. If it had been intended in the slightest degree to alter or amend the position in which the unrepealed Act III of 1865 had left the common carrier, the Legislature would, I believe, have expressly said so, and Act III of 1865 or some portion of it would, I should think, have been expressly repealed.

"I am confirmed in this view by the consideration that carriers are expressly referred to in s. 158 of the Contract Act, but these are gratuitous carriers. It must not be forgotten, however, that there may be carriers for reward, who are nevertheless not common carriers. To carriers for reward, who [173] are not common carriers, ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act have been held by the High Court, Calcutta, to apply, Mackillican, v. The Compagnie des Messageries Maritimes de France (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 227). But Act III of 1865 deals only with common carriers. All questions touching the liability of common carriers, such as are the defendants, have been, as it seems to me, purposely left outside the scope of the Indian Contract Act. Sections 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act, if they apply in a case like the present, reduce the common carriers' liability from that of an insurer against all risks except the acts of God or the Queen's enemies to what is no liability at all if he can only prove that he has taken 'as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality, and value as the goods bailed.' They do this without reference to any special contract signed by the owner of the goods' practically, as it seems to me, dispense with such a contract; practically, therefore, repeal so much of s. 6, Act III of 1865 as makes such a contract essential to reduce the common carriers' liability below that which the common law imposed on him, viz., that of an insurer against all risks, except the acts of God or the Queen's enemies. Under these circumstances I feel it, speaking for myself, impossible to say that ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act do not "affect" s. 6 of Act III of 1865. I cannot see how ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act can "interfere with" the common law without, the same time, "interfering with" or affecting the unrepealed enactment, s. 6 of the Carriers Act III of 1865. I cannot help thinking that in giving the defendants the benefit of protection under ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act, I become a law unto myself; I practically disobey one Act and practically repeal another.

*[Sec. 158:—Where, by the conditions of the bailment, the goods are to be kept or to be carried, or to have work done upon them by the bailee for the bailor, and the bailee is to receive no remuneration, the bailor shall repay to the bailee the necessary expenses incurred by him for the purpose of the bailment.]

Repayment by bailor of necessary expenses.

"Mr. Sale contented himself with very little more than a reference to the judgment in Kuverji Tussidas v. G. I. P. Railway Company (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 109). He made no attempt to dispel my doubts with regard to that decision. The one argument he did put before me with reference to a "special contract signed by the owner of the goods" afforded to my mind even stronger grounds than any I have yet [174] given, for saying that ss. 151 and 152 affect the unrepealed Indian Carriers Act, and are therefore inapplicable.

"He argued, and appeared to be serious in doing so, that no special contract was necessary unless it was sought thereby to limit the carriers' liability for his own or his servants' negligence. Mr. Sale must have felt it to be necessary at least to try in some way to reconcile ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act with s. 6 of the Carriers Act, or he would never have suggested such an argument. He must have felt that the one Act (if it applies) reduces the common carriers' common law liability to nothing at all (if his evidence is up to the mark) without requiring any special contract, while the other Act makes a special contract absolutely essential for that purpose. It would, as it seems to me, be impossible to give effect to Mr. Sale's argument without absolutely defeating another and perhaps the principal purpose of the Indian Carriers Act. That purpose is to declare their liability for loss of, or damage to, property occasioned by the negligence or criminal acts of themselves, their servants, or agents. Section 3 of the Indian Carriers Act enacts: 'Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained every common carrier shall be liable to the owner for loss of or damage to any property delivered to such carrier to be carried where such loss or damage shall have arisen from the negligence or criminal act of the carrier, or any of his agents or servants.' Any special contract containing a clause, exempting the carrier from liability for his own or his servant's negligence, would be to that extent absolutely void.

"The reason why the special contract signed by the owner of the goods was considered essential was probably this. It was thought right that owners of goods, before parting with their goods and their control over them, should have an opportunity of seeing, considering, and approving or rejecting the clauses by which a carrier might propose to exempt himself from any or all liability. The mere insertion of such clauses into a bill of lading to be handed to the owner after he had parted with his goods was to be no longer sufficient, but a contract exempting the carrier from liability for his own negligence would, as contrary to public policy, be absolutely void, and it is made so by the Indian [175] Carriers Act, s. 9 of which expressly relieves the plaintiff from the burden of showing that the carrier was negligent, and throws the burden of proof on the carrier to show he was not negligent.

"The next question is as to whether the accident from which the parties to this suit have both suffered can be said to have been an 'act of God.' It was a 'peril of navigation,' but not an 'act of God.' The defendants might, if they had chosen to do so, have freed themselves from liability by a special contract signed by the owners of the goods, as it is, they remain insurers against such an accident, notwithstanding they have done all they could reasonably have been expected to do to avert the consequences of the accident.

"In Nugent v. Smith (L. R., 1 C. P. D., 423), to which Mr. Sale referred, the damage arose from a storm at sea which was clearly an 'act of God.' COCKBURN, C.J., goes very fully into the question as to what amount of diligence is sufficient under such circumstances to free a carrier from liability, but I see nothing in the judgment to show that an accident, such as occurred in the present case, can be treated as an 'act of God.' The carrier cannot plead an 'act of God,' without showing that he has done his own duty to the utmost. I do not think that I need quote at any great length from the authorities. In story on Bailments (7th edition, 1863) s. 511 (page 458 of the edition before me), it is pointed out that striking on an unknown snag in the usual channel of a river has sometimes been thought an 'act of God'; and to excuse the carrier, although this doctrine has not always been received with satisfaction. See the long and learned note 6. See also Parsons on Contracts, 3rd edition, vol 1, pp. 634, 635, 636, note on pages 635 and 636 and the case of Smith v. Shepherd, referred to in Parson's note. Also MacLachlan on Shipping, 1st edition, p. 456, 2nd edition, 1875, p. 499, Abbott on Shipping, 11th edition, by Shee, 1867, pp. 337 and 338.

"It is impossible to say in the present case what the obstruction was which caused the accident, or how it got into the river. It may have been caused by a wood-cutter cutting down a tree and letting it fall into the stream, or it may have been caused by the stream undermining a tree and so bringing it [176] into the water. As MacLachlan points out if the operation of the spontaneous forces of nature or natural objects (such as a tree or a rock), has disposed them so that damage afterwards is occasioned thereby, yet, such damage is too remote to be excused by law as within the meaning of the phrase 'act of God'. Then he refers to Smith v. Shepherd, and the judgment of HEATH, J. The weight of authority shows that the 'act of God' which excuses a carrier must be a direct and violent act of nature. One can only guess at the cause of the accident in the present case, it is impossible to say that it was an 'act of God'.

"For the reasons I have given, my own opinion is that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment in this case, but out of deference for the opinion of the Bombay High Court in Kuvery Tulsiidas v. G. I. P. Railway Company (I L. R., 3 Bom., 109) as to the applicability of ss 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act, I give judgment for the defendant. This judgment is contingent on the opinion of the High Court as to whether or not, upon the facts of the case as they are found and stated, the judgment is correct in law."

The case then came up to the High Court before GARTH, C.J., and WILSON J., and the Court, considering the matter to be of great importance and considerable difficulty, referred the case to a Full Bench. The question referred was, whether the English or what other law relating to carriers prevailed in this country at the time of the passing of the Carriers Act (Act III of 1865), and whether the Bombay High Court were right [in the case of Kuvery Tulsiidas v. G. I. P. Railway Company (I L. R. 3 Bom., 109)] in deciding that whatever the law which prevailed in India was, that law is now contained and defined in the provisions regarding bailments in the Contract Act.

The Advocate-General (Mr Paul) for the plaintiffs submitted that the India General Company are common carriers. The case of E. I. Railway Company v. Jordan (4 B. L. R. O. C., 98) decided in 1869 that s. 11 of Act XVIII of 1854 was no sufficient cause for saying that the E. I. R. Company were not common carriers.

The preamble of Act III of 1865 shows that a class of persons known as common carriers were in existence at the time of the [177] passing of the Act. It is true the Bombay High Court have decided that the Contract Act repeals or controls Act III of 1865, but I submit that this is directly in contradiction to the preamble of the Contract Act. If the English law was not in force in the mofussil, the law of equity and good conscience applies. [GARTH, C.J.—Then comes the question whether, when we are administering the law of equity and good conscience, we are justified in importing any partial or special law, English or, otherwise, into India.] Where there is no other law, the lex fori must be applied. [GARTH, C.J.—Can you show us any authority for saying that before Act III of 1865 came into force the English law applied?] No. I cannot, but there must have been many cases unreported. Act III of 1865 would not have been called for, unless for the purpose of giving relief to the common carrier, and to give relief to the public, if the law of equity and good conscience were in force before the Act it would not have been necessary to have passed this remedial Act of 1865, except to prevent their liability, and if it had been intended to confine the Act to Calcutta, the Act would have said so.

In the Bombay case, one view of the law has been lost sight of, viz., that every Act stands by itself, unless it has been repealed, or the repeal can be implied. If two Acts are so opposed to each other, that one cannot stand; if the two can be read, so that the one does not necessarily repeal the other, the two may be read separately. The Contract Act does not necessarily apply to carriers at all, the sections relating to bailments are very wide. And also, where there is a special Act, Act 1865 which can apply, can it be said that the Contract Act repeals it?

A contract to carry goods from one place to another does not strictly come within s. 148 of the Contract Act, the word bailment can cover a case of conveying by land or water. If the Bombay case is right, a merchant and a shipowner occupy the position of bailor and bailee. A contract of affreightment cannot be said to be a bailment. The words of s. 148 are not sufficiently extensive to include a fifth class of bailments.

Section 158 has not been sufficiently prominently brought forward in the Chief Justice's judgment in the Bombay case. As regards s. 10 of Act IV of 1879, the Legislature evidently were [178] misled, and made the sections there mentioned applicable to a certain subject. Section 10 assumes that some sort of liability attaches to a carrier by rail. I say the Legislature have simply passed the section on the Bombay case, without waiting to see whether the decision would be questioned.

The case of Mollwo March & Co. v. The Court of Wards (L. R. 1 A. Sup. Vol. 86, 10 B. L. R., 312) lays down that in the absence of any law or established custom existing in India, in certain cases the law of England is to be resorted to for principles and rules to guide the Court. Pooley v. Driver (L. R., 5 Ch. D., 460, 484) is an authority for showing, that where an existing law is different from what the Legislature supposes it to be, implication arising from Statutes cannot be followed.

Mr. Phillips for the Defendants.—As regards the question, whether the Contract Act applies to carriers and to carriers for hire there can be no doubt all the early sections deal with both, and it is not necessary that the different classes should be mentioned in the previous sections, and perhaps not necessary to mention them in s. 158. [GARTH, C.J.—I think we ought to see, whether carriers were not bound in India by common law duty before the Contract Act.] Custom or duty would not, I think, apply in any other place than Calcutta, if there, the custom of the realm did not extend to India, there is no reason to suppose that it has been extended, there is no authority for saying that the duty of common carriers in India is based on the custom of the realm.

As regards the case of The E. I. Railway Co. v. Jordan (4 B. L. R. O. C., 98) there is no reference to the Carriers Act in it, the argument is not reported, and there is nothing to show what was their liability, and nothing to show that the Chief Justice was referring to the ordinary English liability of common carriers.

In the Bombay case, the Chief Justice assumes that the common law liability was in force before the Act, and that the carrier had an insurance liability, but he does not say it was a Statutory liability. The Contract Act, I submit, does apply to carriers and to carriers for hire. It speaks of "goods to be carried" under the words bailment, s. 148. Contracts of carriage would include [179] hired carriers rather than gratuitous carriers, and s. 151 puts gratuitous and hired carriers on the same footing.

The case of Mackillican v. Compagnie des Messageries Maritimes de France (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 227) shows that the Contract Act applies to hired carriers; there is nothing on the face of the section to show that common carriers are not also included. At p. 230 of the report, PONTIFEX, J., treats the case as falling within s. 151 of the Contract Act. I submit the Bombay case is correct. Gratuitous carriers are included in s. 158, and in s. 168 "a finder of goods is a gratuitous bailee," a fortiori is the hired carrier also included.

It seems clear, therefore, that both sorts of carriers are included in the Act, nor are they excluded by the saving section.

The Bombay case is correct, every Act of the Legislature presupposes the common law, and the Carriers Act presupposes the common law with regard to carriers, and to alter the common law does not affect any Statute.

Before the plaintiffs can succeed, they must make out that the Carriers Act has introduced this liability. Whatever the liability of carriers might have been, the Legislature was content to leave them with that liability; and in making that Act there is no intention to fix upon the common carrier any liability. There is nothing in the Act which declares the liability of a common carrier.

• Inasmuch as the liability existed before the Act, the repeal of the Act would not alter the general liability. It is therefore absurd to say that the provisions of the Contract Act affect the Act.

My contention therefore is (1) that liability not being declared, defined or imposed by the Act, it is not affected by the repeal of the Act, (2) that the section which makes the carrier liable for negligence does not define his liability.

The Carriers Act limits the liability of a common carrier, and by ss. 3 and 8 he is liable for the scheduled goods only in cases of negligence or criminal acts. By s. 6 he cannot limit his liability for other goods by notice, but he may by a special contract. The Contract Act, if it applies, merely renders such special contract, which he may insist upon, unnecessary. A common carrier could by agreement limit his liability, and he formerly sought to do so by notice, which in certain cases was held to [180] constitute such an agreement. The Carriers Act forbade such limitation by notice, and the Contract Act substituted the law for a special contract, and thus amends and assimilates to the general law, the law relating to common carriers. So far as this, however, affects Act III of 1865, it cannot operate under s. 1 of the Contract Act; does it then "affect" the provisions of Act III of 1865 to apply ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act to the Carriers Act? No express provision of the Carriers Act is repealed by ss. 151 and 152, for the Carriers Act in its only positive provision, s. 8, renders the common carriers liable notwithstanding any limitation for negligence. Then is it a "provision" of the Act (s. 1,

* [Sec. 8 :—Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, every common carrier shall be liable to the owner for loss of or damage to any property delivered to such carrier to be carried where such loss or damage shall have arisen from the negligence or criminal act of the carrier or any of his agents or servants.]

Common carrier liable for loss or damage caused by neglect or fraud of himself or his agent.

Contract Act) that carriers shall be liable for more? On the contrary, the object of the Act is to enable them to fix their liability as a liability for negligence and criminal acts only.

That is the only liability fixed upon them by the provisions of the Act. So also by the Contract Act. If ss. 151 and 152 affected any of "the provisions" of Act III of 1865, so far as they affect such provisions, the provisions of the Carriers Act prevail. There is, however, no "provision" of the Act which cannot stand, and have the operation it was intended to have, along with ss. 151 and 152. This is obviously true of s. 3 taken with s. 8. These sections say, a common carrier shall be liable only for negligence and criminal acts as regards the scheduled goods; the Contract Act says the same, the Contract Act gives effect to ss. 3 and 8.

By giving effect to ss. 3 and 8, it renders them unnecessary, but it does not do this by "affecting," but by "effecting" their provisions. Section 6 (cl. 1) cannot be affected unless effect were given to a notice, and then such "effect" would be precluded by s. 1 of the Contract Act. Clause 2 of s. 6 says, when taken with s. 8, that a common carrier may reduce his liability, whatever it is, to that for negligence or criminal acts by a special contract. Does the Contract Act affect this? And how? Not by interfering with the carrier's powers of reducing his liability by contract, but by fixing his liability at that to which the carrier was enabled to reduce it. The intention of the Act was that every common carrier, who desired, should be liable only for negligence, since he was not obliged to carry the goods on any other terms.

[181] The Contract Act does not impose a loss liability, but only assumes that every common carrier would so desire (all other bailees being also assumed so to desire), and gives effect to the desire. But it does not force the parties to adopt only this liability, for by s. 152 the bailee may, by special contract, be made liable for more. In fact, the Contract Act renders a special contract necessary to impose instead of to avoid liability for more than negligence.

Section 7 of the Carriers Act is rendered unnecessary, but it is not otherwise affected. Does "affect" mean that any provision of the Contract Act giving effect and extension to the provisions of the Carriers Act is not to operate?

I submit that as the Contract Act does not lower the liability under the Carriers Act, we can only be liable as insurers, and to decide against me, the Court must find that there is a common law liability imposed on carriers in this country.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) in reply.

The Opinions of the Full Bench were as follow. --

Garth, C.J.— Whatever doubts may have arisen upon the subject of this reference in consequence of recent legislation, it is at least satisfactory that we are all now agreed upon one very material point, namely, that at the time of the passing of the Indian Carriers Act in 1865, the English law relating to common carriers was in force in this country. My brother WILSON and myself, when we referred this case, had some doubt about that point, but, so far as I am concerned, I am glad to say that my doubts have been entirely removed.

It is obvious that the Carriers Act itself assumes two things. first, that there were a class of persons here at that time, who were recognized as common carriers; and, secondly, that there was some special law, which regulated the duties and responsibilities of those persons. It is difficult to imagine what that law could have been, unless it were the English common law; and it seems only reasonable to suppose that, as common carriers were introduced into India by the English, and under English rule, the law by which their duties were regulated was the English law applicable to that class of persons

[182] That being so, the Carriers Act of 1865 merely introduced certain modifications of that law, and in some respects of the law which had been previously enacted in England by the Statute 11, Geo. 4th and 1, Wm. 4th, c. 68

The plaintiffs, therefore, in this case are entitled to succeed, if the law of common carriers has not been changed by the Indian Contract Act.

It is contended by the defendants that this change has taken place, and in support of their contention they rely upon the judgment of the Bombay High Court in the case of Kuterp Tulsudas v. The G. I. P. Railway Company (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 109)

Now, in order to come to a proper understanding of this question, we must first consider what the duties and responsibilities of common carriers were by the law of England. We are dealing now with common carriers of goods. A carrier of goods was bound by the English law to receive all goods brought to him for carriage, provided he had conveniences to carry them, and the employer was ready to pay any reasonable reward for the conveyance—see Pickford v. The Grand Junction Railway Company (8 M. & W., 373), Johnson v. The Midland Railway Company (4 Ex., 367). He was also bound to carry the goods within a reasonable time, and to insure their safety during the carriage, and until delivery to the consignee, the act of God and the Queen's enemies only excepted. And it is important to note, that this duty was imposed upon him irrespective of any contract. It was imposed upon him by the custom of the realm, for the benefit of the public by reason of the important trust which he undertook. [See the observations of Lord HOLT in Coggs v. Bernard (1 Smith's L. C., 189, 6th edn., 199, 8th edn.)]

Common carriers are largely intrusted with the property of the public. They are intrusted with it under circumstances which make a breach of the trust a very easy matter, and the detection of the breach by the owner of the goods often extremely difficult. They are paid a fair compensation for the carriage proportionate to the risks which they run, and the liability which they incur.

[183] The policy of the law, therefore, is no more than just which makes common carriers under ordinary circumstances insurers of the goods they carry.

But then it is said that the Indian Contract Act has changed this rule of the common law, and has reduced the liability of a common carrier to that of a mere gratuitous bailee; and, moreover, if the defendants are right, the law, as it stands at present, renders it practically impossible, in the great majority of cases, to fix a common carrier with liability. It is true, that by s. 9 of the Carriers Act, and by s. 13 of the Railways Act of 1879, a plaintiff, who sues a carrier for the loss of goods, is not bound, in the first instance, to prove how their loss was caused, but nothing is more easy than for the carrier to call his servants as witnesses, and to prove prima facie that the goods were stowed and protected in the usual way, and so to throw upon the plaintiff the onus of proving some negligence or criminality on the part of the carrier or his servants.

Take the ordinary case of goods sent from Calcutta to Bombay, or from Delhi to Calcutta, and consider how almost impossible it would be, in the generality of cases, for the plaintiff to bring negligence or criminality home to the carrier, although the goods sent may not be forthcoming, and no explanation may be offered as to how the loss occurred

It therefore seems, to say the least of it, unreasonable that the liability of common carriers should have been reduced as against the public from a maximum to a minimum, without any proportionate reduction being made in the rates which they charge, or any other corresponding advantage to the public whose goods they carry

It is also a remarkable fact, which it seems to me impossible to disregard, that, although the Indian Contract Act has now been in force upwards of ten years, the public and the Courts of law in this province, have, so far as I am aware, always acted on the supposition that the law in this respect has not been changed by the Contract Act

This point is also noticed (though apparently little or no weight was attached to it) in the judgment of Sir MICHAEL WESTROPP in the Bombay case. He observes that one of the reasons for [184] the judgment of the lower Court was that, although the Contract Act had then been in force in Bombay for six years, no judicial authority had been cited to show that s. 152 of that Act applied to carriers for reward, and that, although many actions had been tried in the Court of Small Causes, against the G. I. P. Railway Company, such a defence had never been raised in any of those actions.

There is also no doubt that, during the last ten years, similar actions have been constantly tried in this presidency, and, so far as I am aware, this is the first occasion on which the point now before us has been raised

The view which the Courts of law and the public, and even carriers themselves, have taken of the Act for many years after it has become law, is surely a circumstance worthy of our consideration, where the intention of the Contract Act is, to say the least of it, doubtful

Let us now examine the Contract Act itself, and see whether it really did effect this important change in the law

In the first place, as observed by Sir MICHAEL WESTROPP, the Act purports to be only a partial measure. The preamble recites "that it is expedient to define and amend certain parts of the law relating to contracts", and the first section provides "that nothing contained in the Act shall affect the provisions of any Statute, Act or Regulation, not thereby expressly repealed, nor any usage or custom of trade, nor any incident of any contract not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act."

Now here at once a question arises, which, as it seems to me, was disposed of without sufficient consideration in the Bombay case

The learned Chief Justice admits, as I understand him, that the law relating to common carriers is a "custom of trade" within the meaning of this section, but he considers that as this customary law is inconsistent with the general rule laid down in s. 152 of the Act, it is not within the saving clause of the section.

Now here I think he is in error; and it seems to me that this clause, when it is rightly understood, affords a solution of the question which we have now to decide.

[185] If the Bombay Court is right, any contract or usage of trade which is inconsistent with the general law laid down by the Contract Act is invalid. Now it seems to me impossible to suppose that this was intended. The Act only lays down certain general rules, which, in the absence of any special contract or usage to the contrary, are binding on contracting parties. But it could never have been intended to restrain free liberty of contract as between man and man, or to invalidate usages or customs which may prevail in any particular trade or business. These customs and usages have only the effect of introducing special terms into all contracts or dealings in any particular trade, their very object is generally to modify or control the general law; and the Contract Act, in my opinion, could never have intended to invalidate all customs or usages which are not in accordance with the general rules which it enacts, or to prevent private persons from entering into contracts which are inconsistent with those rules.

For example, the Act lays down rules with regard to the delivery of goods, re-sale, lien, and appropriation of payments. But these rules are only binding in the absence of any agreement to the contrary; and if either particular persons, or persons engaged in any particular trade, choose to contract with one another upon terms inconsistent with those rules, the Contract Act could never have intended to prevent their doing so. It is not necessary for our present purpose to define with precision the meaning of the words "inconsistent with the provisions of this Act." But my present impression is, that they mean no more than this, that no general usage or custom of trade, that is, no usage or custom pervading all trades, inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, shall be valid. Any general usage of that kind would of course be equivalent to a general law, and no general law or usage in contravention of the general law laid down by the Act would be consistent with the validity of the Act itself.

It then remains to be considered, whether the Bombay High Court was right in considering that the custom, which regulates the duties of common carriers, is "a custom of trade." In my opinion they were. I think that in common parlance, and in the [186] more extended sense of the expression, the word "trade" undoubtedly includes the business of a common carrier.

I think, therefore, that the custom of common carriers, upon which the plaintiff relies, has not been affected by the provisions of the Contract Act.

It seems to me moreover that, as that Act was only a partial measure, and as its general scope and object was to codify, so far as it goes, the existing law of contracts, the Legislature could never have intended to effect such a material change of the law to the disadvantage of the public, and in favour of common carriers, without some special mention of, or reference to, that intention.

Besides which, it must be borne in mind, that the law and liabilities of common carriers are, as I said before, founded on custom, irrespective of contract. A common carrier is, and always has been, liable to be sued for any breach of this common law duty in an action of tort; and therefore, without some special provision relieving them from this duty, it seems to me that an Act which professes to codify the law of contracts, and that only partially, cannot be considered as repealing the law relating to the duties of common carriers.

The Bombay High Court, while fully admitting that the English law upon this subject prevails in the Indian mofussil, seems to have lost sight of the fact that this law is founded upon a common law duty apart from contract.

It is true that when the employment of a common carrier has commenced, the law implies a contract on his part to perform the duty imposed upon him; and consequently he is liable to be sued in an action either of tort or contract, according to the convenience or advantage of the plaintiff in each suit. (see Bullen and Leake on Pleading, pp. 101 and 243).

For these reasons I am of opinion that common carriers are not relieved by the Contract Act from their common law liability; and it only remains now to notice s. 10 of the Indian Railways Act, 1879, on which the defendants strongly rely. That section enacts that "any agreement purporting to limit the obligation imposed on a carrier by railway by ss. 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, in the case of loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to property, shall be void unless it is signed [187] by the party sending it, and is in a form approved by the Government."

From this section we are asked to infer that the Legislature has put a construction upon ss. 152 and 161 of the Contract Act, which relieves all carriers in India from any common law liability.

But if, in our opinion, the Contract Act was not intended to have that effect, but, on the contrary, was intended to leave the liability of common carriers as it was before the Act passed, the fact that the Railways Act several years afterwards alludes to ss. 152 and 161 as applying to carriers by railway, is not, I think, sufficient to justify us in giving to the Contract Act a construction which we disapprove, and which we believe to be contrary to its meaning.

Besides, it is really difficult to say what the Legislature did intend by s. 10 of the Railways Act. Very possibly it may have taken for granted that the view of the Bombay Court was right, or it may have supposed that carriers by railway were not common carriers.

It is certainly a very remarkable thing that, in the definition of common carriers in the Carriers Act of 1865, the Government, for some reason or other, are excluded from that category. It is difficult to conceive why, if carriers by railway are ordinarily common carriers, the Government, if they engage in that business, are not to be subject to the same laws and liabilities as other carriers. If the Government engage in any trade for purposes of profit, there would seem no good reason why they should be exempt from duties and liabilities as against the public, by which private persons engaged in that trade are bound, and yet the exclusion of the Government from the definition of common carriers in the Carriers Act would seem to mean one of two things,—either that they were not to be subject to the duties or liabilities of common carriers, or that, being common carriers, they were not to share in the benefit conferred by that Act.

Considering the large share which the Government have now appropriated to themselves in the carrying trade and business of this country, it is certainly very desirable that their position as against the public should be satisfactorily defined. Meanwhile, [188] I think, we ought to hold that the Contract Act has not relieved common carriers from their common law liability. As my learned brothers are also of this opinion, the plaintiffs will be entitled to recover, and they will also have their costs of this reference.

Mitter, J.—This was a suit for the recovery of Rs. 296, being the value of 72 drums of jute shipped by the plaintiffs on board the defendants' flat Delta at Kaligunge for being carried to Calcutta. There is no question that the defendants are common carriers under the Indian Carriers Act III of 1865. The learned Judge in the Court below has found that the drums of jute in question were entrusted by the plaintiffs to the defendants for carriage, and that they were not duly delivered to the former. He further finds that the goods in question were lost in the course of their carriage from Kaligunge to Calcutta, and that this loss was not occasioned by the act of God or the Queen's enemies. He has also found that the defendants took as much care of the goods bailed to them as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed

Upon these facts found by him, the learned Judge in the Court below thinks that the defendants are liable for the loss under the English common law rule under which common carriers are liable as insurers of goods against all risks, except the act of God or the Queen's enemies. The question referred to us is, whether the aforesaid English common law rule, being now in force in this country, will regulate the liability of the defendants in this case

I am of opinion that this question should be answered in the affirmative.

It seems to me that the English common law defining the duties and responsibilities of common carriers was in force in this country at the time when the Indian Carriers Act III of 1865 was passed. The decision of Sir BARNES PEACOCK, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J., in the East India Railway Company v. Jordan (I. L. R., O. C., 98) proceeds upon the ground that the English common law is applicable to common carriers in this country. It is also clear from the preamble of the Indian Carriers Act III of [189] 1865 that the Legislature assumed that the English common law relating to common carriers was then in force in this country. Then, again, the business of a common carrier as a public employment was unknown in this country, it was introduced first here by persons who were governed by the English law. Under these circumstances it is reasonable to hold that the duties and responsibilities of persons carrying on that business in this country should be regulated by the English common law. In Molhuo March and Company v. The Court of Wards (L. R. I. A. Sup., Vol. 86, 10 B. L. R., 312) a question arose whether the English law of partnership was applicable to partnership transactions in India before the Indian Contract Act was passed. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that "in the absence of any law or well-established custom existing in India on the subject, English law may properly be resorted to in mercantile affairs for principles and rules to guide the Courts in that country to a right decision." These observations fully warrant us in holding that the English common law, so far as it was not modified by any Indian enactment, regulates the duties and responsibilities of a common carrier in this country.

The rule of the English common law, which is applicable to the facts of this case beyond all dispute, is that a common carrier is liable for all losses of goods entrusted to him for carriage, except those occasioned by the act of God or the Queen's enemies. The question is, whether this rule of law has been modified by any Indian enactment. It has been contended on behalf of the defendants that the rule in question is no longer in force in India, as it has been replaced by the provisions of ss. 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act, IX of 1872. And in support of this contention the decision of the Bombay High Court in Kuvern Tulsiidas v. G. I. P. Railway Company (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 109) has been strongly relied upon. The decision cited fully supports this contention, but with due deference to the learned Judges who decided that case, it appears to me that the contention put forward on behalf of the defendants is not correct.

The learned Judges who decided that case appear to me to [190] have not given full effect to that part of s. 1 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) which provides that nothing contained in it "shall affect any usage or custom of trade, nor any incident of any contract not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act." With reference to this provision of the Contract Act, WESTROPP, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court in the case cited, says: "The provisions of its first section," i.e., the first section of the Indian Contract Act, "that nothing contained in the Act 'shall affect any usage or custom of trade or incident, of any contract not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act,' does not aid us in arriving at a solution of the question submitted to this Court, inasmuch as if the 152nd section of the Act is applicable to common carriers for hire, the Act is in that respect inconsistent with the rule or usage of common law relied upon by the Court of Small Causes as the basis of its opinion." Then the learned Chief Justice simply cites the rule in question, and the provisions of ss. 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act, without showing in what respect the rule of the English common law is inconsistent with the 152nd section of the Indian Contract Act.

But it seems to me that a careful consideration of the provisions of ss 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act, and of the rule of the English common law in question, shows that they are not inconsistent with one another. The 151st section of the Indian Contract Act is as follows:—"In all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed." The 152nd section enacts: "That the bailee, in the absence of any special contract, is not responsible for the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the thing bailed if he has taken the amount of care of it described in s 151." Now I shall cite the rule of the English common law regulating the responsibility of a common carrier as stated by COTTON, L. J., in Beigheim v. The Great Eastern Railway Company (L. R. 3 C. P. D., 221): "The liability of a common carrier," says he, "as compared with that of other bailees, is exceptional. He is answerable for the loss of [191] goods entrusted to him as such, though the loss be in no way caused by any default on his part. He is considered as having contracted to insure the safe delivery of, that is to say, as having contracted to carry and deliver safely and securely (the act of God and of the enemies of the Queen alone excepted) the goods of which he, as common carrier, is bailee." Now this responsibility of a common carrier is an incident of his contract which the law implies as having been agreed to by him when he accepts goods delivered to him for carriage. Is such an incident of the contract inconsistent with the provisions of the 152nd section of the Indian Contract Act? It seems to me that it is not, because any carrier (whether he is a common carrier or not) under the provisions of the 152nd section, would incur the same responsibility if he binds himself by a special contract to that effect. In the case of a common carrier, the law implies that he contracts to undertake the insurance liability, the act of God and of the Queen's enemies alone being excepted. The rule of English law regulating the responsibility of a common carrier is therefore not inconsistent with the provisions of the 152nd section, or any other section of the Indian Contract Act. That rule consequently remains unaffected by the Contract Act as provided in its first section.

It appears from the judgment of the learned Judge in the Court below that the learned counsel who appeared for the defendants in support of his contention relied upon s. 10 of the Indian Railway Act IV of 1879. He contended, on the strength of that section, that the responsibility of a carrier by a Railway, who is undoubtedly a common carrier, is now regulated by ss. 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act, and not by the rule of the English common law on the subject. He then argued that if the rule of the English law was not in force as regards a carrier by Railway, it would be anomalous to hold that it was in force as regards any other kind of common carrier. It seems to me that this argument is based upon a misconception of the provisions of s. 10 of the Indian Railways Act, 1879. That section enacts: "Every agreement purporting to limit the obligation or responsibility imposed on a carrier by Railway by the Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss. 151 and 161 in the case of loss, [192] destruction or deterioration of or damage to property shall, in so far as it purports to limit such obligation or responsibility, be void, unless (a) it is in writing signed by, or on behalf of, the person sending or delivering such property, and (b) is otherwise in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council."

This section does not say that the provisions of s. 151 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, shall be the measure of the responsibility of a carrier by a Railway. It simply provides that if he intends to reduce it below that provided in s. 151 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), he must comply with the provisions of clauses (a) and (b) of s. 10 of the Indian Railways Act, 1879. The s. 10 does not declare what shall be the measure of his liability, but lays down the particular mode in which alone he can reduce it below a certain degree. The section in question does not say that in the absence of the special contract referred to therein, that liability shall not be regulated by the rule of the English common law on the subject. Section 10 of the Indian Railways Act, 1879, is analogous to s. 6 of the Indian Carriers Act, 1865, which by s. 2 of the Act does not apply to carriers by Railway. The object of both sections is not to declare what shall be the carriers' liability, but to provide for the mode in which alone he can limit that liability, whatever it may be, according to the law in force.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the rule of the English common law regulating the responsibility of a common carrier is still in force in this country, and that, therefore, the opinion expressed by the learned Judge in the Court below is correct.

Prinsep, J.—I agree in holding that the law relating to carriers in India is not affected by the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872).

It is unusual to refer to the objects and reasons given for introducing a Bill into the Legislative Council, for they can safely be referred to only as expressing the motives which were present to the particular member of that Council, and experience has abundantly shown us that in the course of legislation the objects and reasons so stated are altogether lost sight of or abandoned, different arguments are put forward to justify legislative action, and the law ultimately passed bears only a slight resemblance to the Bill on which it professes to be based. But in the present case the objects and reasons for introducing [193] the Bill which subsequently became the Indian Contract Act so far as they relate to the law regarding carriers may safely be referred to as they are altogether in accordance with, and corroborated by, proceedings in the Legislative Council immediately after the passing of the Indian Contract Act.

In introducing the Bill which subsequently became the Indian Contract Act, 1872, Mr. FitzJames Stephen said: "We have omitted all reference to special branches of the law of Contract which at present are regulated either by express legislation or recognised custom, e.g., the law of shipping, of bills of exchange, insurance, master and servant, carriers, etc. This omission renders the present Bill so far incomplete: but we consider this incompleteness a less evil than the inconvenience of dealing with so many varied and intricate subjects in a single enactment. It will be easy at a future period, when the present Bill has been for a time in operation, and its results have been practically tested, to deal with all or any of the subjects above referred to, and to add them as a new chapter to the Act. With this view, leave has already been asked to introduce a Bill to amend and consolidate the law relating to carriers, and it would no doubt be desirable that the law of master and servant should at an early date be put into a clearer form than that in which it is at present. No sufficient information has at present been collected to render legislation on this subject safe."

The proceedings of the Legislative Council, as reported in the supplement to the Gazette of India, 1872, page 569, show that immediately on the passing of the Indian Contract Act, and at the very same sitting of the Council, Mr. FitzJames Stephen obtained leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law relating to carriers. For some reason or other (probably because Mr. Stephen left India a few days later) no further proceedings have been taken in this direction, but to my mind, quite independently of the proper construction to be put on s. 1 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), these facts afford ample indication of the intention of the Legislature, indeed, they seem to me to negative any inferences to the contrary from the terms of the Railways Act of 1879.

[194] Tottenham, J.—After the several concurrent judgments which have just been delivered in this case, it is unnecessary that I, having arrived at the same conclusion as therein expressed, should say more than that I entirely agree in that conclusion.

McDonell, J.—I also concur in that conclusion.

[I. CONTRACT ACT, 1872—BAILMENT SECTIONS—COMMON CARRIERS—

Bench of Magistrates—Municipal offence—Salaried Officer of Municipality, Disqualification of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act of 1882), s. 555.

Notwithstanding anything contained in s. 555 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a conviction for an offence against any municipal law or regulation, had before a Bench of Magistrates which includes a salaried officer of the Municipality is bad Baboo Dwarkanath Chukkerbutty for the Petitioner.Baboo Ram Churn Mitter for the Municipality.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are material for the purposes of this report, appear from the Judgment of Field, J.—In this case the accused has been convicted for failing to remove or alter the spouts of his house which discharge water on the high road, and the conviction has been bad as for a breach of Bye-law No. 19 of the Suburban Municipality made under the provisions of s. 313, Beng. Act V of 1876.

The first point raised before us is that the conviction is bad, because it was had before a Bench of Magistrates consisting, amongst other's, of Mr. Sterndale, the Vice-Chairman and a salaried officer of the Municipality. We think that this objection is a sound one, anything contained in s. 555[†] of the present Code [195] of Criminal Procedure notwithstanding. That section enacts "that no Judge or Magistrate shall, except with the permission of the Court to which an appeal lies from his Court, try any case to, or in which he is a party or personally interested," and then there is an exception as follows:—"A Judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed to be a party or personally interested within the meaning of this section to or in any case, merely because he is a Municipal Commissioner." It appears to me that the object of this exception was to remove a disqualification, which existed according to the law as laid down in a case decided by this Court before the passing of the present Code of Criminal Procedure, a disqualification that is which, to a gentleman who, being merely a Municipal Commissioner, and having no further interest in the Case in which judge or Magistrate is personally interested.

Explanation.—A judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed to be a party or personally interested, within the meaning of this section, to or in any case, merely because he is a Municipal Commissioner.]

subject-matter of the case, was reasonably thought to be unnecessary in the interests of justice. But we think that the present case is altogether different. A gentleman who, without remuneration, is merely discharging a public and honorary office, and who has no personal interest in the proceedings of the Corporation or Municipality, may well be supposed to be free from that bias which the jealousy of the law presumes in other persons more immediately interested. Such immediate and disqualifying interest does, we think, exist in the case of a gentleman whose time and services are in consideration of a salary given to carry on the work of a Municipal Corporation. The jealousy of the law must presume that such a person, however upright and honourable be his character, is disqualified from taking part in judicial proceedings in which the Municipality is ipso facto the prosecutor. (The rest of the judgment is not material for the purposes of this report).

" Mitter, J.—I entirely concur in the judgment just delivered. I desire only to add, with reference to the first point, that it seems to me that the Legislature in s. 555 has, by implication, upheld the principle upon which the case of Wood v. Municipality of Calcutta (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 891) was decided. In the explanation in s. 555, it is simply laid down that 'a Judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed to be a party or personally interested within the meaning of this section, to or in any case, [196] merely because he is a Municipal Commissioner.' Having that case before them the Legislature simply limited the explanation to the disqualification of a Commissioner in a case in which the Municipality or Corporation may be interested; they did not include in the explanation the case of a salaried officer of a Municipality or Corporation, and the principle on which the case of Wood v. The Municipality of Calcutta (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 891) was decided, was that a salaried officer of the Municipality is incompetent to sit as a Judge in a case in which that Municipality is interested

*Limitation Act (XIV of 1859), s. 22—Registration Act (XX of 1866), s. 53—“Decree” made upon a registered obligation—Summary decision—
Petition to postpone sale in execution of decree—Estoppel—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115.*

A summary decision means a decision arrived at by a summary proceeding; and a “decree,” made under s. 53 of Act XX of 1866, is a summary decision. Section 20 of Act XIV of 1859 was intended to apply to decisions, whether called judgments, decrees, or orders, made in a regular suit, and s. 22 of the same Act was intended to apply to all other decisions.

A decree made in 1867 under s. 53 of Act XX of 1866, held to be subject, as regards its execution, to the law of limitation provided in Act XIV of 1859, s. 22.

To petition for the postponement of a sale in execution of decree is not an intentional causing and permitting the decree-holder to believe that the judgment-debtor admits that the decree can be legally executed and occasions no estoppel within the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, s. 115.* The judgment-debtor can, notwithstanding his having filed such a petition, maintain that execution is barred by lapse of time.

APPEAL from a decree (27th November 1880), of the High Court, reversing an order (15th July 1880) of the Subordinate Judge of the Moorshedabad district.

[197] This appeal arose out of a petition under s. 239† of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877, filed by the respondent on the 3rd May 1880 in the Court of

*Sec 115 —When one person has, by his declaration, act, or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative to deny the truth of that thing.]

†[Sec 239 —The Court of which a decree has been sent for execution under this chapter shall, upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such decree, for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment-debtor to apply to the court by which the decree was made, or to any Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay the execution, or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such Court of First Instance or appellate Court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution had been made thereto ;

and in case the property or person of the judgment-debtor has been seized under an execution, the Court which issued the execution may order the restitution or discharge of such property or person pending the result of the application for such order.]

the Subordinate Judge of the Moorshedabad District objecting to the execution of a "decree" made by the Principal Sudder Amin of that district on the 9th July 1867 for Rs. 10,494, principal and interest, upon a registered obligation, dated 25th Cheyt 1273 (6th April 1867), and executed by Set Gopal Chand in favour of Dhunput Singh.

This "decree" had been made under s. 53 of Act XX of 1866, and the question on this appeal was, whether or not execution of it was barred by limitation.

Set Gopal Chand died shortly after the decree was made, leaving his infant son, Gopi Chand, his heir, of whom Dhunput Singh was appointed guardian. The latter, on the 20th July 1870, made the first application for execution, and the order thereon, dated 3rd August 1870, had reference to his position as guardian, and was followed by the striking off of the case for default on the 29th August 1870. Dhunput Singh having afterwards transferred his interest in this decree to his wife, Mina Konwari, the present appellant, her name was substituted for his in the execution file on the 23rd July 1873, and after that date proceedings were taken in the Nuddea District, to which a certificate was sent for the execution of this decree, apparently with reference to the situation of the judgment-debtor's property in Nuddea.

Struck off in default in the Nuddea District Court on the 4th August 1876, the case was restored to the file on the 25th January 1878, and attachment followed. The minor Gopi Chand having died about November 1878, Dhunput Singh was discharged from his office of guardian, and the respondent, Juggat Setani, as the mother of Set Gopal Chand, succeeded to the estate of her childless grandson.

The Nuddea Court having fixed the 8th December 1878 for the sale under the attachment, a petition by the respondent to stay it for two months was filed on that day. This was granted, and a further stay of one month was ordered by consent on the 9th February 1880. The respondent, before the expiration of this last period, filed a petition, alleging that nothing was due under the decree, and offering to bring evidence in support of [198] this statement. The Nuddea Court rejected this petition as "not preferred within a reasonable time before the Court which had passed the decree." The 8th May 1880 was fixed for the sale, and the respondent on the 3rd of that month filed the present petition in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Moorshedabad, alleging, among other objections, that execution was barred by lapse of time. To these objections an answer was filed by Mina Konwari, and they were disallowed with costs on the 15th July 1880.

On appeal, the High Court (MCDONELL and BROUGHTON, JJ) reversed this decision. They were of opinion that Act IX of 1871 being applicable, it was not necessary to consider whether there had been proceedings to keep in force the decree of 9th July 1867, within the meaning of Act XIV of 1859, s. 20, as construed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Maharaja of Burdwan v. Bulram Singh (5 B. L. R., 611, 13 Moore's I. A., 479). The law of limitation to be applied they held to be that of Act IX of 1871, sch. II, art. 167.* They found that more than three years had elapsed between the date of the first application for execution and date of the next, between 10th July 1870 and 23rd July 1873. Thus the right to execute the decree of 1867 was, in their opinion, barred by time. This judgment was given before the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mungal Pershad Dicht v. Griyakant Lahiri (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 51, L. R., 8 I. A., 123).

On this appeal—

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doynne appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that execution of the "decree" of 9th July 1867 was not barred by lapse of time under s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859, which was the law applicable, the suit in which the decree of 9th July 1867 was made having been instituted before the date, viz, 1st April 1873, before which applications in all suits, including applications for execution of decree, were excluded from the operation of Act IX of 1871, see Mungal Pershad Dicht v. Griyakant Lahiri (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 51; L. R., 8 I. A., 123). Act XIV [199] of 1859 being applicable, that consideration arose which the High Court, in erroneously holding Act IX of 1871 to be applicable, excluded from the case. This, in effect, was that an actual bond fide contest was going on between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor during the time, or part of the time, which had been treated as running against the decree-holder. It was submitted that there was a pending proceeding within the meaning of s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859, and a step taken to enforce, or keep the decree of 1867 in force within three years preceding the application of 23rd July 1873. The application of 20th July 1870, followed by the orders of 3rd August 1870, and 29th August 1870, was a proceeding to keep the decree in force, within the terms of s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859, as explained in Maharaja of Burdwan v. Bulram Singh (5 B. L. R., 611, 13 Moore's I. A., 479). The application of 23rd July 1873 was therefore within time. Although proceedings to be sufficient to prevent time from running against the decree-holder must be really taken with intent to obtain the fruits of the decree—see Hiralall v. Badri Das (I. L. R.,

Description of application	Period of limitation	Time when period begins to run.
For the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court not provided for by No 169	Three years.	The date of the decree or order, or (where there has been an appeal) the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court, or (where there has been a review of judgment) the date of the decision passed on the review, or (where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made) the date of applying to the Court to enforce, or keep in force, the decree or order, or (where the notice next herein-after made has been issued) the date of issuing a notice under the Code of Civil Procedure section two hundred and sixteen, or (where the application is to enforce payment of an instalment which the decree directs to be paid at a specified date) the date so specified.]

2 All., 792),—yet it did not follow that such proceedings need be successful; and, on the contrary, even if abortive, they might be treated as bonâ fide, within the meaning of Act XIV of 1859, s. 20.

Moreover, in this case when, on the 23rd July 1873, the appellant made a renewed application for execution in the Moorshedabad Court, there was a judicial determination that there should be further proceedings; whereupon, afterwards, there was a transfer to Nuddea. That being a decision, any objection to it should have been made at the time, and it must now stand as a binding order. The High Court had, in consequence of its applying the wrong Act, viz., IX of 1871, avoided the necessary question as to the effect of proceedings taken, and had applied the three years' bar of limitation, under art. 167 of the 2nd schedule of that Act, to a wrong starting point, the correct one being not earlier than the 3rd August 1870.

It was not open to the respondent in regard to the effect of the two petitions for postponement of the sale, on which she obtained a stay of proceedings, to allege the irregularity of orders [200] anterior to those which she must be taken to have recognized as subsisting. Reference was made to s. 115,* Act I of 1872.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, for the respondent, admitting that Act IX of 1871 was inapplicable, argued that the period of limitation, in reference to the "decree" of 9th July 1869, was given by s. 22 of Act XIV of 1859, not by s. 20 of that Act. An order made under s. 53 of Act XX of 1866, though termed in that section a "decree," was a summary decision within the meaning of s. 22 of Act XIV of 1859 as shown by the limited scope of an order under s. 53, Act XX of 1866, and its being the result of summary proceedings. That such a decree could not declare a lien, or provide for interest after the date of the decree [Asma Bibee v. Ramkant Roy Chowdhry (19 W. R., 251), Adur Monee Debta v. Koolochunder Chatterjee (21 W. R., 140)], and also that no appeal lay against such an order (though it could be set aside on due grounds in execution), tended to show its summary nature. Bhikambhat v. Fernandez (1 L. R., 5 Bom., 673) and Ramdhan Mundal v. Ramessur Bhattacharjee (2 B. L. R., A. C. 235, 11 W. R., 117) were referred to. Execution, therefore, when the first application was made in 1870, was already barred by lapse of time.

But even if s. 22 did not apply, it could not be shown, with reference to s. 20, that application for execution had been made bonâ fide, and for the purpose of enforcing the decree of 9th July 1867, within three years before the application of July 1873. The proceedings had not been regularly taken in conformity with the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure then in force, Act VIII of 1859, while the decree-holder was in a position rendering regularity essential. To bar limitation the proceedings should have been such that execution might have been lawfully issued upon them, as shown to be necessary in the judgment of the Full Bench in Bissessur Mullick v. Mahtabchand Bahadur (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 967, 10 W. R., F. B., 8). It was not any kind of proceeding that would suffice, Ram Sahai Singh v. Sheo Sahai Singh (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 492; 6 W. R. Mis., 98), Raghu Nandan Ram v. Sarmessur [201] Pundlay (13 B. L. R., 489, 22 W. R., 235). The transfer of a decree for execution being only a delegation, then, if there was a striking off, the application to restore the execution proceedings must be made to the transferring Court, Raja Bhoop Singh Bahadur v. Sunkar Dutt Jha (6 W. R. Mis., 47).

As to the argument that an estoppel had been caused, it was contended that the objector had raised the objection that the execution was barred by time in the only Court having jurisdiction in the matter, viz., that of Moorsheadabad, and for this purpose the postponement was applied for.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., replied, arguing that s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859 applied. In reference to the effect of striking off execution proceedings, Puddomonee Dossee v. Roy Muthooranath Chowdhry (12 B. L. R., 411; 20 W. R., 133) was cited, showing that this may vary according to circumstances.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—The question in this appeal is whether the execution of a decree obtained in the Court of the Principal Sudder Amin of Moorsheadabad, by Dhunput Singh against Gopal Chand, is barred by the law of limitation. The appellant is the holder of the decree by assignment from Dhunput Singh. The respondent is the mother of Gopal Chand, and on the death of his minor son Gopi Chand succeeded as the heir of her grandson to the possession of the property which has been attached in execution. The decree was obtained on a mortgage bond, dated the 25th Chait 1273 (6th April 1867), for Rs. 9,995, which sum was to be repaid with interest, at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, in the month of Jeyt 1274. The bond contained an agreement that it should be specially registered under the provisions of s. 53 of Act XX of 1866. It was presented for registration on the 7th of June 1867, and was registered and the agreement recorded on the 19th, the time fixed for payment having expired on the 13th of the same month.

Act XX of 1866 provides (s. 52) that,—

"Whenever the obligor and obligee of an obligation shall agree that, [202] in the event of the obligation not being duly satisfied, the amount secured thereby may be recovered in a summary way, and shall at the time of registering the said obligation apply to the registering officer to record the said agreement, the registering officer, after making such inquiries as he may think proper, shall record such agreement at the foot of the endorsement and certificate required by ss. 66 and 68 of the Act, and such record shall be signed by him and by the obligor, and shall be copied into the register book, and shall be prima facie evidence of the agreement.

"Within one year (s. 53) from the date on which the amount becomes payable, or where the amount is payable by instalments within one year from the date on which any instalment becomes payable, the obligee of any such obligation registered with such agreement as aforesaid, whether under the said Act No. XVI of 1864, or under this Act, may present a petition to any Court which would have had jurisdiction to try a regular suit on such obligation for the amount secured thereby or for the instalment sought to be recovered.

"On production in Court of the obligation and of the said record signed as aforesaid, the petitioner shall be entitled to a decree for any sum not exceeding the sum mentioned in the petition together with interest at the rate specified (if any) to the date of the decree, and a sum for costs to be fixed by the Court.

"Such decree may be enforced forthwith under the provisions for the enforcement of decrees contained in the Code of Civil Procedure."

On the 9th of July 1867, Dhunput Singh obtained a decree under this Act, in the following terms. "That the suit be decreed, and the plaintiff do recover the amount of the claim with interest during the pendency of the suit, and costs of the Court, together with interest up to the date of realization at the rate of one rupee per mensem from the property pledged and the defendant." The latter part of this decree is not authorized by the Act, but it will not be material to consider this.

Gopal Chand died some time before May 1870, but at what precise time does not appear in the proceedings. He left a minor son, Gopi Chand, and on the 10th of May 1870, the first application was made for execution of the decree. This was made by Dhunput Singh to the Court of Moorshedabad against himself, described as guardian and surburakar, on behalf of Set Gopi Chand, minor, son and heir of Set Gopal Chand. It does not appear how he came to be guardian, except that in a petition of the respondent to the Court of Nuddea, which will be afterwards referred to, it is said that [203] he was, according to the arrangement made by Gopal Chand, appointed guardian of Gopi Chand. On the 11th of May it was ordered that the petition be registered, and the decree-holder do deposit the cost of service of notice on the judgment-debtor within seven days. This was merely a formal order, as Dhunput Singh was himself the person on whom the notice would be served.

It will be convenient now to consider what was the effect at this time of the law of limitation.

By Act XIV of 1859, s. 20, it is enacted—

“That no process of execution shall issue from any Court not established by Royal Charter to enforce any judgment, decree or order of such Court unless some proceedings shall have been taken to enforce such judgment, decree, or order, or to keep the same in force within three years next preceding the application for execution

And by s. 22,—

“No process of execution shall issue to enforce any summary decision or award of any of the Civil Courts not established by Royal Charter, or of any revenue authority, unless some proceeding shall have been taken to enforce such decision or award, or to keep the same in force within one year next preceding the application for such execution.”

The Court of Moorshedabad was not established by Royal Charter. Their Lordships are of opinion that s. 20 was intended to apply to decisions, whether they might be called judgments, decrees, or orders, made in a regular suit, and s. 22 to all other decisions. Act XX of 1866 does, indeed, say that the petitioner shall be entitled to a decree, and that such decree may be enforced under the provisions for the enforcement of decrees contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, but s. 52* says that the amount secured by the obligation may be recovered in a summary way. Summary decision means a decision arrived at by a summary proceeding, which this certainly is, and the decision being called a decree does not make any difference in this respect. It was held by the High Court at Calcutta, in Rom Dhan Mundal v. Ramessun Bhattacharjee (2 B. L. R., 235, 11 W. R., 117), that the words “summary decision or award” meant a decision of the Civil Courts not being a decree made in a regular suit or appeal. This construction appears to [204] have been adopted by the Indian Legislature in the Limitation Act, IX of 1871, in art. 166 of the 2nd schedule, where one year is stated as the period of limitation for the execution of a decision, other than a decree or order passed in a regular suit or an appeal of a Civil Court or an appeal. Here the execution shows that the word “decision” is used as including a decree. Therefore the first application for the execution of this decree was barred by the law of limitation.

Record of agreement that amount secured by an obligation may be recovered summarily.

event of the obligation not being duly satisfied, the amount secured thereby may be recovered in a summary way, and shall, at the time of registering the said obligation apply to the Registering Officer to record the said agreement, the Registering Officer after making such enquiries as he may think proper, shall record such agreement at the foot of the endorsement and certificate required by sections 66 and 68, and such record shall be signed by him and by the obligor; and shall be copied into the Register Book No. 1 or No. 6, as the case may be, and shall be prima facie evidence of the said agreement.]

It remains to be seen whether in the subsequent proceedings the respondent has become estopped from relying upon this. They may be briefly stated : On the 20th of July 1870 Dhunput Singh applied to the Moorshedabad Court that the decree might be executed in the Court of the District of Nuddea. The Court, advertng to the fact that the decree-holder was himself the guardian of the minor judgment-debtor, on the 3rd of August 1870 made an order that he "do recover the money due to him from the estate of the minor, with the permission of the Judge, or else by appointing another guardian on behalf of the minor, do take proper steps to carry on this execution proceeding in his presence within ten days."

On the 29th of August 1870, by an order reciting this order, and that no steps had been taken, it was ordered that the case be struck off for default. On the 23rd July 1873, Dhunput Singh and the appellant presented petitions to the Moorshedabad Court stating that the decree, along with other decrees, had been sold by Dhunput Singh to the appellant for Rs. 1,000, and praying that she might be substituted for him, and the amount of the decree ordered to be paid to her. The appellant is the wife of Dhunput Singh, but this was not stated in the petitions. The object seems to have been to avoid complying with the order of the 3rd of August 1870. On the 28th of August the substitution was ordered. On the 12th of December 1873 it was ordered "that for want of prosecution on the part of the decree-holder this case be struck off for the present." The next step was an application on the 22nd of September 1874 on the part of the appellant for execution of the decree in the district of Nuddea, which was ordered on the 7th of December 1874. On the 9th of April 1875 this application was registered [205] in the Nuddea Court, and, on 4th of August 1876, it was struck off in default. On the 25th of January 1878 another application for execution was made to the Nuddea Court. Gopi Chand, the minor, died in November 1878. The application to the Court, which became necessary on his death, either under s. 210 of Act VIII of 1859, or s. 234 of Act X of 1877, the new Civil Procedure Code, whichever might, according to s. 3 of Act XII of 1879, be applicable, was not made. Notwithstanding this omission the execution proceedings appear to have been continued, for there is in the proceedings a petition, dated the 8th of December 1879, of the respondent by Umanath Ghosal, described as pleader for the petitioner, stating that the decree-holder had executed the decree against her, got her property attached, and that day had been fixed for the sale, and praying that two months' time might be sanctioned, and, the attachment subsisting the 8th of February next might be fixed for the sale. This was assented to by the pleader for the appellant, and an order was made accordingly. On the 9th of February 1880 another petition of the respondent was presented by Nobin Chunder Sircar, another pleader, stating that the decree-holder had consented to allow time up to the 1st of March, and praying that that day might be fixed for the sale, which was ordered with the consent of the pleader for the decree holder. On the 8th of March part of the attached property was sold, and the petition of the respondent to the Nuddea Court to set aside the execution having been rejected on the 6th of March, and an order made for a further sale on the 8th of May, the respondent, on the 3rd of May 1880, petitioned the Moorshedabad Court to stay the sale and adjudicate upon the objections, among others, which need not be mentioned, that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation, and the proceedings in execution had been without jurisdiction : and she denied that she knew of the proceedings. The appellant, in his petition in answer, relied upon the petitions of the 8th of December and 9th of February. The Subordinate Judge of Moorshedabad rejected this petition, and there was an appeal to the High Court. That Court applied to the case the Limitation Act, IX of 1871, art. 167 of which gives, in the case of a decree or order of a Civil Court not established by Royal [206] Charter, three years from the date of applying to enforce or keep it in force as the period of limitation, and held that the question was whether, within three years before the 23rd of July 1873, anything had been done to enforce or keep in force the decree. They allowed the appeal, on the ground that no application for execution had been made within three years, but, it having since been decided by this Committee, in Mungul Pershad Dicht v. Grijakant Lahiri (L. R., 8 I. A., 123, I. L. R., 8 Cal., 51) that, as regards suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873, all applications in them are excluded from the operation of Act IX of 1871, it is admitted that the decision cannot be sustained on that ground. It does not seem to have been considered whether art. 166 was not applicable. It has been held to be applicable to such a case by the High Court of Bombay, in Bhikambhat v. Fernandez (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 673).

Their Lordships observe that, although the respondent denied any knowledge of the petitions presented in her name, and the appellant relied upon them, no evidence was given that they were authorized by her; and, further, that the proper steps consequent upon the death of Gopi Chand not having been taken in the Moorshedabad Court, the Nuddea Court had no authority to execute the decree against the respondent. The petitions are of a very suspicious character, and their object appears to have been to have a sale without proclamation. The proceeding in the Nuddea Court against the respondent was altogether irregular, if it was not without jurisdiction, and the petitions to postpone the sale cannot be treated as an estoppel. They contain no admission that the decree could be legally executed against the respondent, and are not within the description of an estoppel given in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, s. 115 and following sections.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the High Court, by which the order of the lower Court was set aside and the application for execution dismissed, should be affirmed, and this appeal be dismissed, and the costs will be paid by the appellant.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 437—Further enquiry under—Proceedings against accused—Notice.

No order affecting an accused in a criminal matter should be made without giving him notice, so as to enable him to appear and show cause against it.

A Sessions Judge has no power under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to direct a particular Magistrate by name to make the further enquiry contemplated by that section.

The further enquiry contemplated by s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code is an enquiry upon further materials, not a re-hearing of the matter upon the same evidence which was before the Magistrate who held the first enquiry.

IN this case proceedings had been instituted against the petitioner under ss. 342, 379 and 426 of the Indian Penal Code in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Serampore. The Deputy Magistrate, who was vested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class, dismissed the complaint and discharged the petitioner. The Sessions Judge of Hooghly, on the application of the complainant asking that the case might be remanded to the lower Court for the purpose of retaking the evidence, made the following order.—

“I consider that the judicial enquiry into the petitioner’s complaint has been most perfunctory. The complainant prosecuted for alleged offences of assault, wrongful confinement, theft and unlawful assembly committed when he was proceeding with a Civil Court peon to have possession of some property given over to him under a decree. Among the witnesses are the peada, the drummer, and a Police officer, to the latter of whom the complainant says he was compelled to fly for refuge from his assailants. A false complainant would not appeal to [208] such witnesses as these, and it is evident that there is a real foundation for his complaint. It seems that for some reason the above witnesses are not very willing to state the whole truth, the peada will not speak to the accused’s identity, and the Police officer gives the ridiculous reason for refusing his aid in what is the first duty of every Police officer, namely, the preservation of the peace, that he is attached to the detective branch! But any Magistrate accustomed to deal with evidence should know how to deal with such witnesses. The record of the evidence by the Deputy Magistrate is a perfect burlesque of justice.

No notice was given to the petitioner of the proceedings before the Sessions Judge, and the above stated Order was made ex parte. The petitioner now moved to have the order set aside.

Baboo Shama Churn Banerjee for Complainant.

Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that the order complained of must be set aside. The first point that was urged before us was that no notice of the application upon which the order in question was passed was given to the petitioner. The complainant's vakil, who appeared before us in support of the order of the Sessions Judge, admits this defect. The order is therefore bad upon this ground. The second objection taken before us is that the Sessions Judge, under s. 437, has no power to direct a particular Magistrate by name to make the further enquiry contemplated in that section. It appears to us that this contention is also well founded. The language of s. 437 leaves no room for doubt that the Sessions Judge has not the power which he has exercised in this case, viz., of directing a particular Subordinate Magistrate by name to make the further enquiry under this section. The third point taken before us, and upon which we think the order must be altogether set aside, is that the com-[209]plainant did not complain to the Sessions Judge that he was not allowed to adduce before the Magistrate any evidence which he was ready to adduce, or which he, being in a position now to adduce, would adduce, if a further enquiry were made. It does not appear that any additional evidence would be forthcoming if the order of the Sessions Judge were to be carried out. Section 437 contemplates a further enquiry, that is to say, allowing the complainant to adduce further evidence when necessary on a further enquiry, but this is not what the complainant in this case asked for. What the complainant asked for was to remand the case to the lower Court for the purpose of retaking the evidence that had been already taken, and for the Magistrate to come to a decision upon the evidence so taken. That is not what is contemplated by s. 437.

We are, therefore, of opinion that on all these grounds the order which has been passed is bad in law, and we accordingly set it aside.

Field, J.—I also think that the order complained of must be set aside. In the first place no notice was given to the petitioner before us, and an order affecting him in a criminal matter ought not to have been passed without giving him an opportunity to appear and show cause. In the second place the Sessions Judge has directed a particular Subordinate Magistrate by name to make the further enquiry. The words of s. 437 are that the Court of Session may direct the Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make further enquiry. It is clear that the order ought to have been made in these words. The Legislature appears to have contemplated that the Magistrate of the district should exercise a discretion as to the selection of any Magistrate subordinate to him, and this discretion seems to have been vested in the District Magistrate, and not in the Sessions Judge. In the third place s. 437 contemplates a further enquiry, that is, as I understand it, an enquiry upon further materials or further evidence, not a rehearing of the matter upon the same evidence which was before the Magistrate who held the first enquiry. Now in this case there was no contention that further materials or further evidence was forthcoming; and, although the Magistrate who first [210] made the enquiry left three witnesses named in the petition of complaint unexamined, no contention was raised before the Sessions Judge that these persons ought to have been examined, or, if examined, would have thrown further light upon the case. I therefore agree in setting aside the order.

Order set aside.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 12th March, 1883.

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP, MR. JUSTICE WILSON, AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Moheswar Das.....Plaintiff

Carter.....Defendant.*

*Railway Company, liability of, for loss—Special contract—Railway Act
ss. 151-161—Carriers.*

The plaintiff despatched certain goods by the E. I. Railway Co., for carriage to A, and signed a special contract, in conformity with the form approved by the Governor-General in Council under section 10 of Act IV of 1879, holding the Company "harmless and free from all responsibility in regard to any loss, destruction, or deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment from any cause whatever, before, during, and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection therewith." The goods were short delivered, and the plaintiff brought a suit to recover their value.

Held.—Per GARTH, C.J., PRINSEP, J. and WILSON, J.—That the Railway Company could not be held liable to account to the consignee for any loss from any cause whatever during the whole time that the goods were under their charge, inasmuch as the plaintiff had entered into a special contract to hold them harmless in accordance with s. 10 of Act IV of 1879.

* Civil Reference No. 19 of 1882, from Baboo Menu Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Beerbhoom, dated the 5th July 1882.

Held.—Per O’KINEALY, J., that it was doubtful whether ss. 151 and 161* of the Contract Act applied to carriers by rail, but even assuming that these sections did not apply, the Railway Company would be in the position of carriers before the passing of the Carriers Act, and were entitled to protect themselves from liability by special contract

THIS was a reference under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff against “Mr. Carter, Traffic Manager, on behalf of the East Indian Railway Co.,” for damages for the loss of 21½ seers of ghee.

[211] It was admitted that twelve canisters containing 6½ maunds of ghee had been delivered to the Railway Company for carriage from Agra to Ahmed-pore, and it was proved that the plaintiff before taking delivery caused the canisters to be weighed, and found that there was a deficiency of 21½ seers, and seeing that one of the canisters had been cut open by a knife, caused these two facts to be noted on the back of the receipt given to the Company. The defendant (not taking the objection, that the Railway Company and not himself were the proper parties to be sued) contended that the special contract entered into by the plaintiff exonerated the Company from all claim to damages. The special contract “or risk note” was as follows:—“I hold the Railway Company harmless and free from all responsibility in regard to any loss, destruction, or deterioration of, or damage of or to, the said consignment from any cause whatever, before, during, and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection therewith.” This agreement was drawn up in the form prescribed by the Governor-General under Act IV of 1879, s. 10.

The Munsif held the defence to be a good one and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Beerbhoom. At a late stage of the appeal the defendant raised the objection of non-joinder of the Railway Company as a defendant, but preferred no cross appeal, nor filed any cross objection. The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree contingent on the opinion of the High Court as to whether, on the facts disclosed, the defendant or the E. I. Railway Co. could claim exemption from liability by reason of the special contract.

At the hearing of the reference the defendant waived his objection to the non-joinder of the Railway Company as a defendant.

Baboo Kali Churn Banerjee for the Plaintiff.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and Mr. Evans for the Defendant

The following Judgments were delivered —

Garth, C.J. (PRINSEP and WILSON, JJ., concurring)—This is a case referred under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is [212] unnecessary for us to express any opinion on any of the points which arise, except on that referring to the relations between the parties arising out of the risk note, which was the agreement under which the goods were received and despatched by the Railway Company, because the learned counsel on behalf of the Company in the present case has agreed to waive any objections to the suit as brought against the Traffic Manager, in order that he may obtain our opinion on the main point in issue.

Bailee’s responsibility when goods are not duly delivered or tendered. * [Sec. 161.—If by the fault of the bailee the goods are not returned, delivered, or tendered at the proper time, he is responsible to the bailor for any loss, destruction, or deterioration of the goods from that time.]

It appears that twelve tins containing $6\frac{1}{2}$ maunds of ghee were consigned to the Railway Company at Agra for delivery at Ahmedpore. It has been found, that when these tins were delivered, one had been cut open by a knife, and there was consequently a deficiency of some $21\frac{1}{2}$ seers in the quantity of ghee contained in them.

For the defendants it is contended that under the terms of the risk note, signed by the plaintiff, they are in no way liable for the loss.

The risk note runs as follows.—I hold the Railway Company harmless and free from ~~any~~ responsibility in regard to any loss, destruction, or deterioration of, or damage of or to, the said consignment, from any cause whatever, before, during, and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection therewith." By s. 2 of Act IV of 1879 nothing in the Carriers Act, 1865, applies to carriers by Railway. By s. 10 it is declared that "every agreement purporting to limit the obligation or responsibility imposed on a carrier by Railway by the Indian Contract Act of 1872, ss. 151 and 161, in the case of loss, destruction, or deterioration of, or damage to, property, shall, in so far as it purports to limit such obligation or responsibility, be void, unless (a) it is in writing signed by, or on behalf of, the person sending or delivering such property, and (b) is otherwise in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council.

This agreement, which was signed by the plaintiff, is in a form approved by the Governor-General under Act IV of 1879, s. 10, and its terms leave us no alternative but to hold, that in no case would the Railway Company be liable to account to the consignee for any loss from any cause whatever [213] during the whole time that the goods were in their charge. Similar contracts have frequently been construed by English Courts and full effect has been given to their provisions.

The Legislature in this country has, in respect to the matter specified in s. 10, Act IV of 1879, imposed upon the Government the duty of determining beforehand the propriety of any proposed form of contract between any Railway Company and its customers, instead of leaving this to be decided subsequently by Courts of Justice.

Under such circumstances, we think the suit should be dismissed by the Judge of the Small Cause Court.

O'Kinealy, J.—I agree in the decision delivered by my learned colleague ; but I am not quite sure that I agree in all the reasons on which it is based, as I feel some hesitation in assuming that the Contract Act applies to carriers. There is no doubt, if Railway carriers are subject to the provisions of ss. 151 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, that the conditions required by s. 10 of the Railway Act have been properly complied with. The risk note is admittedly signed by, or on behalf of, the plaintiff, and is in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council. On the other hand, if ss. 151 and 161 do not apply to carriers by Railway, the Railway Companies are in the position of carriers before the passing of the Carriers Act. Whichever view, therefore, is taken of the case, the question for decision is narrowed to this, namely, whether a Railway Company, which is not subject to the Carriers Act, can protect itself by contract from liability for the negligence or misconduct of its agents and servants.

This very question was elaborately discussed in the case of Peck v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company (32 L. J. Q. B. 246). There Mr. Justice BLACKBURN gave as his opinion that "the cases decided in our Courts between 1832 and 1854 established that a carrier might, by a special notice, make a contract limiting his responsibility even in the cases here mentioned of gross negligence, misconduct, or fraud on the part of his servants."

This view of the law has been adopted in several later cases. And it may now be taken as settled in England that a carrying [214] company, when not subject to limitation by Act of Parliament, may contract itself from all responsibility arising from the acts of its agents or servants. Looking then at the cases already referred to, I think that under the "risk note" in this case the owner undertook all risks of conveyance and loss, however caused by the servants and agents of the Company during the journey, and that the latter is not responsible for the abstraction of the plaintiff's ghee. Under these circumstances, our answer to the learned Subordinate Judge should be that the Railway Company is protected by the risk note in question, and that neither it nor the Traffic Manager is liable unless either one or the other has committed some independent wrong in connection with the property, and as no such allegation has been made, that the suit should be dismissed.

Suit dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th August, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP.

Arzan.....Plaintiff

versus

Rakhal Chunder Roy Chowdhry and the Secretary of State for India in Council.....Defendants.*

Right of way—Easement—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26—

User as of right—Prescriptive right.

For the purpose of acquiring a right of way or other easement under s. 26 of the Indian Limitation Act, it is not necessary that the enjoyment of the easement should be known to the servient owner. In this respect there is a difference between the acquisition of such rights under that Act, and their acquisition under the English Prescription Act.

THIS was a suit to establish a right of way over certain lands rented by the defendant, and to remove a wall obstructing the alleged right of way.

The land over which the alleged way passed belonged originally to one Sherif Hossein, and was, in 1855, sublet by a tenant of Sherif Hossein to the

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1076 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Krishna Chunder Chatterjee, First Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 27th March 1882 affirming the decree of Baboo Jogendro Nath Ghose, Second Munsiff of Burmaul, dated the 31st December 1883.

Government on a mokurrari lease for the purpose of opening a burial ground. The entire land so leased was not required for that purpose, and the surplus land, over [215] which the way was claimed, remained unoccupied till 1878, when the Government let it to the defendant for building purposes.

The Munsiff found that the plaintiff had enjoyed the right of way peaceably and without interruption for a period of more than twenty years, but was of opinion that the plaintiff's enjoyment was not as of right, and that the owner of the servient tenement was not aware of the user, and therefore dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, and the latter came to the same conclusion as the Munsiff.

The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Appellant.

Baboo Doorga Mohun Das for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and PRINSEP, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—The plaintiff has a dwelling house in Burrisaul, in which he and his family have lived for a great many years, and he claims a right of way in respect of that house to and from the high road which runs from east to west through the village.

On the 2nd of Assin 1285 (17th September 1878) the defendant No. 1 obstructed this right of way by commencing to erect a pucca stable upon the land, whereupon the plaintiff took proceedings in the Criminal Court, but the Magistrate refused to interfere, because he considered it a question to be tried in the Civil Court.

The defendant No. 1, who is the lessee of the land under the Government, denies the plaintiff's right of way, and the Collector who appears for the Secretary of State, the defendant No. 2, also virtually denies it.

It appears that the land over which the alleged way passes belongs to one Sherif Hossein. He let it upwards of thirty years ago to one Ijgutullah, and Ijgutullah, after holding it for some six or seven years, sublet it on mokurrari lease to the Government on the 4th of April 1855, for the purpose of enlarging a burial-ground at Burrisaul. The entire land so leased was not, however, required for that purpose, and the surplus land over which the [216] way is claimed remained unoccupied until the year 1878, when the Government let it to the defendant for building purposes.

It is necessary to state these facts, in order to understand the nature of the defence, and the ground upon which the lower Courts have based their judgment.

The plaintiff proved to the satisfaction of both Courts that he had used the way in question for some thirty or forty years. Indeed, except by the sufferance of his landlord, he appears to have no other means of access from his house to the public road.

But both Courts have found that, notwithstanding this long user, he has not acquired a right of way under the Indian Limitation Act.

The Munsiff finds that he has enjoyed the way peaceably and openly, and also (after some hesitation) that he has enjoyed it without interruption for upwards of twenty years.

He considers, however, that the plaintiff cannot be said to have enjoyed it as of right for three reasons.

First, because the Government, who have been the owners of the servient tenement for twenty years before suit, were not aware of the plaintiff's user of the way; secondly, because the plaintiff submitted to divers encroachments, which the owner of the servient tenement imposed upon him; and, thirdly, because many years ago when Sherif Hossein, the then owner in possession, endeavoured to stop the way, the plaintiff did not bring a suit in the Civil Court as for an obstruction to a private right, but proceeded in the Criminal Court as for an obstruction to a public one.

The Munsiff accordingly dismissed the suit, and his decision was confirmed by the Subordinate Judge, apparently on two grounds.

(1) That a right of way cannot be enjoyed "as of right" without the knowledge of the servient owner, and that the Government had no knowledge of the user of this way by the plaintiff, and

(2) That the interruptions which took place from time to time in the user showed that the plaintiff had never peaceably enjoyed the way "as of right."

[217] These points have been argued before us on appeal, and the first of them gives rise to a very important question, namely whether the principles which govern the acquisition of a right of way in England by prescription apply also to the acquisition of such a right under the Indian Limitation Act.

Both the lower Courts have relied mainly upon the doctrine laid down in Gale on Easements and other authorities, that a right of way cannot be gained by prescription unless with the knowledge of the owner of the servient tenement.

Prescription implies a grant, the user by which a prescriptive right is gained is only evidence of a previous grant, "and, therefore, in order that such user may confer an easement, it follows that the owner of the servient tenement must have known that such an easement was being enjoyed, and also have been in a position to interfere with and obstruct its exercise, had he been so disposed. Contra non valentem agere non currit prescriptio." (See Gale on Easements, last edition, page 189.)

It was presumably upon this principle that by the 7th section of the English Act, the 2nd and 3rd William 4th, c. 71, the time during which an infant, an insane person, or a married woman is the owner of the servient tenement is excluded from the period, during which a prescriptive right is in course of acquisition.

But there seems to be an important difference between the English and the Indian law in this respect.

The English Act, 2 and 3 William 4th, c. 71, was passed expressly "for shortening the time of prescription in certain cases."

Its object was to remove the difficulties which had previously existed of establishing easements by proof of immemorial user. But the Act did not alter in any way the nature of the right to be acquired, and, therefore, the conditions which were generally necessary before the Act to the acquisition of prescriptive rights are still necessary to their acquisition under the Act, though they may be gained by a shorter period of enjoyment.

[218] But the Act, under which rights of way and other easements are now generally acquired in India, has nothing to do with prescription. It is "an Act for the limitation of suits and other purposes," and s. 26 enables any person to acquire a right of way by a twenty-years' user without reference to any grant, express or implied, from the servient owner.

So long as the right of way is enjoyed as an easement peaceably and quietly as of right and without interruption for twenty years by a person claiming right thereto, his right at the end of that time becomes absolute and indefeasible. Nothing is said in the Act as to the knowledge of the servient owner being necessary to the acquisition of the right, and as the right to be acquired is not a prescriptive one, the rule which obtains in England with reference to prescriptive rights seems inapplicable here.

Of course rights of way, as well as other easements, may still be claimed in this country by prescription; See Rajrup Koer v. Abul Hossein (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 529): and when they are so claimed, the principles which apply to their acquisition in England will be equally applicable in this country. But those principles do not necessarily apply to the acquisition of easements under the Limitation Act.

And as a proof that this was the view of the Legislature of this country there is no provision in the Indian Limitation Act corresponding with s. 7 of the English Prescription Act, though there is a provision in s. 27, which answers to s. 8 of the Prescription Act, and which protects, under certain conditions, the rights of reversioners.

It is probable that the words "peaceably and openly," which are not in the English Act, have been introduced into the Indian Act for the very purpose of preventing these rights being acquired by stealth or by a constantly contested user, although actual knowledge of the user on the part of the servient owner may not be necessary.

We think, therefore, that the main ground upon which the judgment of the lower Courts has proceeded in this case is without foundation, and we would say further that, even if knowledge of user had been necessary, we think that under the [219] circumstances such knowledge should have been presumed by the lower Courts.

If the personal knowledge of the Collector were necessary in all cases to the acquisition of rights of way over Government land, such acquisition would be almost an impossibility. There is no reason why Government should be in any better position in this respect than any other land-owner, and there appears to have been abundant evidence in this case, from which the knowledge of the superior Government officers should have been presumed.

The land over which the right was exercised was in the village of Burrisaul, immediately adjoining the high road. The plaintiff had used it day after day for 30 or 40 years. The way itself was in the immediate neighbourhood of a public cemetery; and two Government officers, one the Inspector of Police of the district, and the other Deputy Magistrate at the station, were called as witnesses for the plaintiff to prove his user of the way for many years.

Then the alleged interruptions of the plaintiff's user of the way amount to no evidence at all which should defeat his right. It is not pretended that there were "interruptions" within the meaning of the explanation of s. 26, and we cannot find that, except on one occasion, anything was done which operated to prevent his user. And as all knowledge of the user of the right has been persistently denied by the defendants, it is clear that the so-called obstructions were not intended to prevent that user. The one occasion to which we allude was when the way was obstructed by Sherif Hossein upwards of 30 years ago; and so far from the circumstances of that obstruction being unfavourable to the plaintiff, we consider that what happened then tends strongly to support his case.

It is clear that at that time he was using the way as of right, because he at once resented the obstruction, and went before the Magistrate to assert his claim. The Munsiff, we observe, treats his conduct on this occasion as shewing that he claimed a public way, and not a private one. But it is not at all likely that people of his class should be able to distinguish between public and private rights, or to know the proper remedy for any invasion [220] of those rights. The fact of the plaintiff going before the Magistrate is the strongest possible proof that he at once asserted his right ; and the fact of the obstruction being removed, and of the plaintiff's subsequent user of it without further objection by Sherif Hossein, shows plainly that he was successful in the assertion of his claim.

The cutting of the ditch by the Government, which is relied on by the Subordinate Judge in support of his view, might have been a slight inconvenience to the plaintiff, but certainly did not operate to prevent his user. The ditch appears to have been dug not with a view to obstruct the plaintiff, but to mark out the land which the Government had purchased ; and it appears that after it was dug the plaintiff used the way as before, merely fixing a pole in the middle of the ditch, that he might swing himself over it more easily.

The case must, therefore, go back to the Court of First Instance to consider whether there is any sufficient reason in point of law why the defendant's building should not be pulled down, and the defendant will probably do wisely under the circumstances to come to some reasonable arrangement.

The plaintiff having succeeded in establishing his right of way is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th September, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Mina Kumari Bibee.... Defendant

. versus

Jagat Sattani Bibee and others.....Plaintiffs.

Sale in execution of decree—Sale afterwards set aside—Execution of decree found to be barred by limitation—Suit to recover the property from purchaser.

A creditor obtained a decree against his debtor, and applied for and obtained an order for execution. This application was unsuccessfully opposed by the judgment-debtor on the ground that execution was barred by limitation. Certain properties of the judgment-debtor were attached and sold in execution of this decree, the judgment-creditor himself becoming the purchaser.

[221] In due course, the sale was confirmed, and a certificate granted to the purchaser. Subsequently to this, the order granting execution came up before the High Court on appeal, and that Court decided that execution was barred. The person who had been the judgment-debtor then brought a regular suit against the purchaser to recover the properties sold in execution.

Held, that he was entitled to have the sale set aside by regular suit.

ONE Dhunput Singh, on the 9th July 1867, obtained a money decree against Jagat Sattani Bibee and assigned the decree to his wife. On the 23rd July 1867 an application for execution was made, which was opposed on the ground that execution was barred; the application was, however, granted, and subsequently the decree was transferred to another district for execution, and certain properties of the judgment-debtor (the subject of the present suit) were attached and put up for sale, and were purchased by one Baranasi Roy in the name of the wife of Dhunput Singh. Subsequent to the execution sale, the question as to whether execution was barred, came up before the High Court on appeal, and that Court, on the 29th November 1880, decided that the application for execution made on the 23rd July 1873 was barred by limitation. Previously to the decree of the High Court, dated 29th November 1880, the execution sales were confirmed by the District Judge of Nuddea, and a certificate had been granted to the purchaser.

Jagat Sattani Bibee then brought this present suit against Dhunput Singh and his wife, to recover possession of the properties sold in execution as above stated, alleging that the decree of 1867 was fraudulent, that the transfer to Dhunput Singh's wife was benami, and that as execution was barred when the sales were held, nothing passed to the purchaser.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 127 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Amrit Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated 20th March 1882.

The wife of Dhunput Singh, the second defendant, contended that the order of the High Court on the question of limitation had not become final, as a review was pending on that order, that she was not a benamidar for her husband, and that if the sales were void, the application for restoration of the properties ought to have been made to the Court that made the sale.

[222] Dhunput Singh denied that the purchase by his wife had been made for his benefit.

The Sub-Judge held that execution of the decree being barred, the sale under it and purchase by the judgment-creditor would not pass anything to the defendants, and that the plaintiff was in order in bringing a regular suit, as the question raised in the suit was not one relating to the execution or discharge of satisfaction of the decree, and therefore gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Gurodass Banerjee and Baboo Srinath Doss for the Appellants, contended that, although the plaintiff might be entitled to have the purchase-money paid to her, she was not entitled to set aside the sale, and cited Jan Ali v. Jan Ali Chowdhry (1 B. L. R. A. C. , 56 , 10 W. R. , 154).

Munshi Mahomed Yusuf for the Respondent.

Garth, C. J.—We think that the Court below was quite right.

It is not necessary for us to deal with any other than that which is the principal question in the case, namely, whether the sale, which took place under the execution proceedings in the former suit, can be set aside by the plaintiff in this suit.

She (the present plaintiff) was the judgment-debtor in the former suit, and before the execution issued under which the sale took place, she took the objection that the right to issue execution was barred by limitation.

The Court held that execution was not barred, and consequently the sale took place, and was confirmed to the present defendant.

The plaintiff, the execution-debtor, then appealed to the High Court. The High Court held that the Court below was wrong, and that the right to issue execution was barred. The decision has been since approved by the Privy Council.

The plaintiff then brought this suit for the purpose of having it declared that the sale was invalid.

[223] The Court below has given the plaintiff a decree to the effect, but it has been contended before us in appeal that, although under the circumstances the plaintiff may be entitled to have the purchase-money paid to her, she is not entitled to set aside the sale, and in support of that contention we are referred to a case decided by Sir BARNES PEACOCK and the late Mr. Justice MITTER—Jan Ali v. Jan Ali Chowdhry (1 B. L. R. A. C. , 56 ; 10 W. R. , 154).

In that case a sale had taken place under a decree at the time when the decree was valid, and the decree-holder had a perfect right to issue execution under it. But the decree was subsequently reversed on appeal, and it was then contended that the sale itself, which had been made to a bonâ fide purchaser for value, could not stand. But the Court there held that, as when the sale took place, the decree was good and the execution proceedings were perfectly regular, the sale could not afterwards be set aside as against a bonâ fide purchaser for value.

That case is distinguishable from the present upon two grounds.

In the first place an objection was raised in this case in due time that the right to issue execution was barred ; and as it was afterwards held in appeal that the objection was a valid one, it follows that the sale took place under circumstances which showed that it was illegal.

But in the next place there is this very material difference between the two cases. In this case it cannot be said that the sale was made to a bond fide purchaser for value without notice ; because the execution-creditor was himself the purchaser. He was perfectly aware of the objection which had been taken, and he also knew that, if that objection were valid, the execution would be contrary to law. Notwithstanding this, he insisted on pressing on the sale, and was himself the purchaser. He, therefore, bought with full notice that his title might turn out to be invalid, and we think he must take the consequences of his imprudence.

We find that in the case referred to in the lower Court's judgment, Mahomed Hossein v. Kokil Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 91), we carefully abstained from giving any opinion as to whether under circumstances [224] somewhat similar to the present, the judgment-debtor could have set aside the sale by means of a regular suit.

That question has now arisen, and we think it only just that the sale should be set aside. It seems to us that if after the objection had been properly taken, the judgment-debtor could not set aside the sale as against the execution-creditor, the appeal to the High Court, though successful, would virtually be infructuous.

It is perfectly true that the execution-purchaser had a right, if he chose, to insist upon the sale taking place, but if he adopted that course, he did so at the risk of the sale being set aside.

We think, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed, and the appellant must pay the costs of this appeal as well as of the Court below.

Appeal dismissed.

[225] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 3rd and 4th December, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

Gopeenath Mookerjee and another

versus

Kally Doss Mullick and others.

Injunction—Interim injunction—Grounds for continuing to hearing—Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Consent of next reversioner—Rights of remote reversioners

A Hindu died, leaving a widow and also leaving A his immediate reversionary heir, and B and C more remote reversionary heirs. The widow obtained a certificate to collect debts, but such certificate did not empower her to deal with Government securities. D instituted a suit against the widow on promissory note alleged to have been executed in his favour by her late husband, and obtained a decree. A then instituted a suit against the widow and D to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud and collusion. This suit was compromised by A's surrendering up his reversionary interest to the widow for a consideration. B and C now sued the widow and D and A for the purpose of having the first mentioned decree set aside for a declaration that the decree on the compromise was inoperative to establish or confirm the fraudulent decree, or to enlarge the powers of the widow to deal with the Government securities, and obtained an interim injunction.

Held, that, apart from the question as to whether an alienation by a widow and next reversioner without the consent of subsequent reversioners is binding on them, which question the Court was prepared to answer in the negative, it would, under circumstances of the case, be an abuse of the discretion of the Court not to continue the injunction until the hearing, when the truth or falsity of the charges made by the plaintiffs could be investigated on oral evidence.

THIS was a suit to set aside certain decrees as having been obtained by fraud, and to restrain the defendants from negotiating certain Government securities.

It appeared that one Doorgaram Mookerjee died leaving three sons Ramchunder Mookerjee, Thacoordass Mookerjee and Kasinath Mookerjee. Ramchunder died leaving two sons, Luckynarain and Jonardun. Of these, Luckynarain died leaving two sons, the plaintiff Gopeenath and the defendant Aughorenath, and Jonardun died leaving one son, the plaintiff Nundolall. The second son, Thacoordass, died leaving one son, the defendant Peary Mohun, and the third son Kasinath died leaving a son, Monohur, who subsequently died without issue, leaving a widow, the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee.

[226] After the death of Monohur, the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee obtained a certificate enabling her to collect debts due to his estate, but not empowering her to negotiate any securities belonging thereto, and subsequently Government securities to the value of Rs. 25,000 were brought into the Court of the District Judge of Hooghly.

On the 3rd March 1882 the defendant Kally Doss Mullick instituted a suit, being suit No. 127 of 1882, in the High Court against the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee, describing her as certificated administratrix of Monohur Mookerjee, seeking to recover the sum of Rs. 1,912 alleged to be the amount of principal and interest due on a promissory note for Rs. 15,000, alleged to have been executed by Monohur Mookerjee on the 14th November 1879 in his favour, in renewal of a former promissory note. The defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee, acting as the plaintiffs alleged, in collusion with the defendant Kally Doss Mullick, did not enter appearance, and on the 18th of May 1882 a decree was made against her. A certified copy of the decree was then transmitted to the Court of the District Judge for execution.

On the 28th June 1883 the defendant Peary Mohun Mookerjee instituted a suit, No 279 of 1883, against the defendants Kally Doss Mullick and Streemutty Mohamoyee Dabee, praying that it might be declared that the decree was a false and fraudulent one and had no binding effect so far, at all events, as the estate of Monohur Mookerjee was concerned, that it might be set aside, and the certificated copy recalled, and also praying for an injunction restraining the defendant Kally Doss Mullick from taking any steps on the decree. The case came on for hearing on the 8th August 1883 before PRIGOT, J., and on the 10th the defendant Peary Mohun Mookerjee was permitted, with the consent of the defendants, to withdraw the suit on the terms contained in a petition, which stated that in consideration of the sum of Rs 8,000 paid to him by the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee, he had relinquished his reversionary right to her as far as the Government securities belonging to the estate of Monohur Mookerjee were concerned, so as to enable her to negotiate and sell the same.

The plaintiffs Gopeenath and Nundolall then instituted the [227] present suit against Kally Doss, Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee, Peary Mohun Mookerjee and Aghorenath, alleging that the promissory notes were not made by Monohur Mookerjee, that the defendant Kally Doss Mullick was a person of no means, that the decree obtained by him was obtained by forged documents and false and perjured testimony, and that the defendant Peary Mohun Mookerjee withdrew his suit and entered into the compromise, though he knew that the promissory notes were forged, and that the decree in Kally Doss Mullick's suit was fraudulent, because he was uncertain whether he would outlive the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee, and thought it more to his advantage personally to accept the sum of Rs. 8,000 as a consideration for consenting to the fraud, and allowing the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee to act as the absolute owner of the Government securities to the detriment of those who might be the heirs at her death.

The plaintiffs contended that the petition of compromise, and the compromise and the decree made thereon in the suit No. 279 of 1883, did not operate to establish or make good the decree in the suit No. 127 of 1882, or to enlarge the powers of the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee in dealing with the Government securities, and that the compromise was contrary to the policy of the Hindu law and the general law of the country, and was a mere device for evading the provisions of the Hindu law, by setting up a false and fraudulent decree, and that it could not operate as a consent of the nearest reversioner within the true meaning and spirit of the Hindu law. And the plaintiffs, who were the next reversionary heirs after the defendant Peary Mohun Mookerjee, also contended that their right to institute the suit as protectors of the estate arose when the defendant Peary Mohun Mookerjee agreed with the defendants Kally Doss Mullick and Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee to allow the false and fraudulent decree to be established against the estate of which he was the first protector, and also agreed for a sum of money to assign over to the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee contrary to Hindu law his right to protect the estate from waste, and thus disabled himself from protecting the estate, and became a party to the fraud on the Court and on the ultimate reversioners. The plaintiff prayed that it might be declared that the decree obtained in the suit [228] No. 127 of 1882 was obtained by fraud, and that the same had no binding effect so far, at all events, as the estate was concerned, that the decree might be set aside and the certified copy recalled, that it might be declared that the agreement of compromise in respect of the suit No. 279 of 1883, and the decree by consent in that suit were inoperative to establish or confirm the fraudulent decree of 1882, or to enlarge the powers of the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee to deal with the Government securities, for an injunction to restrain the defendant Kally Doss Mullick from taking any steps whatever on the decree in the suit No. 127 of 1882, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee from negotiating, selling, or in any wise disposing of the Government securities

The plaintiffs obtained a rule calling upon defendants Kally Doss Mullick and Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee to show cause why a writ of injunction should not issue against them restraining the defendant Kally Doss Mullick from taking any steps whatsoever on the decree in suit No. 127 of 1882, and restraining the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee from negotiating, selling, or in any wise disposing of the Government securities

Mr. Hill in support of the rule.

Mr. Pugh showed cause

Section 44, illustration (c), of the Specific Relief Act shows that the immediate reversioner, a Hindu widow, with the consent of the immediate reversioner, can make a good title in favour of a stranger as against more remote reversioners—Jadomoney Dabee v Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (Boul., 120). The reason of the rule is given in Gunqa Pershad Kur v Sumbhoonath Burman (22 W. R., 393). It is immaterial whether the conveyance is by one or two deeds—Kishen Geer v. Busquet Roy (14 W. R., 379) [PIGOT, J.—Is the rule applicable when the transaction amounts to a fraud on the inheritance?] There is nothing fraudulent in the transaction. The reversioner has the right to relinquish his reversion for whatever consideration he chooses. He has a right to withdraw his objection, and whatever terms may be come to between him and the widow do not affect Kally Doss Mullick [229] [PIGOT, J.—Suppose that Peary Mohun had not brought the suit which was compromised, could the plaintiffs have sued?] I apprehend not. The Privy Council do not say in what cases reversioners remote may sue, but only throw out that there may be such cases.

The cases of Rajbullubh Sen v. Omesh Chunder Roop (I L. R., 5 Cal., 44) goes the length of deciding that even where the immediate reversioner, who has relinquished his right, dies before the widow, the next reversioners have no rights. See also Trilochur Chuckerbutty v Umesh Chunder Lahiri (7 C. L. R., 571), Noferdoss Roy v. Modhu Soondari Burmonia (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 732). [PIGOT, J., referred to Gauri Dat v Gur Sahu (I L. R., 2 All., 41), where more remote reversioners were allowed to sue on the ground of fraud.] In Kishen Geer v. Busquet Roy (14 W. R., 379) MARKBY, J., refers to a decision of the Privy Council as being opposed to the rule. That appears to be the case of Rajlaxi Debia v. Gakul Chandra Chowdhry (3 B. L. R., P. C., 57, 12 W. R. P. C., 47; 13 Moore's I. A., 228), where their Lordships say that the consent of kindred must generally be understood to be all those who are not likely to be interested in disputing the transaction. But they do not decide that all possible reversioners must consent. [PIGOT, J., referred to Ram Chunder

Poddar v. Hari Das Sen (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 463), Varjivan Rangji v. Ghelji Gokaldas (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 563), Sia Dasi v. Gur Sahai (I. L. R., 3 All., 362,)]

Pigot, J.—I need not detail the form in which this matter now comes before me. It appears sufficiently from the pleadings and affidavits in the present case and from the pleadings in the former case from which this case springs.

The plaintiffs seek to restrain the defendant Kally Doss from executing a decree of this Court in a suit brought by him against the defendant Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee on the ground that the decree in that suit was obtained by collusion between her and Kally Doss.

The first point taken by the defendant is, that the plaintiffs are clothed with no right such as to entitle them to maintain their suit at all, on the ground that the suit instituted by Peary [230] Mohun against Kally Doss and Sreemutty Mohamoyee Dabee to set aside the decree in the before-mentioned suit was compromised in such a manner as entirely to bar the plaintiffs' rights in respect of her deceased husband, Monohur Mookerjee, inasmuch as the consent decree obtained in that suit amounted in effect to a disposition by the widow and next reversioner (to use the inaccurate but generally used phrase of the estate so as entirely to defeat the right of persons subsequent to that reversioner, and in support of that proposition the case of Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (Boul., 120) and Gunga Pershad Kuri v. Shumbhunath Burmun (22 W. R., 393) and other authorities have been relied upon. I refrain from detailing those authorities, because deciding this matter as I now do before the conclusion of Mr. Pugh's address, I desire to leave it open to counsel in case of an appeal to rely not only on those cases, but on others which he may find necessary to refer to having regard to the opinion I have thrown out

Were it necessary to decide whether or not an alienation by a widow and next reversioner without the consent of subsequent reversioners is binding on them, I am ready to decide the negative of that proposition, and as authority I refer to Varjivan Rangji v. Ghelji Gokaldas (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 563), Gouri Dat v. Gur Sahai (I. L. R., 2 All., 41), and Sia Dasi v. Gur Sahai (I. L. R., 3 All., 362) in the matter of which cases, it was, as I think correctly, thrown out by the Court that the law could not be considered as settled in favour of the law as contended for by Mr. Pugh. I follow the Bombay case as expressly negating that proposition, and it appears to me difficult to meet the argument suggested by Mr. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law, s. 547: "It must be remembered that where an estate is held by a female, no one has a vested interest in the succession. Of several persons then living, one may be the next heir in the sense that, if he lives, he will take at her death in preference to any one else then in existence. But his claim may pass away by his own death, or be defeated by the birth or adoption of one who would be nearer than himself. It certainly does seem to be common sense that the person who turns out to be the actual reversioner should not find his rights [231] signed away by the consent of one who when he consented had a preferable title in expectation, but who in the actual event proved to have no title at all." I can see no answer to that argument in justice, and I do not think that the authorities as they now stand would bear me out in dissenting from it. I am not unconscious of the deep respect to be paid to the Judge who decided the case of Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (Boul., 120). But that case was decided before the expression of opinion by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Rajlaxmi Debia v. Gakul Chandra Chowdhry (3 B. L. R. P. C., 57; 12 W. R. P. C., 47, 13 Moore's I. A., 228), which is relied upon by SARGENT, C.J., in the Bombay case, and last, but not least important, in the expression of doubt as to the proposition now under discussion, expressed by GARTH, C.J., and FIELD, J., in Ram Chunder Poddar v. Hari Das Sen (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 463).

I have said that so far as necessary I decide the proposition in the negative, but I must add that under the circumstances of this case, had I acceded to Mr. Pugh's proposition, which I do not, I should still continue the injunction to the hearing. It appears to me, for reasons I shall refer to presently, that it is important to the parties that the property should be preserved to the hearing, and that it is not contrary to the law of the Court under those circumstances to grant the injunction (His Lordship then dealt with the facts of the case and continued) In the face of those facts it would be an entire absence of the discretion of the Court to remove the protection which an injunction places over the property until the truth or falsehood of the grave charges against these two persons shall have been investigated by oral evidence. It appears to me that neither in law nor on facts such as can be established by affidavit should I be justified in releasing the property from the injunction. But, of course, in doing this I must not be taken as expressing any opinion as to the truth or falsehood of the plaintiffs' case.

Hindu law—Inheritance—Succession of adopted son on the mother's side

An adopted son under the law prevailing in Bengal occupies, as regards inheritance, the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural born son (except in a few instances defined in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa) succeeding collaterally as well as lineally, his relations by adoption Pudma Kumari Devi Choudhary v The Court of Wards (I. L. R., 8 Cal , 802 , s c., L. R , 8 I A , 229), referred to and followed Where a natural-born son, had there been one, would have been entitled to succeed a maternal uncle, as being brother's daughter's son to the latter, held, that an adopted son, who had been adopted by a widow under her deceased husband's authority, was entitled, in like manner to inherit, at the death of the widow, from her father's brother.

APPEAL from a decree (21st June 1880) of a Full Bench of the High Court (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 256), reversing a decree (31st May 1878) of the Officiating Additional Judge of the Rajshahye District, which affirmed a decree (20th December 1877) of the Second Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought for the possession of a share in a family estate in lands situate in the Pubna zillah, the plaintiff claiming to inherit in the family of a widow who had adopted him under the authority of her deceased husband. The widow died in 1872, before her mother, who lived till 1873, and who had inherited from her son in 1816, the share which, with additions to it, her daughter's adopted son now claimed. The defendants were grandsons of the widow's father's brother, as shown by the following pedigree table:—

died many years ago.

Bhobani, widow of Kristonath, having inherited from Mokund Nath, continued for some years joint with Kalinath, her deceased husband's brother, and before the death of the latter had separated from the rest of the family.

After Kalinath's death his son Mothooranath, father of the present appellants, held jointly with Bhobani, these two becoming separate in 1852, and specifying their shares in an "ansha patro."

In 1873 Bhobani died, having survived by one year her daughter Hurrosoondery Debia, who had been married to Joy Sunker Surma Moitra. He died without issue in 1843, having given, as was alleged, the authority under which his widow adopted the plaintiff in or about 1852.

In December 1876 the plaintiff, who had received the name of Uma Sunker Moitra, made the present claim to the estate of which Bhobani, his maternal grandmother by adoption, had been in possession. The plaint classified in three schedules the properties comprised in that estate, the first and second containing what the plaintiff alleged to have jointly belonged to Bhobani and Kalinath after their separation from the rest of the family, and the third referring to property acquired by Bhobani and Mothooranath while joint.

The defence was that Hurrosoondery Debia had not obtained any permission, either real or written, from her husband to adopt a son, nor had she adopted the plaintiff.

Also that by the shastras an adopted son could not inherit in the manner claimed.

Issues having been fixed on these points, the Second Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye found that the plaintiff had been duly adopted by Hurrosoondery under power given to her by her husband. But [231] he held that, by Hindu law as declared in Morun Moyee Debeah v. Bejoy Krishto Gossamee (W R F. B. 121), an adopted son did not inherit from the relatives of his adoptive mother. The suit was therefore dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, the defendants filing a cross appeal against the finding of the adoption. Both appeals were dismissed by the Officiating Additional Judge.

On an appeal to the High Court, a Divisional Bench (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) referred to a Full Bench the question of the plaintiff's right to inherit in the family of his adoptive mother, citing the abovementioned Morun Moyee Debeah v. Bejoy Krishto Gossamee (W R F B. 121) as against the right claimed, and the case of Puddokumarce Debia v. Juggut Kishore Acharjee (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 615) as in favour of it.

The Judgment of the Full Bench (GARTH, C J., and JACKSON, MORRIS, MITTER, and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J., to the effect that the weight of authority supported the proposition that an adopted son takes, according to the Hindu law prevailing in Bengal, by inheritance from the relatives of his adoptive mother. The judgment of the Full Bench is reported in the Indian Law Reports, 6 Cal 256.

The decrees of the lower Courts were accordingly reversed. In review, afterwards, the amount of the share in the family property allowed to the plaintiff was modified, the present appeal including both decrees.

Mr. J. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondent.

For the appellants it was argued that the present case was not governed by the decision in Pudmakumari Debia v The Court of Wards. In the latter case the question had been raised whether the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased whose estate was in dispute had a title as heir nearer than the maternal grandfather's grandnephew. The adopted son in that case [233] made his first step in tracing his title through his adopted father, and he was held entitled to succeed his adoptive father's daughter's son. That decision, however, must be understood secundum materiam, and would not apply where, as here, the adoptive son claimed at once through his adoptive mother. It had not yet been held that an adopted son could claim through the adopting widow without tracing through his adoptive father. The right of the adopted son to succeed in the family of his adoptive father's widow might be attributed to the widow's being regarded as a surviving part of the husband himself. To his gotra she belonged. The act of the widow in adopting was the husband's act, and she was only the instrument. Thus it was that the widow, though a minor, could adopt. See 2 Macnaghten's Hindu Law, chapter VI, case 5, and the Vyavastha Darpana, 521. Where there were more wives than one the adopted son became the son of all, and not of one wife specially. So that doubts must exist as to the right on the part of the adopted son to inherit from the widow apart from inheriting through his adoptive father. Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—This suit was brought by the respondent against the appellant to recover certain property which he claimed [236] as an adopted son. The former owner of the property was Kristonath, who died in 1815, leaving a widow, Bhobani, and a son who died in the following year unmarried and a daughter Hurrosoondery who was married to Joy Sunker Surma, and died in April 1872. Bhobani died on the 1st of December 1873, and the respondent claimed to be entitled to the property on her death, as having been adopted by Hurrosoondery, with the permission of her husband, who died in 1843. The appellants are the sons of Mothooranath, the original defendant, who died pending the suit. He was the nephew of Kristonath, and took possession of the property on the death of Bhobani.

It was satisfactorily proved that Hurrosoondery adopted the respondent and performed the requisite ceremonies in 1854, having previously adopted a son, who died in October 1850, and the questions in this appeal are:—

(1) Whether Hurrosoondery had the permission from her husband to adopt, which is required by the law of Bengal, and

(2) Whether the respondent, as an adopted son, can succeed to the property in suit.

The Subordinate Judge held that an authenticated copy of a written permission, purporting to be executed by Joy Sunker, empowering Hurrosoondery to adopt three sons in succession, was admissible in evidence. The Appellate Court held that it was not admissible, as there was no evidence that a search was made for the original. It is not necessary to decide which is right, as their Lordships are of opinion that there is sufficient evidence of the permission without the copy. A hebanama, or deed of gift, executed by Joy Sunker in favour of Hurrosoondery contains a statement that he had executed in her favour a deed of permission to adopt. In the deed by which the first adopted son was given in adoption by his mother to Hurrosoondery there is this passage:—"Your husband, Joy Sunker Moitra, being without issue, gave you during his lifetime permission to adopt a son, and has since died." This deed is witnessed by Mothooranath. And in his deposition taken in the suit he admits that "the respondent was treated and acted as a son to Hurrosoondery, calling her mother, and Bhobani grandmother, and Mothooranath himself 'mama' or maternal [237] uncle, and he answered accordingly." There is, therefore, no ground for setting aside the findings of the lower Courts that there was a valid adoption.

As to the second question, their Lordships have held in Padma Kumari Debia v. The Court of Wards (L. R., 8 L. A., 229. I. L. R., 8 Cal. 302), that an adopted son succeeds not only lineally, but collaterally, to the inheritance of his relatives by adoption. In that case the claimant was the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased, and it was argued for the appellant that it was distinguishable from this case. But their Lordships laid down that an adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural-born son, except in a few instances, which are accurately defined both in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa. That this is the Hindu law is shown by the careful examination of the authorities by the learned Native Judge who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench of the High Court, which is the subject of this appeal. The respondent claims to succeed as being the daughter's son, and consequently the heir of his maternal uncle at the death of the widow, which he would be if he were a natural-born son, and as an adopted son he is in the same position. This is clear from the Dattaka Mimamsa, s. 6, p. 50, where it is said "The forefathers of the adoptive mother only are also the maternal-grandsons of sons given and the rest, for the rule regarding paternal is equally applicable to maternal grand-sires (of adopted sons)." Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the High Court in favour of the respondent is right, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty that it should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed, and the appellant will pay the costs of it.

Appeal dismissed.

[I. EFFECT OF ADOPTION, AS REGARDS STATUS IN THE ADOPTED FAMILY—

The adopted son is, in all respects like a natural son except to the extent defined in the texts —10 Cal 232 affirming 6 Cal 256, 8 Cal. 302. Thus, he can succeed as the daughter's son (9 Cal 70), as the sister's son (10 Cal 232), collaterally as bandhu 17 Cal 518, lineally as a sakulya or samanodaka (6 Cal 289).

The grandson by an adopted son is a grandson equally with the grandsons by a legitimate son, though the extent of his share relatively to them may differ —(1905) 1 C L J 388 (400).

On account of this identity between the natural born son and the adopted son, a daughter, having adopted a son, may be entitled to take a bequest limited to 'daughters with sons' — (1906) 33 Cal 947 10 C W N 695, 3 C L J 502. The inferiority of shares of the adopted son does not obtain as against other collateral heirs —(1881) 9 C L R 373, 8 C L R 57. Having regard to the fact of only one man succeeding to an impartible estate, and to the fact that an adopted son is but the substitute for an aurasa son and occupies an inferior position relatively to him, the Madras High Court upheld the claims of the legitimate son born after the adoption, to succeed to an impartible estate subject to the law of primogeniture —17 Mad 422.

II. THE AUTHORITY OF THE DATTAKA CHANDRIKA AND THE DATTAKA MIMAMSA

Najban Bibi.....Defendant

versus

Chand Bibi.....Plaintiff.

[On appeal from the Court of the Commissioner of the Sitapur Division of Oudh.]

Grant—Construction of gift—Resumption—Tribal custom—Evidence of intention.

In view of the circumstances under which an oral lease of villages at a favourable rate of rent and of indefinite duration, was made by the proprietor, a talukdar, in favour of her daughter, it was held not to be a lease for life, but to be resumable at the lessor's pleasure.

The parties belonged to a tribe (Ahban), appearing to be Mahomedan, but in regard to inheritance and maintenance, having customs of its own, which permitted the resumption.

There was no evidence of the lessor's intention contemporaneous with the making of the lease, but her will executed within two years after and made known to the Government to show the future succession to the taluk, contained a bequest of the same village to the lessee, with express reservation of power to alter this disposition. Held, that this was evidence bearing on the question of intention.

APPEAL from a decree (26th March 1879) of the Commissioner of the Sitapur Division of Oudh, confirming a decree (30th July 1878) of the Settlement Officer of Kheri.

The plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arose sued in the Settlement Court of the Kheri District, claiming as proprietor to recover possession of four villages from the defendant, stating that in the Fasli year 1267 (A. D. 1859-60), she had temporarily leased the villages in dispute to the defendant, her daughter, a widow then without means, on favourable terms for her support, but had afterwards cancelled that lease.

For the defence the right of the plaintiff to resume was denied, and a title to these villages founded on a division of the family estate made by the defendant's brother, Asmatulla Khan, since deceased, was alleged. It was also contended that the plaintiff had become, constructively, a trustee of these villages for the defendant, the latter having been induced by her to consent to the settlement being made with her in A. D. 1858, corresponding to 1266 Fasli.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in the Settlement Court, which [239] was confirmed by the Commissioner on appeal, the following statement of the facts being given in his judgment —

"Madar Buksh was the talukdar of Kotwara, Mussamut Chand Bibi (the plaintiff) was his wife, and Mussamut Najban Bibi (the defendant) was their daughter. Madar Buksh died about the time of the annexation of Oudh, and if after that event, too soon for the summary settlement to have been made with him. His eldest son having died before his father, the first summary settlement was made with the second son Asmatulla Khan who was killed during the mutiny in 1265 Fasli. In consequence, the second summary settlement, that of 1266 Fasli, was made with the plaintiff. Her name is in the general list of talukdars prepared under Act I of 1869, and in the subordinate list No. II, which declares the taluka to descend one and undivided. The defendant married one Karamatulla Khan who died in 1265 Fasli, and after his death she lived with her late husband's family up to 1267 Fasli, when finding that her husband's brothers sought to deprive her of her husband's share of the common property, she went to live with her mother at Kotwara. Since 1267 Fasli, the defendant has been in possession of the four villages forming the subject of this suit. In 1269 Fasli, in consequence of a circular issued by the Deputy Commissioner under the orders of the Local Government, the plaintiff made a will, in which she bequeathed the said villages to defendant. She did not specify in the will whether they were to be defendant's for life or for ever, but she directed the defendant was to pay whatever Government revenue might be assessed on the villages to the talukdar in whose kabuliati they were to remain. In this will the plaintiff reserved the right to revoke it or to alter it at her pleasure. This will was duly registered. In the year 1285 Fasli, however, the plaintiff had become displeased with her daughter, the defendant, and she executed a codicil to the will in which she revoked the grant of the four villages in defendant's favour."

The Commissioner also found, in concurrence with the Settlement Officer, that there was no evidence showing that the defendant had obtained possession of the four villages in dispute upon a division by Asmatulla Khan, or before 1267 Fasli, or had any title to them independently of the lease. He confirmed the find-[240]ing that the parties were of the tribe of Ahban Thakurs according to whose customs, they being an old Hindu clan, the mother was not bound to provide maintenance for her daughter.

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. Theodore Thomas, for the Appellant, argued that, there being no evidence of the terms of the lease, the presumption was that it was for the life of the lessee. The alleged special customs had no application to the rights of the parties. The case did not fall within s. 52 of Act XVII of 1876 (The Oudh Land-revenue Act, 1876),* which also provided in s. 53 a special procedure; nor could the right to resume be claimed under any other law.

Mr. R. V. Doyne for the respondent was not called upon.

Sir A. Hobhouse.—The single question in this appeal is whether a lease or gift made orally, and for indefinite duration, by one of the parties to the other, is a lease for life, or a lease or gift resumable either at the pleasure of the lessor or upon notice.

With respect to any difference between resumption at will and resumption upon notice no question has been raised, and it would seem, from the state of the pleadings, that no question could be raised, because in the plaint it is stated that the defendant, who is the lessee, was informed by the lessor of her intention to cancel the lease, and that she resisted the action, and no issue is taken upon that statement.

The parties stand in the relation of mother and daughter, and the circumstances under which the gift was made are these. The mother is the talukdar of a taluk containing a number of villages. The daughter married and became a widow. For some time she lived with her husband's family. She then quarrelled with them, and it would seem that they deprived her of her share of the husband's property, upon which she came to her mother in destitute circumstances, and her mother gave her the property in question by way of maintenance. The parties belong to the tribe of the Ahbans, who appear to be Mahomedans, but with several customs of their own, and it would seem that their law of inheritance and their law of maintenance is a tribal law.

[241] Now, in the first place, it is to be observed that the mother, the plaintiff below, is only seeking to resume that which is a portion of her taluk. Prima facie she has a right to do that, and it is incumbent upon the person who is resisting the resumption to show a good title against the talukdar. The question is whether the defendant, who sets up this gift or lease, has shown such a title.

There was a great deal of evidence given in the Court below as to the customs of the Ahbans. The evidence principally related to the custom of inheritance, because the defendant set up a title either by inheritance, or by the law of succession mixed up with the allegation of a will in her favour. Those issues have been found against her in the Courts below, and there is no dispute about them now. But besides the evidence of the customs which relate to inheritance or succession, several witnesses have said that where a gift is made by way of maintenance it is a gift resumable by the grantor. It appears to their Lordships that both Courts have found in favour of that evidence. There is none the other way. The only witness who speaks as to the non-resumability of such grants, speaks of grants made to a daughter of the family by way of dowry and upon marriage. Both the Courts below, as their Lordships read the judgments, have found in favour of the power of resumption. The Settlement Officer says, speaking of the gift to the defendant. "It is shown to be now, and was so from the first, a lease to her for her maintenance, and therefore resumable at the pleasure of the proprietor of the estate." That is in accordance with the evidence, and then Lordships read that, not as a conclusion of law found by the Judge himself, but as his interpretation of the evidence. The Commissioner says this. First he finds that, according to the custom of the Ahbans, the defendant would have no right to maintenance from her mother. He then adds "Defendant has therefore no claim, either by custom or by special necessity, to the continuance, of this grant, which it appears to me cannot be regarded as anything but a compassionate allowance for her maintenance, granted by her mother under peculiar circumstances, which now no longer exist." Then he goes on to say that if it had been made in money there could be no doubt [242] that it could have been stopped, and it cannot make any difference that the mother had followed the common custom of giving a beneficial interest in land instead of an allowance in money. He further shows that the old native custom always recognized a right of resumption on the part of the talukdar even in cases of maintenance proper, though he says it was exercised with a great deal of discretion in a gradual and merciful way, so that the whole of the resumption did not fall upon a single generation. But, he argues, if the right of resumption existed in cases where there was a right to maintenance, much more would it exist in such a case as this, where there is no right to maintenance at all.

Therefore both Courts have found that by the tribal custom the right to resumption exists, and it appears to their Lordships that such is the fair effect of the evidence on the subject.

Then there is another piece of evidence which is not without bearing upon the plaintiff's right to resume. In answer to the circular sent out by the Government talukdars, desiring to know who were their successors, the plaintiff followed the not uncommon course of making what was called a will by way of pointing out to the Government who the successor was. In that will she appoints as her general successor her grandson, Raza Hussain, but she states that "those entitled to any rights will continue to enjoy those respective rights in accordance with the details recorded herein." Then she goes on to say. "Until I die I have the right of revoking and confirming, and of decreasing and increasing and of altering." So that, although she states that certain persons have rights, she at the same moment asserts her own right of altering those dispositions if she pleases. Now among those rights are four villages to be held by the defendant, and it is stated again that "these four villages will remain with the defendant with the Government jumma upon them," and so forth. There we have stated on the face of a formal document, put in for the purpose of informing the Government of the state of this taluk, that the talukdar then claimed the entire right of altering the disposition of these very four villages.

[243] Such evidence is by no means conclusive, and under some circumstances it might be worthless or even inadmissible. But in this case we have absolutely no evidence of the intention of the donor, which is contemporaneous with the gift. The will was made within two years, at the longest, after the gift, and many years before the events which led to its revocation. Under such circumstances a formal declaration by the donor as to the positions of herself and the donee with reference to the gift ought not to be disregarded.

In the year 1876 the plaintiff made what is called a codicil to her will, and thereby revoked the gift to her daughter.

At that time the circumstances in which her daughter was, had very much altered for the better, and the relations between the mother and the daughter had altered too, but for the worse. We have, however, no concern with the reasons given by the mother for altering her dispositions. The fact is that she claimed the full right of altering them, and she has chosen to do so. Having altered them, she brought this action for possession, and it has been decided that she has the power of resumption. For the reasons above given their Lordships entirely agree with the decision of the Courts below.

Something has been said as to the effect of s. 52 of Act XVII of 1876, the "Oudh Revenue Act," but it does not appear to have been the ground of the decision in the Courts below, nor to have been much discussed, and their Lordships express no opinion about it.

The result is that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to that effect.

Sale in execution of decree—Share in joint family property—Family dwelling-house—Service rents—Right of purchaser

Where the interest of one of several joint tenants in a family dwelling-house and in certain lands let out on service tenure, is sold in execution, the purchaser is entitled to joint possession of the dwelling-house with the other shareholders and also to a right to share in the service rents.

Kowar Byor Kesal Roy v. Samasundari (B L. R. Sup Vol 172, 2 W R. Mis., 30) commented on

THE plaintiffs on the 17th July 1867 purchased at an execution sale 1 anna 3 gundas 2 cowries 2 krants in a certain taluka belonging to the Biswas family; and on the 17th Srabun 1275 they took symbolical possession through the Court, but on attempting to take actual possession of a part of their purchase, they were obstructed and prevented by the defendants (the judgment-debtors) from so doing. On part of the land so purchased, the family dwelling-house of the defendants was situate, another part of the land claimed was let out on lease to certain tenants on service tenures. In three other suits the plaintiffs claimed possession of certain tenanted land and of lands which the tenant had relinquished, and on which one of the defendants had built a house. The plaintiffs, therefore, on the 12th July 1879, brought these suits against the defendants (the judgment-debtors and the rest of the Biswas family and the trespasser) to recover khas possession of the properties, praying for their share in the family dwelling-house and for a share in the rents in the tenanted properties, and for wasilat. The defendants pleaded limitation, and stated that some of the lands [245] claimed did not belong to the taluk claimed. The suits were heard together.

The Munsiff found that the suits were not barred, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the properties sued for, but held that they were not entitled to khas possession, and gave them a share in the rental of the family dwelling-house and in the other lands in dispute, leaving the amount of wasilat to be ascertained in execution of the decree. The defendants appealed, and the plaintiffs brought a cross-appeal as to the question of khas possession to the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the defendants' appeal, and decided that the plaintiffs were entitled to khas possession, and were entitled to joint possession with the Biswas family in the family dwelling-house, and to a declaration of their rights to receive rents of the properties claimed.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Srinath Dass and Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose for the Respondents

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACLEAN, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—These are four cases, in which somewhat similar claims were made by the plaintiffs.

At an auction sale in execution, the plaintiffs purchased the right, title and interest of the defendants Nos 1 and 2, who are members of the Biswas family, in certain property, which those defendants were jointly entitled to, and in possession of, with the other Biswas defendants, and amongst other lands, which were included in the purchase, was the right, title and interest of the defendants 1 and 2 in the joint family dwelling-house.

Other portions of the family property consisted of lands let out to tenants, whilst others again were held by one or two of the Biswas defendants in rather a peculiar way, which I shall presently explain.

At present we will deal with one of the cases only (No. 738), which relates to the joint family dwelling-house, and to one or [246] two plots of land which were held by tenants of the family on service tenure.

The Munsiff held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to be put into joint possession of the dwelling-house with the rest of the Biswas family, but only to receive what would be a fair rent for the interest which they had bought in it.

The Subordinate Judge thought otherwise. He decreed that the plaintiffs were entitled to be put into joint possession with the other Biswas defendants of the family dwelling-house, and also that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive their share of the service rents of the other plots.

It has been contended before us that the Subordinate Judge was wrong, and that when the interest of one of several joint tenants in a family dwelling-house is sold in execution, the purchaser is not entitled, as a matter of law, to joint possession of the dwelling-house with the other shareholders.

We know of no law which justifies this contention. We find, on the contrary, that, in order to obviate the inconvenience which would arise from strangers being thus introduced into a joint family dwelling-house, the Code of Civil Procedure (see s. 310*) gives the other shareholders under such circumstances a right of pre-emption of the property.

If the other shareholders do not choose to avail themselves of this right, the law must take its course, and the purchaser has the same right of joint possession as the shareholder whose property he buys.

This is what the Subordinate Judge has decided, and we think he is right.

We have been referred to a Full Bench decision upon this point—Kowar Bijoi Kesal Roy v. Samasundari (B. L. R. Sup. Vol 172; 2 W. R. Mis., 30)—in which the Judges appear to have differed in opinion, and Mr Justice KEMP took a somewhat peculiar view of the law. The rest of the Judges seemed to think that a purchaser under such circumstances was entitled to possession of the interest which he bought, but that an Ameen might be directed in the execution proceedings to make a partition between the purchaser and the other joint share-[247]holders. But, so far as we are aware, there is no provision in the present case, which would justify the Court in ordering such a partition.

Then, with regard to the other plots, it is said that the Subordinate Judge was wrong, because the rents of those plots were in the nature of service rents. But whether they were or no, we think that the plaintiffs were entitled to their share of them. If the plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession of the family dwelling-house with the others, it may be that the services to be rendered by way of rent would be quite as beneficial to them as to the other shareholders.

Then, as regards appeals Nos 733 and 734, the state of things was this. that in one of those cases some seven years ago, and in the other, some three or four years ago, the ryots had relinquished possession of a portion of the joint property, and one of the defendants had wrongfully (so far as appears) taken possession of that property, and had been in possession ever since. The plaintiffs' prayer being that they should be restored to possession of those properties conjointly with the Biswas defendants, the Subordinate Judge has given them a decree to that effect, we see no reason to dissent from that decree.

With regard to the last case, No 739, it differs from the two last in this respect: that there the ryots had also relinquished a portion of the joint property, and one of the Biswas defendants had built a house upon it, in which he was living, and the order which had been made by the Subordinate Judge is, that the plaintiffs should be entitled to a reasonable rent for their share of the plot upon which the house was built. They would certainly either be entitled to that rent, or else to joint possession of the land on which the house is built; and probably the order which the Subordinate Judge has made is more favourable to the other defendants than it ought to be. At any rate, as a matter of equity and fairness, we think that those defendants have no reason to complain of the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

All four appeals, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

NOTES

[The C P. C 1908 O 21 & 35 contains a new provision in sub-clause (2) whereby "when a decree is for the joint possession of immoveable property such possession shall be delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming by beat of drum, or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree.]"

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL.

Evidence—Jumma-wasil-baki papers—Right of witness preparing them to refresh his memory from them.

Jumma-wasil-baki papers are not admissible as independent evidence of the amount of rent mentioned therein, but it is perfectly right that a person who has prepared such jumma-wasil-baki papers on receiving payment of the rents, should refresh his memory from such papers when giving evidence as to the amount of rent payable.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent brought by the plaintiff against the defendants. The plaintiff contended that the annual rental was Rs. 31-8-0, whilst the defendant contended that it was Rs. 25-13-0 only.

The Munsiff gave the plaintiff a decree slightly in modification of the amount claimed.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who found that witness No. 1 on the plaintiff's side could not speak with certainty as to the amount of rent received by him for the plaintiff, in former years, without referring to the jumma-wasil-baki papers which had been written out by him at the time of receiving rent, and held that no weight could be attached to the evidence of this witness, as the jumma-wasil-baki papers were not independent evidence of themselves, and the witness himself could not speak with certainty. He, therefore, modified the decree of the Munsiff, and gave the plaintiff a decree at the rate which the defendants had stated was the proper rate.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 793 of 1882, against the order of Baboo Raj Chunder Sannyal, Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 21st February 1882, modifying the decree of Baboo Nitogopal Sircar, Officiating Munsiff of Satkania, dated the 22nd January 1881.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Aukil Chunder Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Srinath Banerjee for the Respondents

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by [249] Garth, C.J.—We regret very much that we find it necessary to remand this case, but we do so, because we are led to believe, from what the Subordinate Judge himself says, that he has made a mistake in applying the rules which have been laid down by this Court with reference to the use of jumma-wasil-baki papers.

There were two questions in the case. first, with regard to the rate of rent which the defendants had to pay, and, secondly, with regard to the appropriation of the payments.

We need not say anything as to the latter point, because we think that the Subordinate Judge was substantially right in the way in which he appropriated the payments.

But with regard to the first point, the Subordinate Judge says that he cannot believe the first witness who is called for the plaintiffs, because he is unable to say what is the amount of rent which he realized from the defendant in the year 1241, without referring to the jumma-wasil-baki papers.

Now we have had the evidence of this witness read, and it appears that he prepared the jumma-wasil-baki papers and collected the rents himself, and yet the Subordinate Judge thinks that he had no right to refer to the papers, to see how much he collected from the defendants.

Of course, if he collected the rents, and put down the amounts collected in these papers, he had a perfect right, in giving his evidence, to refer to the papers to refresh his memory as to the amount of the rent which he received. It must be almost impossible for any tahsildar, employed to collect rent in this way, to say what amount of rent he received in each year from a large number of tenants, unless he refers to his books, and therefore to disbelieve a man, because he is obliged to refer to his papers, is obviously wrong. Upon this ground alone we think it right to send the case back for re-trial.

Of course, the credibility of the witnesses is a question for the Subordinate Judge, and if he had disbelieved this witness or any other for a sufficient reason, we could not have interfered.

But as on the one hand we are bound to see that no improper use is made of these wasil-baki papers, so on the other we are bound to see that witnesses are allowed to make a proper use of them.

[250] We, therefore, send the case back for re-trial upon this ground only.

The Subordinate Judge is no doubt perfectly right in saying that jumma-wasil-baki papers are not admissible as independent evidence taken by themselves, but when a witness is called, and he refreshes his memory from them, that is not independent evidence, and to use such papers for such a purpose is perfectly legitimate.

The costs of this appeal will abide the event.

Case remanded.

Notwithstanding the provisions of s. 48 of the Registration Act, a party who purchases, even under a registered deed of sale, with notice of a prior agreement for sale of the same property, will not be allowed to retain the property as against the person claiming under the prior agreement

Solano v. Lala Ram Lal (7 C. L. R., 481) followed; Fuzluddeen Khan v. Fakir Mohamed Khan (1 L. R., 5 Cal., 336, 4 C. L. R., 257) distinguished.

ON the 5th Aghran 1287 (29th November 1880) the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 verbally agreed with the plaintiff to sell him a five-anna share in certain properties for Rs. 95, and received Rs. 10 as earnest money on the bargain. A few days subsequent to this agreement the defendant No. 1 wrote out a contract of sale, and the plaintiff tendered the balance of the consideration money. The defendants, however, refused to receive the money and sign the contract on sundry pretences, and eventually, on the 13th Aghran 1287 (7th December 1880) sold the property to defendant No. 4 (who was aware of the agreement made with the plaintiff) under a registered deed of sale.

[251] The plaintiff, therefore, brought this suit against the four defendants for specific performance of their oral agreement.

The defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 contended that no bainama had been made with the plaintiff, and that there was no agreement to be enforced, and denied the advance of Rs. 10. Defendant No. 4 set up his registered deed of sale.

The Munsif found that the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 had entered into a legal oral contract with the plaintiff, and had received Rs. 10 as earnest money thereon, and set aside the kobala made between the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 and directed the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to execute their contract with the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who agreed with the finding of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1174 of 1882 against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Gangooly, First Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 6th April 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Krishno Behari Mookerjee, First Munsif of Mauickgunge, dated the 25th August 1881.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose for the Appellants.

Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and O'KINEALY, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—We think that this appeal should be dismissed.

The plaintiff brought this suit for specific performance of an oral agreement for the purchase of the property, and it was decided by the Court below that he was entitled to a decree as against the defendant No 4, who with full notice of the agreement, has subsequently bought the property from the other defendants, and had registered his purchase deed.

It is contended by the appellant that this decision was wrong. But we find that the very point has been considered by Justices MITTER and MACLEAN in the case of Solano v. Lala Ram Lal (7 C. L. R., 481) and decided against the appellant's view.

Those learned Judges founded their decision upon the general doctrine of equity, which had been previously acted upon in several cases in this Court, and which has been always recognized in England, that notwithstanding the provisions of the Registration Act, a party who purchases, even under a registered deed, [252] with notice of a prior agreement for sale, shall not be allowed to retain the property as against the person claiming under the prior agreement.

It has been argued that Mr Justice PONTIFEX, in the case of Fuzludeen Khan v. Fakir Mohamed Khan (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 336; 4 C. L. R., 257) has expressed an opinion adverse to that adopted by Justices MITTER and MACLEAN. But it will be found that the equitable doctrine upon which those learned Judges acted did not apply to the last-mentioned case at all.

It is true that in the course of his judgment Mr Justice PONTIFEX used some expressions which might be construed in favour of the appellant's argument, but those expressions were not material for the purposes of the case, because both he and I distinctly decided that no notice was proved.

The very principle, therefore, upon which Mr. Justice MITTER's judgment proceeds was inapplicable to the case decided by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX and myself.

It appears also that Mr. Justice MITTER's view is supported by a decision of the Bombay Court—Panha Khamaji v. Fatta Upaji (12 Bom H. C., 179).

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT.

MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

Johur Mull Khoorba

*versus*Tarankisto Deb and others.¹

Sale in execution of decree—Certificate of purchase by Registrar—Conveyance—Suit for partition—Declaration of right to share—Rules of Court, 415, 431.

The position of a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree of the High Court after he has obtained a certificate from the Registrar under Rule 415 of the Rules of Court, is that of a person clothed with a right to a conveyance in virtue of a contract, he does not hold, save as regards the parties to the contract of sale, the position of an owner. When the sale is confirmed the purchaser is entitled to conveyance, and until he obtains a conveyance the property in the estate purchased does not, having regard to Rule 431, pass to him so as to give him rights as against parties not bound by the decree under which the sale took place. All that passes to him as [253] against the defendant in that suit is an equitable estate and a right to a conveyance of the property. And, therefore, as the estate in the property purchased has not passed, the purchaser is not entitled to maintain a suit for partition. In such a suit he could not on partition give a good conveyance to the parties interested in the estate, nor would he be entitled to a declaration of his share in the property.

THIS was a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to certain property sold by the Court under a decree, and for partition.

The plaint stated that three brothers, Prosunno Narain Deb, Woopendro Narain Deb, and Shib Narain Deb, were jointly entitled to certain properties, and that by deed Prosunno Narain and Shib Narain each conveyed a one-sixth share in the properties to Woopendro Narain. On the 29th of May 1875, Woopendro Narain mortgaged his share in the properties. The mortgagee on the 19th of May 1876 obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged properties.

On the 7th of June 1879 the properties were put up for sale in lots by the Registrar, and the present plaintiff purchased some of the lots, and obtained a certificate that he was the purchaser from the Registrar under Rule 415 of the Rules of Court, but no conveyance to him, such as is provided for under Rule 431, was executed. He now sued for a declaration of his rights under the purchase and for a partition, making the various members of the joint family defendants.

Mr. Pault and Mr. Mitter for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. M. P. Gasper for the Defendant, Tarankisto Deb.

Mr. Dutt, Mr. Apcar, Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Agnew and Mr. O'Kinealy for the other Defendants.

Mr. Mitter tendered the Registrar's certificate as showing the plaintiff's title.

* Note.—In this case the plaintiff preferred an appeal, which was dismissed on the 28th of January 1884, the appellant not appearing.

Mr. Bonnerjee objected. The proper proof is the conveyance under Rule 431. The preliminary steps are not evidence; they would only be relevant if an objection was taken to the validity of the conveyance. The certificate is merely proof of a right to a conveyance. It is the conveyance that vests the property, not the sale.

Mr. Mitter.—The certificate is part of the plaintiff's title, it shows what properties were sold and who was the purchaser [254] [PIGOT, J.—The question is whether the property was assigned, and the way to prove that is by the assignment] No conveyance is necessary. The plaintiff was declared to be the purchaser by the Registrar, and the certificate is relevant as showing that. [PIGOT, J.—The fact that the plaintiff was the purchaser and paid the deposit does not give him a title, Rule 431.¹ A conveyance is not made absolutely necessary by the Rules. A sale certificate is necessary, because possession cannot be given without it—Civil Procedure Code, s. 318. If the purchaser by accepting the title and paying the purchase-money can claim possession, why should a conveyance be necessary? The parties are Hindus, and no conveyance is necessary, the property passed as soon as the money was paid, and the plaintiff declared to be the purchaser. A sale certificate when confirmed passes the property—Tara Prasad Mytee v Nund Kishore Giri (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 482)]

Rule 408 provides that the Registrar shall make an entry in his note-book declaring the highest bidder to be the purchaser, and when that is certified it is conclusive under Rule 564.

Pigot, J.—The plaintiff claims as a purchaser of the share and interest of Woopendra Narain (who is mentioned in the 7th, 9th, and 14th paragraphs of the plaint) in certain family property in which Woopendra Narain is stated to have had an interest, together with the defendants, or those whom they represent, by inheritance, and also under the provisions of the deed mentioned in the 9th paragraph of the plaint.

Woopendra Narain mortgaged his share in the property (described in the plaint simply as lots one to five), and under a decree in a suit brought on the mortgage, the property mentioned in the mortgage was sold under the Rules for the sale of mortgaged property.

The plaintiff became a purchaser of part of the property at the sale by the Registrar under the decree, and he now prays for a declaration of his rights under the purchase, he submits that he is entitled to specific shares in the properties mentioned, and prays in the alternative for a declaration as to how much he so became entitled to, and for a partition.

[255] The sale took place, as stated in the plaint, under the rules for the sale of mortgaged property. The Registrar certified the result of the sale under Rule 415, and no application appears to have been made to discharge or vary the certificate, which would under Rule 417 be deemed to be confirmed, unless such application were made within the time prescribed by the rules.

But no conveyance, such as is contemplated by Rule 431, was executed. The plaintiff relies upon the certificate issued by the Registrar after the sale by him, and argues that that sale passed the property—no application such as is contemplated by Rule 417 having been made, and the sale mentioned in the certificate having thus become by virtue of that rule confirmed. But I don't think that gives a title such as to enable the plaintiff to maintain this suit. I regard his position as that of a person clothed with a right to a conveyance in virtue of a contract of sale, he does not hold, save as regards the parties to the contract of sale, the position of owner. Here the sale having become confirmed, the purchaser is entitled to a conveyance, and until he obtained a conveyance I do not think that, having regard to Rule 431, the property in the estate purchased passed to him so as to give him rights as against parties not bound by the decree under which the sale took place, and as regards them I consider his position to be analogous to the position of a purchaser as described for instance by COTTENHAM, L. C., in Tasker v. Small (3 M. & Cr. 71, 70).

I have been referred to a case, Tara Prasad Mytee v. Nund Kishore Giri (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 482), decided this year. But I apprehend that the learned Judges in that case said no more than that a sale under the Code of Civil Procedure when confirmed by the Court passes the property.

That decision does not touch this case. Here there was no certificate of sale issued under the Code, and no confirmation of a sale so certified. I learn from the Registrar that Rule 431 was drawn up in contemplation of this point. After consideration by Sir RICHARD COUCH, and the rest of the Court this rule was expressly framed so as to exclude the issue of a certificate under the Code. The result is that there passed to the plaintiff, not the [256] estate in the property purchased, but only as regards the defendant in the suit, an equitable estate and a right to a conveyance of the property.

The estate in the property purchased not having passed to the plaintiff, he is not entitled to maintain a suit for partition. he could not on a partition give a good conveyance to the other parties interested in the estate, nor is he entitled as against them to the declaration prayed for.

The suit is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 12th December, 1883

PRESENT ·

MCDONELL

In the matter of the petition of Kristo Lall Nag ·

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 15 and 40—Interim suspension—Police papers.

Depositions of witnesses, or confessions taken at a Police investigation are not, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, any more the property of the Police than the property of the prisoners, and a pleader is not guilty of misconduct of any kind in making use of such documents for the benefit of his client, when delivered to him by the client however improperly the client may have become possessed of such documents, provided the pleader is neither party nor privy to their obtainment.

The power of interim suspension given under s. 14 (cl. 5) of Act XVIII of 1879 when read with s. 40 of the same Act, can only be exercised after the pleader has been heard in his defence and pending the investigation and orders of the High Court.

* Rule No. 1142 of 1883, against the order of Mr. H. W. Barber, Deputy Magistrate of Noakhally, dated the 30th August 1883.

IN this case one Kristo Lall Nag, a first grade pleader, practising at Noakhally, whilst defending one Chand Myan on a preliminary enquiry into a case of dacoity, put certain questions to the witnesses, which tended to show that he was in possession of copies of certain Police investigation papers. It subsequently was proved that he had in his possession copies of the confessions of two men who were charged jointly with his client. At the preliminary enquiry Chand Myan was discharged, but the other [237] prisoners were committed to the Sessions fixed for the 10th September, and at the Sessions Court Kristo Lall Nag was engaged to defend them.

On the 30th August, Mr Barber the Deputy Magistrate of Noakhally, passed an order calling upon Kristo Lall Nag to appear and show cause why he should not be dismissed or otherwise punished for misconduct in using copies of Police papers, and suspending him, pending the hearing of the rule, from practising as a pleader. This order of suspension was specially sanctioned by the District Magistrate, and an application made to the Sessions Judge against the order was rejected. Mr Ghose, on the 12th September 1883, applied to the High Court for a rule to show cause why the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate should not be set aside on the following grounds —

(1) That the pleader had been guilty of no misconduct, and (2) that the Magistrate had no right to suspend him from practice under the Legal Practitioners Act.

The High Court granted a rule calling upon the Deputy Magistrate to show cause why his interim order of suspension should not be set aside.

It appeared that on the 2nd October 1883, after the granting of the last-mentioned rule and before it came on for hearing, the Deputy Magistrate heard the case against Kristo Lall Nag on the 21st September 1883, and found him guilty of dishonest and unprofessional conduct, and recommended that he should be suspended for one month.

At the hearing of the rule granted by the High Court,

Mr. Ghose and Baboo Kashi Kanto Sen appeared for Kristo Lall Nag.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr Kilby) for the Crown.

The following was the Order passed by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) —

Garth, C. J.—In this case Mr. Ghose applied to this Bench in September last for a rule under the following circumstances —

A preliminary enquiry had taken place at Noakhally before the Deputy Magistrate, Mr Barber, with regard to several persons, who were charged with dacoity. One of the prisoners, [258] Chand Myan, was defended by a first grade pleader, named Kristo Lall Nag, who, in the course of the enquiry, asked questions of the witnesses, which showed that he was in possession of copies of certain Police investigation papers.

It afterwards appeared that he had copies of confessions which had been made to the Police by three of the prisoners (other than the man he was defending) and also copies of depositions of certain witnesses also taken by the Police, and he made use of these copies in conducting his client's case.

As copies of these papers are not allowed by the Police authorities to be given to anybody, the Deputy Magistrate considered that those which the pleader used must have been obtained improperly, if not dishonestly, and after some communication with the Officiating District Magistrate, Mr Cooke, an enquiry was instituted in the Police Office, the result of which was that some of the Mohurrirs employed in that office were punished.

Meanwhile, Chand Myan, the prisoner whom the pleader defended, was discharged by the Deputy Magistrate: but some others of the prisoners were committed for trial upon the charge of dacoity. The Sessions, at which the case was to come on, were fixed for the 10th of September last, and the pleader Kristo Lall Nag was retained to defend some of the prisoners.

In this state of things it seems that on the 30th August, after the enquiry at the Police Office had closed, Mr Barber, the Deputy Magistrate, with the sanction, and apparently by the direction of Mr. Cooke, made an order calling upon the pleader to show cause why he should not be dismissed, or otherwise punished for misconduct in using these copies of the Police papers, and meanwhile suspending him from practice as a pleader.

This order, so far as it is material for our present purpose, was in the following terms —

"In conducting the preliminary enquiry, and while witnesses were being examined against his client, Chand Myan, on the 27th June and 5th July 1883, the pleader asked certain questions, which tended to show that he was in possession of copies of certain Police investigation papers

* [239] "In a subsequent investigation it was proved that he had in his possession copies of the confessions made to the Police by Eda Ghazi, Ram Kanai Jugee and Wajuddin, who were jointly charged with his client, and the depositions taken by the Police of the witnesses, Hasan Ali, Womaid Ali, Abdul and Tita Ghazi, and that he made use of some of these copies in the dacoity case

"Copies of the Police investigation papers are never given by authority, and this pleader in obtaining and making use of such copies, which were got by fraudulent and dishonest means, has laid himself open to a grave charge of very unbecoming and unprofessional conduct, such as cannot be countenanced in any mukhtar, much less a pleader

"As the pleader has confessed in his statement that he had in his possession and made use of these papers, it is necessary that he should be called on to show cause why he should not be dismissed or otherwise punished. In the meantime, I think he should be suspended pending the investigation

"Ordered, therefore, that with the District Magistrate's sanction, the pleader, Kristo Lall Nag, be suspended, and that he be noticed under s 14 of the Act to appear on the 17th September next to answer to these charges. The witnesses, the names of whom appear in the Police papers, will be summoned on that date and special sanction to the suspension be solicited."

This order of suspension was specially sanctioned by Mr. Cooke, and it seems that Mr Rees, the Sessions Judge, upon being applied to, refused to interfere.

Upon an affidavit disclosing these facts, Mr. Ghose applied to this Bench on the 12th of September last for a rule to show cause why the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate should not be set aside upon two grounds:—

- (1) That the pleader had been guilty of no misconduct; and
- (2) that the Magistrate had no right to suspend him from practice under the Legal Practitioners Act

Mr. Ghose further urged upon us that the suspension was the more unjustifiable, because, as the trial of the dacoity case was fixed for the 13th of September, the pleader was prevented from defending the prisoners for whom he was retained

[260] After hearing this application, we thought it right to issue a rule in the following form :—

“ Let a rule issue, calling upon the Deputy Magistrate of Noakhally to show cause why the order of suspension of the pleader in question should not be set aside. Meanwhile, let the record of the proceedings be sent for, and we direct that the order of suspension be itself suspended, until the High Court has had an opportunity of investigating and deciding the matter.

“ A copy of this rule will be served on the District Magistrate, as well as the Deputy Magistrate, and it will be heard in due course before the Vacation Bench.

“ We may add, that so far as we can ascertain from the facts brought before us, the only charge made against the pleader was that he had in his possession copies of certain Police papers, which, for aught that appears, he may have obtained by perfectly honest means. Even assuming that the Deputy Magistrate had any authority by law to suspend the pleader, which at present we much doubt, it certainly seems a very arbitrary proceeding, not only as regards the pleader himself, but the prisoners whom he was defending, that he should be suspended from practice pending the enquiry, without any opportunity having been given him of showing cause against the suspension.”

Our object in making this rule returnable in the vacation was, that the matter should be disposed of with as little delay as possible, but it seems to have been considered desirable that the Rule should be heard by the Bench which granted it.

It was, therefore, brought on again by Mr. Ghose before this bench on the 22nd of last month, and we have now had an opportunity of reading the record of the proceedings, as well as a statement, dated the 19th of September last, prepared by Mr. Cooke, in which that gentleman explains his view of the matter, and the reason why proceedings were taken against the pleader.

No cause has been shown against the Rule by the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Barber, and he appears, notwithstanding our order, to have heard the case against the pleader on the 21st of September. We have received his final judgment, returned [261] with the other papers, dated the 2nd of October, in which he finds the pleader guilty of dishonest and unprofessional conduct, and recommends that he should be suspended from practice for one month.

This non-compliance with our order appears to have been due to some misunderstanding upon the part of Mr. Cooke. His clear duty was, upon receiving that order, to have forwarded it to Mr. Barber, with directions that it should be at once obeyed. We desired to have the record sent up with Mr. Barber's own explanation, in order that this Court might decide, whether the case against the pleader should be proceeded with at all, and whether he had been legally suspended, and we were specially desirous of having an explanation from Mr. Barber himself, because we wished to know whether at the time when he issued the order of suspension, he was aware that the pleader had been retained to defend the other prisoners. We now find no reason to suppose, upon a perusal of the papers, that he was aware of that fact. If he had been, we should have considered it our duty to deal with the matter in a very different way, and to have brought it to the notice of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

We have now to consider the two main points, upon which the Rule was originally obtained by Mr. Ghose, namely :—

1st.—Whether there was any ground for the finding of the Deputy Magistrate that the pleader had been guilty of misconduct.

2ndly.—Whether, under the Legal Practitioners Act of 1879, the Magistrate had any power to make the interim order of suspension. As our first impression upon both these questions was entirely opposed to the view which has been taken not only by the Magistrates concerned, but also, as it would appear, by the Sessions Judge, we thought it more than usually important that the Government should be represented at the hearing, and as we found that Mr. Kilby, the Deputy Legal Remembrancer, had not been sufficiently instructed, we postponed the hearing for some days, in order that he might have an opportunity of considering the papers, and consulting, if necessary, the Advocate-General upon the subject [262] We have now heard the case discussed a second time, and we find that Mr. Kilby, having consulted the Advocate-General, is not prepared to uphold the decision of the Magistrate upon either point.

It, therefore, only remains for us to give our reasons for overruling that decision

As regards the first point, it appears from the judgment of Mr. Barber, that the only ground upon which he considered, and has since found, the pleader guilty of misconduct was, that he had in his possession and had used in the defence of his client certain copies of depositions of witnesses which had been taken against the prisoners by the police, and of confessions which had been also made to the police by some of the prisoners

We understand that these depositions and confessions had been taken down in writing, and were in the custody of the mohurrirs employed in the Police office, and it was no doubt the duty of those persons not to allow copies of them to be taken.

It has not been proved, nor even alleged, as against the pleader, that he was himself either party or privy to the procuring from the Police office the copies which he had in his possession, but the Deputy Magistrate seems to think that as he must have known what the rules of the office were, he was guilty of dishonest, or at any rate dishonourable and unprofessional, conduct in using copies, which had been improperly obtained

The Officiating Magistrate, we observe, goes further. He compares the conduct of the pleader with that of a receiver of stolen goods.

We consider that this view of the case is entirely erroneous, and that it is based on misconception not only of the duties of an advocate, but of the nature of the right, which the Police authorities had, to the depositions and confessions, which were taken down in writing. There was nothing, so far as we can see, in the subject-matter of those depositions or confessions, which gave the Police authorities any special property in them or which prevented the pleader, upon either legal or moral grounds, from using them on behalf of his client.

[263] If any one of the prisoners or other persons who were present at the time when the depositions were taken, or the confessions made, had been a sufficiently good scribe to take down in writing what either the prisoners or the witnesses said, or had a sufficiently good memory to have correctly related what took place to the pleader, it is clear that the latter would have been perfectly justified in using the information for the benefit of his client in any way which the rules of evidence allowed.

The only impropriety, if there was any, was in the manner in which the copies of these documents were obtained from the Police office, and to that, so far as appears, the pleader was neither party nor privy.

If the subject-matter of the documents had been of a private or personal nature, the case might be different, but there is nothing either in the depositions of the witnesses, or in confessions of a prisoner at a Police investigation, which makes them, so far as their subject-matter is concerned, any more the property of the Police than the property of the prisoner.

Nor is there anything inconsistent either with justice or morality in the pleader's using the information for the benefit of his client. As a matter of fact and of practice, it constantly happens that copies of Police papers are obtained and used at criminal trials. Mr Ghose, who has had a large experience in criminal cases in the mofussal, informs us that there is hardly any case of importance, in which counsel are engaged to defend a prisoner, in which some copies or statements of proceedings which have taken place in the Police office are not handed to counsel by way of instructions. And Mr. Kilby, who has also had considerable experience in such matters, and who has appeared here in this case on behalf of the Government, is not prepared to deny that statement, or to justify the Magistrate in the course which he has taken.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the facts found by the Magistrate disclose no misconduct of any kind, professional or otherwise, on the part of the pleader.

The next question is, whether in making the order of the 30th of August, calling on the pleader to show cause why he [264] should not be punished, the Magistrate had any right to suspend him in the meantime from practice?

Here again, we consider that both the Magistrates and the District Judge have taken an erroneous view of the law.

Reading s 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, in conjunction with s 40, we have no doubt whatever that the power of interim suspension, which is given by cl 5 of s 14, can only be exercised after the pleader has been heard in his defence, and pending the investigation and the orders of the High Court.

This indeed appears to us to be the natural interpretation of the clause, even when read by itself, but coupled with s 40, the meaning is still more clear. And it seems only right and reasonable that this should be its meaning, because it would seem a dangerous and arbitrary power to entrust to any Court, to suspend a pleader from practice, before he has had an opportunity of being heard in his defence.

This very case is a remarkable illustration of the injustice that might be done, not only to the pleader himself, but to his clients, by the exercise of such a power without any legal ground.

The High Court, so far as we are aware, does not possess any such power, and it certainly tends to strengthen our view of the meaning of the Act, that under s. 42 there is an express provision, that the Chief Court of the Punjab is not to dismiss or suspend an advocate, until he has had an opportunity of being heard in his defence.

The Rule will therefore be made absolute to set aside ab initio the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
O'KINEALY

Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty.Defendant
versus

* Dinabashy Shaha and others Plaintiffs.*

the Limitation Act—Suit under Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 77.*

Section 14 of the Limitation Act provides for cases in which a plaintiff in perfect good faith, but under mistake, has instituted proceedings in a Court not having jurisdiction in the matter, and is applicable not only to the provisions of all Acts providing a special time for the limitation of suits, but also to the provisions of the Limitation Act itself.

THIS was a suit brought under s. 77 of the Registration Act for the purpose of obtaining registration of a hynaputtro, which the Registrar on the 12th December 1879 had refused to register on the ground that he was not satisfied as to the signature of the defendant. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit in the Court of the Munsiff of Munshigunj on the 7th January 1880. On the 28th September 1880, the Munsiff decided that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit, and on the 29th returned the plaint to the plaintiffs in order that they might file it in the proper Court. The suit was then filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca on the 30th September 1880.

The defendant contended that the suit was barred by limitation, and set up other defences on, amongst other things, the merits, which are not necessary for the purposes of this report.

The Subordinate Judge decided that the suit was not barred inasmuch as the time during which it remained pending in the Munsiff's Court should be deducted for the purpose of determining the question of limitation, and on the merits decided the suit in favour of the plaintiffs.

The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who affirmed the decision of the Munsiff on the point of limitation, and dismissed the appeal.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

[266] Baboo Mohun Mohun Roy (with him Baboo Akhil Chunder Sen) for the appellants contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of s. 14 of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as the provisions in that section applied only to the provisions of the Limitation Act itself, and not to any special rules of limitation provided in other Acts of the Legislature.

Baboo Kali Mohun Dass for the Respondents.

Garth, C. J.—This was a suit brought under s. 77 of the Registration Act for the purpose of obtaining registry of a deed.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1204 of 1882, against the decree of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Judge of Dacca, dated the 6th April 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Gunga Churn Sukar, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 8th September 1881.

The reason why the Registrar refused to register it was that the signature of the defendant had not been proved to his satisfaction.

A suit was then brought by the plaintiffs in the Munsif's Court, which was eventually dismissed upon the ground that such Court was not the proper one to try the question, and the plaint was consequently returned by the Munsif, in order to its being presented in the Subordinate Judge's Court, which was accordingly done.

Both the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge have now decreed the plaintiffs' claim and upon appeal to this Court, two points have been raised, first, that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation, and, secondly, that the District Judge ought not to have found, as he has done, that the application was made to the Registrar by the plaintiffs' authorized agent.

With regard to the first point it is said that the Courts below were wrong in giving the plaintiffs the benefit of s. 14 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

They gave them the benefit of this section, upon the ground that they had brought their suit by mistake in the wrong Court.

It has been argued that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the benefit of that section, because the general provisions of the Limitation Act, relieving plaintiffs under certain circumstances from the consequences of not bringing their suits in time, apply only to the provisions of the Limitation Act itself, and not to any special rules of limitation, such as that contained in s. 77 of the Registration Act, which requires a plaintiff to bring his suit to rectify the Registrar's order within thirty days after it is made.

[267] We consider, however, that this point has been virtually decided (against the appellant's contention) in more than one case in this Court.

An objection upon the same ground was taken in the case of Golap Chund Nowlakha v. Kinto Chunder Das Biswas (I L R, 5 Cal, 314), and decided by JACKSON and McDONELL, JJ. That was a suit brought for rent, in which the plaintiff had not sued within the three years prescribed by the Rent law. On the day when the three years expired the Court was closed, but the plaintiff filed his plaint on the following day, and he then claimed the benefit of s. 5 of the Limitation Act, which enacts, that if the prescribed period of limitation expires on a day "when the Court is closed, the suit may be brought on the day when the Court re-opens."

It was argued there, as it has been here, that general provisions in Limitation Act would not apply to the special limitation provided by the Rent law, but the Court held that they did.

The principle of that case is directly applicable to the present. Section 14 of the Limitation Act provides for cases, where a plaintiff in perfect good faith, but under a mistake, has sued in the wrong Court, and we see no reason why that section should not avail to protect the plaintiffs in the present case.

There are cases in this Court, besides the one which we have quoted where the same principle has been acted upon, and the learned pleader for the appellant has not been able to find a single authority which favours his own contention.

Then with reference to the other point, namely, that the Judge ought not to have found that Ram Chunder Shaha, who applied for the registration of the deed, was duly authorized by the plaintiffs, we do not find that this point was taken either before the Registrar, or in the Court of First Instance. It has certainly not been raised in the issues, and we are therefore not disposed to entertain it now, especially as the lower Appellate Court has found as a fact that Ram Chunder was duly authorized by the plaintiffs.

The appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

NOTES.

[268] APPELLATE CRIMINAL

The 14th January, 1884

PRESENT

MR JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the Matter of the Petition of Nobin Kristo Mookerjee.

Russick Lall Laha "

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 435-437—Further Enquiry, Power of District Magistrate to direct—" Inferior Criminal Court"—Notice to accused.

The words "inferior Criminal Court" in s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code mean, inferior so far as regards the particular matter in respect to which the superior Court is asked to exercise its revisional jurisdiction

A criminal charge instituted before a Magistrate of the first class was finally disposed of by him by an order discharging the accused. Subsequently the Magistrate of the district proceeding under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directed a further enquiry to be made by a Subordinate Magistrate. This order was made without notice to the accused.

Held, that the Magistrate of the district had no jurisdiction to direct a further enquiry.

Semle, that as a matter of strict law the accused was not entitled to be heard by the District Magistrate before granting the order directing the enquiry

Mr. Evans, Baboo Umbica Charan Bose, Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry, Baboo Saroda Prosad Roy, Baboo Harendra Nath Mookerjee, and Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty for the Petitioner

Mr. Allen for the opposite party.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD JJ.), which was delivered by

McDonell, J.—In this case a rule was granted by MACLEAN and NORRIS, JJ., on the 20th December last, calling upon one Russick Lall Laha to show cause why a certain order made by the Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and dated the 5th December last should not be set aside

The facts of the case are briefly these. On or about the 27th day of September 1881, one Baboo Romanath Laha lent a sum of Rs 5,000 upon a mortgage bond to a person who represented [269] himself to be one Khirode Chunder Mookerjee. This person was identified by Nobin Kristo Mookerjee, the petitioner now before us. The sum so lent upon mortgage was payable upon the expiry of six months. The money not having been paid, a demand was made on behalf of the mortgagee upon the real Khirode Chunder Mookerjee, who denied any knowledge whatever of the transaction and repudiated liability under the mortgage bond. Subsequently Khirode Chunder Mookerjee instituted a suit in the Civil Court to have the mortgage bond cancelled on the ground that he had not executed it, and that the whole transaction was an attempt to commit a fraud upon him. That suit was decreed, and immediately after its being so disposed of, a criminal charge was preferred by Russick Lall Laha, the brother of Romanath Laha (who had in the meantime died), against the petitioner before us, Nobin Kristo Mookerjee, and another person who is said to have been the broker in the transaction. The broker absconded, and the criminal charge proceeded as against Nobin Kristo Mookerjee alone. This criminal charge was instituted on the 20th June 1883 before a Magistrate of the First Class sitting at Sealdah, and after numerous postponements, it was finally disposed of by him three months later, viz., on the 25th September 1883 by an order discharging the accused person. Subsequently an application was made to the Magistrate of the district, that is, the Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs, and the Magistrate of the district, proceeding under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, made on the 5th of December 1883 the order which is now sought to be set aside. By that order the District Magistrate, after referring briefly to the facts of the case, directed that a further enquiry be made, and for the purposes of making this enquiry he made over the case to a Subordinate Magistrate. It is now contended before us that the order of the District Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs is bad and ought to be set aside on two grounds. first, because the order of discharge having been made by a Magistrate of the First Class the District Magistrate had, upon the proper construction of s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no jurisdiction to call for the record, and therefore had no jurisdiction under s. 437 to direct a further enquiry; secondly, because [270] the order was made without notice having been given to the accused person, and therefore without such accused person having had an opportunity of being heard before the District Magistrate proceeded to make an order to his prejudice. We shall deal with these two points seriatim.

With reference to the first point, s. 435 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure provides as follows—

“The High Court or any Court of Session or District Magistrate, or any Sub-divisional Magistrate empowered by the local Government in this behalf, may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court, etc." Then s. 437 provides as follows. "On examining any record, under s. 435 or otherwise, the High Court or Court of Session may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make, and the District Magistrate may himself make or direct any Subordinate Magistrate to make, further enquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under s. 203, or into the case of any accused person who has been discharged." Now we have first to consider what is the meaning of the term "inferior Criminal Court" in s. 435, and in order to determine what the correct meaning of this expression is, we must resort to a usual mode of construction, that is, we must examine the present Code as compared with the provisions of the previous Code upon the same subject. Section 435 of the present Code corresponds with s. 295 of the Code of 1872, and in that section the words used are "any Court subordinate to such Court or Magistrate." Now, we may observe that as to the meaning of the term "subordinate" no question can now arise. The subordination of the Magistrates in a district, other than the District Magistrate, to the Magistrate of the district, was provided for by the second paragraph of s. 295 of the Code of 1872, and these provisions are re-enacted and amplified by s. 17 of the present Code. It being then clear that the Legislature has made no change in the subordination of Magistrates, we have to consider what is the intention which is to be gathered from the substitution of the term "inferior Criminal Court" in the present Code for the words "subordinate to such Court" in the former Code. It appears to us unreasonable to [271] suppose that this new expression has been substituted without any definite object; and the conclusion to which we are ultimately led is this, that the term "inferior Criminal Court" must be construed to mean "judicially inferior," that is, a Court over which the Court or Magistrate proceeding under s. 435 of the Code has appellate jurisdiction. It was contended before us by the learned counsel, Mr. Allen, that a Subordinate Magistrate of the first class is a Criminal Court inferior to the Magistrate of the district, because there are in the present Code certain provisions under which a Magistrate of the first class is in certain matters subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the district. These provisions are to be found in ss. 406³ and 515¹. Undoubtedly there is much weight in this argument, which we have carefully considered. It appears to us, however, that a construction can be put upon s. 435 which will in no wise be contradicted by the existence of the appellate jurisdiction given to the Magistrate of the district over First-class Magistrates by ss. 406 and 515. We think that the words "inferior Criminal Court" in s. 435 must be construed to mean inferior, so far as regards the particular matter in respect of which the superior Court is asked to exercise its revisional jurisdiction. In arriving at this conclusion, we have considered, as I have already stated, the intention to be gathered from the substitution of the word "inferior" in the existing Code for the word "subordinate" in the Code of 1872. But there is another and a material circumstance which has also influenced our minds. It was settled law under the old Code that when a Magistrate other than the Magistrate of the district had discharged an accused person after hearing the Appeal from order requiring security for good behaviour.

Appeals from and revision of orders under section 514 evidence for the prosecution, the Magistrate of the district had no jurisdiction to direct a further enquiry or revive the prosecution upon the same evidence. It was held in two cases, the case of Mohesh Mistri (I. L. R., 1 Cal. 282), and the case of Donnelly (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 405) that if the District Magistrate was of opinion that further proceedings should be taken upon the evidence on the record (in a case, that is, where no fresh evidence is forthcoming, see page 411 of the Report in the latter case), he must refer the case for the orders of the High Court. The District [272] Magistrate had at the same time the power of directing a further enquiry in one particular case, that is, where a complaint had been made, and such complaint had been summarily dismissed without the examination of witnesses (see s. 298 of the Code of 1872 as amended by s. 31 of Act XI of 1874). Section 437 of the present Code extends this power to the case of any accused person who has been discharged (see the last ten words of the section), and it is very reasonable to suppose that the Legislature in conferring upon the District Magistrate a new power, a power that is, which he was not competent to exercise under the law of 1872, considered it proper that this power should be exercised by him over those Magistrates only who are subject to his appellate jurisdiction. We think that this is a reasonable construction, and when we further construe the term "inferior" used in s. 435 to mean, as I have already said, inferior, so far as regards the particular subject-matter, we are enabled to put upon the Code a construction which reconciles sections at first apparently conflicting

But then it is contended that the words "or otherwise" in s. 437 give the District Magistrate a power quite independent of the power conferred upon him in cases in which he has proceeded under s. 435. We have considered this argument, and we are unable to accede to it. We think that these words "or otherwise" being words of general import following the particular words "under s. 435" must be construed according to the usual rule, and that they mean not "in any other way whatsoever," but in any other way provided by the Code. For example, in the case of an appeal, the Appellate Court is empowered by s. 423 to send for the record, and this would be a case in point. Then there is the further argument that if we were to put upon the words "or otherwise" the wide and general construction contended for, the whole of the limitation necessarily implied in the provisions of s. 435 would become unnecessary; and such a result would suppose in the Legislature an absence of all intention, which we think ought not to be imputed or presumed.

We now come to the second contention, viz., that no notice was given to the accused, and that no order could have been made without giving him an opportunity of being heard. Section [273] 440 provides as follows - "No party has any right to be heard either personally or by pleader before any Court when exercising its power of revision, provided that the Court may, if it thinks fit, when exercising such powers, hear any party either personally or by pleader, etc." This is the general rule provided by the Legislature, and it must be taken to be a legislative recession of the usual principle that persons are entitled to be heard before any order affecting them to their prejudice can be made. To this general rule so laid down by the Code there are two exceptions to be found in the Code itself. The first is to be found in clause (a) of the provision to s. 436. The second is contained in the second paragraph of s. 439. The case now before us does not come within either of these exceptions. We therefore think that, as a matter of strict law, it is impossible to say that the petitioner in this case was entitled to be heard by the District Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs before the order complained of could be made. But this Court, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, is competent to question not only the legality but the propriety of any finding, sentence or order, and we therefore think that it is quite open to us to deal with the question whether a District Magistrate, in exercising the power conferred upon him by s. 437, exercises a proper discretion in proceeding to make an order for further enquiry without giving notice to the accused, and allowing him an opportunity of being heard. As the present case can, however, be sufficiently disposed of upon the first point, we do not propose to enter into the merits, or to express any opinion whether the District Magistrate in the present instance exercised a proper discretion in making the order complained of without giving notice to the accused person. A case was quoted by the learned counsel for the petitioner, in which Mr. Justice MITTER and myself thought that the accused ought to have had notice. That opinion had reference to the particular facts of that case, and we laid down no general rule. In the case now before us, having read the petition which was presented to the District Magistrate, the inclination of our minds is that that petition contained arguable matter—matter upon which it would have been fair to the accused to have heard him in person or by Counsel before an order was made [274] which was followed immediately by a warrant issued for his arrest. But, as I have already said, inasmuch as the present case can be sufficiently disposed of upon the first point, we think it unnecessary to come to any definite conclusion upon the second point.

It appears to us that, for the reasons which I have stated, the Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs had no jurisdiction to make the order of the 5th December 1883 complained of, and we must therefore set aside that order. We were asked by Mr. Allen, the learned counsel for the opposite party, to take up this case under s. 429, and proceed to exercise our revisional jurisdiction after entering into the merits. We have considered this application, and we think that it is not one with which we can comply. The accused person has had no notice of such an application, and has not come here prepared to meet such a case. If we thought that we ought to exercise our revisional jurisdiction, it would be necessary to issue a fresh notice, and appoint a further day for the hearing of the case upon its merits. But having regard to the fact that if the prosecutor desires to proceed further, the Court of the Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, which has jurisdiction, is close at hand, we think it unnecessary that the time of the High Court should be taken up in disposing of a matter which can be dealt with by that tribunal.

The rule will be made absolute.

Rule absolute

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th January, 1884.

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Anonymous case,*

- Stamp Act (I of 1879), schedule I, art. 44 (clauses a and b)—
Mortgage-deeds.

Per Curiam—Clause (a) of art. 44† of schedule I of the Stamp Act, 1879, applies only to those deeds in which possession of the mortgaged property is given, or agreed to be given at the time of the execution of the deed, or in other words where immediate possession of the property is given or agreed to be given by the terms of the deed to the mortgagees [275] Per GARTH, C J —The principle of the distinction between the two classes of mortgages named in art 44 is, that where the title to the land and the possession or immediate right to possession both pass to the mortgagee, the same duty is charged as upon a conveyance by way of sale, but when the title only passes, and possession, or the right to possession, does not, the lower duty is chargeable.

Per MITTER, J —The word “given” in clause (a) of art 44 points out that only those transactions are intended to be covered where the transfer of possession takes place in consequence of the agreement on the part of the mortgagor to deliver over possession as part of the security for the mortgage money, but where the mortgagee becomes entitled to enter upon possession irrespective of the consent of the mortgagor to make over possession, clause (a) will not apply

Per FIELD, J —The Stamp Act is a Revenue Act, and the rule of construction of such Act is, that in case of a doubt, the construction most beneficial to the subject is to be adopted. The words “agreed to be given” in art 44, clause (a) can only apply where there is an express or implied agreement to give possession, they will not apply where there is no such agreement express or implied, but the effect of the document is such that a mortgagee has merely a right which he can enforce in a Court of law to obtain possession

- * Reference No. 7 of 1883, from the Board of Revenue

Description of instrument	Proper Stamp-duty
Mortgage-deed not provided for by No. 14, No 15, No. 29 or No 55 of this schedule	(a) when at the time of execution possession of the property or any part of the property comprised in such deed is given by the mortgagor or agreed to be given.
See exemptions, schedule II No. 12 and No 14 (b)	(b) when at the time of execution possession is not given or agreed to be given as aforesaid
	The same duty as a Conveyance (No 21) for a consideration equal to the amount secured by such deed
	The same duty as a Bond (No. 13) for the amount secured by such deed.]

THIS was a reference by the Board of Revenue to the High Court under s. 46 of the Stamp Act. The question referred was, whether all or any of the mortgage deeds (the necessary clauses of which are hereinafter set out) were liable to pay duty under clause (a) or clause (b) of art. 44 of schedule I of the Stamp Act. The question depended mainly on the effect and construction of certain covenants for quiet enjoyment such as are usually inserted in English mortgages

Document No. 1 granted and assigned unto the Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, and its assigns, certain premises with the buildings, etc., thereon and all the estate, right, title and interest of the mortgagor in the said premises, to hold the said premises, etc., unto and to the use of the Bank and its assigns subject to a proviso for redemption, and empowered the Bank to sell the mortgaged premises or any part thereof without the consent of the mortgagor, and to execute and do all such assurances for effectuating a sale as the Bank should think proper, and contained the following covenant for quiet enjoyment, viz., "and that all the said premises may be quietly entered into, held and enjoyed by the [276] Bank and its assigns without any interruption by any person" The deed contained no actual clause giving possession or agreeing to give possession to the mortgagee

Document No. 1a was a mortgage of certain premises to the Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, of the same description as Document No. 1, save that it contained no covenant for quiet enjoyment

Document No. 2 was a trust deed to secure mortgage debentures issued or to be issued by the Assam Railways and Trading Company, Limited, and mortgaged the concessions and railways, etc., of the Company in Assam to two persons as trustees for the whole body of the debenture-holders. The properties were conveyed, granted and assigned unto and to the use of the trustees, but upon and for the trusts and purposes therein mentioned declaring the same, and provided that the trustees should stand seized and possessed of the mortgaged premises upon trust to permit the Company to hold and enjoy the same premises, and to carry on thereon and therewith any of the business authorized by the Memorandum of Association until default in payment of any of the principal monies secured by the debentures, or of any interest for the period of one month after due date thereof, or until the winding up of the Company, and after any such default, empowered the trustees in their discretion, or at the request of holders of one-half the debentures, to enter upon and take possession of the mortgaged premises and sell, call in, collect or convert into money the same, and contained the following covenant for quiet enjoyment, viz., "and that all the said premises may be quietly entered into and enjoyed by the trustees or trustee without any interruption by any person," there were further clauses providing that in the case of the Company being wound up, the trustees before making entry or sale should give three months' notice of their intention to do so, and providing that the Company should, until the trustees should take possession in pursuance of the trust, deal with the mortgaged properties in the ordinary course of business in such manner as they might think fit

Document No. 3 was an ordinary mortgage of an indigo concern in the English form to the Agra Bank, it contained a power of sale authorizing the Bank after default to enter into and upon and to sell and absolutely dispose of the mortgaged premises; and a [277] power of entry, and a power if the indigo should not be consigned to the Bank, to seize the indigo, also the following covenant for quiet enjoyment after default, viz., "and also that if default shall be made in payment of the moneys hereby secured or intended so to be, or the interest on the same or any part thereof respectively, or in the event of the breach or non-performance of any of the covenants herein contained, and on the part of the mortgagors, their heirs, executors or administrators to be observed and performed contrary to the true intent and meaning of these presents, it shall be lawful for the Bank, their successors or assigns at any time or times thereafter, to enter into and upon the said mortgaged premises, or any part or parts thereof, and the same thenceforth to hold and enjoy and to recover the rents and profits thereof without any lawful interruption or disturbance by the said mortgagors or either of them, their or either of their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns or any other person or persons claiming or to claim through, under, or in trust for him or them", and also a further covenant by the Bank that until default the mortgagors might hold and enjoy and take the rents, issues and profits of the mortgaged premises.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) appeared for the Crown

Although in the first document there is no actual covenant for possession, there is a covenant to pay the mortgage money on demand, and although the mortgage money may not be due, yet the mortgagee might take possession. A Court of Equity would not restrain such a mortgagee from taking possession. The present Stamp Act I consider was not intended to cover the present case, but it has actually done so in using the words "possession agreed to be given" in art. 44, schedule I. Where possession is given, there is larger duty payable than in cases where possession is not given. [FIELD, J.—Does the word "agreed" refer to an express or an implied agreement, or both?] Both, in this case there is an implied agreement. The covenant to enter into possession and the covenant for quiet enjoyment mean really that the mortgagee should have possession without opposition.

The second mortgage, No. 1a, does not contain the words "giving quiet possession," and it therefore appears that the mortgage stands on a different footing.

[278] The third mortgage, No. 2, permits the Company to hold and enjoy the premises until default, and I therefore apprehend a Court of Equity would not allow a mortgagee to enter into possession under such a covenant

The fourth mortgage, No. 3, is practically the same as No. 2. There the Bank covenants with the mortgagor that until default shall be made the mortgagor shall hold possession. Therefore, these two deeds do not fall under clause (a) of schedule I of the Stamp Act. [FIELD, J.—In the second mortgage does not the clause, which gives power to the Bank to do all such things as may be necessary for effectuating a sale, allow a power to put the mortgagee in possession in order to effectuate the sale?] I think not; the power of sale can be exercised wholly irrespective of the question of putting the mortgagee into possession.

No one appeared on the other side

The Opinions of the High Court were as follows . -

Garth, C.J.—I am of opinion that each of the deeds submitted for our consideration comes under clause (b) of the art. 44 of the Stamp Act, and should be stamped accordingly.

I consider that clause (a) applies only to those deeds, in which possession of the mortgaged property is given, or agreed to be given at the time of the execution of the deed; or, in other words, where immediate possession of the property is given, or agreed to be given, by the terms of the deed to the mortgagee.

It seems to me that this is the only construction of clause (a) by which any meaning can be given to the words "at the time of execution," because the agreement to give possession must of course be made in and by the deed itself; and therefore if clause (a) is to be read, as the learned Advocate-General contends, the clause would mean the same without the words "at the time of execution," as with them. Again, if the Advocate-General's view were correct, clause (a) would be applicable in all cases where possession of the property is agreed to be given at any distance of time, or under any conditions, even temporarily for non-payment of interest. I cannot think that the Legislature meant to extend so largely or so unreasonably the class of mortgages which are to be chargeable with the higher duty. [279] Under Act XVIII of 1869 those deeds only were so chargeable where possession was actually given at the time of the mortgage. and the spirit of this rule might have been, and probably was, evaded by possession not being taken for some time after the execution of the deed, although an agreement for immediate possession was contained in the deed itself.

I think that the change in the language of the Act was merely intended to prevent any such evasion of the law, and not to make the higher duty chargeable upon a large class of mortgages of a totally different character.

The principle of the distinction between the two classes of mortgages was clear enough under the Act of 1869, namely, 1st, those which were accompanied by possession, and, 2ndly, those which were not. According to the construction which I would put upon the present Act, the same distinction is maintained, but only with a safeguard against the evasion of the higher duty, whereas, according to the other construction, the distinction is altogether lost sight of, and the principle of this distinction, as I understand it, appears to me to be founded on good sense. Where the title to the land, and the possession or immediate right to the possession of it, both pass to the mortgagee by virtue of the deed, the same duty is charged as upon a conveyance by way of sale, because in that case the mortgagee gets the same potentiary interest in the land, which a sale would give him, but when the title only passes, and possession, or the right to the possession, does not, the interest which he gets is not necessarily a potentiary interest at all, and possibly may never become so. In such a case the lower duty is chargeable.

It seems to me that this is an easy and reasonable solution of the doubt which has arisen, and, as I consider that immediate possession of the mortgaged property is not given, or agreed or intended to be given, in any of the cases submitted to us, I am of opinion that the lower duty [under clause (b)] is chargeable in each of those cases.

I would add that I consider my views upon this subject are strongly confirmed by the fact, which appears to be admitted that, since the passing of the last Stamp Act in 1879, it has been the constant practice to stamp deeds of the nature of those sub-[280]mitted to us with the lower duty under clause (b). When a particular construction has for some years been put upon a fiscal enactment in favour of the public, and that construction has been generally acted upon and acquiesced in by the Government, I think that a strong presumption arises in favour of that construction, and I consider, moreover, that no other construction, unfavourable to the public, should afterwards be put upon the enactment, except for some very cogent reason indeed.

This principle has been acted upon by the High Court on more than one occasion; and notably in the late case of Kishori Lal Roy v. Sharut Chunder Mozoomdar (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 593).

Mitter, J.—I am of opinion that clause (a) of art. 44 of schedule I of the Stamp Act of 1879, covers only those mortgage deeds in which as security for the money advanced on mortgage, possession of the property, or any part of the property mortgaged, is actually given or agreed to be given. But it does not include mortgage deeds in which it is stipulated that the mortgagee would be entitled to take possession of the property, or any portion of the property mortgaged in case there should be any breach of the covenants of the deed. The word "given" in the clause in question seems to me to point out that only those transactions are intended to be covered where the transfer of possession takes place in consequence of the agreement on the part of the mortgagor to deliver over possession as part of the security of the mortgage money. But where by virtue of a stipulation in the mortgage deed, the mortgagee becomes entitled to enter upon possession quite irrespective of the consent of the mortgagor to make over possession, the clause in question does not apply, because there it cannot be said that the mortgagor consents to give possession.

If this construction of the clause in question is correct, none of the documents referred to us falls under it. It is true that under the first two deeds the mortgagee may exercise his right of entry upon possession immediately in consequence of the form in which they are executed, but there is no agreement on the part of the mortgagor to give possession of the mortgaged premises as part of the security. Such agreement exists only [281] in those cases where it is agreed that the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises are to be enjoyed by the mortgagee, or taken by him in satisfaction of his debt. There is no such agreement to be found in these deeds. As regards the other two deeds it is clear from their terms that the mortgagee would be entitled to enter upon possession in case of default in payment;

Field, J.—This is a reference under s. 46 of the Indian Stamp Act (Act I of 1879). The question referred to us is, whether four deeds of mortgage ought to be stamped under clause (a) or under clause (b) of art. 44 of the first schedule to the Act. Clause (a) is as follows:—"When at the time of execution possession of the property or any part of the property comprised in such deed is given by the mortgagor or agreed to be given"—and the stamp duty upon the mortgage deed in this case is the same as for a conveyance for a consideration equal to the amount secured by the mortgage deed. Clause (b) is as follows:—"When at the time of execution possession is not given or agreed to be given as aforesaid." In this case the duty is the same as on a bond for the amount secured by the mortgage deed.

In the second case the stamp duty is very much less than in the first case, and in this consists the interest which the matter has for the public generally. A large number of mortgage deeds similar to those which form the subject of this reference have been stamped under clause (b), and these deeds will have been insufficiently stamped if we hold that clause (a) applies.

Clause (a) is divisible into two propositions which are as follow:—First, "when at the time of execution possession of the property, or any part of the property comprised in such deed is given by the mortgagor." I may at once say that this proposition is not applicable in the present case, there being no suggestion that possession of the property or any portion of it has been given. The second proposition is: "when at the time of execution possession of the property, or any part of the property comprised in such deed, is agreed to be given." The point to be determined really comes to this, whether by the mortgage deeds which form the subject of the reference, or any of them, it was at the time of execution agreed that possession of the property [282] should be given. I understand this to mean given at any time. I take it that the words "at the time of execution" must be construed with "agreed" and not with "given." Now the Stamp Act is a Revenue Act, an Act which imposes pecuniary burdens; and the rule of construction in respect of such Acts is that in case of a doubt the construction most beneficial to the subject is to be adopted. The subject is not to be taxed, and therefore not to be compelled in this case to pay the higher duty, unless the language is clear and unambiguous. I am of opinion that the words "agreed to be given" can only apply where there is an express agreement to give possession—an agreement, that is, in so many words—or an agreement, to be gathered by necessary implication from the whole contents of the documents. I think that clause (a) of art. 44 does not apply when there is no such agreement, express or implied, but the effect of the document between the parties is such that the mortgagee would have a right, that is a right which he could enforce in a Court of law, to obtain possession if he desired to have possession.

Applying this principle to the four deeds in question, I come then to the following conclusion as regards each of them. The first deed of mortgage contains the following provisions. "And this indenture also witnesseth that, for the consideration aforesaid, the mortgagor doth hereby grant and assign unto the Bank and its assigns all and singular, etc., together with all buildings, fixtures, rights, easements, advantages and appurtenances whatsoever to the said hereditaments appertaining, or with the same held or enjoyed or reputed as part thereof or appurtenant thereto, and all the estate, right, title and interest of the mortgagor in and to the said premises . . . to hold the said premises unto and to the use of the Bank and its assigns subject nevertheless to the proviso for redemption hereinafter contained." Then the mortgagee is empowered to sell the mortgaged premises or any part of them without the further consent of the mortgagor, and then we have a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Under this deed it may well be that the mortgagee has a legal right to take possession, but I think we cannot say that possession of the property or any part of it is agreed to be given within the meaning of clause (a), art. 44 of schedule I of the Stamp Act.

[283] The second mortgage deed which forms the subject of the reference is marked No. 1a, and is generally similar to the first instrument, save that it contains no covenant for quiet enjoyment. I think we cannot say that possession of the property is agreed to be given by this instrument

The third deed forming the subject of the reference is marked No 2, and is of a more complicated nature. It recites that the mortgagees, their heirs, executors, etc., shall stand "seized and possessed" of the mortgaged premises. I think that upon the construction of the entire contents of this document it is clear that the words "seized and possessed" are used in the sense merely of English legal phraseology, and that it is not meant by these words that the mortgagees should enter into possession. This would appear to be clear from a subsequent provision of the deed which authorizes the trustees or trustee upon the happening of certain events to enter upon and take possession of the mortgaged premises. This instrument also contains a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Now, although there is an authority to the mortgagees and trustees to take possession upon the happening of certain events, I think it impossible to say that there is any agreement by the mortgagor to give possession. This instrument therefore comes, in my opinion, under the provisions of clause (b) of art. 44.

The fourth deed which forms the subject of the reference is marked No. 3. It declares that it shall be lawful for the mortgagee, his successors, assigns, etc., upon a breach of the covenants to enter into and upon the said mortgaged premises, but here also there is no agreement by the mortgagor to give possession, and I think that this instrument also comes under clause (b).

The result is, that in my opinion, all four instruments should be stamped under clause (b), art. 44, schedule I of the Stamp Act.

Limitation Act, XV of 1877, sch. II, art 64 --Statement of Account unsigned—Cause of Action.

The plaintiffs claimed on a statement of account in writing, dated the 18th October 1877; this statement of account was not signed by the defendant. The date of the institution of the suit was the 30th September 1880. A Division Bench of the High Court held on the appeal on the case coming up before them on the 18th October 1877, that the suit was not based upon any express contract made between the parties, and that the transaction which took place on that date did not constitute an implied contract, and that, therefore, these contentions were not open to the plaintiffs, but the Court referred the question whether the plaintiffs' claim, so far as it was based on the statement of account on the 18th October 1877, fell within article 64† of sch. II of Act XV of 1877.

* Full Bench in Sp. App. No. 788 of 1882, against the decree of the Officiating Judge of Sarun, dated 30th January and 28th February 1882, modifying the decree of the Munsiff of Sarun, dated the 27th of May 1881

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run
For money payable to the plaintiff for money found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on accounts stated between them.	Three years ...	When the accounts are stated in writing signed by the defendant or his agent duly authorized in this behalf, unless where the debt is, by a simultaneous agreement in writing signed as aforesaid, made payable at a future time, and then when that time arrives.]

Held, by MITTER, PRINSEP, and McDONELL, JJ.—That the question referred was a matter of limitation arising in the case which had not been decided in the order of reference, and without such a decision the case could not be disposed of, and as to that point, that the statement of account not being signed by the defendant, did not fall within the terms of art. 64 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877.

Held, by GARTH, C.J., and TOTTENHAM, J.—That the Division Bench having held that the transaction afforded no basis for a suit, had disposed of the case, and the question referred was therefore immaterial.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by MITTER and WILKINSON, JJ., on the 21st June 1883, with the following remarks.—

“ This appeal relates to that part of the plaintiffs’ claim which was based on a statement of account on the 18th October 1877. The plaint states : ‘ The defendant has had for a long time dealings in cloth with the plaintiffs’ shop, so on the 12th Sudī Assin 1334 Sumbut accounts of the dealings were made up and adjusted [285] in the presence of the defendant, and the sum of Rs. 8,676 was found due and owing to the plaintiffs by the defendant, which was entered in the khatta-bahi in his presence. ”

“ The cause of action with reference to this item of the claim is stated in the plaint to have arisen on the 12th Sudī Assin 1334 Sumbut (18th October 1877), the date of the statement of account. The suit was brought on the 30th September 1880, i.e., within three years from that date. The balance so found was not signed by the defendant. Three witnesses were examined in support of this adjustment of account. Witness, Nakched Ram, says that after the balance was found the defendant admitted its correctness. Progash Lal further says that the defendant requested the plaintiffs to take from him a conveyance or a lease of some property in liquidation of the debt thus found. The third witness, Senī Roy, not only deposes to the defendant having admitted the correctness of the balance, but also states that he, the debtor, promised to pay it in the following month of Kartic.

“ The defendant pleaded limitation, and the Munsiff overruled it on the ground that the suit was brought within three years from the date of the adjustment of account, which fact was, in his opinion, established by the evidence of these witnesses.

“ The District Judge on appeal has reversed this decision on the ground that the account stated was not signed by the defendant as is required by article 64 of schedule II, Act XV of 1877.

“ The question which we have to decide in this appeal is, whether the claim, so far as it is based upon an account stated, is barred by limitation.

“ It has been contended before us that the claim is not barred by limitation : (1) because there was a new contract for the payment of the debt found due, created on the date of the adjustment of account; and (2) because the provisions of article 64 of schedule II, Act XV of 1877 are applicable, notwithstanding the account stated was not signed by the defendant.

“ As regards the first ground, the learned pleaders for the appellants mainly rely upon the finding of the Court of First Instance, based upon the testimony of the witness, Senī Roy, that [286] the defendant promised to pay the money found due in the following month of Kartic.

“ It appears to us that this express promise to pay the debt found due in the following month of Kartic was not the ground upon which the suit was brought. The ground of action, as alleged in the plaint, was the statement of account on the 18th October 1877, and it is expressly stated in the plaint that the cause of action for the item under consideration arose on that date.

"There is, moreover, a special reason in this case which disentitles the plaintiffs from changing the ground of the action as laid in the plaint. It was admitted by the learned pleaders of the appellants that there are no materials upon the record from which it can be ascertained whether on the date of the statement of account all or any of the items were barred by limitation. If they were so barred under s. 25¹ of the Contract Act, a parol contract for the payment of the debt found due would not be valid, see Ramji v. Dharma (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 683). We are, therefore, of opinion that the appellants cannot in this suit rely upon any express promise.

"Although upon the plaint it is not open to the appellants to rest their claim upon any express contract, yet it is open to them to contend that there was an implied promise to pay the balance found due, arising from the defendant admitting the debt. This question was fully discussed in Umed Chand Hukam Chand v. Shah Bulakidas Lalchand (5 Bom. H. C., O. C., 16). The statement of account referred to in that decision appears to us to be the striking out of a balance after the adjustment of cross accounts between the parties. In a case of this nature, as observed by ROLFE, B., with reference to Ashby v. James (11 M. and W., 542), there is 'a transaction between the parties out of which a new consideration arises for a promise to pay the balance.'

"In the case before us there were no cross demands. The defendant was a customer of the plaintiffs, who had a shop for the sale of cloth. He used to take articles on credit and made part-payments from time to time. An account was kept by the plaintiffs of these transactions and also of the part-payments made by the defendant. On the 18th October 1877, this account [287] was examined in the presence of the defendant, and the amount claimed was found to be the balance of the debt due from the defendant who admitted its correctness. Such an adjustment of account does not amount to a new contract so as to entitle the plaintiffs to claim a new period of limitation from the date thereof. It only amounts to an admission or acknowledgment of the debt which, if it could be brought within the purview of s. 19¹ of the Limitation Act, would have saved the claim from being barred by the law of limitation.

Agreement without consideration void.— * [See 25.—An agreement made without consideration is void unless—unless it is in writing and registered, (1) it is expressed in writing and registered under the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents and is made on account of natural love and affection between parties standing in a near relation to each other, or unless or is a promise to compensate for something done, (2) it is a promise to compensate wholly or in part a person who has already voluntarily done something for the promisor or something which the promisor was legally compellable to do, or unless

(3) it is a promise, made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith, or by his agent generally or specially authorized in that behalf, to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits

In any of these cases, such an agreement is a contract

Explanation 1.—Nothing in this section shall affect the validity, as between the donor and donee, of any gift actually made

Explanation 2.—An agreement to which the consent of the promisor is freely given is not void merely because the consideration is inadequate, but the inadequacy of the consideration may be taken into account by the Court in determining the question whether the consent of the promisor was freely given.]

This view is quite in accordance with the law as laid down in Mul Chand Golab Chand v. Giridhar Madhav (8 Bom. H. C., A. C., 6); Kankya Lall v. Bynsee (1 Agra H. C., F. B., 94); Doyle v. Allum Biswas (4 W. R., S. C. C. Ref. 1). In our opinion, therefore, there was no such implied contract made out as would entitle the plaintiffs to a new period of limitation from the date thereof.

"The only question that remains to be considered is, whether the claim to which this appeal relates falls within article 64, 2nd schedule of Act XV of 1877. Upon this point the learned pleaders rely upon Sheik Akbar v. Sheik Khan (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 256). It was held in that case that the second column of article 64 fixes three years as the period of limitation in all suits upon accounts stated, whether in writing or word of mouth, and whether signed by the defendant or not. With great deference to this opinion, we are unable to take this view of the article in question. We must construe the language of the article by giving effect to every part of it, whether it occurs in the first, second, or the third column. It seems to us that the third column shows that the article only applies to cases where the accounts are stated in writing, signed by the defendant or his agent duly authorized in this behalf. This view of the article in question was taken in Thakurya v. Sheo Singh Rai (I. L. R., 2 All., 872). We, as at present advised, concur with the Judges who decided that case. As our opinion is in conflict with the ruling in Sheik Akbar v. Sheik Khan (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 256), we refer the following question for the decision of a Full Bench.—

[288] "Whether the claim of the appellants, so far as it is based upon the statement of account on the 18th October 1877, falls within article 64, 2nd schedule, Act XV of 1877."

Babu Kali Kishen Sen, and Babu Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Chunder Madhub Ghose, Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee and Babu Kuloda Kanker Roy for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Full Bench—

Mitter, J.—I am of opinion that the question referred in this case is a question of limitation which arises in the case, and has not been decided in the order of reference.

The plaint in this suit, which was filed on the 30th September 1880, states that there was an adjustment of accounts between the parties on the 18th October 1877.

In the order of reference, we decided two questions—first, that the suit was not based upon an express contract made between the parties on the 18th October 1877. secondly, that the transaction which took place on that date

* [Sec. 19 —If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed]

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed; but oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1.—For the purposes of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform, or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right.

Explanation 2.—In this section 'signed' means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorized in this behalf.]

did not amount to an implied contract. We felt no doubt upon this last mentioned point; and the authorities which are all cited in our judgment are all one way, and fully support the view which we have taken; no conflict of authorities, as far as we are aware, exists on this point. Under these circumstances, we felt that we could not refer this question to the decision of a Full Bench. Our opinion upon the point being clear, and there being no conflict of authorities, we should not have been justified in referring this question to a Full Bench.

The points that we have decided, therefore, in the order of reference are: (1) that the suit was not based upon any express contract made between the parties on the 18th October 1877, and (2) that the transaction which took place on that date did not constitute an implied contract. The question now is whether the conclusion at which we arrived upon these two points, virtually disposed of the third contention that was raised before us, viz., that the suit was not barred by limitation, because it falls under article 64, schedule II, Act XV [289] of 1877. It has been said that our conclusion that the transaction, which took place on the 18th October 1877, did not constitute a new contract, is tantamount to a finding that the cause of action upon which the plaintiff based his suit was not made out. The plaintiff sued for the price of cloth supplied to the defendant from time to time. I have examined our order of reference, and I do not find a single passage in which we have held that his claim was not made out. It is true that the plaintiff alleges that the cause of action arose on the date when the statement of accounts took place. If that turns out to be a mistake on his part, it would not follow that he would not be able to recover in this suit upon establishing a real cause of action not inconsistent with his allegations in the plaint. Let it be supposed for a moment that the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation, can it be said that upon our judgment it must be held that his claim is not made out when that claim is established by the witnesses believed by the lower Courts—witnesses who deposed that the defendant admitted the correctness of the balance found against him? It had been said that a statement of account necessarily constitutes a new contract and as we have held in the order of reference that the transaction of the 18th October 1877 did not constitute a new contract, therefore we have held also that there is no cause of action in this suit.

With reference to this observation I have simply to say that in the reference order we have not held that a statement of account necessarily constitutes a new contract. Neither have I been able to come to that opinion. But if that be a correct proposition of law, even then it cannot be said that on our reference there was no question to be decided, because that question is decided on this reference, although there was no argument upon it.

I shall now state the reasons which weigh with me in thinking that it is not a correct proposition of law. If it were a correct proposition, it would follow that a statement of account would supersede and extinguish the debts of which it is a statement. But there is abundant authority for the proposition that an account [290] stated does not supersede those debts see Smith v. Page (15 M. and W., 683), Perry v. Attwood (25 L. J., Q. B., 108). Then it has been asked that if an account stated does not constitute a new contract, what is it? The answer is, that it is only evidence of an existing debt. see Newhall v. Hall (6 M. and W., 662). This question has been exhaustively discussed by SCOTLAND, C. J., and INNES, J., in Hirada Karibasappa v. Gadig Muddappa (6 Mad. H. C., 197). I cannot do better than reproduce here the following extract from the judgment bearing upon this question. The learned Judges, after finding that in that case there were no cross demands which were adjusted between the parties, and that the transaction in question in that case simply amounted to "the ascertainment by reference to the plaintiff's accounts of the whole amount of the item on the debit side, and of the payments on account credited on the other side, and the acknowledgment of the balance appearing thereupon to be due," observed as follows :—

"Then does the arrangement, alleged to have taken place between the appellant and the respondent, evidence a new contract? The striking of the balance and the admission that the amount was due, evidenced a present promise to pay it, but that was nothing more than the law already implied from the previous existence of the debt, and was all that such an executed consideration could support and it is obvious that, if nothing more than that were necessary, the limitation bar might always be evaded by acknowledgments and admissions not in writing. What we must look to see is, whether the arrangement involved any new consideration for the promise to pay the balance. Now, where there are cross demands and, on a settlement of accounts, items, agreed to on one side, are wiped out by an appropriation to their discharge of admitted items of claim on the other side, and thereupon a balance is struck and payment promised, the mutual agreement to set off, pro tanto, one set of items against the other constitutes a new consideration for the promise to pay the settled balance, and both make a new contract. For this Ashby v. James (11 M. and W., 542) is a [291] direct authority. But where there is no cross claim to be set off, and no new agreement of appropriation, a settlement of the balance due on the examination of accounts is merely a statement of an antecedent debt. The parties simply agree as to how much of the debt remains due. In such a case there is plainly no new contract. This distinction is briefly expressed in Laycock v. Pickles (33 L. J., Q. B., 43). BLACKBURN, J., there said. 'In common talk, an account stated is treated as an admission of a debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff, but there is also a real account stated, which is equivalent to what is called in the old law an usual computaculum, when several items of claims are brought into account on either side, and being set against one another a balance was struck, and the consideration for the payment of the balance was the discharge on each side.' And the arrangement in that case was upheld as being such a real statement of account.

Enough of authority has been shown to establish the proposition that a statement of account does not necessarily constitute a new contract. It is only where there are cross demands, and they are set off one against another so as to extinguish the old debts, that an account stated does amount to a new contract. Therefore, the reference order deciding that the transaction of the 18th October 1877 between the parties to the suit did not constitute a new contract, did not dispose of the question whether it amounted to an account stated within article 64, schedule II of the present Limitation Act.

If an account stated necessarily constituted a new contract, that would be a ground upon which the question referred should be answered in the negative. If it does not in all cases amount to a new contract, then it is to be seen whether in other respects the account stated in this case falls under article 64, schedule II of the Limitation Act. The question referred to the Full Bench, therefore, was not decided by us in the order of reference, and it arises upon the facts stated in the order of reference and found by the lower Court. It was urged before us that the claim is not barred by limitation, because it falls under article 64, schedule II of the Limitation Act. Our view [292] upon this question was against this contention, but that view is in conflict with the decision in Sheik Akbar v. Sheik Khan (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 256) as will appear from the following extract from that judgment :—

"It was ingeniously suggested in argument on behalf of the plaintiff, that as article 64 of schedule II of the Limitation Act says nothing in the third column as to accounts stated by word of mouth, that article must be considered as applicable only to accounts stated in writing, and that as no special period of limitation is prescribed for suits upon accounts stated orally, the period of limitation for such suits would be six years. It is certainly difficult to understand what the Legislature could have intended by this omission, but we think that giving a reasonable construction to article 64, we must consider that the second column means to fix three years as the period of limitation in all suits upon accounts stated. To prescribe a limitation of three years in suits upon accounts stated in writing, and six years in suits upon accounts stated orally, would be an obvious absurdity."

Our opinion being thus in conflict with the decision cited above under the rules of practice of this Court, we were bound to refer the question which we have referred.

For the foregoing reasons, it seems to me (1) that the question referred is a question of limitation, (2) that it arises in the case which cannot be disposed of without deciding it, and (3) that it was not disposed of in the order of reference.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the question should be answered by the Full Bench, and, for the reasons given in the order of reference, which I need not repeat here, it should be answered in the negative.

McDonell, J.—In this case the learned Judges of the Division Bench have decided that what occurred on the 18th October gave rise to no substantive cause of suit. They find that there was no express contract on that day, and then that there was no implied contract, and that the plaintiff's claim would be barred by limitation unless article 64, schedule II of the Limitation Act of 1877 applies, and I concur with them in [293] holding that it does not do so; and that to give a fresh ground of limitation under that section, the account stated should be in writing, and that when there is no writing, article 64 does not apply.

Prinsep, J.—It is no doubt at all times more satisfactory that on a reference to a Full Bench, all matters connected with the particular point should be referred, and so far I think it is to be regretted that we have not had to consider the exact effect of an account stated, both as a cause of action and as giving a fresh starting point for the purpose of limitation, independently of the original transaction which may have led to that account stated.

I am further of opinion that we should give our answer to the point referred, which, as pointed out by MITTER, J., legitimately arises in the case.

With respect to the point referred, I am of opinion that the account stated in the present case, which is not a written document signed by the defendant, cannot properly fall within the terms of article 64, schedule II of the Limitation Act, nor under article 120 as relating to a "suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the schedule." The statement of account, admitted by defendant by word of mouth, is only evidence of the admission of the defendant. The present suit would, as regards limitation, depend upon the date of the contracts or debts to which each item included in that account relates.

Tottenham, J.—I confess that I do not very clearly see how the particular question put to us arises in the present case.

The suit which purports to be based upon a transaction which took place on the 18th October 1877 was instituted within three years of that date; and if it be assumed that a suit can be brought upon the basis of that transaction, it is hardly material to enquire if it is governed by article 64. Similarly, if it be held that the transaction affords no basis for a suit, it is superfluous to inquire whether this or that article of the schedule to the Limitation Act applies, for when there is no cause of [294] action, no article of that schedule applies.

As, however, the majority of the Court are of opinion that we should give a reply to the question, I find no difficulty in stating that inasmuch as article 64 distinctly refers only to accounts stated in writing and signed by the defendant or his agent, it does not include the transaction upon which this suit is based which was not accompanied by any signature of the defendant or his agent.

Garth, C. J.—With all due respect to the opinion of some of my learned brothers, it seems to me that this case has been already disposed of in the order of reference, and that the question referred to us does not arise.

That question is one of limitation, namely, whether the claim of the plaintiffs, as based upon the statement of account of the 18th of October 1877, falls within article 64, schedule II of the Limitation Act of 1877?

Now it seems to me that before any question of limitation can arise under this or any other article of the Limitation Act, we must assume the existence of a cause of suit.

Each of these articles of limitation applies to some particular cause or causes of suit, and unless there is first proved to be a cause of suit, no question can arise as to limitation.

Now the plaintiffs' suit in this case was based entirely upon the alleged statement of account on the 18th of October. They contended that the statement of account which then took place gave rise to a substantive cause of action as upon an account stated. This appears not only from the plaint, and from the judgments of the lower Courts, but also from the very first sentence of the referring order, which runs thus —

"This appeal relates to that part of the plaintiffs' claim, which was based on a statement of account on the 18th of October 1877." And, again, a few lines further on,—"the ground of action, as alleged in the plaint, was the statement of account on the 18th of October 1877, and it is expressly stated in the plaint that the cause of action for the item under consideration arose on that date."

No other cause of action was alleged or proved; and therefore, unless the statement of account on the 18th of October gave [295] rise to a substantive cause of action as upon an account stated, the plaintiffs, as it seems to me, had no case.

Now the learned Judges of the Division Bench have decided, if I understand them rightly, that what occurred on the 18th of October gave rise to no substantive cause of suit. They find, first, that there was no express contract on that day, and then that there was no implied one.

That finding, as it seems to me, disposes of the case. If no substantive cause of action arose on the 18th of October, it must surely be immaterial, whether, if there had been a cause of action, it would have been barred by limitation.

In the case which has been alluded to in the order of reference with which the learned Judges say they cannot agree, the only question of limitation which we had to decide was, whether a cause of action on an account stated orally came within Article 64 or Article 120* of the Limitation Act; or, in other words, whether the three years or the six years rule of limitation applied to such a cause of action.

Description of suit	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
Suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule.	Six years ...	When the right to sue accrues.]

But for the purposes of that question we assumed that a substantive cause of action upon an account stated orally had arisen; and except upon that assumption any question of limitation would have been immaterial.

The point, therefore, which arose in that case does not in my opinion arise in this, for two reasons.—1st, because, as I have before explained, it has here already been found by the Division Bench that the transaction of the 18th of October gave rise to no new or substantive cause of action; and, 2ndly, because if it had given rise to such a cause of action, the suit was brought within three years from that date; so that no question as to the three years or the six years limitation could arise.

If I rightly apprehend the meaning of my brother MITTER'S judgment, I gather that the main difference between us is not upon any question of limitation, but as to the nature and meaning of a cause of action upon an account stated. He appears to think that a cause of action upon an account stated is not a substantive cause of suit, or, in other words, a new contract.

[296] I have always understood that, unless it is a new contract, it is no cause of action at all. The consideration for it may be, and generally is, a past debt; but it is as much a new contract as a promissory note or a bill of exchange, which may also be given for a past debt.

Again, I think, that some misapprehension has arisen as to the difference between an account stated, which is a substantive cause of suit in itself, and a promise to take a debt out of the operation of the Limitation Act, which need not, and often does not, amount to a substantive cause of suit.

A promise of that kind must be in writing, both here and in England. An account stated in England may or may not be in writing, and I see no reason why the law should not be the same here. But as to that, there seems some difference of opinion.

This is a question which I shall be very glad to discuss when the occasion arises; but it seems to me, for the reasons which I have given, that it does not arise in this case.

There are also other points in my brother MITTER'S judgment with which I do not agree; but I do not think it necessary to advert to them, because, in my opinion, they are not material to this case.

Although some of my learned brothers and myself take a somewhat different view of the question referred to us, the result, I consider, will be the same; namely, that the special appeal will be decided in accordance with the views of the Division Bench.

The appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs.

Appeal Dismissed.

Small Cause Court, Mofussil—Act XI of 1865, s. 21—New trial—Review—Limitation Act, 1877, art. 173.

Section 21 of Act XI of 1865 is still in force notwithstanding the right of review given to Small Cause Courts in the Mofussil by s. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Where the circumstances of a case admit of a new trial, an application for such new trial is governed by s. 21 of Act XI of 1865, but where the circumstances of a case do not admit of a new trial, but do admit of a review, then the time within which an application for review should be made is to be governed by art. 173,† sch. II of Act XV of 1877.

THIS was an application made for the purpose of obtaining a re-trial of a suit which had been dismissed on the 30th December 1881 by the Munsif of Madaripore, who at that time was exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge. The application was made on the 30th January 1882. It, however, was not clear from the papers sent to the High Court whether a new trial or a review was the subject of the application; the Munsif was of opinion that a new trial could not be granted, as under s. 21 of Act XI of 1865 the application was out of time; but he thought that it was open to the applicant to make the application under s. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But inasmuch as chapter 47 of the Code did not prescribe any limitation for such an application, he was of opinion that (regard being had to s. 6 of the Limitation Act), an application for review of a judgment of a Court of Small Causes should be presented within the time prescribed by s. 21 of Act XI of 1865, and that the term of ninety days prescribed by the Limitation Act, as the period in which a review might be presented, was not applicable to such cases. He therefore rejected the application subject to the opinion of the [298] High Court on the following question: "When a judgment is passed against a plaintiff by a Small Cause Court, and an application for review of the same is made under s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, is the application within time if made after seven but within ninety days from the date of the judgment, s. 21 of Act XI of 1865 notwithstanding?"

* Civil Reference No. 18 of 1882, from Baboo Chundra Coomar Dass, Munsif exercising powers of a Small Cause Court Judge at Madaripore, dated the 31st March 1882.

Baboo Kashee Kant Sen for the plaintiff.

Baboo Anund Gopal Palit for the defendant.

The opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and FIELD, J.), was delivered by Garth, C.J.—It has already been decided by this Court in several cases that s. 21 of Act XI of 1865 is still in force, notwithstanding the right of review which is given to Small Cause Courts in the mofussil by s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code—(see reference No. 19 of 1878 from the Small Cause Court of Bhangah, decided by this Bench on 26th August 1879, and reference No. 14 of 1881 from the Munsif of Soodharam, decided on 8th December 1881), (Rattan Krishen v. Poddar Raghoo Nath Shaha, I. L. R., 8 Cal., 287).

There are some cases in which a new trial might be the proper remedy, and where a review would not be allowed by law, and there are others where a new trial could not be had, and the appropriate remedy would be by a review.

It does not appear from the reference in this case, what the nature of the application was, or whether the plaintiff's proper remedy would be by a new trial or a review, but we think that he should not be bound by the mere form in which the application was made, and that the answer which he ought to give to the reference depends upon whether a new trial or a review would be the proper remedy.

If a new trial is necessary, then the plaintiff is out of time by reason of the seven days' notice not having been given but if the relief which he seeks may be granted upon a review, he appears to be in ample time

Mortgage—Money decree—Sale under mortgage decree—Prior sale under money decree—Suit for possession.

On the 21st of April 1864, A mortgaged a certain taluk, and on the 13th of December 1865, the mortgagee obtained a mortgage decree on his mortgage. On the 5th of April 1867 (in execution of a money decree obtained against A by a third party on the 20th of September 1864) the right, title and interest of A in the taluk was purchased by the defendant who entered into possession. On the 1st of July 1868, the right, title and interest of A in the taluk was sold in execution of the mortgage decree and purchased by the plaintiff. In these execution proceedings the defendant intervened, but his claim was disallowed. On the 28th of June 1880, the plaintiff brought the present suit for possession of the taluk.

* Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession, but should have brought his suit to enforce the mortgage lien against the defendant

THE material portions of the judgment of the lower Court are as follows :—

“ The plaintiff’s suit was dismissed by my predecessor, as being barred under s. 13, Code of Civil Procedure. On appeal the Judges of the Honourable High Court reversed his decision and remanded the suit to be tried on the merits (see Mahomed Afsar-ul-deen v Bir Chunder Manikya, 1 L. R., 8 Cal., 470). The facts are these :—

“ On the 21st of April 1864, one Ram Coomar Bhuttacharji (and another) borrowed Rs. 2,000 from one Soorja Kumari, and gave a mortgage bond, pledging (among other properties) the taluk in suit. The money was to be repaid in four months. As it was not paid, Soorja Kumari instituted a suit on the 23rd of November 1865, and obtained a decree on the 13th of December in the same year. On the 5th of April 1867, the right, title and interest of Ram Coomar Bhuttacharji in the taluk in question was sold in execution of a decree on a simple money bond and bought by the defendant No. 2, benamidar for the [300] defendant No. 1. After this the decree on the mortgage bond was executed, and, notwithstanding an objection put in by the defendant No. 2, the right, title and interest of Ram Coomar Bhuttacharji was again sold, and bought by the plaintiff on the 1st of July 1868. The plaintiff alleges that he obtained symbolical possession on the 4th of September 1868, but was immediately dispossessed by defendant No. 1. The defendant denies that the plaintiff obtained symbolical possession, and admitting the other facts as given by plaintiff pleads that the suit is barred by limitation, and that the plaintiff’s purchase was of no effect. In addition to the issue as to res judicata, the following issues were framed. (a) Did the plaintiff take symbolical possession in September 1868 of the property in suit? (b) Is the suit barred by limitation? (c) Did the disputed property pass to plaintiff by the purchase of July 1868? ”

The District Judge found all these issues in favour of the plaintiff [citing on the last issue the case of Harau Chunder Ghose v. Dinu Bundhoo Bose (14 B. L. R., 408, 23 W. R., 186), and gave the plaintiff a decree.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kally Mohun Dass and Baboo Doorgu Mohun Dass for the appellant.

Munshi Serajul Islam for the respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and O’KINEALY, JJ.), was delivered by

Tottenham, J.—The parties in this suit were purchasers at auction of the same property in execution of two separate decrees. The plaintiff’s was the more recent purchase, it having taken place on the 1st July 1868. The defendant’s purchase was on the 5th April 1867, but the plaintiff’s case was that the decree in execution of which his purchase was made was a mortgage decree, the mortgage having been made and the decree upon it having been obtained previously to the purchase made by the defendant. The date of the mortgage was 21st April 1864, and the date of the decree upon the mortgage bond was 30th December 1865. On the other side, for the defendant, [301] appellant, it is contended that the decree obtained in December 1865 upon the mortgage bond was not a mortgage decree, but a simple money decree, and this has been held by the lower Court. The District Judge, however, was of opinion that, notwithstanding this fact, the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession upon the authority of the Full Bench case of Haran Chunder Ghose v. Dino Bundhoo Bose (14 B. L. R., 408 ; 23 W. R., 186), which established the principle that a mortgagee causing the sale of the mortgaged property conveys to the purchaser the entire interest in the property which he and the mortgagor could jointly sell, as well when the sale is under a decree for sale as when it is under a money decree. He held that the defendant in the present case could not claim to be a person not a party to that suit claiming interest in the property, because at the time, when the suit was tried and the decree given, the defendant had acquired no interest in the property, for his purchase took place in April 1867. It seems that in the execution proceedings under which the present plaintiff purchased, the defendant did come in as a claimant objecting to the attachment and sale upon the ground of his own previous purchase and possession. That claim was rejected, and the Judge observes that the defendant then had an opportunity of redeeming the property by paying off the mortgage money, but as he had not taken advantage of this opportunity, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed in the present suit. It appears to us that the case really depends upon the question whether the decree of the 30th December 1865 was a mortgage decree or not, and looking to the description of a mortgage decree given in the case of Gopi Nath Singh v. Sheo Sahay Singh (B.L.R. Sup. Vol. 72, 1 W. R., 315), we think the decree obtained by Soorja Kumari Dabi against Ram Coomar Bhattachary (mortgagor), was a mere money decree. Upon the authority of the cases above referred to it is clear that the plaintiff, though he may have purchased the lien of the mortgagee, is not entitled to recover possession of the property, as against a person who was no party to that decree and is a bonâ fide purchaser for value without bringing a suit to enforce the lien. The present suit, which is one for ejectment, is not one in which [302] he is entitled to succeed. His remedy, if he has any, must be by a regular suit to enforce his lien under the mortgage. In the meantime we think the defendant was entitled to retain possession of the property. We accordingly reverse the decree of the lower Court, and direct that the suit be dismissed with costs of both Courts.

Appeal dismissed

APPELLATE CRIMINAL

The 24th January, 1884.

PRESENT

MR JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Surat Dhobni.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 6—Statement made to third person by person injured.

The only evidence against a prisoner charged with having voluntarily caused grievous hurt was a statement made in the presence of the prisoner by the person injured to a third person, immediately after the commission of the offence. The prisoner did not, when the statement was made, deny that she had done the act complained of.

Held, that the evidence was admissible under s. 6† and s. 8, Illustration (g)‡ of the Evidence Act.

IN this case the prisoner had been convicted by the Assistant Commissioner of Dibrugarh, under s. 324 of the Indian Penal Code, of having voluntarily caused hurt to her daughter-in-law by burning her with a red hot pair of tongs. The only evidence in support of the charge was a statement made in the presence of the prisoner by the daughter-in-law to a neighbour immediately after the commission of the offence. It appeared also that the prisoner did not deny that she had inflicted the injuries. The prisoner appealed to the Officiating Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, who held that the statement was so closely bound up with the occurrence itself that it was clearly a relevant fact and admissible in evidence under s. 6 of the Evidence Act and affirmed the conviction.

The prisoner preferred a petition to the High Court

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Petitioner

No one appeared for the Crown.

[303] The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (MITTER and FIELD, JJ.).

* Criminal Motion No. 275 of 1883, against the order of C. J. Iyall, Esq., Officiating Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, dated the 4th August 1883.

Relevancy of facts forming part of same transaction.

† [Sec. 6.—Facts which, though not in issue, are so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction, are relevant, whether they occurred at the same time and place or at different times and places.]

Motive, preparation and previous or subsequent conduct.

‡ [8. Any fact is relevant which shows or constitutes a motive or preparation for any fact in issue or relevant fact.]

The conduct of any party, or of any agent to any party, to any suit or proceeding in reference to such suit or proceeding, or in reference to any fact in issue thereon relevant thereto, and the conduct of any person an offence against whom is the subject of any proceeding, is relevant, if such conduct influences or is influenced by any fact in issue or relevant fact, and whether it was previous or subsequent thereto.

Explanation 1.—The word “conduct” in this section does not include statement, unless those statements accompany and explain acts other than statements, but this explanation is not to affect the relevancy of statements under any other section of this Act.

Explanation 2.—When the conduct of any person is relevant, any statement made to him or in his presence and hearing, which affects such conduct, is relevant.

(g) :—The question is, whether A owes B Rs. 10,000. The facts that A asked C to lend him money, and that D said to C in A's presence and hearing—‘I advise you not to trust A, for he owes B 10,000 rupees’—and that A went away without making any answer, are relevant facts.]

Field, J.—The additional evidence which we directed to be taken by our order of the 11th December last has now been sent up by the Sessions Judge. In consequence of my learned colleague having some doubt, I have very carefully considered the question with which we have to deal. In the case of Res v. Osborne (1 C. and M., 624), referred to in my learned colleague's judgment, CRESWELL, J., said "What the prosecutrix said at the time of the committing of the offence would be receivable in evidence on the ground that the prisoner was present and the violence going on but if the violence was over, and the prisoner had departed and the prosecutrix had gone on running away crying out the name of the person, it would not be evidence." That was a case of rape, and I do not understand CRESWELL, J., to have meant that in order to render the statement of the prosecutrix admissible in evidence, both the presence of the prisoner and the continuance of the violence must have co-existed with the making of the statement. I understand the learned Judge to have been speaking with reference to the circumstances of the case before him rather than to have been laying down any fixed rule which would require for its application the co-existence of the two circumstances just mentioned. In the case of Rex v. Foster (6 C. and P., 325), before three learned Judges—PARK and PATTESON, JJ., and GURNEY, B.—the prisoner was charged with manslaughter, in killing a certain person by driving a cabriolet over him. A waggoner was called as a witness, and he said that he was driving his waggon, and that he saw the cabriolet drive by at a very rapid rate, but did not see the accident, and then he went on to say that immediately after, on hearing the deceased groan, he went up to him and asked him what was the matter. It was objected that what the deceased said in the absence of the prisoner as to what had caused the accident was not receivable in evidence, but the three learned Judges were agreed that under the circumstances it ought to be received. This appears to me to be a case more immediately in point than that of Rex v. Osborne. [304] It must, however, be borne in mind that these English cases can be referred to only by way of illustration. They are not in any way binding upon us, regard being had to the provisions of cl. 1 of s. 2 of the Evidence Act. What, therefore, we have really to consider is whether the evidence is admissible under the Indian Evidence Act, and having given to the matter my most careful consideration, I have come to the conclusion that it is admissible. It is clear from the additional evidence now submitted by the Sessions Judge that the statement made by the girl was made in the presence of the prisoner and almost immediately after the infliction of the injuries by the tongs. I think, therefore, that it falls within the purview of s. 6 [see Illustration (a)] of the Indian Evidence Act. I think further that it falls within s. 8, Illustration (g), inasmuch as the accused person was present and made no answer denying that it was she who had inflicted the injuries upon the girl. The witness upon a re-examination has added certain matter which we are both agreed that we ought not to consider, but excluding this matter, the case in my opinion falls within the illustration just quoted. The occasion was certainly one upon which the prisoner, if she had not inflicted the injuries upon the girl, would, in all probability, have denied the charge made against her by the girl, and the fact that she did not do so appears to me to have been an acquiescence in the truth of the charge so made by the girl. As to the sufficiency of the evidence, it is unnecessary for us to express any opinion. We are hearing this case merely in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction, and the point to which we are agreed to limit ourselves is whether there is legal evidence upon which the prisoner might have been convicted, and this question I feel compelled for myself to answer in the affirmative.

Mitter, J.—I concur. I had some doubt upon the point fully discussed in the judgment of my learned colleague. But after considering the authorities referred to in it, I come to the same conclusion to which he has come.

[305] PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 21st, 22nd June, and 11th July, 1883.

PRESENT

LORD WATSON, SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER, AND SIR R. COUCH

Balkishen Das. . . . Petitioner

versus

Run Bahadur Singh.Objector

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal]

Decree—Construction of decree—Penalty—Higher rate of interest upon default in payment of instalment.

A decree of which the terms had been arranged by solehnama between the parties, for payment of money by instalments with interest at six per cent, was construed to provide also for three contingencies, viz., non-payment at due date, (a) of the first instalment, two consecutive instalments being in arrear at the same time, (b) of instalments, other than the first, (c) of the first instalment, simply. Upon the occurrence of (a), or of (b), execution might issue for the whole decretal money with interest thereon at twelve per cent. Upon the occurrence of (c) execution might issue for that instalment, with interest at twelve per cent. from the date of the decree.

The decree-holder having accepted payment of the first instalment on the footing of (c), held that he had not, by any admission or settlement, precluded himself from insisting on the above construction as to (b). Held, also, that these provisions for double interest were but a reasonable substitution of a higher rate of interest for a lower, in a given state of circumstances and were not in the nature of a penalty against which equitable relief might be claimed.

APPEAL from a decree (27th February 1880) of the High Court setting aside an order (16th July 1879) of the Subordinate Judge of Gya made in execution of decree and substituting another.

The questions on this appeal related to the construction of a decree founded on, and reciting, a solehnama between the parties and to the right of the appellant to execute to the extent of the provisions of that decree when properly construed.

On November 11th, 1870, Rani Ismidh Koer, since deceased, executed a security in favour of Rai Narain Das, also since deceased, and now represented by Balkishen Das, the appellant, for repayment of Rs. 1,75,000, with interest by half-yearly instalments. Default having been made in payment, Rai Narain [306] Das sued the Rani to recover the amount due, which with a further loan came to Rs. 2,15,359. To this suit the respondent, who was heir in reversion to the estate in the hands of the Rani, (a Hindu widow) was added as defendant. During the progress of the suit an arrangement was come to for payment by instalments of Rs. 30,000 each, and a decree was made on the 29th March 1873, which gave rise to the present dispute. The decree, which stated the terms of a solehnama between the parties, contained the articles set forth in their Lordships' judgment.

The due date of the first instalment payable was September 25th, 1874, but it was not paid until a short time before the second instalment fell due. The decree-holder, accepting it, gave a receipt, dated 1st September 1875, containing the following statement of the mode in which the payment of Rs. 30,000 was appropriated:—

On the 19th August 1876, shortly before the third instalment became due, the respondent remitted to the decree-holder Rs. 30,000, in payment of the second instalment, making up an account as follows — "To principal Rs. 23,820, to interest Rs. 6,180." The last item of interest was apparently arrived at by calculating interest on the instalment from the 29th March 1873 to the 3rd September 1876 at 6 per cent. This the decree-holder [307] refused to accept. Afterwards, the money having been paid into Court, together with a further sum of Rs. 30,000 deposited on the 19th September 1877, on account of the third instalment, shortly before the fourth instalment became due, the decree-holder took the money out, it being understood that no special appropriation or adjustment was made or admitted.

On the 18th September 1877, the decree-holder filed the petition, out of which the present appeal arose, to realize Rs. 3,06,253, alleging that the judgment-debtor had, by failing to pay the instalments decreed, become liable to pay the balance of the decretal money with interest at twelve per cent, giving credit for the instalments received with interest at the enhanced rate deducted. To this respondent filed his petition of objection. The order made by the Subordinate Judge of Gya, and the decree on appeal made by the High Court, are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

On this appeal—

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. R. V. Doyme appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that the terms of the decree of 29th March 1873, followed by the actual defaults made by the judgment-debtor in paying the instalments, permitted the former to calculate the additional interest on the balance of the decretal money; on the first instalment from the date of the decree; and on the second and subsequent instalments from the dates at which each of them became due to the dates of payment.

For the respondent it was argued that the decree-holder was not, upon the true construction of the consent decree, entitled to interest at the enhanced rate upon the principal sum decreed. Moreover, independently of this construction, the general rule as to equitable relief against the operation of penalties intended to secure collateral objects, was applicable, and would prevent the recovery of interest at the rate on which the appellant insisted. The order of the High Court did substantial justice between the parties

Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal by Rai Balkishen Das, the representative of Rai Narain Das, from an order of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 27th February 1880, by which an order of the Subordinate Judge of Gya, of the 16th July 1879, was set aside, and the order appealed from was substituted for it.

The determination of the questions which arise in the appeal depends upon what is the proper construction to be put upon the 3rd clause of a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated 29th March 1873, in a suit in which Rai Narain Das was plaintiff, and the respondent, Raja Run Bahadoor Singh, was one of the defendants

That decree was obtained by Rai Narain Das in pursuance of a solehnama or compromise, between the parties to the suit

The amount decreed was Rs 2,38,000 principal, with interest, and by the 2nd Article it was ordered, amongst other things, that—

"The plaintiff shall get interest on the decretal money at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem from defendants. That the defendants shall pay annually Rs 30,000 out of the principal and interest year after year by instalments to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, after granting a receipt and filing a petition in the Court, shall take the said sum from defendants. Out of the annual amount of Rs 30,000 whatever may be found due on account of interest, the decree-holder shall deduct the same on account of interest, and credit the balance to the principal. The first instalment shall be in one lump, on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fash. In future, year after year each instalment shall be so paid in a lump sum on the last day of Bhadon of each year. The money, covered by the instalment shall be sent to the decree-holder at Benares, and defendants shall pay the expenses incurred in sending the same."

The 3rd Article, which is the important one, is as follows —

"If the first instalment be not paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fash. and two consecutive instalments be not paid, then the plaintiff shall have the power to take out execution of the decree, and realize his entire decretal money, with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem, from [309] defendants, and their properties. In case of default, the decree-holder shall be entitled to take out execution, and realize interest on the entire decretal money from the date of such default to that of realization, at the rate of one rupee per cent. If the first instalment be not paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fash, then the decree-holder shall have the power to realize the principal with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem from the date of this solehnama, to which your petitioners, defendants, shall have no objection. If at any time within the term defendants desire to pay any sum over and above Rs. 30,000. the plaintiff shall have no objection to receive the same."

The first instalment, which fell due on the 30th Bhadon 1281, corresponding with the 25th September 1874, was not paid on that day. It was, however, paid on the 31st of August 1875, before the second instalment became payable, and a receipt for the same, dated the 1st of September 1875, was given by the decree-holder acknowledging the payment, and stating that Rs. 8,720 were appropriated to the payment of interest on Rs. 30,000 from the 29th March 1873, the date of the solehnama, to the said 31st of August 1875, the date of payment, at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem, which, by reason of the default of payment of the instalment on the due date, became payable under the terms of the solehnama or compromise embodied in the decree, at the rate of one rupee instead of eight annas per cent. per month.

Subsequently, after two instalments had been paid, and a third instalment had become due, an application was made by the decree-holder to the Subordinate Judge of Gya for execution of the full amount of the decree, with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent per month, after deducting Rs 60,000 on account of the two instalments which had been paid. That application was made upon the ground that default had been made in payment of the first instalment on due date, and of two consecutive instalments. The Subordinate Judge held that two consecutive instalments were not unpaid within the meaning of the third clause of the decree. He therefore ordered that the petition for the execution of the decree by realization of the entire decretal money in one lump, with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per month, should be rejected, but that for the instalment then overdue the decree should be executed.

Upon appeal the High Court, on the 29th July 1878, affirmed the decision, and no appeal to Her Majesty in Council from that [310] judgment has been preferred. It therefore stands unreversed. The Judges of the High Court stated that, in their opinion, the view taken by the Subordinate Judge of the arrangement between the parties was correct, and that the intention evidently was that no two instalments should be outstanding at the same time, and that, provided the debtor paid up the first instalment after due date, but in sufficient time to guard against a second instalment becoming overdue whilst the first remained unpaid, he was to be allowed to do so on payment of a double rate of interest as a penalty, but that, if he went further, and allowed two instalments to be actually due and unpaid at one and the same time, the arrangement would fall to the ground, and the whole amount of the decree would be realizable in a lump sum.

Independently of the fact that no appeal was preferred against that decision, their Lordships are of opinion that the construction of the decree was substantially correct, though they do not concur with the High Court that the payment of a double rate of interest was in the nature of a penalty. The solehnama was an agreement fixing the rate of interest, which was to be at the rate of 6 per cent. under certain circumstances, and 12 per cent. under others.

In a subsequent judgment, dated the 25th February 1880, to which advertence will be made presently, the High Court say —

“ It was one of the terms of the solehnama that if at any time two instalments were due at the same time, the whole of the debt should be recoverable forthwith, and the interest, which otherwise was to be calculated at 6 per cent per annum, should be calculated at 12 per cent.; and there was a further term in the solehnama that if the first instalment was not paid in due time, interest should be calculated at the rate of 12 per cent instead of 6 per cent. from the date of default until realization.

“ There is no specific mention in the solehnama of any other instalment than the first, but this being a decree of Court, we think that the language of it is capable of a more liberal construction than if it had been simply a deed between the parties, and we are of opinion that the same conditions must be considered applicable to default on every instalment which are made applicable in default of the first instalment ”

Their Lordships think it right in this place to refer to that part of the judgment, in order to point out that, in their opinion, the decree-holder could not, under the first paragraph [311] of the 3rd clause of the solehnama, issue execution for the full amount of the judgment, with 12 per cent. interest, unless both the first instalment should not be paid on the 30th

Bhadon 1281 Fasli, and two consecutive instalments should be in default and unpaid at the same time. The High Court would read the words "first instalment" as if they had been "any instalment," and the words "on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fasli," as if they had been "on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fasli, or on the last day of Bhadon in any year, as the case may be." Their Lordships think that the words "first instalment" must be read in their strictly literal sense, and that the word "and" in that paragraph must be read in the conjunctive and not in the disjunctive, and consequently that the non-payment of the first instalment on the due date was a material part of the contingency contemplated by the first clause, and the allowing of two instalments to be in arrear at the same time the other portion of that contingency.

The only remaining question is whether, in default of payment of any instalment other than the first on the due date, interest from the date of such default until the realization of the instalment was to be paid upon the full amount of the principal remaining unpaid at the time or only upon the amount of the instalment.

The Subordinate Judge, in his judgment of the 16th July 1879, after giving his reasons, says "Hence it clearly appears that the object aimed at by the solehnama was that in case of breach of instalment the decree-holder would get interest on the expired instalment at one rupee per cent. per month in the place of eight annas per cent., and he decreed accordingly." Both parties appealed to the High Court from that decision.

On the 25th February 1880 the High Court appear to have agreed with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the increased rate of interest was to be paid on the amount of the instalment in default, and not upon the whole amount of the debt. Their judgment and decree are quite unintelligible. They order the decree of the Subordinate Judge to be set aside, and then they declare that the first instalment of Rs. 30,000 which had been paid, is to be treated as not having been paid, afterwards they declare that in adjusting the account between the parties it must [312] be taken that the said first instalment was duly paid on the 25th September 1854, and that all subsequent payments must be taken to have been properly made for the purposes of the subsequent instalment, and that in dealing with those instalments interest will be calculated at 6 per cent per annum on the whole debt, and the capital will be paid off by the residue of such instalments, after providing for interest at that date. Then they order the judgment debtor within six months from the date of the decree to pay to the decree-holder the said first instalment, with interest at 12 per cent., and that in default thereof the decree-holder may apply, and the Court reserves the power of reconsidering, and if necessary of altering the terms of the decree.

The reason given by the High Court for holding that, in default of payment of a second or subsequent instalment on due date interest is to be calculated upon the amount of the instalment, and not upon the amount of the whole decretal money is that in the receipt given for the first instalment a portion of it, viz., 8,720, is appropriated to the payment of interest at 12 per cent. upon the amount of the first instalment, and not upon the whole debt. It is said,—

"According to the strict construction of the solehnama, I myself have doubts whether the plaintiff would not be entitled to 12 per cent. interest upon the whole amount for the time being due between the due date of each instalment and the time it was actually paid, that is, from the date of default of payment until its realization, but inasmuch as the parties themselves, when the first instalment was paid, have put a construction upon this instrument, and have treated the interest as calculable on the Rs. 30,000 and not on the whole sum, and as the Judge of the Court below as we understand his judgment, has decided in the same way, we think we ought not to interfere with that decision, because the effect of calculating interest only upon the instalment upon the first occasion may have misled the other side, and may very seriously prejudice them if any other construction is now put upon the instrument; for, if upon that occasion the plaintiff had claimed to be entitled to 12 per cent. upon the whole amount of the debt, and not to 12 per cent on the instalment only, it is not improbable that the defendant might have been careful to pay up what was due, and not have continued in default, as he appears to have done "

Their Lordships are of opinion that, according to article 3 of the decree of 1873, three contingencies were in the contemplation of the parties.

[313] The first is, if the first instalment be not paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 fasli, and two consecutive instalments be not paid. The second, "in case of default." The third, if the first instalment be not paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 fasli. The first has already been considered and dealt with. Upon the third the parties have put their own construction, and have voluntarily settled upon the basis of that construction, which their Lordships cannot say was wrong. The decree-holder is bound by it, and cannot, in the settlement of accounts, recover interest at 12 per cent in respect of the default in payment of the first instalment from the date of the solehnama to the date of realization of that instalment, except upon the amount of the instalment, interest upon the remaining portion of the debt during that period being calculated at 6 per cent. per annum.

In determining upon what amount interest at 12 per cent. per annum is to be allowed in consequence of a default in payment on the due date of the second or any subsequent instalment, the decree-holder is not bound by the construction put by him upon the 3rd clause, nor by any admission or settlement in respect of the default made in payment of the first instalment. The wordings of the second and the third contingencies, respectively, are very different. The second is clear and explicit. It declares that in case of default the decree-holder shall be entitled to take out execution and realize interest on the entire decretal money from the date of such default to the date of realization, at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem. The third declares that if the first instalment be not paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fasli, then the decree-holder shall have the power to realize the principal, with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem from the date of the solehnama.

It was contended that the words "in case of default" were intended to refer to the default provided against by the first contingency. But in their Lordships' opinion it cannot be construed as having that meaning, for it was declared that upon the happening of the first contingency the entire decretal money, with interest at 12 per cent., might be realized, whereas in case of default it was declared merely that interest on the entire decretal money might be realized at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem.

[314] The instalment itself would be of course realizable under the decree, and out of it, according to the 2nd article, interest at 6 per cent. upon the decretal money, except during the period for which interest at 12 per cent. was to be levied, would be payable.

If the words "in default, etc.," referred to the default contemplated in the first contingency, the words "the decree-holder shall be entitled to take out execution and realize, etc.," were useless and inapplicable, for words to the same effect had been previously used with reference to principal and interest; whereas in the 2nd article they apply merely to the interest.

The words "the principal" in the third contingency, viz., the non-payment of the first instalment on the due date, could not refer to the whole decretal money, otherwise the third contingency would be at variance with the first.

By the words, "in case of default," in the second contingency, their Lordships are of opinion that a default in payment on due date of any instalment, except the first, was provided for. They had no reference to the first contingency for the reasons already expressed. They did not refer to the non-payment of the first instalment, for that is specifically provided for, and to complete the first contingency it was necessary that in addition to the non-payment of the first instalment on the due date two consecutive instalments should also be unpaid at the same time.

The word "principal" in the third contingency, therefore, evidently referred to the principal of the first instalment, and not to the entire decretal money, as specified in the first and second contingencies. The parties, by putting that construction on the words of the third contingency, are clearly not bound to have the same construction put upon the clear words used with reference to the second contingency, viz., "to realize interest on the entire decretal money."

It is scarcely necessary to refer to the argument that the stipulation for payment of interest at 12 per cent. per annum upon the whole decretal money was a penalty from which the parties ought to be relieved. It was not a penalty, and even if it were so, the stipulation is not unreasonable, inasmuch as it was a mere substitution of interest at 12 instead of 6 per cent. per annum in a given state of circumstances.

[315] Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decree of the High Court of the 25th of February 1880 ought to be reversed, and that it ought to be declared that in adjusting the accounts between the parties, for the purpose of the proceedings in execution of the decree of 1873, the defendant is to be charged with the principal sum of Rs 2,38,000 and interest at 8 annas per cent. per mensem from the date of the decree upon the said principal sum, or so much thereof as from time to time remains due after giving credit for all payments made on account, together with additional interest at the same rate on the first instalment from the date of the solehnama to the payment of such instalment, and also additional interest at the same rate on the principal sum remaining unpaid for the period between the day on which the second or any subsequent instalment became due and the day on which it was paid or realized, and that each instalment or any payment on account thereof as paid is to be credited first in discharge of the interest then due and the balance towards reduction of the principal.

The respondents must pay the costs of this appeal.

NOTES.

[I. RETROSPECTIVE INTEREST—WHETHER PENALTY WITHIN SEC. 74 OF THE INDIAN CONTRACT ACT, 1872—

This decision was for a time supposed to have overruled the rule settled by the previous case-law that a stipulation as to interest having retrospective effect was a stipulation by way of penalty.

This view was taken in (1888) 11 Mad. 294, (296), (1886) 13 Cal. 200; (1886) 14 Cal. 248; (1817) 9 All. 690 (699); (1893) 15 All. 232 F. B.; (1893) 17 Mad. 62 (66).

But the best explanation of the case is that in (1888) 12 Mad., 161 (166) which was followed in (1892) 19 Cal., 392 F. B., (1889) 3 C. P. L. R., 48 (52) according to which cases this case has not that effect. A higher rate of interest from the date of default need not be a penalty.—(1889) 14 Bom., 200, (1901) 25 Mad., 343 (even after the Amendment in 1899). 11 M. L. J., 421.

A higher rate of interest on default from the date of the bond is a penalty.—(1889) 14 Bom., 274; (1892) 17 Bom., 106 F. B.

It may be noted that the amendment in 1899 of sec 74 of the Contract Act 1872 gives a wide scope to that section

II. NATURE OF CONSENT DECREE—

It stands on no higher footing than the agreement between the parties; and if in respect of it, one of the parties is entitled to a relief of forfeiture, the fact of its having been embodied in a decree does not preclude the Court from granting such relief.—(1906) 31 Bom., 15 F. B.; 8 Bom., L. R., 873 overruling 10 Bom., 435, (1900) 24 Mad., 265 (270) J

ORIGINAL CIVIL

The 4th January, 1884

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

The Bengal Banking Corporation... .. Plaintiffs
versus
S. A. Mackertich One of the Defendants

Registration (Act III of 1877), s. 17, cl (h)—Agreement to Mortgage—Equitable mortgage

Documents amounting to an equitable mortgage when creating an interest in land of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards, require registration under s 17 of the Registration Act; but documents when amounting merely to an agreement to mortgage do not require registration under that section

Such documents are, therefore, available in evidence as agreements to mortgage without registration, but for the purpose of proving an equitable mortgage they must be registered before they are available in evidence

[316] APPEAL from a decision of PIGOT, J, dated 28th January 1883

Under a power-of-attorney, dated the 1st of February 1880, Mrs Mackertich empowered one M. J. N Mackertich, her husband, to sell or mortgage a one-fifth share of a house in Calcutta, to which she was entitled in her own right. In September 1880, M J N Mackertich arranged to borrow from the Bengal Banking Corporation a sum of Rs 8,000. On the 1st October 1880, the Bengal Banking Corporation advanced that sum to M J N Mackertich and Hem Chandra Bannerjee on the security of a promissory note signed by Hem Chandra Bannerjee and J. M. Mackertich as attorney for his wife, which ran as follows—

“Four months after date, we jointly and severally promise to pay to the Bengal Banking Corporation, Limited, or order, at Calcutta, the sum of Rs. 8,000 for value received, with interest thereon at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum, and as collateral security for the said debt, I and Sarah Amelia Mackertich do hereby agree to assign, by way of mortgage to the said Bengal Banking Corporation, Limited, an undivided one-fifth share to which the said Sarah Amelia Mackertich is entitled in her own right of and in the three-storied house and premises, No. 17, Elysium Row, in the town of Calcutta.”

On the 28th January 1881, M. J. N. Mackertich (with the consent of his wife) sold his wife's one-fifth share of the house to some third person for Rs. 13,000. On the 29th January 1881, M. J. N. Mackertich died after having received the purchase-money. The estate of M. J. N. Mackertich came into the hands of the Administrator-General of Bengal, and with it the purchase-money of the house.

The Bengal Banking Company, Limited, then brought this suit against the Administrator-General and Hem Chandra Bannerjee to recover the sum advanced to them on their promissory note, upon their personal liability, and also against Mrs. Mackertich, praying that the sum of Rs. 8,000 might be paid out of the Rs. 13,000 in the hands of the Administrator-General.

The defendant contended that, as the promissory note was not registered, it could not be used as a mortgage, or as creating any interest in the mortgaged property, although it might [317] be admissible in evidence as a promissory note, or as an agreement to execute a mortgage.

Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Bannerjee for the plaintiffs.

Mr. T. A. Apcar for the defendants.

Pigot, J.—I am greatly obliged to the learned counsel for his able argument on behalf of the plaintiffs.

But in my opinion the plaintiffs have not succeeded in establishing a sufficient case to make it necessary for me to call upon the defendant.

The case that has just been urged is two-fold —

First, a claim to Rs. 8,000, which is claimed by the plaintiffs against a sum of Rs. 13,000, the product of the sale of the share of a house, No. 17, Elysium Row, which Mr. Kennedy clearly stated is claimed in virtue of rights arising from the execution of the document, which is Exhibit B in suit, rights attaching on property, the sale of which realized the Rs. 13,000.

But s 17 of the Registration Act renders it impossible for me to give any effect whatever to this document so far as it would create an interest in immoveable property, it not having been registered according to that section, and I, therefore, hold that this cannot be done.

Mr. Kennedy then argued, that inasmuch as this document would give a right to seek specific performance, it bound the conscience of the lady, whose attorney executed it, so as to place the person with whom the agreement was entered into, in the same position as if the contract had been carried out. But this seems to me no more than a mode of describing the manner in which equitable considerations may operate to create an interest in immoveable property, in respect of which a contract and not a conveyance has been entered into.

The intention of the Registration Act was, I think, that it should be impossible to use an unregistered document, so that it should have directly or indirectly the effect of creating an interest in immoveable property. I admitted Exhibit B in evidence "not as affecting any immoveable property referred to in it, but merely as evidence of a contract to execute a mortgage, and of [318] the transaction recorded in it (inclusive of the obligation created by the words promising to pay) save so far as it, i.e., the transaction, affected the immoveables," and I think the document cannot be allowed directly or indirectly to have any further effect.

Secondly, it was argued that the document operated to bind Mr. Mackertich to execute the mortgage, and that such mortgage must contain the usual covenant to pay the money within the time which the mortgage deed would have stipulated: that this must be treated as having been done, and that the case must be treated as one in which a covenant to pay the money had been entered into, a breach committed, and a claim now made in this suit in respect of the debt or obligation therein arising. I do not think that these considerations would entitle me to hold that a debt became due in respect of Exhibit B from Mrs. Mackertich to the plaintiffs.

Under these circumstances, these being the only two reliefs claimed against Mr. Mackertich, the only decree that can be made is a decree against the estate of Mr. Mackertich himself. A decree will go against his estate and against Hem Chandra Bannerjee as a matter of course with costs on scale 1.

Nothing has been urged about the Rs. 500 remitted to Mr. Mackertich, and there is nothing in this case to connect Mr. Mackertich in any way as a borrower with the plaintiffs, there is no privity between Mrs. Mackertich and the plaintiffs in respect of money borrowed. As Mr. Kennedy has pointed out, the power-of-attorney does not contain a power to borrow money, save by way of mortgage.

I wish it to be understood that as to the operation of the Registration Act, I follow with a complete assent, the judgment of Mr. Justice WEST in the case (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 143) which has been a good deal discussed in argument before me.

There will be a decree against Hem Chandra Bannerjee in terms of the prayer, and also against the estate of Mackertich in terms of prayer D, with costs against Hem Chandra on scale 2. The plaintiffs will pay the costs of Mrs. Mackertich and the Administrator-General on scale 2. There will be a decree for administration of Mackertich's estate.

The plaintiffs appealed against this judgment as far as it related to the defendant, Sarah Amelia Mackertich.

[319] Mr. Kennedy, with him Mr. Bonnerjee for the Appellants.

The share in the house having been sold after the promissory note was executed, the proceeds of the sale became subject to the charge in favour of the plaintiffs in the same way as the property itself was so subject before the sale. It is submitted, moreover, that the document is not one requiring registration under s. 17 of the Registration Act, it is really an equitable mortgage in the form of an agreement to mortgage, and even treating it as an agreement to mortgage, we should be entitled under it to a charge upon the Rs 13,000.

It was an instrument which we could have specifically enforced against Mrs. Mackertich if the property had not been sold, and not being in a position to specifically perform it against the purchaser, we are entitled to enforce it against the person who made the agreement. There is a personal liability on the part of Mrs. Mackertich to bring the property in, not by way of charge, but by way of compelling her to perform the agreement.

The Court here intimated to Mr. Kennedy that it would not be necessary for him to go into the other questions in the appeal.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. T. Apcar for the Respondent were not called upon.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.).

Garth, C.J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the judgment of the Court below, so far only as it concerns the defendant, Sarah Amelia Mackertich. Against the other two defendants the learned Judge made a decree, but refused to make one as against Mrs. Mackertich.

The claim against her was of this nature.

By a deed, dated the 1st of February 1880, Mrs. Mackertich gave to her husband, M. J. N. Mackertich (since deceased) a power-of-attorney to sell or mortgage a one-fifth share of a house in Elysium Row, to which she was entitled in her own right.

Being so empowered, Mr. Mackertich in the month of September in the same year, arranged to borrow from the plaintiffs' Bank a sum of Rs. 8,000, and on the 1st of October they lent him that money upon the security of a promissory note of that [320] date signed by himself, and Hem Chandra Bannerjee (the other defendant in this suit) and also signed by himself as attorney for his wife, Mrs. Mackertich. The note was in this form. (See ante, p. 316).

Having obtained the Rs. 8,000 upon this security, Mr. Mackertich (apparently with the plaintiffs' knowledge), sold his wife's one-fifth share of the house to some third person on the 28th of January 1881 for a sum of Rs. 13,000, and having received the purchase-money, he died on the following day, the 29th of January.

His estate then came into the hands of the Administrator General to be administered in due course of law, and with it the Rs. 13,000, and this suit was afterwards brought by the plaintiffs to recover the sum due for principal and interest upon the promissory note against the Administrator-General (as representing Mr. Mackertich's estate and Hem Chandra Bannerjee upon their personal liability, and as against Mrs. Mackertich), praying that the Rs. 8,000 and interest might be paid out of the Rs. 13,000 in the hands of the Administrator-General.

It seems clear that the power-of-attorney gave Mr. Mackertich no right to pledge his wife's personal credit by the promissory note, so that the only way in which she could be affected would be by charging her Rs. 13,000 in the hands of the Administrator-General with the amount due upon the note, as representing the one-fifth share of the property which her husband had agreed to mortgage.

Mr. Kennedy has contended here for the appellants (as he did in the Court below), that the one-fifth share having been sold after the note was given, the proceeds of the sale became subject to the charge in favour of the plaintiffs' Bank in the same way as the property itself was so subject before the sale.

To this Mrs. Mackertich's first answer was, that the note was not registered, and although it might be admissible in evidence as a promissory note, or even as an agreement to execute a mortgage, it was not available in any way to the plaintiffs, as a mortgage, or as creating any interest in the mortgaged property, without registration.

It is upon this point, and this point only, as we understand, that [321] the judgment of Mr. Justice PIGOT proceeds. He held that this document could not be put in evidence, or be treated as creating an interest in land, or in the Rs. 13,000, the produce of the land, inasmuch as it had not been registered.

But he considered that the document was receivable in evidence and available for another purpose, namely, that of charging the other defendants personally with the amount of the debt, and he accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree against those defendants personally.

In arriving at this conclusion the learned Judge appears to have relied upon a case decided by Mr. Justice WEST in the Bombay High Court.

In that case a suit was brought for specific performance of an agreement to purchase a house, which was to this effect:—"This day I have sold to you my house in which I live, for Rs. 1,900 ; and on account thereof I have received from you Rs. 100 as earnest at the time of execution of this bargain. And as to the remaining Rs. 1,800 the same are duly to be paid to me within one month from this day, when you will get the deed made in your favour."

This document was not registered, and the question arose, whether, inasmuch as the transaction had been partially carried out under it, and an interest in the property created in favour of the purchaser, the document was admissible in evidence for the purposes of the suit, without being registered, and as I understand Mr. Justice WEST, his view was much the same as that taken by Mr. Justice PIGOT here.

He considered that although as creating an interest in land the document was not receivable in evidence, it might be used for the purposes of the suit, namely, for the purpose of obtaining a specific performance of the agreement.

This really seems the only sensible way of reconciling the provisions of clauses (b) and (h) of s. 17 of the Registration Act. By clause (b) any document which purports to create an interest in land requires registration, and if not registered, it is (by s. 49) not available as affecting the property comprised therein. But by clause (h) any document not itself creating an interest in land, [322] but merely a right to obtain another document which would create such an interest, does not require registration.

We all know that there are a great many documents coming within the description of clause (h) which may amount nevertheless to what are called equitable mortgages, and so create an interest in land. As such, they would require to be registered, though as mere agreements to mortgage, they, under clause (h), would not. The only way, therefore, of meeting the difficulty seems to be, to hold that they are available for the one purpose without registration, but not for the other.

This is only extending to that class of cases the principle which we have laid down in the Full Bench case of Ulfutunnissa v. Hossein Khan (1 L. R., 9 Cal, 520)

It is clear, that if we were to hold that equitable mortgages when they are in the form of agreements to mortgage, do not require registration, such instruments would be generally used instead of legal mortgages, for the very purpose of avoiding registration, whilst, on the other hand, if we hold that any document which amounts to an equitable mortgage cannot be used as an agreement to execute a mortgage, we should be defeating the clear intention of clause (h) of the Registration Act.

Mr Kennedy in the course of his argument reminded us of a large class of cases, which are to be found in the English Reports, in which difficult questions used formerly to arise, whether certain documents amounted to leases, or only to agreements for leases. As leases they required one kind of stamp, as agreements for leases another kind of stamp. Now these cases rather serve to illustrate the principle, upon which I think we ought to decide the present question.

After the passing of the Act 8 and 9 Vict., c. 106 (the Act to simplify the transfer of property), all doubts with regard to these documents were at an end, because by s 3 of that Act, all leases which were required by law to be in writing (that is, all leases for three years and upwards), were void unless made by deed, and the consequence was, that no document which secured to the lessee an interest for more than three years was [323] valid as a lease, unless made by deed. But from that time the Courts were in the habit of construing those documents, which under the Act were void as leases, as agreements for leases, in order to render them effectual.

So here, although we must treat a document like the present as ineffectual to create any interest in land, we may treat it as valid for any other legitimate purpose. Thus, we may deal with this instrument as a promissory note, or as an agreement to execute a mortgage.

Mr. Kennedy goes so far as to contend, that even treating the document as a mere agreement to mortgage, his clients would be entitled under it to a charge upon the Rs. 13,000.

But I think that is not so. Unless they can treat the note as an equitable mortgage, the plaintiffs cannot, in my opinion, claim a charge upon the Rs. 13,000.

I think, therefore, that the Court below was right, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

I should add that even supposing that this document were admissible and effectual, as Mr. Kennedy contends, I think that other questions of equity would probably arise, which we have now abstained from considering. The defendant, Mrs. Mackertich, has not been called upon to go into her case at all. In fact we have stopped Mr. Kennedy from going into any other question, except that which was decided by the Court below.

Cunningham, J.—I agree in thinking that the judgment of the Court below must stand.

Mr. Mackertich having a power-of-attorney to sell or mortgage his wife's property, signed on her behalf a joint and several promissory note for Rs. 8,000, and as collateral security agreed to assign by way of mortgage her interest in certain property.

The plaintiffs state that subsequent to this Mr. Mackertich effected a sale of the property for Rs. 13,000, and this Rs. 13,000, on Mackertich's death, passed into the hands of the Administrator-General. The plaintiffs complain that the Administrator-General refuses to recognize their claim on the specific Rs. 13,000 which they say is liable to the debt, but regards it merely as enforceable against the general property of the deceased.

[324] The question, therefore, raised in the case is the plaintiffs' right, in virtue of this document, to follow the sum of Rs. 13,000 in the hands of the Administrator-General, and render it liable for the debt which the joint and several promissory note created.

I think that what was said in the Court below, and has just been said by my lord, makes it clear that it is only by treating this document as a mortgage and investing it with all the effects of a mortgage that we could do what the plaintiffs ask, and as I think we are precluded by the Registration Act from allowing it to have this effect, I agree in thinking that the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal]

Declaratory decree, Suit for—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s 15—Hindu widow's control over savings of the income of her limited estate

A suit brought during the life of a Hindu widow by the presumptive heir, entitled on her death to the possession of the property in which she held her limited estate, to have an alienation by her declared to operate only for her life, is among the exceptions to the general rule established by decision upon Act VIII of 1859, s 15, viz, that, except in certain cases, a declaratory decree is not to be made unless the plaintiff shows a title to, though he does not ask for, consequential relief *

Held, that although to grant a declaratory decree under the above section was discretionary with a Court, yet in a suit of this class, known to the law, and in many cases the only practical mode of enforcing the presumptive heir's right to interfere with the widow's alienation, the grounds for the discretionary refusal of the decree should be strong. In this case, the difficulty of the question raised, and the expense of the litigation, which had been referred to as grounds for refusing it, were insufficient reasons [325] A widow's savings from the income of her limited estate are not her stridhan; and if she has made no attempt to dispose of them in her lifetime, there is no dispute but that they follow the estate from which they arose. But it is not always possible to fix the line which separates accretions to the husband's estate from income held in suspense in the widow's hands, as to which she has not determined whether or not she will spend it. Where, however, both the family property, and property purchased by the widow out of savings from her income were alienated by her with the object of changing the succession, held, that accretion was clearly established, and that the after-purchases were inalienable by her for any purpose that would not justify alienation of the original estate.

A daughter, obtaining a transfer from her deceased father's widows of their interests in his estate, does not acquire thereby an estate valid against the title of the father's collateral heirs, expectant on the deaths of the widows.

APPEAL from a decree (24th June 1879) of the High Court of Bengal, reversing a decree (17th September 1877) of the First Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot.

The question raised on this appeal related to a gift made by the two widows of a deceased Hindu to the daughter of one of them, comprising property in which the widows held their limited estate, and also property purchased by the widows out of the accumulated income from the same source. As to whether a declaratory decree, under Act VIII of 1859, s. 15, should have been made in favour of the presumptive heirs of the deceased husband, declaring that the gift operated only for the lives of the widows, the judgment of the High Court (see Hansbutti Koerain v. Ishri Dutt Koer I. L. R. 5 Cal. 512), differed from that of the Court of First Instance.

The appellants, the plaintiffs in the suit, were the sons of the brothers, with other near sapindas, of Budnath Koer, the husband, who died in 1857, leaving a daughter, Dyji Oghain, in whose favour the widows made the gift in question by deed dated 21st December 1873. This daughter afterwards died, herself leaving a daughter, with whom the widows were defendants in the suit, and now respondents.

By the deed of 21st December 1873, the widows gave to the daughter, with immediate possession, the property which had belonged to their deceased husband, consisting of shares in village lands specified in a schedule to the deed. Also other village lands [326] described in another schedule as "mahsoob khas," or property of which they had the entire control. A third schedule comprised other interests in land of which the owners were to retain possession during their lives without power of alienation.

The object, generally stated, of the suit brought by the presumptive heirs of Budnath Koer was to have this deed of gift, so far as it might control the inheritance after the widows' deaths, declared invalid against them. They alleged that the properties in the second schedule had been bought by the widows out of income, and were subject to the same rule of inheritance as the parent estate. The defence (amongst other things) denying that the property in the second schedule could be claimed as belonging to the estate of the deceased husband, maintained that the plaintiffs, showing no title to relief, before the deaths of the widows who were alive could obtain no such declaration.

The Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, Mr. W. DeCosta, found that the property in the second schedule had been purchased by the widows out of the income of the family estate, to which he, therefore, held it to be an accretion. Referring to all the property, he held that there was no principle of Hindu law permitting a gift by a widow to her daughter, next in the line of succession, to defeat the rights of the presumptive heirs, and that to allow the donee's daughter to take as heir an estate of inheritance, through her mother, would be to change the legal course of descent, and was inadmissible. He, therefore, made a decree declaring that the deed of 1873 could not defeat the plaintiffs' right to succeed on the deaths of the widows, to the family estate; and that the properties purchased by the widows were an increment to the estate, and subject to the same rule of succession.

The High Court (AINSLIE and BROUGHTON, JJ.) confirmed the finding that the property in the second schedule had been acquired out of savings from the income of the widows' limited estate. But, on a review of the decided cases relating to the widows' power over accumulations, they observed that it had not been precisely determined what that power was. The authorities were rather in favour of her being able to alienate the proceeds of her own savings. If the Court had been bound to make a decree, it would have made a reference to a Full Bench in regard to the conflict be-[327]tween the cases of Gros v. Amirtamoyi Dasi (4 B. L. R., O. C. 1) and Puddamoni Dossee v. Dwarkanath Biswas (25 W. R. 335). They held it expedient to refuse a declaratory decree, having a discretion to do so. The judgments of both Judges are reported in the Indian Law Reports, 5 Cal., p. 512.

On this appeal—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Appellants, argued that the grounds given by the High Court for withholding a declaratory decree were insufficient. In the first place, without dealing with the question of the accumulations, a suit by the reversioners would lie at once to set aside so much of the widows' transfer of the family estate as would, if undisputed, operate to deprive them of the succession. Such a suit was mentioned in Act IX of 1871, sch. II, art., 124, and in Act XV of 1877, art. 125, where the period of limitation, twelve years from the date of the alienation, was fixed for it. This class of suits was also expressly exempted in the judgment in Katama Natchiar v. Dora Singa Tever (L. R. 2 I. A. 169, s.c., 15 B. L. R. 83) from the general rule requiring that the plaintiff seeking a declaratory decree should be in a position to claim consequential relief, and referred to in the words of the judgment —“The right of a reversioner to bring a suit to restrain a widow, or other Hindu female, in possession, from acts of waste, although his interest during her life is future, and contingent, suits of that kind form a very special class, and have been entertained by the Courts ex necessitate rei.” Again, in Gobindmoni Dasi v. Shamlal Baisakh (B. L. R. Sup Vol. 48) it had been decided that the reversionary heir might, during the life of the widow who had alienated the family estate, commence his suit to protect his title to the future possession after her death. It was necessary as soon as possible, in many cases, to question the widows' act, and this class of suits was not open to objection, although brought by heirs entitled only in expectancy, whose interests might never take effect.

Secondly.—On the question whether by Hindu law the widow could dispose of the invested accumulations, and also whether she [328] could by releasing to a daughter confer an absolute estate on the latter, no such power existed.

The profits of her limited estate were not the widow's stridhan, but unless they were, she could not dispose of them in the manner attempted. The daughter could not acquire an absolute estate by taking a transfer from the widows, nor could she transmit such an estate to her heir. A daughter's estate is not stridhan, Chotaylall v. Chunnolull (L. R. 6 I. A. 15, s.c., I. L. R., 4 Cal., 744). The Mitakshara, which governed the parties, admitted no right on the part of women holding limited estates to make separate estate out of them.

Mr. J. H. W. Arathoon, for the Respondents, argued that the deed of gift of 1873, on its true construction, conferred only an estate for the lives of the widows in the corpus of the family estate. This the widows had power to transfer, and so far there could be no ground for claiming a declaratory decree. On the question of the accumulations, which was the second point, the judgment of the High Court, withholding the decree on grounds of discretion, was correct. He cited Sreenarain Mitter v. Kishensundari Dasi (11 B. L. R. 171), Tekait Doorgapersad Singh v. Tekaitni Doorga Koonwar (L. R. 5 I. A. 149), Ramanand Koer v. Raghunath Koer (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 769).

Should it, however, be necessary, in order to show that there was no ground for a declaratory decree, to rely on the widow's power to dispose of the accumulations, the inclination of the Judge's opinions, stated in the judgments, was in accordance with the Hindu law. The widow could make a gift of accumulated income. He referred to the decision in Puddamoni Dossee v. Dwarkanath Biswas (25 W. R. 335), that a purchase having been made by a widow out of the income of her limited estate, it was competent to her to alienate such purchase, in whole or in part, or convert it back into money. He cited also, Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhoo Mullick (9 Moore's I. A. 123), Conda Kooar v. Kooar Oodey Singh (14 B. L. R. 159).

Mr C. W. Arathoon, in reply, referred to the judgment of MITTER, J., in Kery Kolitani v. Moneeram Kolita (13 B. L. R. 1) at page 8 of the report [329] in 13 B. L. R., also to Bhugwandeem Doobey v. Myna Bae (11 Moore's I. A., 487), Chundrabulee Debia v. Brody (9 W. R., 584); Nihalkhan v. Hur Churn Lal (1 Agra H. C., 219); Bhagbatti Dae v. Chowdry Bholanath Thakoor (L. R., 2 I. A., 256, S.C. I. L. R., 1 Cal., 104), and Grose v. Amirtamayi Das (4 B. L. R., O. C., 1).

He cited the opinion of MACPHERSON, J., who said that, "although the theory of the Hindu law is that the income of the husband's estate shall go to the widow for her maintenance and for the performance of pious duties, that theory by no means necessarily embraces the large lump-sum of accumulations. According to all the older authorities on Hindu law, accumulations should be treated in the same way as the corpus, and I think they should be so treated now, in the absence of any distinct authority to the contrary."

He also cited Elberling on Inheritance, Chapter V, Strange's Hindu law, Vol. I, Chap. I, paras. 2 and 3, Dayabhaga, Chap. IV, s. 1, Mitakshara, Chap. II, s. 11, Vayavastha Darpana, 44, Vivada Chintamani, on separate property of women

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered on a subsequent day (July 11th) by Sir A. Hobhouse.—This is a litigation concerning the succession to the estate of one Budnath Koer, a Hindu who died towards the end of the year 1857. He left two widows, Hansbutti and Chunderbutti, who are still living, and one child, the daughter of Chunderbutti, who was named Dyji Ojhain, and who has since died, leaving only a daughter. On the death of Dyji the collateral male relatives of Budnath became his presumptive heirs, subject to the interest of the widows. They are the plaintiffs and the appellants. The defendants and respondents are the two widows, and Bachni the daughter of Dyji.

On the 21st December 1873 the widows executed a deed, whereby, after stating that with the exception of Dyji, there was no heir of their husband or of themselves, they made a gift to her of certain lands and villages, only retaining to themselves a life interest in part of them. Some of the property is described as mouzahs exclusively acquired by the widows out of their own fund, and the rest is described as having been left by their husband Budnath.

Dyji died in the year 1875, and in the course of the next year the plaintiffs brought their suit. The material parts of the prayer are for a decision that the deed of December 1873 is null and void as regards the reversionary interests of the plaintiffs, and for a declaration that the properties acquired by the widows are part and parcel of their husband's estate.

By their written statements, and by the mouth of their pleader, the three defendants set up in substance the same defence. They say first, that the plaintiffs having only a contingent interest cannot maintain the suit; secondly, that if a widow releases her interest to her husband's heir presumptive, which Dyji was, the absolute interests becomes at once vested in such heir, and therefore the inheritance devolved on Bachni; thirdly, that at least the properties which were purchased by their own money either received from their parents or given to them by Budnath during his lifetime formed no part of Budnath's estate.

In the month of September 1877 the case was heard and decided by the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot. He found that the properties purchased by the widows were so purchased out of the profits of Budnath's estate, and were accretions to that estate. He held that the conveyance to Dyji did not vest the inheritance in her, because she was heir only to a woman's estate, and the prescribed course of inheritance would be changed if she took an estate transmissible to her own heirs. And he gave the plaintiffs the decree they asked.

The defendants appealed to the High Court, and in June 1879 the case was heard by a Divisional Bench, consisting of Justices AINSLIE and BROUGHTON, who reversed the decree below and dismissed the suit with costs. From that decree the plaintiffs bring the present appeal.

The learned Judges think that the first part of the plaintiff's prayer cannot be entertained, because it is clearly competent to the widows to convey their own interest, because as regards Budnath's original property it is not necessary to construe the deed of 1873 as doing more, and because as regards the after-purchases [331] the widows only convey such legal interest as they believe themselves to hold. Their Lordships are unable to follow this reasoning, even when confined to Budnath's original estate. The defendants have not met the plaintiffs by saying that by the conveyance Dyji got nothing more than the widows' interest; they have contended that by coalition with Dyji's inheritance it gave her an estate transmissible to her own heirs. If then the true construction of this transaction be that it passes only the widows' interest, it materially concerns the plaintiffs to have that construction established. In this part of their prayer they ask nothing more favourable to themselves, and as between themselves and the defendants who allege an adverse construction, they are clearly entitled to as much, unless they are excluded by the rules relating to declaratory decrees.

The after-purchases fall under the same observations, and with respect to them two other substantial questions are raised, one of fact and one of law. First, the defendants deny that they were made out of the proceeds of Budnath's property, and this issue has been decided against them in both Courts, and is no longer a matter of dispute. Secondly, they contend that such purchases are not to be treated as accretions to the property from the proceeds of which they were made, but belong to the widows who made them.

The learned Judges below do not treat the latter question as unimportant to the plaintiffs; but they consider it to be one of great difficulty, unsettled by authority, and requiring reference by a Full Bench. In their judgment therefore the case is not a proper one for a declaratory decree. Mr. Justice AINSLIE states the principle of their decision as follows :—

“ It seems to me that we ought not to allow this suit to be protracted and great additional expense to be incurred, when it is quite possible that the widows or one of them may survive the plaintiffs, so that the estate may never vest in them and the decision arrived at may prove no bar to further litigation.

“ For the purposes of this appeal it is sufficient to say that the Court will not, in a declaratory suit, decide intricate questions of law, when no immediate effect and possibly no future effect can be given to its decision, and when the postponement of the decision to the time when there may be be-[332]fore the Court some person entitled to immediate relief (if the decision is in favour of the plaintiff) will not prejudice his rights in any way. ”

This suit was instituted before the passing of the Specific Relief Act, and its propriety must be tried by the law as it stood under s. 15 of the Procedure Code of 1859. That section does not confer any right to declaratory relief in any given case, but merely enacts that no suit shall be liable to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree is sought, and that it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief.

It is true that the apparently wide door here opened for declaratory suits is greatly narrowed by the decision that, as a general rule, the Court shall not make a declaration except in cases in which the plaintiff could if he chose seek some consequential relief. That doctrine was clearly laid down in the case of Kattama Natchiar (L. R. 2 I. A., 169, s.c. 15 B. L. R., 83), but it was there stated to be subject to exceptions. Their Lordships think, and here they agree with the learned Judges below, that such a suit as the present falls among the exceptions.

It is laid down, and in their Lordships' opinion correctly, in Shama Churn Sircar's Vayavastha Darpana, that “ if a widow, without consent of her husband's heirs, dispose of his property for purposes not sanctioned by law, they are entitled to interfere and prevent any such wrongful alienation by her ” (Vayavastha Darpana, Vayavastha 44). Yet it is clear that a widow may alien her own interest. If then she executes a conveyance valid for her own interest but purporting to convey a larger interest to the grantee, it is difficult to see how the reversioner can get any relief except a declaration that the conveyance is void pro tanto. He cannot set the deed aside, because it is partly valid, nor can he affect the possession, which the widow has a right to keep or to give up to another. Such suits as the present one would seem to be, at least in many cases, the only practical mode of enforcing the heirs' right to interfere with a widow's alienation. That they are known to the law is clear, for Act IX of 1871, art. 124, prescribes the time for bringing a “ suit during the life of a Hindu widow by a Hindu entitled to the posses-[333]sion of land on her death, to have an alienation made by the widow declared to be void except for her life.” That is precisely the first part of the plaintiffs' prayer in this suit. And the person “ entitled ” must mean the presumptive heir who would be entitled if the widow died at that moment.

It is true that the foregoing considerations do not settle the case, for there remains a discretion in the Court, which may find it, as the High Court has found it, inexpedient to grant the relief asked. But their Lordships think that a strong case of inexpediency should be shown for refusing declaratory relief.

to classes of persons expressly recognized by the law as suitors for such relief. They do not say that there may not be such a case, but they cannot find it here.

The only reason assigned for refusing relief on the ground of discretion is that part of the case raises a difficult point of law, the decision of which, though involving expense and delay, may after all not be binding upon the actual reversioners. That may be a reason more or less weighty according to circumstances. In this case it does not apply to the original estate of Budnath, as to which the plaintiffs are clearly right and the defendants clearly wrong in their contention. Nor is it readily conceivable that the decision will be fruitless; because the question of law is of such a nature that its decision, though not binding as res judicata between the widows and a new reversioner, would be so strong an authority in point as probably to deter either party from disputing it.

Moreover, it is to be observed that objections resting on the difficulties of the dispute are of much more weight in a preliminary stage than in a Court of Appeal. If the defendants had in the first instance objected to declaratory relief and had taken the opinion of the Subordinate Judge on that point, there would then have been more ground for refusing relief in order to save expense and litigation. But they did not do that. They disputed the whole case of the plaintiff. An important issue of fact, and two important issues of law, were decided by the first Court in the plaintiffs' favour. After all this it comes very late for the Court above to reverse the action of the Court below on the ground of discretion and in order to save further litigation and expense.

[334] For the above reasons their Lordships think that they are bound to decide the issues raised in this case.

So far as regards the contention of the defendants that Dyi could by the conveyance take an absolute estate transmissible to her heirs, the High Court have not expressed any opinion adverse to that of the Subordinate Judge, and their Lordships need do no more than express agreement with him.

The difficult question of the after-purchases is very ably discussed by the learned Judges below, who would probably, if compelled to decide, have decided against the plaintiffs. The difficulty is enhanced, if not created by the later current of decision, which gives to the widow a more free and complete usufruct of her husband's property than is accorded to her by the texts and earlier decisions, a modification of the law which is strongly illustrated by the conflicting opinions of Mr. Justice DWARKANATH MITTER and his colleagues in the case of Kery Kolitani (13 B. L. R., 1).

The question was argued at the bar as though it were necessary to divide all the property of a widow into two classes, one being her stridhan, and the other her husband's estate over which she has the widow's right and no more. But the very question is, whether, having regard to the widow's freedom in enjoying her husband's property, and to her established right to alienate her own interest in it, she has not a kind of property the nature of which must remain undecided till her disposal of it or her death. It is impossible to read Mr. Justice AINSLIE's forcible argument, without feeling that it is difficult to specify the point of time at which the widow loses her control over the unexpended portion of her income from her husband's estate. If she may spend or give away the whole, may she not put some by? If she saves one year or month, may she not spend those savings the next year or month? If she may save and spend again may she not place her savings so as to get some income from them ? And so on through all the steps of the sortes.

To decide this question it is necessary to examine the authorities, which are by no means in accord. But their Lordships do not treat as authorities on this question the numerous cases cited at the bar, to show that a widow's savings from her husband's [335] estate are not her stridhan. If she has made no attempt to dispose of them in her lifetime, there is no dispute but that they follow the estate from which they arose. The dispute arises when the widow, who might have spent the income as it accrued, has in fact saved it and afterwards attempts to alienate it. And the existing conflict of opinion upon it makes it desirable to pass the authorities briefly under review.

The earliest case which is relied on as an authority for the widow's power of alienation was decided by this Board in the year 1862, viz., Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Dinobundho Mullick (9 Moore's I A. 123) The case, however, was of a different sort. A Hindu testator's estate was under administration, and there was dispute as to interests taken by some of the parties. One of them died during the litigation, leaving a widow. He was ultimately declared to be entitled to an absolute interest in a share of the property, and the question then arose, how the income which had accrued from his share should be disposed of. The Supreme Court held that both the income which accrued during his life and that which accrued after his death should be held by his widow in that character. On appeal that decree was varied, and it was declared that, so far as regarded the accumulations after the death of the legatee, his widow was entitled to them absolutely in her own right. Here, then, the widow had not saved the income in question, she had never had the option of saving or spending it, and all that was done was to recognize her right to the full usufruct and control over it.

In the year 1866 the High Court of Agra expressly decided the point in question. A Hindu widow purchased property and afterwards alienated it. The Court first found that it was purchased with the proceeds of her husband's property, and then held that it was ancestral and the alienation invalid (Nihal Khan v. Hur Churn Lal, 1 Agra H. C. 219)

In the case of Grose v. Amritamayi Das (4 B. L. R. O., 1) Mr. Justice MACPHERSON held, while saying that he had formerly thought the contrary, that accumulations ought to follow the corpus. In that case, however, the accumulations accrued before the widow recovered the estate, and the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice MACPHERSON [336] seems to be at variance with the decision in Sorjeemoney Dossee v. Dinobundho Mullick.

In the case of Bholanath v. Bhagabathi (7 B. L. R., 93) decided in 1871 the Calcutta High Court (JACKSON and AINSLIE, JJ) held that a Hindu widow could not alienate property acquired by her out of the income of the husband's estate, but that she could make valid gifts to her daughter and grand-daughter by buying property in their names. This case came before the Privy Council in 1875, when it was held that the widow held the husband's estate not in her capacity of widow but as taker of a life interest under a settlement. But in their judgment the Board said : " If she took the estate only of a Hindu widow, one consequence no doubt would be that she would be unable to alienate the profits, or that at all events whatever she purchased out of them would be an increment to her husband's estate " (Bhabut Dase v. Chowdhry Bholanath Thakoor, L. R. 2 I. A., 256).

In the year 1874, before the appeal in the last case was heard, another case in which the point was discussed had come before the Board, Gonda Koer v. Oodey Singh (14 B. L. R., 159). In that case there was no alienation by the widow, and the Board treated the point thus : " It, therefore, becomes unnecessary to decide what might have been the effect of a distinct intention on her part, if it had been proved, to appropriate to herself and to sever from the bulk of the estate such purchases as she had made with the view of conferring them on her adopted son." As the case stood, the widow's purchases accrued to her husband's estate.

In 1876 the point came again before the Calcutta High Court. The Division Bench, consisting of Judges JACKSON and MACDONELL, thought that their decision might be rested on other grounds, but expressed themselves as prepared to base their decision on the ground that a Hindu widow, having purchased land with the money derived from the income of her husband's estate, is competent afterwards to alienate her right and interest in whole or in part to reconvert the land into money, and to spend it if she chooses Puddomonee Dossee v. Dwarkanath Biswas (25 W. R., 335).

[337] This is the state of the authorities, and their Lordships, differing from the learned Judges below, think it must be taken as adverse to the claim made on behalf of the widow. They do not rest on what was said by them in Bholanath's case as decisive of this case, for the observation must be taken as applied to the then pending case, and it was, moreover, extra-judicial, and is fairly open to the qualifications with which Mr. Justice AINSLIE reads it. Nor do they think it possible to lay down any sharp definition of the line which separates accretions to the husband's estate from income held in suspense in the hands of the widow, as to which she has not determined whether or no she will spend it. As before said, they feel the force of Mr. Justice AINSLIE'S reasoning on this point.

In this case the properties in question consist of shares of lands, in which the husband was a shareholder to a larger extent. They were purchased within a short time after his death in 1857. No attempt to alienate them was made till 1873. The object of the alienation was not the need or the personal benefit of the widows, but a desire to change the succession, and to give the inheritance to the heirs of one of themselves in preference to their husband's heirs. Neither with respect to this object, nor apparently in any other way, have the widows made any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases. Parts of both are conveyed to Dyji immediately, and parts of both are retained by the widows for life. These are circumstances which, in their Lordships' opinion, clearly establish accretion to the original estate, and make the after-purchases inalienable by the widows for any purpose which would not justify alienation of that original estate.

The result is that, in their Lordships' opinion, the decree of the High Court should be reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored, and that the respondents should pay the costs incurred in the High Court and the costs of this appeal. They will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with this opinion.

NOTES.

[1. INCOME, THOUGH ABSOLUTE PROPERTY, WHEN BECOMES ACCRETION TO THE ESTATE—

This is the leading case on the subject; and there have been two subsequent Privy Council decisions :—In (1887) 14 Cal. 337 at 393, there are observations as to such income being prima facie part of the estate but in Saodamm Das v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (1892) 20 Cal., 433 P. C. (in the High Court (1889) 16 Cal., 574 ; 14 Cal., 861) these observations occur.—

" She did nothing to indicate an intention to make the fund received, or the interest on it, part of her husband's estate which was in other hands or to justify the inference that she wished it to revert to her husband's heirs. It was said she had placed it in investment of a permanent nature. Had she done so, it does not appear to their Lordships that this circumstance alone would have added the funds to the estate devolving on her husband's heirs."

Sir I' Bhashyam Ayyangar J. in (1901) 25 Mad. 351 after discussing and explaining these three cases observed that the prima facie presumption in the case of purchases from income which are at one's absolute disposal, though the corpus is not, is in favour of the acquirer retaining dominion over it, and that the mere fact of the properties thus acquired by her being managed and enjoyed by the widow without any distinction, along with properties inherited from her husband, can in no way affect this presumption, since, being sole and separate owner of the two sets of properties so long as she enjoys the same, and being absolutely entitled to the income derived from both sets of properties, she cannot but manage and enjoy both sets of properties alike, and that purchasers from her can be expected to deal with her upon this presumption.

SIR S. SUBRAMANIA AYYAR approved of the above and held that properties purchased out of maintenance paid under a decree were stidhan — (1904) 28 Mad. 1.

The points brought out in these cases as pertinent evidences of intention were (1) attempts to keep the two together in one line of succession, 10 Cal., 324, 14 Cal., 387, (2) there being no estate to which the income would be accretion, (20 Cal., 493, 28 Mad., 1) etc.

The Madras case was not followed in (1910) 7 I. C., 27 (Cal.); where purchases of immovable property were held to stand on a different footing, and income undisposed of and remaining in agent's hands at the death of the widow was held to be part of the corpus — (1911) 16 C. W. N., 106, (1911) 16 C. W. N., 834 distinguishing 10 Bom., 478. House built on husband's site from debts on security of husband's estate which were paid off from income, it was held, formed part of the estate — (1902) 4 Bom., L. R., 555.

Property of husband saved out of income was held to go with his estate — (1911) 16 C. W. N., 834.

II. ALIENATION—NEXT HEIR—CONSENT—

In this case of 10 Cal., 324 it was held that by the alienation of a limited owner to the next heir, when the latter person is by the law of succession entitled to a life estate only, the latter does not take a higher interest by the alienation—because the alienor alone drops out. See also 14 All., 377, 11 All., 253.

Similar is the result when the alienation is made conjointly with such 'limited' next heir—14 M. I. A., 176, 5 Bom., 563, 25 Bom., 129, 32 Cal., 62, 29 All., 341 P.C.—because only the alienor's interest passes. The result is different when the next heir is a male — 30 All., 1, 10 Cal., 1102.

Likewise, the consent given by a limited owner to such an alienation is utterly ineffectual and it has been held to be not even prima facie evidence of legal necessity — (1908) 35 Cal., 1086, 12 C. W. N., 914, 8 C. L. J., 120 unlike the consent given by males.

III. DECLARATORY DECREE—WHEN GRANTED—

Though no consequential relief is claimable, it has been held that a declaratory decree may be passed in suits by presumptive reversioners, on the ground of perpetuation of testimony, 10 Cal., 324.

But this is not the only exception. Allowing property to be wasted, e. g. letting it to be barred by limitation, or acting contrary to will, has been held sufficient ground to maintain a declaratory suit — (1906) 3 C. L. J., 224 at 230.

A widow being entitled to alienate her life interest, the mere fact of her alienation is not ground for a declaratory suit — (1910) 8 M. L. T. 320 where the deed, being a deed of relinquishment, did not affect the reversionary interest, (1901) 5 C. W. N., 445 where the deed was a mortgage for a small portion of the debt which might be paid off from the income.

But where the alienee's name was allowed to be entered in the landlord's sherista, (1884) 10 Cal., 1003, or where the life-interest was sought to be enlarged (1894) 22 Cal., 354, the suit was allowed.

IV. DECLARATORY DECREE GRANTED BY LOWER COURT—APPELLATE COURT'S POWERS—

Such decree should not be lightly interfered with — 10 Cal., 324, 26 All., 288; 28 Mad. 57.

V. RES JUDICATA BY DECISIONS IN DECLARATORY SUITS OF PRESUMPTIVE REVERSIONERS—

In this case which related to alienation, the Privy Council, in dealing with the use of declaratory decrees in such suits, observed that the decree would have a deterrent effect, even if it be not binding on the actual reversioners. The Madras High Court, having regard to certain observations of the Privy Council in suits relating to adoption, has invested decisions in declaratory suits relating to adoption with the effect of res judicata and confined the observations here to suits relating to alienations — (1906) 29 Mad. 390 (F.B.); 16 M. L. J. 307; 1 M.L.T. 183; contra (1902) 13 M. L. J. 359.

See also the following cases — 27 Mad., 588, 22 All., 33; 382; 14 Bom. 51; 22 Cal., 354; 3 C.L.J. 224 at 231.]

[338] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.*The 22nd September, 1883.

PRESENT.

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

Brae

versus

The Queen-Empress.

Rioting—Penal Code, s. 156—Manager of indigo factory.

In order to convict the manager of an indigo factory under s. 156 of the Penal Code, it must be shown by legal evidence (1) that a riot was committed, (2) that the riot, if committed, was committed for the benefit of the accused, and (3) that the accused had reason to believe that a riot was likely to be committed.

THIS was a prosecution under s. 155 of the Penal Code against the manager of an indigo factory, by which he was charged with not having used all lawful means to prevent a certain riot, which it was alleged had taken place between his servants on the one side and some other parties, tenants of an adjacent landowner, on the other, the same having been committed for his benefit, and he having had reason to believe that it was likely to occur.

The case for the prosecution was, that for a considerable time a dispute had been going on between the factory people and certain ryots, concerning some lands, which the former had taken by force from the latter, and on which they had sown indigo, that suits had been brought in respect of these lands by the ryots; that decrees had been obtained, and that finally they had been put in possession of them two days before the alleged occurrence took place. That several of the servants of the factory were present when possession was given by the nazir of the Civil Court, and that there was indigo six inches high growing on the lands at this time. That on the morning of the 9th March, at about 7 A.M., Brae, the manager of the factory, had been seen riding in the direction of the lands in dispute, and that latter in the morning he, together with some of his own men, had passed close to, and inspected the indigo growing on them. That at about 10-30 or 11 A.M., a large body of factory servants armed with lathies, and [339] one of them with a gun, went to the lands where the decree-holders were commencing to plough up the indigo, that a riot occurred, and that one of the tenant's party was killed, having been shot by the jaj-ameen of the factory. That Brae was at his house two miles off when the riot occurred, and that he had taken no steps whatever to prevent it.

Mr. Dunne for the appellant. A manager can only be charged under s. 156 and not 155, and in order to make him liable, it must be shown that the acts committed were either directly or indirectly instigated by him, and were for the benefit of the owner or occupier of the land.

In this case there is nothing to show that a riot did actually take place, as no facts have been spoken to from which a common object can be inferred, except the death of the man who is said to have been shot. But it cannot be suggested that Brae instigated such a proceeding as this, nor can it be said to have been for the benefit of the owner or occupier. The prosecution have also failed to show that the manager had any reason to anticipate a riot, for the fact of possession having been given to the decree-holders would not of itself be sufficient to raise a presumption to that effect. Further there is nothing to show that Brae had any means at his command to prevent a riot of the kind alleged.

* Criminal Appeal No. 538 of 1883, against the order of Mr. W. G. Deane, Sub-Divisional Magistrate and Justice of the Peace of Jhenidah, dated the 28th August 1883.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer Officiating (Mr. White) for the Crown. These sections are intended to put a stop to riots committed or abetted by managers of indigo factories, and as regards the evidence to be given in prosecutions under them, nothing more than a prima facie case need be made out in the Magistrate's Court. The Legislature, when framing these sections, evidently contemplated that a trial of the original riot case should have taken place, and that the offenders had been punished by the Sessions Court, where the evidence would be of a minute and voluminous nature, and that after that case had been decided, a proceeding of this kind should be taken to bring the manager to book. There is abundant evidence to show that a riot was committed. We show that a man was killed, and by one of the factory servants who was provided with a gun. We show that Brae passed and inspected the lands in the morning with some of his men, that a little after a number of his people went out in a body armed, and that they went to the [340] decree-holders' land, and whatever the dispute was, a man was killed. The indigo on the land was of great value to Brae, the object that these men had in view was to prevent its being ploughed up, and if they had done so, it would have been a decided benefit to the owner. O'Kinealy's Penal Code, p. 54, and the case of The Queen v. Hurnath Roy (3 W. R. Cr., 54) were referred to.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (MITTER and PIGOT, JJ.) —

Mitter, J.—The appellant in this case has been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jhemidah under s. 155 of the Indian Penal Code. It is quite clear, and it is not disputed that that is not the right section under which he should have been convicted. The appellant was simply the manager and not the owner of the land respecting which the alleged riot took place. The section under which he should have been charged is s. 156, but it appears to me that on three essential points the evidence that has been adduced is not sufficient to establish an offence under s. 156.

The first point that is necessary to be established is that a riot was committed, but there is no evidence to prove that a riot, as defined in the Penal Code, was committed. It is necessary to show that there was an assembly of more than five persons, who had a common object in view, but in this case there is no evidence to show that the servants of the factory, who are alleged to have constituted the unlawful assembly, had any such common object. It is said that their object was to prevent the indigo plants being uprooted, but no evidence of this has been adduced on behalf of the prosecution. Therefore, there is no legal evidence to establish that a riot was committed.

The second point upon which evidence for the prosecution is wanting is that it is not shown, supposing that a riot was committed, that it was committed for the benefit or on behalf of the person who was the owner or occupier of the land respecting which such riot took place. If the common object was to prevent the indigo plants being uprooted, then in that case no doubt it could have been reasonably inferred that the riot was [341] committed for the benefit or on behalf of the owner of the land, but that being not established, it follows that it is not shown that the riot, if it was committed, was committed for the benefit or on behalf of the owner or occupier of the land.

The third point is that it is not shown that the appellant before us had reason to believe that any riot was likely to be committed. No doubt this fact can very seldom be established by direct evidence, but there must be circumstances from which it may be reasonably inferred. In this case the only circumstances that have been established are, that Mr. Brae was in the factory at the time that the alleged riot took place, and that amongst the rioters were some servants of the factory; but these facts are not sufficient to give rise to the inference that before the riot took place—if any riot at all took place—the appellant had reason to believe that it was likely to take place.

Upon all these three points it seems to me that the evidence is not sufficient. Therefore the conviction and sentence will be set aside, and the fine, if realized, will be refunded Pigot, J.—I entirely agree I would only add that in applying the sections which give the Magistracy powers of such startling magnitude, it is, in my opinion, incumbent upon those entrusted with the exercise of such powers to act not upon inferences or suspicions but upon evidence. Whatever may have been the object of the Legislature, whether as explained by the learned counsel for the prosecution or not, whatever may have been the occasion of the insertion in the Code of these most formidable sections, we must hold that the law thereby enacted is not intended to be applied upon surmise but upon proof.

Conviction set aside.

NOTES

[This case was in (1900) 4 C. W. N., 691 referred to with approval as regards the caution to 90 by proof and not by surmises.]

[342] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 19th February, 1884

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

Punchoo Money Dossee.....Plaintiff
versus Troylucko Mohiney Dossee.....Defendant.

Hindu law—Will—Construction of will—"Malik."

N had two wives, one of whom died in his lifetime, leaving a daughter (the plaintiff), and K, who survived him, the mother of another daughter (the defendant). N died having, in February 1844, made his will which contained the following passage.—

"Whatever I have of moveable and immoveable property, my wife K is the malik thereof. she will pay whatever debts there exist and receive whatever dues there are receivable, and I have given commandment (permission) to my wife to adopt a son. When the adopted son attains his age he will become the malik of the whole of my property and will perform the shrad and tarpan of my father and father's father, and in the event of any good or evil befalling the said adopted son, she will again adopt a son * * * and upon the adopted son attaining his age, he will become 'the malik' of the whole of the property."

K, who survived the testator, did not adopt, but took possession of the property and remained in possession till she died in 1875, and after her death the testator's children held the properties in equal shares, with the exception of a house, which the defendant had taken sole possession of. The plaintiff brought this suit for partition, and for an account of that part of the property which had been in sole possession of the defendant. The defendant contended that her mother took an absolute estate under the will, and that she as her heir was entitled to the whole estate.

I held, that the use of the word "malik" as applied to the widow did not necessarily mean that she should take an absolute estate, and that the directions in the will to adopt, and that the adopted son should become malik rather indicated an intention on the part of the testator that the widow should only take a limited estate, and that the word "malik" as applied to the widow could not therefore be interpreted as giving her a larger interest.

APPEAL from a decision of WILKINSON, J., dated 9th July 1883.

This was a suit practically for the construction of the will of one Narain Dutt (although partition and an account were asked for also), who died on the 1st February 1844, having made his last will and testament on the same date. The testator left him sur-[343]viving a widow, Kristo Kaminey Dossee, and by her a daughter (the defendant) Troylucko Mohiney Dossee, and two daughters by a wife who predeceased him, viz., Punchoo Money Dossee (the plaintiff) and Nemoye Money Dossee. The portion of the will material for the purpose of this report ran as follows :—" Whatever I have of immoveable and moveable property and ready money anywhere, my wife Sreemutty Kristo Kaminey Dossee is the malik or proprietress thereof. She will deal with my debts and dues agreeably to the particulars below, she will pay whatever debts exist and recover and receive whatever dues there are receivable, and I have given commandment (permission) to my wife she will adopt a son, when the adopted son attains his age he will become the malik or proprietor of the whole of my property, and will perform the shrad and tarpan of my father and father's father, and in the event of any good or evil befalling the said adopted son, in that case she will again adopt a son." Kristo Kaminey Dossee died in 1875 without having adopted a son, having taken possession of the property of the testator, and after her death her two daughters, the plaintiff and defendant, had been in possession of the properties in equal shares, with the exception of the house in question, and some moveable property which the defendant had taken sole possession of.

Mr. Bommerjee and Mr. Beeby for the plaintiff.

I am asked to say whether under these words Kaminey Dossee took an absolute interest in the immoveable property, or whether she only took the ordinary interest of a Hindu widow. The word "malik" means "absolute owner," "malik" applied to a man means "absolute owner," and Mr. Mitter points out the same word is used to the son to be adopted, and contends that the same meaning should be attached to the word when applied to Kaminey Dossee. If the will stopped with the direction to pay the debts, it would clearly indicate that she was to receive the absolute interest in the property, and I think if she took that interest, she retained it till her death as no son was adopted. Although the word "commandment" is used, it is not a correct translation. [344] The Bengali word is "anoowrutty" which means "permission" and implies discretion on the part of the two widows to adopt or not. Mr. Beeby supports the contention that she took only a life-interest, and quotes the case of Koony Behari Dhu v. Prem Chand Dutt (1 L. R., 5 Cal., 684) and Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundo Mullick (6 Moore's L. A., 526, at p. 550) in which the canon of interpretation was laid down viz. "Primarily the words of the will are to be considered; they convey the expression of the testator's wishes, but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, and when this is the case, no doubt these circumstances must be regarded, and amongst these circumstances thus to be regarded is the law of the country under which the will is made and its dispositions are to be carried out."

Here taking the words it seems to me when a man leaves property and says he or she shall be malik it means absolute owner, and the only meaning which the language bears must be put upon it. As regards the law a widow would take a life-interest, but though the law is against her taking other than a life-interest, it seems to me the words are not dubious and give her an absolute interest. The words in the will are not mandatory but permissive. There is nothing to compel her to adopt, and as she died without adopting a son, that property descends to her daughter, that being my opinion in the case, there is no necessity to give any directions and the suit will be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. Beeby) for the appellant. The question raised is whether in default of the adoption there is an absolute estate to the wife. The lower Court has ordered us to pay the costs, notwithstanding that it was a suit for the construction of the will. We also offered to go into evidence to prove that the property was joint, and that we were in possession of a portion of the property and had a right to possession, but we were not allowed to do so. I submit there are no words used in the will which would give the widow anything more than an ordinary widow's estate. The lower Court has decided that "malik" means "absolute owner," as to this [343] it is unnecessary to make use of any special words for a Hindu to give an heritable and alienable interest. Unless a husband in a gift to his wife makes it clear that the estate which he gives is an heritable and alienable estate, the widow only takes the estate that the law gives her. The intention of the testator here was that an adoption should be made, this intention is shown very strongly, and it seems, therefore, that he had no intention that the property should go to a person (viz., to his widow) who could not perform his shrad, and if the widow had an absolute estate, she could have given it away and defeated the intention of the testator altogether.

As to the word "malik," in Moulvi Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (14 B. L. R., 226, L. R., 2 I A, 7) a statement was made in a document of a testamentary character that his "widow was and none other should be his heir and malik," the Privy Council held that the widow did not take an absolute estate, but only a life estate.

[CUNNINGHAM, J. - That case seems on all fours with the present case, except that there, there were actual persons who were in existence to become heirs and malik, whereas in this case the gift is contingent as it were, as the widow was only permitted to adopt, and might not call the future malik into existence.] Yes, but we have the testator's intention.

In Raj Lukhee Dabhu v. Gookool Chunder Chowdhry (13 Moore's I. A., 210; 3 B. L. R. P. C., 57) a testator gave all his property to his widow by testamentary deed of gift (disqualifying her from selling or alienating it) in trust for his sons when they came of age, the sons died before attaining majority: the Court held that the widow did not take an absolute estate.

The case of Mussamat Kollany Koer v. Luchmee Pershad (24 W. R., 395), mentioned in Mayne, p 398 (3rd edition), may be relied on by the other side: The testator says "that his widow and daughters are his heirs, and maliks and that all his property will devolve on them." Mr. Justice MITTER held that the widow took an absolute estate, but the decision did not depend on the word "malik" alone, but the whole of the will was taken into consideration.

[346] In the case of Prosonno Coomar Ghose v. Taraknath Sircar (10 B. L. R., 267) a testator used the words, "I give to my wife, her heirs and assigns my estate for ever," and Mr. Justice PHEAR held that the wife took only an estate for life, this, however, was overruled by the Appellate Court.

In an unreported case decided by GARTH, C.J., and BOSE, J., Regular Appeal 340 of 1880, a widow mortgaged her proprietary right ("hakiut and milkiut") and the Court held that the word meant an absolute estate; the word "milkiut" is the same as "malik," but in that case two words were used, viz., "hakiut milkiut : " we only have one.

I submit that "malik" simply means "executrix according to the tenor of the will ; " the testator clearly defines what the widow's duties as malik would be, viz., to pay his debts, and then says, the adopted son on attaining full age shall be "malik" of the whole estate.

In Koonj Behari Dhur v. Prem Chand Dutt (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 684) JACKSON, J., held that a Hindu widow takes no more right by will over property of her husband than she would get by a gift in her husband's lifetime. There is always a presumption where an estate is given to a Hindu widow that the estate given is that only of a Hindu widow, and that presumption is strengthened when the widow has power to adopt.

Mr. Kennedy (with him Mr. Hill) for the respondent, contended that the Court could not speculate as to what the intention of the testator was and as to what the effect of the will would be, but the will must be looked at and read and its direction followed out, and that the lady had no power of alienation under the circumstances. He referred to Dyabagha, ch. IV, V, I, s 3, to the effect that the property became stridhan; and cited the cases of Mussamat Kollany Koer v. Luchmee Pershad (24 W. R., 395) and Sreemutty Pabitra Dossee v. Damoodur Jana (7 B. L. R., 697, 24 W. R., 397, note), to show that the widow took an absolute estate.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—The question in this case is, whether under [347] the will of Narain Dutt, his widow Kristo Kamney Dossee took an absolute interest in his property, or only the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow.

Narain had two wives. His first wife died in his lifetime, leaving one daughter, the plaintiff. His second wife, Kristo Kamney Dossee, was the mother of the defendant.

Narain made a will, dated the 1st of February 1844, which was in these terms :—(Reads the passage set out, ante p. 343).

After the testator's death his widow Kristo Kamney Dossee did not adopt a son. She took possession of his property, and remained in possession till she died in the year 1875.

One of the daughters mentioned in the will died, and only the plaintiff and the defendant were alive at the time of the widow's death; and they have ever since enjoyed the larger portion of the testator's property in equal shares.

But there is a house in Neemoo Khansamah's Lane, and some moveable property, of which the defendant, it appears, has been in sole possession, and the plaintiff has brought this suit for a partition of the testator's estate, and for an account of that part of the property which has been in the sole possession of the defendant.

This suit induced the defendant to raise the question, whether she as her mother's heir is not entitled to the whole estate as against the plaintiff, on the ground that under the will her mother took an absolute interest, and the Court below decided in her favour.

The learned Judge appears to have considered that the words of the will, describing the defendant's mother as "the malik" of the property, were sufficient to show that he intended her to take an absolute interest.

From this decision the plaintiff has appealed; and having heard the case argued on both sides, we expressed an opinion in the course of Mr. Kennedy's address to us on the part of respondent, that the view which had been taken by the learned Judge could not be upheld.

It appears to us that he attached too much weight to the meaning of the word "malik." It is true that in some cases the use of that word in a will or other instrument has, coupled [348] with other expressions, been considered as evincing an intention to pass an absolute or proprietary interest. But the word by no means necessarily imports that intention. There are other cases, where, although that word was used, it has been held that an absolute interest did not pass. In Moulvi Mahomed Shumsool Hoda v. Shewukram (14 B. L. R., 226, L. R. 2 I. A., 7), a Hindu testator, after reciting the deaths of his son and others, declared "only D K, widow of my son (who, too, excepting her two daughters, S and D, has no other heirs), is my heir. Except D K none other is or shall be my heir and malik. Furthermore to the said D K these very two daughters, together with their children who shall be born to them, are and shall be heir and malik."

In holding that this disposition did not give the widow more than a life interest in the estate, COUCH, C J, referred to the rule laid down in Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundo Mullick (6 Moore's I. A., 526), that in construing a will one of the circumstances to be regarded is "the law of the country in which the will is made and its dispositions are to be carried out, that the intention of the testator was that the estate should be kept in his own family, and that malik meant merely 'immediate heir.'" This view was affirmed in the Privy Council, their Lordships observing that "in construing the will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with regard to devolution of property, and that having regard to these considerations, they ought not to hold that the widow took an absolute estate, which she was at liberty to alienate."

Much reliance has been placed on the observations of MITTER, J., in Mussamat Kollany Koer v. Luchmee Persad (24 W. R., 395), but that case does not appear to govern the present, because it was held that the language of the will imported a distinct intention on the part of the testator that his widow and daughter should immediately on his death take a joint interest in his estate, and the contention which the Court had to consider, and which it disallowed, was that according to Hindu Law a gift to a female, though absolute in terms, conveyed merely a limited interest similar to that of [349] a Hindu widow. In the present case we do not consider that the words of the will indicate an intention on the testator's part that his widow should take an absolute estate. The direction to the widow to adopt a son, to adopt a second son in case of the first dying, and that on attaining majority the adopted son should become malik indicate, in our opinion, very clearly the limited nature of the widow's interest. Nor again does our present ruling in any way conflict with that of COUCH, C.J., in Prosonno Coommar Ghose v. Taraknath Sircar (10 B. L. R., 267), because there the words of the will, in the opinion of the Court, "unequivocally showed that it was the testator's intention that his wife should become the absolute mistress of his estate," and, there being nothing in the will to displace that intention, the mere fact of there being two sons of the testator, who were thus disinherited, was not considered to justify the construction of the will according to which the widow merely took as trustee for the sons.

In each case we must endeavour to ascertain the true meaning of the instrument, and here it appears to us that the testator did not intend his widow to take an absolute interest in the property. It seems evident that he intended her to adopt a son ; and in the event of that son's death, to adopt another ; and he provides that in either case, when the son comes of age, he should become the malik of the property.

This fact of itself seems to indicate that, so far as his wishes and intentions were concerned, they were opposed to his widow taking an absolute interest. He evidently only intended her to hold the property until his adopted son came of age ; she would then, in the ordinary course of law, take the estate of a Hindu widow until a son was adopted, and under the provisions of the will she would also be a trustee for her son until he came of age ; but in either case, so long as she was possessed of the property and had the management of it, she might properly be described in the will, and called in common parlance, the malik or proprietress.

In point of fact the widow did not adopt a son ; and in point [350] of law, whatever her husband's intention may have been, she was at liberty to disregard them in that respect.

So far as the costs are concerned, we find that the parties have proposed an arrangement amongst themselves, which we are quite prepared to confirm ; namely, that the costs on both sides shall be paid out of the estate. A decree will therefore be made for partition of the property in accordance with the prayer of the plaint, it being declared that the plaintiff and defendant are entitled, for the reasons we have given, to the whole of the testator's estate as his co-heirs, and we direct, with the consent of the parties, that the costs on either side in both Courts shall be paid out of the estate.

Appcal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 29th January, 1884.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Omunissa Bibee and others.....Defendants

Dilawar Ally Khan.....Plaintiff.*

Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876), ss. 52, 55—Declaratory decree—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Possession, Confirmation of.

The Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to make a decree reversing an order for the registration of the name of any person made by a registering officer under Beng Act VII of 1876.

All that the Civil Courts can do is to declare the title of an individual, or to give him a decree for possession, and then the registration officers would, as a matter of course, proceed to amend their registers in accordance with the rights of the parties as settled by the Civil Courts.

An order made under s. 55 of Beng Act VII of 1876, prevents the person against whom it is made, from relying on his previous possession, in a subsequently instituted suit for confirmation of possession. An order made under s. 52 of the same Act has not that effect.

[351] THIS was a suit for confirmation of possession on the following title: The plaintiff alleged that he had bought 8 annas of the property some time previously to the year 1870, and that his father at the same time purchased the remaining 8 annas share. That the father died in May 1870 when 1 anna 11 gundas 1 krant and 1 dunt share of the father's 8 annas share came to the plaintiff under the Mahomedan law of inheritance. The plaintiff made an application to the Deputy Collector of Patna for registration of his name in respect of the share claimed by him under Beng Act VII of 1876. This application was opposed by the defendants, on the ground that the plaintiff's story as to his purchase of 8 annas was false, that the father was the real purchaser of the whole 16 annas; and that the plaintiff was only entitled to the share which, on the death of the father, devolved upon him under the Mahomedan law of succession. The Deputy Collector disbelieved the plaintiff's story and, on the 28th of February 1878, ordered that the names should be registered in accordance with the defendants' contention, and this order was affirmed on appeal to the Collector on the 31st of July 1879. On the 24th July of 1880 the plaintiff brought the present suit, claiming confirmation of possession, and asking that the Collector's order of the 31st of July 1879 should be set aside.

The Court of First Instance found in favour of the plaintiff on the question of title, and also found that the plaintiff was in possession under that title at the date of the institution of the suit. He therefore gave the plaintiff a decree as claimed by him, and this decision was upheld on appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye. The defendants appealed to the High Court on the ground that "there being no finding as to the plaintiff's present possession, this suit for mere confirmation of title in the face of, and after the decision in, 'the Land Registration Act, should have been dismissed as not tenable."

Baboo Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty for the appellants.

Baboo Kishory Mohun Roy for the respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by [352] Field, J.—This case arises out of a proceeding under the Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876). The plaintiff alleges that he is entitled to a 9 annas 11 gundas 1 krant 1 dunt share in kismut Dariapur, and he makes title to this share, as to 8 annas by purchase out of his private funds, and as to 1 anna 11 gundas 1 krant 1 dunt share by inheritance.

The contention on the other side is, that he is entitled by inheritance alone and not by purchase, and that his proper share is therefore twice 1 anna 11 gundas 1 krant 1 dunt. The plaint, after setting out the registration proceedings, proceeds as follows "I pray that the Court will be pleased to pass a decree reversing the order for registration of names in respect of the 8 annas share purchased and held by me exclusively out of 9 annas 11 gundas 1 krant and 1 dunt share of the above talook, amending the said order as regards the remaining share, directing my name to be registered with respect to the aforesaid 9 annas 11 gundas 1 krant and 1 dunt share and awarding me my costs. I beg to bring this suit by paying a Court-fee stamp of the value of Rs. 10."

It has been pointed out on more than one occasion that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to make a decree, reversing an order for the registration of the name of any person made by a registering officer appointed under Beng. Act VII of 1876. All that the Civil Courts can do is to declare the title of an individual, or to give him a decree for possession, and the registration officers, as a matter of course, would then proceed to amend their registers in accordance with the rights of the parties as settled by the Civil Courts. The present plaint does not ask in so many words for confirmation of title, but the suit has been treated in the Courts below as a declaratory suit; and the Court-fee stamp has been paid accordingly.

It is now contended before us that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain this suit. It is said that the effect of the registration proceedings was to put him out of possession, and that, not being in possession, he is not at liberty to bring a suit under the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act having for its object the declaration of his title merely. There can be no doubt that if the result of the registration proceedings was [353] to put plaintiff out of possession, this contention must be successful. But after examining those proceedings, we come to the conclusion that it is not possible in the present case to give any such effect to what was done by the registering officer. Under the provisions of s. 52 of Beng. Act VII of 1876, "the Collector shall consider any objections which may be advanced, and make such further enquiry as appears necessary to ascertain the truth of the alleged possession of succession to, or transfer of the estate, revenue-free property, or interest therein in respect of which registration is applied for, and if it appears to the Collector that the possession exists, or that the succession or transfer has taken place, and that the applicant has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer, but not otherwise, the Collector shall order the name of the applicant to be registered." Under the provisions of s. 55. "If the applicant's possession of succession to, or acquisition by transfer of, the extent of interest in respect of which he has applied to be registered is disputed by or on behalf of any person making a conflicting claim in respect thereof, and if the possession of the applicant in accordance with his application is not proved to the satisfaction of the Collector, the Collector shall determine summarily the right to possession in respect of the interest in dispute, and shall deliver possession accordingly, and shall make the necessary entry in the registers." Under s. 55 there is also an alternative proceeding providing for a reference to the Civil Court. No such reference was made in the present case, and therefore it is unnecessary to consider the effect of this provision. We now turn to s. 57, which provides that every order of a Collector passed under the first clause of s. 55 shall be of the same force and effect as an order passed by the Judge under s. 4 of Act XIX of 1841, determining summarily the right to possession and delivering possession accordingly." It is to be observed that no such effect is given to an order made under the provisions of s. 52. Now, if the order in the present case had been made under the provisions of s. 55, we would be compelled to say that the result of that order in accordance with the provisions of s. 57 would be to put the plaintiff out of possession," and if this were so, he certainly could not [354] maintain the present suit, regard being had to the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. If, however, the order were made under the provisions of s. 52, the Act gives to the order no such force. We think that although an order made under this section may be some evidence of possession, yet in the absence of any express provision of the Legislature, we cannot say that it is conclusive on the question of possession. In the present case it does not appear on the face of the order under what section it was made, and we think we should not be justified in presuming against the plaintiff that it was made under s. 55 rather than under s. 52. We must therefore regard the Collector's order merely as evidence of possession, which the Courts below were at liberty to consider along with the other evidence in the case. The Subordinate Judge has found, as a matter of fact, that the plaintiff is in possession of the share which he claims, and having so found it certainly was competent to him to make the declaratory decree against which the present appeal has been preferred. We come, therefore, to the conclusion that there are no grounds upon which we can interfere with the decision of the Court below, and we, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES

[It was held in (1907) 9 C L J , 91 that a suit for a declaration of title to immoveable property is not governed by Art. 14 of the Limitation Act, 1877, although the ultimate object case of success is to set aside an order made by the revenue authorities. See also (1899) 26 Cal., 845 (850).]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th January, 1884.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Poromanand Khasnabish.....Defendant

Khepoo Paramanick.....Plaintiff.*

Execution of decree—Payment not certified in Court—Fraud—Cause of action—Regular suit—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 258.

The holder of a money decree, agreed to accept in satisfaction of the amount thereof. a part payment in cash, and a lease of certain lands for five years, rent free. The judgment debtor made the payment, and gave the lease agreed on. Afterwards the decree-holder executed the decree against the judgment-debtor, and then the judgment-debtor brought the present suit for a declaration that the money decree was satisfied, and for damages against the decree-holder. Held that such a suit would lie.

Gunamani Das v Prankshori Das (5 B. L. R., 223), Viraraghava Reddi v [385] Subbaka (I L. R., 5 Mad., 397), Chembrakandi Musuthi v Themdyal Puthalath Shekharam Nayar (I L. R., 6 Mad., 41); Sita Ram v. Mahipal (I. L. R., 3 All. 533), Shadi v. Gunga Sahar (I L. R., 3 All., 538), and Ishan Chunder Bundopadhyay v Indro Narai Gossami (I. L. R., 9 Cal, 788) followed; Patankar v. Debn (I L. R., 6 Bom., 146) not followed.

IN this case the plaintiff stated that, having been indebted to the defendant on a bond,* the latter instituted a suit against him in 1874 for the recovery of the amount: that on the 20th of February 1875 he entered into an arrangement with the defendant for the satisfaction of the claim, and a decree on the basis of the arrangement was passed on the same day. That that arrangement was that the plaintiff should pay a portion of the claim in cash, and that in satisfaction of the remainder, the plaintiff should give to the defendant a lease of certain lands for the years 1283, 1284, 1285, 1286 and 1287 (1876—1880). That the plaintiff made the cash payment agreed on, and delivered over possession of the lands to the defendant, who kept possession of them for the five years agreed on. That, notwithstanding the plaintiff carried out the agreement, the defendant afterwards executed his decree against the plaintiff, the latter's objections having been overruled by the Court. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit for a declaration that the decree of 1871 was satisfied, and for Rs. 186-14 as damages.

It appears that no mention was made of the arrangement relied on by the plaintiff in the decree of 1874, which, in form, was an ordinary money decree.

The Court of First Instance disbelieved the plaintiff's story and dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal, this decision was reversed and the claim decreed. The defendant appealed to the High Court, on the ground "that the Courts below ought to have held that the present suit, as brought, does not lie, and that the plaintiff had no cause of action to bring it."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 994 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Jibun Kristo Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 3rd April 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Annoda Prosoud Chatterjee, Munsiff of Shahajadpore, dated the 18th July 1881.

Baboo Srinath Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by [356] Field, J.—This was a suit brought to recover Rs. 186-14, alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff in satisfaction of a previous decree obtained by the defendant against him

The question which has been argued before us is whether a suit of this nature will lie. The old law under the Code of 1859, as settled by the Full Bench decision in Gunamani Das v. Prankishori Das (5 B. L. R., 223) was that such a suit will lie. Upon the Code of 1877, as unamended by the Act of 1879, there are two Madras decisions to be found in Viraraghava Reddi v. Subbaka (I. L. R. 5 Mad., 397), a Full Bench case, and Chembrakandi Mussutti v. Themdyal Puthalath Shekharan Nayar (I. L. R. 6 Mad 41) following the Full Bench decision, that the suit is maintainable. Immediately after the Madras Full Bench decision, s. 258 of the Code was altered and amended. The last paragraph of the section, as amended by the Act of 1879, and as it stands in the Code of 1882 now in force, is "No such payment or adjustment shall be recognized by any Court, unless it has been certified as aforesaid." It might be contended that the Legislature meant by this provision to overrule the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court just referred to, but, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice O'KINEALY in the course of the argument in this case, it is a very proper answer to this contention to say that if the Legislature meant to overrule the decision of the Madras High Court, it would have been very easy to say in express language, admitting of no doubt, that no separate suit will lie. Upon the amended section in this present shape, there are two decisions of the Allahabad High Court—Sita Ram v. Mahipal (I. L. R., 3 All., 533), and Shadi v. Gunga Sahar (I. L. R., 3 All., 538)—in which it has been held that a separate suit will lie.

There is also a decision of this High Court, Ishan Chundra Bundopadhya v. Indro Narain Gossami (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 788), in which it has been held that a separate suit is maintainable. On the other hand, there is a decision of the Bombay High Court—Patankar v. Dey (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 146)—in which it has been decided that a separate suit is not maintainable. In this conflict of authority it appears to us that we ought to follow the previous decision of this Court, especially as [357] no grounds have been advanced to induce us to suppose that that decision is not correct. Speaking for myself I desire to say, with reference to certain observations made in the decision of this Court and in the decision of the Allahabad Court (Sitaram v. Mahipal, I. L. R., 3 All., 533), that it does not appear to me necessary, in order to arrive at the conclusion that a separate suit will lie, to limit the meaning of the words "any Court" in the last paragraph of s. 258, to any Court executing the decree. I think that if this had been the intention of the Legislature, the expression "the Court" would probably have been used for "any Court." It is quite possible to suppose cases, other than those concerned with the satisfaction of the decree by a money-payment, or other form of satisfaction, in which the question whether the decree had been satisfied might involve questions relating to title or other matters either as between parties to the suit, or as between other parties, and it may be quite possible (it is unnecessary to decide the point, which does not arise in the present case) that in using the expression "any Court" the Legislature had in its mind, cases of this description. The conclusion at which we arrive is that the suit was maintainable, and that this appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[UNCERTIFIED ADJUSTMENTS OF DECREES—

In consequence of the conflicting rulings as to the meaning of the expression, 'any Court,' in section 258, C. P. C., 1882; 1877, (see 10 Cal., 354, 10 Bom., 155; 11 Bom., 6), the Legislature by sec 27 of VII of 1888 amplified it into, 'any Court executing the decree.'

The scope and limits of sections 244 and 258 of the C. P. C., 1882 (=sec. 47 and O. 21 r. 2 of the C. P. C., 1908) were fully discussed in the case of Arizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu, (1893) 21 Cal. 437 according to which, "sec. 244 is not limited by section 258 and where a decree is satisfied by an agreement out of Court and such satisfaction is not certified to the Court, a subsequent suit is not maintainable if the object of the suit is to restrain the decree-holder from executing his decree in contravention of the agreement."

See also (1911) 16 C. W. N., 923 where it is pointed out that the fact of the decree-holder having acted fraudulently in not certifying to the Court does not make any difference; 24 M. L. J., 541.

This rule does not affect the Criminal Law —(1886) 10 Bom., 288; (1888) 16 Cal., 126; (1881) 4 Mad., 325, (1885) 9 Mad., 101;

As regards the maintainability of a suit to recover payments made to satisfy a decree, when they were not certified to the Court and the decree-holder applied for execution, see (1905) 16 M. L. J. 54, where this was answered in the negative.

An uncertified arrangement to pay the decretal amount by instalments, will not be recognised for preventing execution.—(1899) 20 Cal. 32.

A separate suit would lie when the payment and consequential satisfaction of the decree is in question —(1887) 15 Cal. 187, 11 Bom. 6

"By a consensus of opinion of all the High Courts it was held that where a judgment creditor without certifying had received money or property in satisfaction of a decree from his judgment-debtor, and then executed his decree, he was liable to restore the money or property so recovered in the first instance".—11 Bom. 6]

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 5th February, 1884

PRESENT.

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

Eshan Chundra Safooi.....Plaintiff

versus

Nundamoni Dasse and others..... Defendants.

Withdrawal of suit—Suit on behalf of a minor—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 97—Withdrawal of suit by next friend—Fraud.

Where a Court has reason to believe that a suit is lawfully brought by a party who has a right to bring it on behalf of a minor, any withdrawal of the suit by that party would have precisely the same effect as the withdrawal of a suit by a person of full age.

But where a person acting for a minor has fraudulently withdrawn the minor's suit under s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859, without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit, and by such withdrawal an absolute statutory prohibition is imposed on the minor from bringing a fresh suit, it is open to the minor [358] to relieve himself from the consequences of the fraud in one of three ways, viz, (1) by an application to the Court in the suit in which the withdrawal took place, (2) by a regular suit to set aside the judgment founded upon the withdrawal; or (3) by bringing a fresh suit for the same purpose, and setting up the fraud as an answer to the statutory bar.

APPEAL from a decision of NORRIS, J., dated 16th July 1883.

The suit was brought to have it declared that the plaintiff had been duly adopted, and for the construction of the will of one Mohesh Chundra Safooi.

The plaintiff stated that Mohesh Chundra Safooi died on the 5th June 1867, leaving him surviving his widow Matiscondari Dasse, and a daughter by her, Pullamoni Dasse, and two other daughters, Nundamoni and Bemola, by a wife who predeceased him, Bemola, one of the daughters abovementioned, having since married one Khetter Mohun Biswas. Mohesh Chundra made his will on the 27th May 1867, and appointed Nundamoni Dassee executrix thereof, and after giving certain specific legacies, he directed and empowered Matisoondari Dassee to adopt a son who should be chosen by Nundamoni Dassee, such adoption to be consented to by Nundamoni, and that after the death of Nundamoni Dassee, the said adopted son, or if no such adoption should be made, his son-in-law, Khetter Mohun Biswas, should have and enjoy the residue of his property on certain trusts as in the will appeared. On the 27th June 1867, Nundamoni obtained probate of the will, and took possession of the property of the testator.

The plaintiff then alleged that he had, when at the age of five years in the year 1867, been duly adopted by Matisoondari with the consent of Nundamoni, and that subsequently to such adoption disputes regarding the property had arisen between Matisoondari and Nundamoni, and that the former in the year 1870, on her own behalf and as next friend of himself (the present plaintiff), had instituted a suit numbered 432 of 1870 against Nundamoni, in which she originally, amongst other things, had asked for a declaration that he (the present plaintiff) was the duly adopted son of Mohesh Chundra Safooi, but that the Court having refused to admit the plaint with such prayer [359] included therein, she abandoned the same, and prayed for the construction of the will of the testator and for other relief.

That suit came on for hearing on the 13th June 1871, and was then withdrawn by Matisoondari, no leave to bring a fresh suit being granted.

[In the Chief Clerk's Minute Book the note ran as follows S. M. M. Dassee v. S. M. N. Dassee. Mr. Lowe and Mr. Phillips for plaintiff. Mr. Marindin and Mr. Evans for defendant. Mr. Lowe states plaintiff's case. Mr. Lowe gives up the case. The Court.—This is really a very discreditable suit. There is not a particle of foundation for saying the infant is the adopted son of the deceased. Mr. Lowe asks to withdraw the suit. Mr. Marindin contra. The Court.—Withdraw on payment of costs No. 2, including costs of commission. No leave granted to bring fresh suit.]

The plaintiff further alleged that at the time the said suit was withdrawn, he was an infant, and he had been informed, and believed that the withdrawal of the suit had been brought about by the fraud and misconduct of a person named Nobin Chundra (deceased), who had managed the suit on behalf of Matisoondari, and that such withdrawal was not, therefore, binding upon him, and he, therefore, brought this suit having now attained full age, against Nundamoni, Khetter Mohun Biswas, and Matisoondari for the purposes abovementioned.

The defendant, Nundamoni, contended that the suit No. 432 of 1870 was a bar to this present suit, and denied that she had either chosen or consented to the plaintiff's adoption. The defendant, Khetter Mohun, contended that the plaintiff was not adopted according to the terms of the will of the testator. Mati-[360]soondari stated that being a purdahnashin, she had been unable to attend personally to the conduct of suit No. 432 of 1870, and that she had entrusted the management thereof to one Nobin Chundra Shaw, who, from fraudulent and corrupt motives, and without authority from her, or having spoken to her on the subject, and without her knowledge, obtained the withdrawal of the suit

* The prayer in suit No. 432 of 1870 ran as follows. That the will of the said testator may be construed, and that such of the trusts as are not contrary to law may be carried out, that the rights of all parties be ascertained and declared and given to them, and should any of the testator's property be found undisposed of, then that the present lawful heir of the said testator be declared entitled at once, and that the same be secured for the benefit of the persons entitled thereto, that accounts should be taken and a receiver appointed, and for an injunction restraining Nundamoni from preventing Matisoondari residing in the family dwelling house, and for further and other relief.

The correspondence set out in suit No. 432 of 1870 showed that Nundamoni had never given her consent to the adoption of the plaintiff.

Mr. Phillips, Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Trevelyan for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Jackson, and Mr. Hill for Nundamoni.

Mr. J. G. Apcar for Khetter Mohun.

Mr. O'Kinealy for Matisoondari.

Mr. Jackson submitted that the question of adoption was res judicata, and put in the decree, plaint and written statement in suit No. 432 of 1870, and read the Registrar's minute of the 13th June 1871, and submitted the case should be dismissed with costs

Mr. Trevelyan admitted the entry in the minute book, and the Court refused to hear evidence.

Norris, J.—I must hold that this is res judicata, and the suit must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Phillips and Mr. Bonnerjee for the Appellant.

Mr. Phillips.—The old suit was more comprehensive than the present one; the mother was a party, and had an interest herself, and at the same time was the next friend of the present plaintiff. It is not a question of res judicata, it depends upon s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859.

I submit that that which is called res judicata was a fraud; it was not, however, a question merely of fraud, there was no reason to withdraw the suit on that ground, the then plaintiff was asking for a relief which she was clearly entitled to, she asked for the construction of the will. We set up fraud in our plaint, but the Court refused to raise an issue on it, and dismissed the [361] suit as res judicata. but even supposing there to have been a res judicata, the question of fraud ought still to have been tried.

The devise in the will was of the residue to Nundamoni for life on trust to keep the shrad, and invest the surplus in Government securities, and to adopt a son, the residue to go to such adopted son, and if there was no adoption, to Khetter Mohun

The infant cannot be bound by his next friend withdrawing the suit, more especially where the next friend has an interest adverse to the infant. It is not intended by s. 97 that an infant should be precluded from bringing a fresh suit.

[GARTH, C. J.—The fraud you set up is shadowy, but the defendants do not answer it in any way.] We pressed for an issue, but the Court would not allow it. Nundamoni states that her manager withdrew the suit without her knowledge.

Act VIII of 1859 did not extend to the original side of this Court; the Court was directed by the Charter to adopt certain rules, and these rules were the sections of Act VIII of 1859. The Charter, however, expressly took away from these rules the force of law.

Under Act VIII of 1859 any person could bring a suit for a minor; and would it not be a monstrous thing that any person should be able to bring a suit for a minor and then withdraw it, and so prevent him from bringing a fresh suit? So I say, apart from fraud, we should be entitled to bring a fresh suit. It may be supposed that Matisoondari is colluding with us, but the defendants have not answered our allegation as to fraud.

There was no decision in the old suit; it was withdrawn. Nothing was decided as to the question of fraud, and as there was no power under Act VIII of 1859 for a next friend to bring a suit, so there was no power to withdraw it. Even if the withdrawal could affect the minor, we say that the withdrawal was brought about by fraud. The plaintiff obtained his majority in March 1882.

[GARTH, C. J.—Although there may have been fraud, can you raise the question in another suit, and not in the one in which the fraud is alleged to have taken place, where the Act prohibits a fresh suit being brought?] It seems material whether the [362] bar is by statute or otherwise; either the plaint is the case, or there is no case, then how was the mother justified in putting forward a case which was no case, which would have the effect of barring us. We say in our suit that there was a case to have been made out in the former suit, because we allege that Nundamoni did give consent to the adoption. As to our not having raised the question of the mother not being the proper person to bring the suit, it was not for us to show that it was improperly brought; it is their bar to the suit and not our bar, and it was for them to make it out.

[The Court desired Mr. Phillips to obtain an affidavit, stating whether or no he was prepared with witnesses to prove at the hearing of the last suit that no one ordered the plaintiff's agent to withdraw the suit on her behalf. An affidavit was obtained and sworn to by the plaintiff, but was considered insufficient by the Court, as the plaintiff only spoke from information and belief, he being at that time a child of six years old.]

Mr. Bommerjee on the same side.—As to whether the plaintiff who was an infant is bound by the withdrawal of the suit by his next friend, I submit that cl. 37 of the Charter of 1862 directs that civil suits should be regulated by Act VIII of 1859. At the time when the High Courts were first established, Act VIII of 1859 and its amending Acts governed the procedure of the Courts. Now Act VIII made no provision for proceedings by minors and other persons under other disabilities, and therefore when the Charter was renewed in 1865, cl. 37 of the renewed Charter provided that the High Court should make rules, and in making such rules that the High Court should be guided by the Procedure Code. Section 97 is not purely procedure, for it refers to persons who are sui juris. the penalty laid down in that section is so heavy that it must be taken to be alone applicable to persons who are sui juris. Compare s. 97 with s. 2 of the same Code. Under s. 2, the case could not be res judicata, because the infant's claims were not laid before the Court.

The decree in the last suit actually orders the infant himself to pay the costs of the defendant; if the case had been dismissed [363] under s. 2 we could have appealed. Moreover, there is nothing to show that the old suit was withdrawn under s. 97; the old rules of the Supreme Court were in force then. Res judicata is not a matter of procedure, but of jurisdiction. Section 260 of Act VIII of 1859 has been held not to be a question of procedure, and I submit s. 97 cannot apply to an infant at all, as Act VIII never contemplated a suit being brought by an infant.

The prayer in the first suit makes no claim to have the adoption declared legal.

Mr. Kennedy (with him Mr. Hill) for the respondent, Nundamoni.

There was no allegation of fraud raised at the hearing of the former suit, the Court makes no mention whatever of any fraud. [GARTH, C. J.—The Court, of course, was unaware of the fraud; the allegation of fraud is not in connection with the case, but the allegation is that the suit was fraudulently withdrawn. How did you Mr. Phillips show your case of fraud in the Court below?]

Mr. Phillips —We could not go into evidence at the stage the suit reached, but we showed the fraud from Nundamoni Dasse's written statement.

Mr. Kennedy —The letters in the old suit clearly show that no consent was ever given by Nundamoni to the adoption of the plaintiff, who was eventually adopted in utter disregard of the will of the testator. I submit the suit is barred by the first case.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C. J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.).

Garth, C. J. --I think that the learned Judge was quite right and that what occurred at the trial of the former suit estops the plaintiff from bringing this suit.

This suit was brought for the purpose of establishing the plaintiff's adoption, and of having the trusts of the will of the late Mohesh Chundra Safooi declared. The former suit was brought, so far as the plaintiff was concerned, with the same object, namely to have his rights declared as the adopted son of Mohesh Chundra. His adoptive mother sued on her own behalf to have her rights declared under her husband's will, and also as the next friend of the present plaintiff, to establish his [364] rights as the adopted son, and one point raised in the pleadings was as to the validity of his adoption.

Then what occurred at the trial was this. We understand that no evidence was offered, but that the question of the validity of the adoption was argued by the Counsel for the plaintiff upon the plaint as it stood. The statements in the plaint were very full, and it seems to have been admitted on the part of the plaintiff that the consent of the sister, Nundamoni Dasse, was necessary to the validity of the adoption.

A long correspondence was set out in the plaint, which, so far from showing any consent on the part of the sister, rather tended to prove the contrary, and after the point had been fully argued, it seems that Mr. Lowe, the plaintiff's Counsel, seeing that the opinion of the Court was against him, asked leave to withdraw the suit, and, I think, we must presume that he applied to do so under s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859, because in the note of what took place, we find that the Judge, though he allowed the suit to be withdrawn, refused leave to bring a fresh suit. The rule laid down by that section has always, as far as we are aware, been acted upon as law on the Original Side of this Court, and there is no other rule under which Mr. Lowe could have asked to withdraw the suit and bring a fresh one.

That being so, it appears to me that the withdrawal of the suit under s. 97 operated (not strictly speaking, as a res judicata), but as a bar to prevent the plaintiff bringing any fresh suit to establish his adoption.

Mr. Bonnerjee has argued that, although the Judge might have acted on that occasion upon the rule as laid down in s. 97, and although the withdrawal of the suit under that rule might, in the case of an adult person, have had the effect of barring any fresh suit for the same cause, that would not be so in the case of a suit brought on behalf of a minor, because the minor could have had no means of judging for himself, whether the withdrawal was a prudent or proper course to take.

But it seems to me that there is no force in that argument.

As long as we have reason to believe, that the suit is lawfully brought by a party who has a right to bring it on behalf of the minor, it seems to me that any withdrawal of the suit by that [365] party has precisely the same effect as the withdrawal of a suit by a person of full age. It is difficult to see why a suit properly brought on behalf of any other person, who cannot act for himself, should be subject (so far as the present question is concerned) to other rules, than those which are applicable to suits brought by parties in their own names.

Mr. Bonnerjee, by way of illustrating his argument, asks us to suppose the case of a person, who had nothing to do with a minor, and no right to sue on his behalf, bringing an action of trespass in the minor's behalf, and then, finding that the defendant had a good defence, withdrawing the suit on no better authority than he brought it. But that would be a totally different case from the present, simply because the person bringing the suit would not be the proper person to bring it.

If Mr. Bonnerjee could have shown in this case that there had been any impropriety in the minor's mother bringing the former suit, and that the minor, for that or some other reason, was not bound by her acts or the acts of the person who managed the suit for her, that would have been a different thing. But here it is conceded that the mother was the proper person to bring the former suit, and no objection was taken on that score, either in the former suit or in the Court below, or in this appeal.

We must, therefore, take it that the former suit was properly brought, and that being so, it seems to me that the withdrawal of the suit had the same effect as the withdrawal of a suit by an adult person.

That disposes of the first contention.

But there was another point raised by the appellant, which, if there had been any facts to support it, would have been perfectly good in point of law, namely, that the person who managed the suit on behalf of the plaintiff and his mother, withdrew it in fraud of the plaintiff, and in collusion with the defendant Nundamoni Dossee.

Of course, if there had been any ground for this contention, and if we were satisfied that it had been properly presented to the Court below, and the Court had refused to frame an issue [366] to try it, I should consider that we ought to remand the case for the trial of such an issue.

But I am satisfied that this point, although it might have been mentioned, was not really pressed upon the attention of the Judge. I think if it had been refused, the Judge would have said something about it in his judgment, and some mention would have been made of it in the grounds of appeal. I am, therefore, not prepared to say that the learned Judge was wrong in not framing an issue upon that point.

At the same time, having regard to the plaintiff's position, if I were even now satisfied that the plaintiff had any real ground for contending that the withdrawal of the suit was brought about by fraud, I should certainly have been disposed to allow him, on proper terms, an opportunity of trying that issue in the Court below.

But I think, before we allow any party to raise an issue of fraud at this stage of the proceedings, we ought to be satisfied that there is some real ground for the contention ; and it was for this reason that we required Mr. Phillips, when the Court rose yesterday, to produce an affidavit showing in detail what grounds his client had to support the contention.

An affidavit has accordingly been produced, made by the plaintiff himself, and I am satisfied from that affidavit that he has no sufficient ground to justify us in allowing such an issue to be raised.

The affidavit only states that the mother's consent was neither asked nor granted for the withdrawal of the former suit, and that the person who was managing the suit received certain sums of money (not stating any amount) from the defendant Nundamoni Dasse, both before and after the withdrawal. But it does not appear that those sums were paid for any improper purpose.

The only suggestion of any fraud is made by the plaintiff himself in these words. "I allege that these payments were made as a consideration to the manager for withdrawing the suit." But he gives us no reason for supposing that the allegation is well founded. It is only made in this general form by the plaintiff, who, at the time when the suit was withdrawn, [367] was a child of some five or six years old, and could, of course, have known nothing of the matter.

We should do very wrong to allow an issue of fraud to be tried at this stage of the cause upon no better grounds than are disclosed in the affidavit.

There is only one other point upon which I think it right to say a few words

We had some doubt during the argument whether, assuming that the withdrawal of the former suit to have been brought about by fraud, the plaintiff could bring the present suit without having taken some steps to set aside the former judgment ; because this is not the case of res judicata, properly so called but an absolute statutory prohibition imposed upon a party who has withdrawn a former suit without leave to bring a fresh one.

But it seems to me, on consideration, that the rules which apply to cases of res judicata must apply generally to a statutory bar of this kind.

It was said in the Duchess of Kingston's case, quoting the opinion of Lord COKE, that "fraud vitiates the most solemn proceeding of Courts of Justice," and I think that, if in a case like the present it could be shown that the withdrawal of the former suit was brought about by fraud and collusion between the party managing the suit and the defendants, the minor plaintiff might relieve himself from the consequences of the fraud in one of three ways : 1st, by an application to the Court in the suit in which the withdrawal took place, 2ndly, by a regular suit to set aside the judgment founded upon the withdrawal, or, 3rdly, by bringing a fresh suit for the same cause, and setting up the fraud as an answer to the statutory bar.

In this case, as there is no sufficient ground for raising the question of fraud, the appeal must be dismissed, and the appellant must pay the costs on scale No. 2.

Cunningham, J.—I concur on both points with what has just fallen from my lord.

The principal point urged in the appeal, namely, that s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859 did not contemplate the case of a minor represented by a next friend, is one which is of great importance as regards the position of minors who are brought into the case, [368] and it is well that we have had the advantage of two learned arguments upon it, but I confess that the result of that argument is that, however reluctant we may be to accept a state of things which is calculated in some instances to work hardship to minors, I think that we must take it to have been the law, that where a minor is represented in the manner sanctioned by the law, and the person so representing him adopts a procedure to which particular consequences attach by the Code, then those consequences must affect the minor. For this reason I think that s. 97 must be regarded as precluding the minor from re-opening the matter involved in a former suit from which the person acting for him has withdrawn. I also think that there are no grounds on which we can allow the issue of fraud to be raised at this stage of the proceedings.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th December, 1883.

PRESENT ·

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND

MR JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Durga Sundari Devi, widow of Monoranjn Das.. . . . Auction-purchaser

versus

Govinda Chandra Addy (Decree-holder) and others.... . Judgment-debtors.*

Sale in execution of decree—Application to set aside sale—Appeal from order rejecting application—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 313—"Saleable interest."

There is no appeal to the High Court from an order refusing to set aside a sale, unless such order is made under ss. 294, 312, or 313 of the Civil Procedure Code.

* Appeal from Order No. 91 of 1883, against the order of W. MacPherson, Esq., Additional Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 26th March 1882.

A misrepresentation or concealment in the sale notification which induces a purchaser to buy a property for much more than it is really worth (although that misrepresentation or concealment may be fraudulent), is no ground for setting aside a sale under s. 313 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The meaning of s. 313 is, that when a purchaser under an execution sale buys a property which turns out to have no existence at all, or to be [369] of no saleable value whatever, the Court may then set aside the sale under s. 313.

IN this case one Monoranjan Das, at an execution sale, purchased certain immoveable properties described as lots 2 and 3 in the proclamation of sale, for the price of Rs 7,100 and Rs 23,550 respectively. The decree under which the purchase was made was passed on a mortgage bond, and directed the realization of the decretal amount from the mortgaged properties.

In pursuance of that decree the lots were advertised for sale, and it was admitted at the hearing, that the description in the sale proclamation tallied exactly with the description of the property as given in the mortgage deed. The sale proclamation was published in accordance with s. 289 of the Civil Procedure Code, and in addition a translation of the same was published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 4th January 1882.

The auction-purchaser applied to the Court to have the above-mentioned sale set aside on the ground of fraud and misrepresentation, and on the ground that the decree-holder had no "saleable interest" in the property within the meaning of s. 313 of the Code.

The allegations of fraud were—(1) The making of a false affidavit by the decree-holder suppressing all mention of incumbrances on the property, (the incumbrances being, alienation of portions of a taluk, and the existence of certain mourasi mokarari leases at permanently fixed but low rentals). (2) Publishing in the Calcutta Gazette an incorrect translation of the sale proclamation, thereby misleading the auction-purchaser. (3) Advertising the same land twice over in two or more lots. (4) Declaring in the sale proclamation that lot 2 was lakhtaraj, whereas it was not.

As regards the absence of any saleable interest, it was contended that the assets were insufficient to pay the Government revenue, and that all that was purchased was a liability to pay so much out of pocket every year.

The Additional Judge before whom the application came on for hearing, found that the leases which were omitted to be mentioned in the affidavit of the decree-holder did not constitute "incumbrances" within the contemplation of s. 287, and that [370] the decree-holder was not bound to disclose them, that the purchaser at the time of the sale had been correctly informed as to what was being sold, and that if he had been misled by the advertisement in the Calcutta Gazette, he had only himself to blame, and found that as regards the two last grounds of fraud the purchaser had failed to make out his case, and further, holding that "saleable interest" in the property itself, apart from all consideration of profit and loss, rejected the application.

The auction-purchaser appealed.

The Advocate General (Mr Paul), Mr Bell, Bahoo Kali Mohun Das, Baboo Chundra Madhub Ghose and Bahoo Doorga Mohun Das for the appellants.

The Advocate General contended that the lower Court had passed the order under s. 313 of the Code, and that, inasmuch as the property had been lowered in value by reason of the putni leases, which were not set out in the proclamation, it was not the same property which was put up for sale, and that the sale should be set aside.

Baboo Ambica Churn Bose, and Baboo Bhowani Churn Dutt for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J. and O'KINEALY, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge, confirming a sale in execution.

The circumstances were these—

One Monoranjan Das became the purchaser at the sale of certain immoveable property described as lots 2 and 3. and he petitioned the Court that the sale should be set aside, and his deposit returned to him, upon the ground that there had been a fraudulent misrepresentation in the sale notification, and that consequently he had bought a property very different in its nature and value from that which purported to be sold. There is no doubt that he purchased the same property which was mentioned in the notification, but it was far less valuable than he had [371] reason to believe it to be on account of certain putni leases of which no notice was given, and for certain other reasons, which he alleges to have been known to the execution creditor, and fraudulently concealed by the way in which the property was described in the sale notification

The subject-matter of the petition appears to have been gone into very carefully by the District Judge, who made an order rejecting the application, and confirming the sale.

The purchaser now appeals to us upon the ground, that the order was one refusing to set aside the sale under s 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (see clause (16), s. 588), that is to say, he contends that the application to the Court below was made upon the ground, that the judgment debtor had virtually no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold

Unless the order confirming the sale was made under s. 313, or under ss. 294 and 312, there would be no appeal to this Court. And it is not pretended that the order was made under either of the two last mentioned sections.

The question, therefore, which we have to decide is this. Having regard to the nature of the appellant's contention in the Court below, and assuming, as we do, for the purposes of this question, that there was a fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment on the part of the decree-holder with respect to certain encumbrances and other disadvantages attaching to the property sold, which rendered that property of much less value to the purchaser than it would otherwise have been, was that misrepresentation and concealment any ground for setting aside the sale under s 313? This question has been argued at great length and with much ability by the learned Advocate-General, who has contended, that if the property sold was substantially and to any considerable extent of less value to the purchaser, by reason of the existence of the putni leases and other disadvantages which we have mentioned, it was in fact not the same property, which was put up for sale, and that the sale should, therefore, be set aside under s. 313

We are unable to construe the section in this way. We think that what it really means is this; that if a purchaser under an execution sale buys a property, which turns out to [372] have no existence at all, or to be of no saleable value whatever, the Court may then set the sale aside under s 313. But we think that any misrepresentation or concealment in the sale notification, which induces a purchaser to buy a property for much more than it is really worth (although that misrepresentation or concealment may be fraudulent), would be no ground for setting aside the sale under s 313.

Such misrepresentation or concealment may be very good ground for an application to the Court below to set aside the sale, and we do not doubt that the District Judge acted very properly in entertaining the application in this case; but as we consider that the application was not one under s. 313, we think there is no appeal to this Court from his decision. The only remedy for the applicant, as far as we can see, is a regular suit.

The learned Advocate-General has very properly called our attention to two cases decided by this Court, which he admits are directly opposed to his contention; one a case of Protab Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Pamoty (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 506) decided by Mr. Justice WILSON and Mr. Justice MACLEAN, and the other Ram Coomarr Dey v. Shushee Bhoosan Ghose (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 627), decided by Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM and Mr. Justice MACLEAN.

In both these cases it was held that an incumbrance upon a property sold in execution, by way of mortgage or otherwise, is not sufficient to enable an auction-purchaser to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property, and unless we are disposed to differ from those cases, and to refer the question to a Full Bench, which we are not, their authority is of course binding upon us.

It is said, however, that in the case of Narharmal Marwari v. Sadut Ali (8 C. L. R., 486), Mr. Justice PONTIFEX and Mr. Justice FIELD took a different view of the section; and we are asked to adopt their ruling.

But as we understand that case, the learned Judges then took precisely the same view of the law as was taken in the other two cases.

The facts were these. On the 21st of February 1880, three bighas of land were purchased by the appellant at an execution sale under a rent decree. At the time of that sale a decree had [373] been obtained by the mortgagee of the same (amongst other) property, by which that property was ordered to be, and was subsequently, sold on the 11th of March 1880, under which sale the purchaser obtained possession.

Under these circumstances the appellant, who purchased under the 1st sale in February 1880, applied to set aside the sale upon the ground that the execution debtor had no saleable interest in the three bighas, and the Court appeared to be of that opinion.

Mr. Justice PONTIFEX in giving judgment explains his view of the case in this way.

“Whether there was a saleable interest would depend upon whether these three bighas were included in the mortgage, and were affected by the decree made on the 7th October 1879 by the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly. If these three bighas of land were included in the mortgage, and the decree was a mortgage decree, directing a sale of the mortgaged property, then it is clear, that on the 7th October 1879, when that decree was made, being previous to the attachment under the rent decree, the mortgagor would no longer have a saleable interest in the property in specie, because the mortgage decree binding the land, the sale of the 21st February 1880 by the Howrah Court would not carry the property itself, but could only carry a right in the surplus proceeds of sale under the mortgage decree.”

Whether the learned Judge was right in that case in saying, that the mortgagor had no saleable interest in the three bighas sold to the appellant, may, perhaps, be open to doubt; but it is clear, that the principle of the Court's decision was, that if the three bighas were included in the mortgage, the mortgagor had no saleable interest in them at the time of the sale to the appellant. We think, therefore, that this case does not assist the present appellant in any way ; and it was certainly not treated by the learned Judges in the other two cases as in any way opposed to their view.

The Advocate-General has very properly abstained from going into the facts of the present case, seeing that we are against him upon the point of law. It is not pretended here, that the judgment-debtor had not some interest in the property sold, or that the appellant has not bought, in one sense, the property [374] which was described in the sale notification. All that is contended for is, that the property was so misdescribed, or that there was that concealment of the incumbrances upon it, that the purchaser has bought a totally different thing from that which he intended to buy, or in other words, that he has bought a property charged with heavy incumbrances, instead of a property free from incumbrances.

Then Mr. Bell has further argued, that although we may have no power to entertain the question on appeal, we may do so under s 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The answer is, that we have not before us any application under s. 622, but an appeal against the District Judge's order. And even if this were such an application, I, for one, should not be disposed to grant it. The Judge in the Court below has not acted without jurisdiction, and, so far as I can see, he has been guilty of no irregularity.

We think, therefore, that there is no ground for this appeal, and that it should be dismissed with costs, which we assess at Rs. 150.

Appeal dismissed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL

The 11th January, 1884.

PRESENT .

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

Gopaul Chunder Chuckerbutty..... Plaintiff

versus

Nilmoney Mitter and others..... Defendants .

Onus Probandi—Ejectment, Suit for.

When a plaintiff seeks to eject persons from premises claimed by him, on the ground that they are in wrongful possession of the premises, he is bound to show that he or some of the persons under whom he claims have been in possession of the property within twelve years before suit. A mere allegation in the plaint that the persons sought to be ejected were the tenants of the person through whom the plaintiff claims, will not shift the burden of proof.

* Appeal from a decision of FIGOT, J , dated 8th February 1883.

Rao Karan Singh v Bakar Ali Khan (L. R. 9 I. A. 99) explained and distinguished.

THE plaintiff stated that in 1865 the house and premises known as No. 150, Chitpore Road, Sobabazaar, belonged to one Mittunjoy [375] Chuckerbutty, and that in that year Messrs. Dodd & Co. obtained a decree against Mittunjoy for Rs. 23,000, but shortly afterwards became insolvent, the decree then vested in the Official Assignee, who attached the house, No. 150, Chitpore Road, in execution of that decree. In September 1869, one Sreenarain Chuckerbutty (defendant No. 8) the surviving brother of Mittunjoy, put in a claim to the property attached, but the claim was rejected, whereupon Sreenarain brought a suit against the Official Assignee asking for a declaration of his right to the property, and for an injunction to stop the sale, but on July 11th, 1870, his suit was dismissed, and on the 24th March 1871 his appeal against the judgment of the 10th July 1870 was also dismissed, and on the 25th February 1881 the Official Assignee sold the houses, and premises, to the plaintiff. The latter, on 19th December 1881, brought this suit against the defendants 1 to 7, who were alleged to be the tenants of Mittunjoy, for possession of the premises. And on the 16th March 1882, he amended his plaint, and made defendant No. 8 abovementioned a party to the suit.

Defendants Nos. 2, 5, 6 and 7 contended that they were the monthly tenants of Sreenarain Chuckerbutty, who they stated to be the owner, if not of the whole, of a greater portion of the premises, and in possession thereof. Defendant No. 2 asserted that he had paid rent to Sreenarain for the last 20 years. And the defendants 5, 6 and 7 asserted that they had paid rent to Sreenarain for the last three years, and contended that even if the plaintiff was the owner of the premises, which they denied, they were entitled to notice to quit.

Sreenarain (defendant No. 8) contended that he had been in possession of the premises by purchase since 1241 (1834-35), and that defendants 1 to 7 were his tenants, and submitted that supposing Mittunjoy ever to have been in possession of the property, his right and interest was barred by limitation.

At the hearing of the case on the 8th February 1883, the plaintiff put in the deed of sale of the 25th February 1881, the order in the claim made by Sreenarain against the Official Assignee and the decrees in the suit of Sreenarain v. The Official Assignee. He also called one Tariny Churn Banerjee, who stated that he had been a servant of Mittunjoy, that he entered his service when he [376] (the witness) was fourteen or fifteen years old, and that he was now 51 years old, and that Mittunjoy died eight or nine years ago; that during this service he had collected rents of the premises in dispute for Mittunjoy, but could not specify any particular dates of such collections.

Mr. T. A. Apcar and Mr. M. P. Gasper for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Palit for the Defendants.

PIGOT, J.—Dismissed the suit with costs, observing that though the plaintiff's witnesses seemed reliable, they proved no title, or at all events not sufficient to justify a decree for ejectment.

The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Phillips (with him Mr. T. A. Apcar) for the Appellant.—The onus was on the defendants to show that they have been in possession for twelve years. We allege in our plaint that the defendants were the tenants of Mittunjoy. The case of Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (L. R., 9 I. A., 99) overrules the decision of the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 744 ; 12 C. L. R., 257).

Mr. Trevelyan for the Respondents was not called upon.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.).

Garth, C. J.—I entirely agree with the learned Judge in the Court below that the plaintiff has made out no case, and the only reason, why I think it necessary to say a few words, is to explain my view of the argument, which has been addressed to us by Mr. Phillips, upon the plea of limitation. I think it very desirable that there should be no misunderstanding upon that subject.

The suit is brought to recover possession of a house and premises in Calcutta. The plaintiff claims the property, having purchased it, as he contends, from the Official Assignee, as belonging to a person named Mittunjoy Chuckerbutty (deceased), who is said to have been the absolute owner. The plaintiff's case is that the defendants Nos 1 to 7, who are now in possession, were tenants on sufferance of Mittunjoy, and consequently that he, claiming through Mittunjoy, is entitled to eject them.

[377] These defendants say, that they do not hold under Mittunjoy at all, that they are the tenants of the defendant Sreenarain Chuckerbutty, who is a brother of Mittunjoy, and all the defendants contend that Mittunjoy had never any title to, or possession of, the property.

This being the nature of the case, the plaintiff, in order to prove a title and possession in Mittunjoy, has called a witness named Tarney Churn Bannerjee, who professes to have been Mittunjoy's servant for a great many years. He says that Mittunjoy and his brothers had no ancestral property, but that he (the witness) and Mittunjoy used to come to Calcutta, and when there that they used to collect the rent of certain houses, and among them, of the house in question. But his evidence in this respect is of the vaguest character; he cannot say when it was that he received the rents, he certainly never received them from the defendants Nos 1 to 7, and the utmost that his evidence amounts to is, that he received some rent for his house at some time or other, but when, he cannot say.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Phillips has contended that the onus is upon the defendants to show that they have been in possession for upwards of twelve years.

It seems to me that there is no ground for that contention. The suit, as I take it, is brought to recover possession of property as upon a dispossession. The plaintiff claims under Mittunjoy; his case is, that Mittunjoy was the owner in possession, that he has bought Mittunjoy's right and title, and that consequently he is entitled to treat the defendants 1 to 7, who were Mittunjoy's tenants, as trespassers.

Of course, if the plaintiff could have shown that these people (the defendants 1 to 7) were really Mittunjoy's tenants, he would have had the same rights against them that Mittunjoy had. But he has not attempted to prove, and certainly he has not succeeded in proving, that they were Mittunjoy's tenants. They are, therefore, holding adversely to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff is seeking to eject them upon the ground that they are in wrongful possession of his (the plaintiff's) property.

That being so, I consider that the plaintiff is bound to show [378] that he or some or one of the persons under whom he claims, have been in possession of the property within twelve years before suit.

Mr. Phillips contends that this is not so, because the plaintiff has alleged in his plaint that the defendants Nos 1 to 7 were the tenants of Mittunjoy. But if a mere allegation of that kind could relieve a plaintiff from the burthen of proving that he or those under whom he claims had been in possession within twelve years, that device might always be resorted to for the purpose of evading the law of limitation.

Then, again, Mr. Phillips, in support of his argument, has referred us to the case of Rao Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (L. R., 9 I. A., 99) decided by the Privy Council, the effect of which he contends, is to overrule the law laid down by the Full Bench of this Court in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 744, s.c., 12 C. L. R., 257).

In this it seems to me he is in error. That decision of the Privy Council was duly considered by this Court in the Full Bench case, but we did not notice it in our judgment, because we thought it did not apply.

That suit in point of fact was not for possession at all. It was brought by the plaintiff, a mortgagee, to recover the principal and interest due upon two mortgage bonds; and to enforce that claim, by a sale of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff, so far as appears, had never been in possession, nor did he ask for possession of that property. If he had, article 138^c of the Limitation Act would have applied.

The defendant's answer was, that the mortgagee (the plaintiff) could not enforce his right as against him, because he had been in possession of the property adversely to the plaintiff, and those under whom he claimed for upwards of twelve years before suit.

Under these circumstances, it was contended before the Privy Council that the plaintiff was bound to prove that he had been in possession within twelve years before suit, and this (as it would seem from the report) upon some general principle of law.

[379] But their Lordships held that the suit was not brought (under article 143^d of the Act of 1871) to recover possession as upon a dispossession, and they, therefore, considered that the plaintiff was not bound to prove a possession within twelve years before suit; but that it lay on the defendant to prove an adverse possession for that period in order to establish his defence.

Description of suit	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
By a purchaser of land at a sale in execution of a decree, for possession of the purchased land, when the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale	Twelve years...	The date of the sale.]

For possession of immoveable property, when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession.	Twelve years...	The date of the dispossession or discontinuance.]
---	-----------------	---

I have said thus much in order to explain why in my opinion the Privy Council decision is not applicable here, and why that decision does not conflict in any way with the Full Bench judgment of this Court. But in point of fact there is no evidence in the case which would justify any Court in finding in the plaintiff's favour.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

Cunningham, J. —I concur in thinking that the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Rao Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (L. R., 9 I. A., 99) cannot be regarded as modifying the law which has been repeatedly laid down in this Court on the subject of limitation in suits for possession of immoveable property.

The plaintiff in that case sued for the amount secured on two mortgage bonds, and for sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant pleaded twelve years' adverse possession, and all that appears to have been decided was that the defendant was not, for the reasons set forth in the judgment, entitled to add to the period during which he had himself been in adverse possession, the period during which the Collector had been in possession on behalf of Government. I agree in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[380] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th December, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE.

Mohamed Masik.Defendant

versus

Malkai Mukhadrai Uzwa Badshah Mehal Saheba.....Plaintiff.*

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, cl. (c)—Suit to set aside a trust deed and to recover trust money—Appeal by trustee—Duty payable on memorandum of appeal.

A brought a suit against B, a trustee, and others to set aside a trust deed and to recover Rs. 2,50,000, the amount of the trust money, and valued his suit at Rs 2,50,000 A obtained a decree, B appealed and sought to affix to his memorandum of appeal a ten-rupee stamp, under art. 17, cl. (6)* of sch. II of Act VII of 1870.

* Reference under s. 5 of Act VII of 1870.

Held, that the duty payable on the memorandum of appeal was the same as that paid on the plaint in the suit

THE suit to which this appeal relates was instituted to set aside a deed of endowment, whereby the plaintiff made over certain Government promissory notes of the value of Rs. 2,50,000, to the first defendant, and appointed him and his co-defendants in the suit, trustees for her (the plaintiff) during her lifetime, and after her death for the management of certain charities, and also to recover the promissory notes in question

The plaint was accordingly valued at the above amount, viz , Rs. 2,50,000, and an ad valorem Court-fee of Rs. 2,175 was paid thereon.

The suit having been decreed, the defendant No. 1 sought to prefer an appeal against the decree paying a Court Fee of Rs. 10 only under art. 6 of No. 17 of sch. II of the Court Fees Act (VII) of 1870, as for an appeal "where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute."

The Deputy Registrar was of opinion that, as the suit was instituted for the purpose of having a deed of endowment declared invalid, and for the recovery of the Government promissory notes, as above stated, it evidently fell under cl. (c) of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act, and that the appellant should, therefore, value the appeal [381] in the same way as the suit was valued, viz., with reference to the subject-matter [see Joy Narain Giree v. Greesh Chunder Mytee (15 B. L. R., 172; 22 W. R., 438).]

The matter then came before the Taxing Officer for orders, and he gave the following opinion —

"The object sought to be attained in bringing the original suit was the actual recovery of Government promissory notes to the value of Rs. 2,50,000, which had been endorsed to the defendant under the terms of the deed. The plaintiff's interest in the suit amounted, therefore, to 2½ lakhs of rupees, and she correctly affixed an ad valorem stamp on her plaint in the lower Court

"In appealing against the judgment of the lower Court, the defendant seeks to change the nature of the suit and to determine its value, not according to the property in dispute, but according to his interest (or alleged interest) in it.

"The first question, therefore, for decision is, whether the appellant can change the nature of the suit in appeal for the purposes of determining the Court-fees payable. I know of no instance where this course has been allowed. I have never known it to be seriously contended. It is certainly a point of general importance, and as such must be referred for the decision of the Chief Justice under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act VII of 1870.

"The next point to be determined is the extent of the defendant's interest in the suit. His vakeel urges that he has no present interest, for he gets nothing until the plaintiff dies, and then merely a stipend of Rs. 50 a month.

* [Art. 17, Cl. 6 -

Number.

Proper fee.

Plaint or memorandum of appeal in each of the following suits —

Cl. 6 — Every other suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money-value the subject-matter in dispute, and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act

Ten rupees]

This may be the case if the defendant is to be regarded as an individual and not as a trustee. In the latter capacity, it seems to me that his interest extends to the retention of the principal entrusted to his care, and it is as a trustee, and not as an individual member of society, that he appeals. If this be the correct view, then, even granting that he may change the nature of the suit in appeal, his interest in it is equal to that of the plaintiff, and is represented by a money value of 2½ lakhs

"In connection with this point it should be observed that the Government promissory notes for 2½ lakhs are endorsed to defendant [382] by name, and that he is entitled, therefore, to draw the whole interest thereon

"I think that the first question should be answered in the negative. The Court Fees Act does not distinguish between a 'plaint' and a 'memorandum of appeal' when the latter is from a decree. If, therefore, the fee was correct in the lower Court—and this is not denied—then the same fee is leviable in the Appellate Court.

"As to the second point, I am of opinion that the interest of the appellant is equivalent to that of the plaintiff so far as regards the subject-matter of this suit; and that such interest amounts to a money value of 2½ lakhs, and is possessed by defendant in his capacity of trustee"

The Taxing Officer, therefore, referred the two questions above mentioned to the Chief Justice under s 5 of Act VII of 1870

Baboo Pran Nuth Palit for the Appellant

No one appeared on the other side

Garth, C.J.—I have no doubt whatever that in this case the nature of the appeal is the same as the value of the suit, namely, Rs 2,50,000

The question is not what is the defendant's personal interest in the subject-matter of the suit. He may have no personal interest at all, and yet the subject-matter of the appeal may be as valuable as the subject-matter of the suit. There is nothing, as far as I can see, in the defendant's objection [383] APPELLATE CIVIL.The 28th January, 1884.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Jarfan Khan . . . One of the Defendants

versus

Jabbar Meah . . . Plaintiff.

Mahomedan law—Pre-emption—Ceremonies.

In order to sustain a claim for pre-emption in Mahomedan law, it is essential that the ceremony of Tulub-i-mowashibat should be properly performed

THE case is thus stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court.—

The suit was to enforce a right of pre-emption. Plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to preference to defendant No. 2 in purchasing a certain plot which defendant No. 2 purchased from defendant No. 1, and that defendant No. 1 gave him no opportunity. The plaintiff on the 13th July 1880 having been away elsewhere returned home, and was informed of the sale. On hearing of the sale, he took all needful steps and offered to return to the defendant No. 2 the money paid, defendant, however, refused to hand over the land to plaintiff.

The plaint states that on hearing of the sale, in the presence of the public, the plaintiff stated his wish to buy, and then, very shortly afterwards, taking with him the price, Rs. 47-4, went with suitable witnesses to defendant No. 1's residence to offer the money. He states that he is ready now to pay whatever price the Court may direct. Defendant No. 1, in her written statement, alleged that the plaintiff had not performed the ceremonies of Tulub-i-mowashibat and Tulub-i-shad as he stated, and had not deposited the purchase-money with the plaintiff, and therefore plaintiff could not maintain the suit, the defendant No. 1 before selling the land frequently offered plaintiff and his brother Abdul Meah and his nephew Macfaruddi opportunities of exercising the right of pre-emption which they refused; also that the defendant No. 2 had a superior right of pre-emption to plaintiff, and consequently defendant No. 1 sold him the property on the 23rd December 1879 by kabala. The kabala is filed. It is admitted that Rs. 47-4 was the price. The defendant No. 2 supported these allegations. He, in his written statement, set forth that, after her husband's death, defendant No. 1 had gone to her father's; subsequently she desired to sell this property, and therefore informed defendant No. 2, and he desired to buy. Consequently "in a public place in the presence of several persons, on giving defendant a proper price, she executed a kabala [384] in his favour. Plaintiff or his brother or his nephew at no time wished to buy the land."

The Munsif found at the outset that plaintiff was not entitled to maintain this suit for the following reasons, on his own evidence without going into any other issues. Plaintiff's evidence, he held, showed that one day in Pous, when plaintiff came home, his wife told him that the land had been sold by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2; plaintiff thereupon entered his house, opened his chest, took out Rs. 47-4, called the witnesses, proceeded to the premises and there cried aloud that he had a right of pre-emption, and would exercise that right; and then and there offered to defendant No. 2 the refund of the purchase-money, which tender defendant No. 2 refused. Plaintiff then went with the witnesses to defendant No. 1's house, and there also plaintiff went through the same formal declaration of his rights. The Munsif held that, while all this was right enough, yet plaintiff had omitted to shout out his demand for the land the instant he heard about it from his wife's lips. This omission the Munsif held to be fatal, and so dismissed the suit.

The evidence shows that there are two huts with a common compound (part used by plaintiff and part used by defendant No. 1), and a common well and drainage. That one hut was the property of the widow, the defendant No. 1, and that the other was the property of the plaintiff. That the plaintiff, coming home, was in the common yard when his wife told him, that he then entered his house, opened his chest, and came back into the yard with money, Rs. 47-4, and in the presence of three neighbours, one of whom was already sitting there (the two others, whose baris adjoin, came up on hearing plaintiff commence the proclamation of his rights), went to the widow's hut, proclaimed his right of pre-emption, and called on the defendant No. 2 who was not present, but in his own bari hard by, to give it up to him and take the purchase-money. The defendant No. 2 refused, answering from his bari. Plaintiff then went with witnesses to the defendant No. 1's father's house where the defendant No. 1 lived (a mile or so distant), and claimed his right, and offered to pay the price for it. She then refused, saying she had sold it to the defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 1 is the widow of the plaintiff's cousin. The hut in question had belonged to that cousin, the bari being the ancestral bari of both plaintiff and that cousin. The plaintiff had come home on this day at noon and went to the claimed hut and proclaimed his rights before 1 P.M., and went to the defendant No. 1's father's house, and returned therefrom before 2 P.M. Defendant No. 2's bari is two baris off to the north of plaintiff's bari. The defendant No. 2 is plaintiff's cousin on his mother's side.

The plaintiff's allegation that he did return home on the 13th Pous is not traversed by the defence, nor is there any evidence on the part of the defence (save the statement of a witness who is quite unreliable, and denies [385] plaintiff's having gone to defendant No. 1's residence with the money) contradictory of the evidence adduced by plaintiff to show the manner in which he went through the formalities. The evidence for the defence is almost entirely confined to plaintiff's refusal to purchase before the sale and his permission to defendant No. 1 to sell to any one.

The lower Court has dismissed the suit even on the assumption that the facts are as above given by the plaintiff because it is not shown that plaintiff at once at the very moment of receiving the information from his wife, proclaimed his right and his intention to insist on it. If plaintiff has any right at all in the matter, such a dictum, if supported, would appear to me to be going as nearly as possible to a negation of that right. I cannot conceive that the law is as the Munsif has interpreted it. I turn to the authorities.

Jamalan v. Latif Hossein (8 B. L. R., 160, 16 W. R. F. B., 13) states. "The Tulub-i-mowashibat may be, and constantly is, a private act which the purchaser against whom the right is claimed has no power of questioning or refusing; and the Tulub-i-shad is the only public act connected with the claim to pre-emption of which the purchaser has necessarily any cognizance." The Tulub-i-shad must take place with the least practicable delay. It has clearly taken place in the present instance with the least practicable delay. Baillie's Digest states, page 484: "The Tulub-i-mowashibat, or immediate demand, is first necessary, then the Tulub-i-shad or demand with invocation, if, at the time of making the former, there was no opportunity of invoking witnesses, as, for instance, when the pre-emptor at the time of hearing of the sale was absent from the seller, the purchaser and the premises. But if he heard it in the presence of any of these, and had called on witnesses to attest his immediate demand, it would suffice for both demands, and there would be no necessity for the other." It appears to me that the above quotation covers the present case, and that the demand made in the presence of witnesses and of the premises within some minutes, perhaps half an hour at the outside, after hearing of the sale, is the sort of Tulub-i-mowashibat which renders unnecessary any subsequent Tulub-i-shad. It seems to me that plaintiff not only made this demand in the presence of witnesses on the premises, but his demand was answered by the purchaser from a neighbouring bari, and that plaintiff then promptly went off to the vendor's residence (some distance off), and in the presence of witnesses made demand of her. It seems that all the necessary formalities have been gone through, the question is, were they commenced and concluded with sufficient promptitude? I think the commencement is the only really debatable point, it cannot be contended that, when once commenced all the necessary formalities were not promptly and continuously gone through.

[386] Mona Singh v. Mosrad Singh (5 W. R., 203) lays down that the act of going into one's house to get the money before making demand is a delay which forfeits the pre-emptor's title. The words used by MACNAGHTEN are: "It is necessary that the person claiming this right should declare his intention of becoming purchaser immediately on hearing of the sale." In a ruling, Jadu Singh v. Ragkumar (4 B. L. R. A. C., 171, 13 W. R., 177) KEMP, J., remarks: "There is no absolute necessity for the pre-emptor to make the Tulub-i-mowashibat in the presence of witnesses. It is usually done in the presence of witnesses, in order that the pre-emptor may be provided with proof in case the purchaser should deny the demand." This seems to me to indicate as permissible a reasonable delay for the purpose of getting witnesses before the demand is made.

But in Ram Charan v. Nabu Mahton (4 B. L. R. A. C., 216, 13 W. R., 259), it has been held that where the pre-emptor heard the news of the sale at his own house, which was adjacent to the lands whereof pre-emption was claimed, and then went from his own to the land in dispute, and then made the demand, the delay, though very short, forfeited the right.

Page 569, Vol. III, of the Hedaya, states: "If the man claim his shuffa in the presence of the company amongst whom he may be sitting when he received the intelligence, he is the shuffee, his right not being invalidated unless he delay asserting it till after the company have broken up, because the power of accepting or rejecting the shuffa being established, a short time should necessarily be allowed for reflection in the same manner as time is allowed to a woman to whom her husband has given the power of choosing to be divorced or not." This passage was quoted with approval in Amjad Hossein v. Kharaj Sen Sahu (4 B. L. R. A. C., 203, 13 W. R., 299).

It seems to me that if this is a correct statement of the law then the plaintiffs are well within the law in the present case. I think the above opinion is not in conflict with the ruling in Ali Muhammad v. Tuj Muhammad (1 L. R., 1 All., 283) where twelve hours delay in making the first demand was considered excessive. I must hold that in the present case the formalities required by law have been commenced and gone through with sufficient expedition.

The second defendant appealed to the High Court on the ground that the Judge was wrong in holding that formalities prescribed by Mahomedan law had been complied with.

[387] The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—This is a case of pre-emption. The Munsiff held that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed because he had not, in compliance with the requirements of Mahomedan law, performed the ceremony of Tulub-i-mowashibat. The Munsiff says in his judgment "The plaintiff on hearing this," that is, on hearing the fact of the sale from his wife, "entered his house, opened his chest, took Rs. 47-4, called the witnesses, proceeded to the premises, the subject of sale, and there cried aloud the following words 'That he has the right of pre-emption to purchase the said land, and he shall exercise the said right, let the defendant No. 2 receive the refund of the consideration money and make over the land to him (the plaintiff).' The defendant No. 2 refused to accept the offer, on which the plaintiff went with the witnesses to the place where the defendant No. 1 was residing, and there also the plaintiff performed the said ceremony, that is ceremony of Tulub-i-shad. Now, it is clear that immediately upon hearing of the sale of the property the plaintiff did not make the demand or perform the ceremony of Tulub-i-mowashibat. At page 481 of Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, there is the following passage, in which the law on the subject is stated "By Tulub-i-mowashibat is meant that when a person who is entitled to pre-emption has heard of a sale he ought to claim his right immediately on the instant (whether there is any one by him or not), and when he remains silent without claiming the right, it is lost", and then is given the instance of a person reading a letter in the beginning or middle of which the information as to the sale is contained. If he wait till he finish the whole letter without making the Tulub-i-mowashibat the right of pre-emption is lost. The Judge quotes and relies upon a passage from the same work, p. 484, which is as follows "The Tulub-i-mowashibat or immediate demand is first necessary, then the Tulub-i-shad, or demand with invocation, if at the time of making the former there was no opportunity of invoking witnesses, as, for instance, when the pre-emptor at the time of hearing of the sale was absent from the seller, the purchaser and the premises. But if he heard it in the presence of any of these, and had called on witnesses to attest the immediate demand, it would suffice for both demands [388] and there would be no necessity for the other." Now, the facts of the present case do not fall within the meaning of the passage last quoted. The plaintiff did not, on hearing of the sale, immediately call witnesses to attest the immediate demand. He made a delay, went into the house, got the money, and then called the witnesses, and this being so it is clear that the case is not one to which the second quotation from Mr. Baillie's work would apply. We may refer to the cases of Mona Singh v Mostad Singh (5 W. R., 203), and Ram Charan v. Nurbir Mahton (4 B. L. R. A. C., 216, 13 W. R. 259), which have been cited by the vakeel for the appellant, as instances of what is required by the law in conformity with the first of the above extracts from Mr. Baillie's work. We think that in the present case the requirements of the law have not been complied with.

The decision of the District Judge must, therefore, be set aside and that of the Munsiff restored with costs of both Courts.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 31st January, 1884.

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Ram Coomar Sen and another..... Plaintiffs

versus

Ram Comul Sen... Defendant.

Small Cause Court—Proceeds of immoveable property—Jurisdiction—

Act XI of 1865, s. 6—Money had and received—Sale of tenure—

Co-sharers—Arrears of rent

The plaintiff and the defendant were co-owners of a certain taluq. The zamindar brought a suit for arrears of rent of the taluq against the defendant, obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree sold the tenure. The proceeds of the sale, after satisfying the zamindar's decree, were taken by the defendant, and the plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover an 8-annas share thereof.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and held, further, that such a suit was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court.

On the 5th of May 1871, the plaintiff Ram Coomar Sen brought a suit in the Court of the Munsiff of Kooshtea against the defendant Ram Comul Sen for possession and mesne profits of [389] an 8-annas share of a certain taluq held under the Maharajah of Tipperah on the allegation that the defendant had dispossessed the plaintiff from the said 8-annas share on the 12th of March 1871. The final decree in this case was passed in the plaintiffs' favour in the High Court, and in execution of that decree the plaintiffs obtained possession on the 3rd of August 1878.

In the meantime, the Maharajah of Tipperah brought a suit for arrears of rent of the same taluq against the defendant Ram Comul Sen, who was the only person recorded in his sherista as proprietor, and obtained a decree on the 25th of June 1878. In execution of that decree the taluq was sold for Rs. 800. Out of this sum Rs. 61-5-3 were paid to the Maharajah in satisfaction of his decree, the balance being paid over to the defendant Ram Comul Sen. The plaintiffs presented a petition in the execution case claiming half the proceeds of the taluq, but their claim was rejected. They thereupon brought the present suit.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 963 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Uma Churn Kastogiri, First Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 13th March 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Ram Judub Talapatra, Second Munsiff of Kooshtea, dated the 31st January 1881.

The plaintiffs' suit was dismissed with costs, chiefly on the ground that, as they were not parties to the rent suit of 1878, their interest in the taluq was unaffected by the sale, the lower Appellate Court finding it not proved that Ram Comul Sen was the only recorded proprietor. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Appellants.

Baboo Doorga Mohun Dass and Munshi Serajul Islam for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the plaintiffs sued to recover the value of a moiety of a taluq under the following circumstances. The landlord, who is the Maharajah of Tipperah, brought a suit for the rent of the taluq against Ram Comul Sen. He obtained a decree for Rs. 44-8, being the amount of rent in arrears; and, in execution of that decree, he brought the taluq to sale. It was purchased by one Nobo Coomar Roy for the sum of Rs. 800. The plaintiffs' contention is that, although they were not made parties to the rent suit, nevertheless they had a half share in the taluq, and that they are therefore entitled to Rs. 400, the value of the half share.

[390] A preliminary objection was taken to the hearing of the appeal, it being contended that this is a suit of the Small Cause Court class, and therefore the amount in dispute being less than Rs. 500, no second appeal lies to the High Court.

We have considered this preliminary objection, and the conclusion at which we arrive is, that this is not a suit of the Small Cause Court class, in other words, that it is not a suit coming within the purview of s. 6 of Act XI of 1865. According to that section the following suits are cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, viz., "claims for money due on a bond or other contract, or for rent or for personal property, or for the value of such property, or for damages, when the debt, damage or demand does not exceed in amount or value the sum of Rs. 500." We think it impossible to say that the present suit is a suit for money due on a "contract," having regard to the meaning of the term as expounded in a number of decisions of this Court. We may further observe that the words "bond or other contract" seem to indicate that the "contract" here spoken of must be ejusdem generis with a bond, in other words, a true contract as opposed to a quasi-contract or an obligation in the nature of a contract. Then that the words "personal property" are not applicable would appear from the words which immediately follow "for the value of such property," for if money was intended to be included in personal property, it would have been unnecessary to insert the words "for the value of such property" immediately after the words "personal property." Then we think it impossible to say that this suit is a suit for damages within the meaning of the section, and there is a further consideration. The suit is clearly for the value of immoveable property, and while the section distinctly enumerates "the value of personal property" as a subject matter of a suit which may be brought under the section, there is nothing about the value of immoveable property. The reasonable construction, therefore, is that the value of immoveable property was not intended to be within the purview of the section. The conclusion at which we arrive then is that the suit is not a suit of the Small Cause Court class, and that a second appeal does lie. We have been referred [391] to the case of Mata Prasad v. Gauri (I. L. R., 3 All., 59), but we are unable to concur with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judges who decided that case.

Turning now to the facts, it appears that, on a previous occasion, the Maharajah brought this very taluq to sale in execution of a decree for rent obtained in a suit to which the present plaintiffs were not parties; and that they successfully asserted their right to a moiety of the taluq in a suit which came up in appeal to the High Court. In that suit the defendant in the present case was a party, and therefore he is estopped from saying that the plaintiffs have not a moiety of the taluq. The decision in that case is, we think, of no value to show what was sold in the present case, a purpose for which it has been, to some extent, used in the Court below. But upon referring to the sale certificate it appears to us clear that what was sold on the present occasion was the whole of the taluq, and as the defendant has adopted that sale by taking away the whole of the surplus purchase-money, notwithstanding that the plaintiffs gave him notice to abandon his right to one moiety, and allow them (plaintiffs) to take out this moiety from the Civil Court, we think it inequitable that the defendant should be allowed to retain the whole value of the taluq, when it has been already decided between the parties that the plaintiffs have title to a moiety of the taluq itself. Under these circumstances, we think that the decree of the Court below must be set aside, and this appeal decreed. The plaintiffs will have a decree for one moiety, not of the Rs. 800 for which the taluq was sold in the execution sale, but of the surplus sale proceeds, Rs 738-10-9. As the plaintiffs have elected to adopt the sale, they cannot equitably claim more than a moiety of the sale proceeds which remain after satisfying the rent decree.

The plaintiffs will have their costs in all the Courts.

Hindu law, Widow—Right of childless widow to alienate moveable property—Mithila law—Inheritance.

Under the Mithila law a childless Hindu widow, although she cannot alienate the immoveable property, has an absolute right over the moveable property inherited from her husband and can alienate it in any manner she pleases, and she has also an absolute power to dispose of the profits of the estate during her lifetime

* Appeal from Original Decree No 96 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Mohendra Nath Bose, Rai Bahadoor, First Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 22nd December 1881.

THIS was a case in which the plaintiffs laid claim to certain property by way of inheritance under the Mithila law. The following table shows the state of the family at the time the suit was filed :—

GURU BUKSH LAL MAHATA

The original plaintiffs died after the institution of the suit, and the principal respondents were their legal representatives

The plaintiffs as the uncles of Chuttoorbhooj Narain brought the suit on the death of his widow Lalta Koer for a declaration of their title to, and for possession of, the estate, consisting of moveable and immoveable property left by him, as being his next heirs under the Mithila law. They alleged that the entire share of his father Purman Lal came to be acquired by him as being the surviving son, his brother Bhoochunga Lal having died while in a joint estate with him, thereby precluding his widow, the defendant Birajun Koer, from inheriting any share therein.

In answer to the suit Birajun Koer alleged that her husband was living in a state of separation from his brother Chuttoorbhooj [393] Narain, and that she therefore succeeded him as heiress under the Hindu law. She admitted that after the death of her husband the entire estate remained in the hands of Chuttoorbhooj Narain so long as he lived, but alleged that he was acting as pure trustee on her behalf. She further alleged that on the death of Chuttoorbhooj his widow Lalta Koer and she, the defendant, jointly took out letters of administration, and remained in possession of the whole estate as heiresses-at-law until the death of Lalta Koer, and she further set up a verbal gift from the latter in regard to her portion of the property. She further contended that even if she were not the heiress to her husband she was still the heiress of Chuttoorbhooj as being the nearest sapinda gotraja, and this contention was also raised in the appeal, but was not pressed. She also contended that by Lalta Koer joining her in the administration, it was to be presumed that she had made a gift of one moiety of the estate to her, and by virtue of such gift she was entitled to retain that moiety under the Hindu law, which she maintained authorises a widow to deal with the moveable portion of her husband's estate in any manner she pleases. She also claimed the other moiety under the alleged gift above alluded to.

The nature of the properties claimed, together with the evidence offered on either side in support of the above contentions and the findings of the lower Court, are sufficiently stated for the purpose of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee for the appellant.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and FIELD, JJ) was delivered by Mitter, J.—This is an appeal against a decree in favour of the plaintiffs passed by the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot. The claim of the plaintiffs was for the recovery of the estate of one Chuttoorbhooj Narain. The (defendant) appellant is the widow of Bhoochungal Lal, brother of Chuttoorbhooj. Purmani Lal, [394] father of Bhoochungal Lal, and Chuttoorbhooj Narain, was a uterine brother of the original plaintiffs, viz, Ram Churn and Jairam Lal. The original plaintiffs died after the institution of the suit, and the principal respondents are their legal representatives. Purmani Lal died in the year 1273 F.S. (1866), Bhoochungal Lal in the year 1274 F.S. (1867), and Chuttoorbhooj Narain in the month of Baisack 1280 F.S. (April 1873).

The plaintiffs alleged that the three brothers, Ram Churn, Purmani and Jairam were joint in food and estate, that Ram Churn separated from the joint family in the month of Baisack 1275 F.S. (April 1868), and that after the death of Bhoochungal Lal, Chuttoorbhooj separated from Jairam in the year 1279 F.S. (1872). That the entire estate left by Purmani became vested in Chuttoorbhooj, the appellant. Birajun the widow of his brother, who lived with him jointly, receiving maintenance from the estate. That on the death of Chuttoorbhooj Narain, the estate in question devolved under the Mithila law which governs the family upon his widow Lalta Koer, who out of affection for the appellant, and with a view to please her, caused her name to be associated with her "in the village and Court papers," but that she (Lalta) alone remained in possession of the estate, the appellant living jointly with her and receiving maintenance as before. That there was a Banking Kotee at Bettea, which, on partition of the family property, fell to Jairam Lal and Chuttoorbhooj Narain in equal shares. That the Maharajah of Bettea was a debtor of this Banking Kotee, and that as security for this debt he executed on the 18th Bhadur 1288 (22nd August 1876) a bond in favour of Jairam as well as Lalta Koer, and the appellant, representing the deceased Chuttoorbhooj Narain, for the amount of Rs. 2,08,275. That out of the money left by Chuttoorbhooj Narain, Lalta Koer purchased several immoveable properties in the names of Gopi Lal, Jugger Nath Pershad and Ram Sahi Lal. That Lalta Koer died on the 2nd Falgoon 1287 (March 1880), and that on her death under the Mithila law of inheritance the original plaintiffs as next heirs-at-law became entitled to the entire estate which was in the possession of Lalta Koer as Hindu widow. That after the death of Lalta Koer the Maharajah of Bettea, notwithstanding the plaintiff's right being notified to him, paid Rs. 30,000 [395] to the appellant out of the money due under the bond dated the 22nd August 1876, and that out of the aforesaid Rs. 30,000 the appellant advanced Rs. 15,000 as a loan to one Mr. Hudson under a bond executed by him. Upon these allegations the plaintiffs sought to establish their right in the properties, moveable and immoveable, left by Chuttoorbhooj as well as the bonds executed by the Maharaja of Bettea and Mr. Hudson, and in the properties purchased after the death of Chuttoorbhooj Narain in the names of Gopi Lal, Jugger Nath Pershad and Ram Sahi, and for the recovery of possession of such of them as are capable of being reduced to possession, making these persons defendants along with Birajun Koer, the appellant before us. The plaintiffs further prayed that the maintenance of the appellant be fixed by the Court.

The appellant, who was the principal defendant, alleged in her written statement that her husband was separate from his brother Chuttoorbhooj Narain, and that on her husband's death she allowed her brother-in-law to manage the entire property, as she had confidence in him and lived with him jointly. That after the death of Chuttoorbhooj she and the widow of Chuttoorbhooj, viz., Lalta Koer, remained in joint possession of the said estate. That Lalta Koer before her death made a gift of her share of the estate in question to the appellant. That certain shares of mouzahs Chattopore and of Sadipore were purchased by the appellant and Lalta Koer in the names of Jugger Nath Pershad and Gopi Lal respectively out of the profits of their joint estate. That even if the gift made by Lalta Koer be not established, and if it be proved that her husband was joint with Chuttoorbhooj, the appellant is entitled to a moiety of the moveable property under the arrangement between herself and Lalta Koer.

The lower Court finds that Bhoochunga Lal at the time of his death was joint in food and estate with his brother Chuttoorbhooj, that the act of Lalta Koer in the matter of associating the name of the appellant in the village and Court papers does not amount to a gift of any interest in the property, that the said act is not binding upon the respondents, that the verbal gift set up by the appellant is not established, that the properties purchased out of the profits of the estate left by Chuttoorbhooj [396] would pass to the (plaintiffs) respondents with the corpus, that the Rs 30,000 paid by the Maharajah of Bettea to the appellant represent a portion of the saving by Lalta from the profits of her husband's estate; and that the (plaintiffs) respondents as the heirs-at-law of Chuttoorbhooj are entitled to the said money, and that mouzah Madhopore is not proved to have been purchased by Lalta Koer, but is the property of the defendant Ram Sahi. As regards houses Nos 88 and 89 of the schedule to the plaint the plaintiffs gave up their claim to them. The lower Court fixed Rs. 4,800 annually as the maintenance of the appellant, and declared that the Rs. 15,000 out of the Rs 30,000 paid by the Maharajah of Bettea and appropriated by the appellant should be considered as a charge upon this maintenance. In accordance with these findings a decree has been made in favour of the respondents. The defendant Birajun Koer has preferred this appeal against the said decree, and the respondents have taken certain objections to it under s 561 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The appellant contended in the lower Court that, taking all the facts stated in the plaint as correct, she as a nearer sapinda to Chuttoorbhooj Narain than the original plaintiffs had under the Hindu law of inheritance a preferential right to his estate. But the lower Court decided this question in favour of the plaintiffs. This ground of defence has also been taken in the petition of appeal. The learned counsel for the appellant, without giving it up, intimated to the Court that he would not repeat the arguments in support of his contention upon this point, as they were advanced on more than one occasion in recent cases and were considered and disposed of by the Court adversely to the contention.

Upon the evidence on the record there is not the slightest doubt that the findings of the lower Court that Bhoochunga Lal was separate from Chuttoorbhooj Narain, and that the alleged verbal gift by Lalta Koer to the appellant is not established, are correct. The principal question that has been discussed in appeal is the nature and the effect of the arrangement under which the name of the appellant was associated with that of Lalta Koer in respect of the properties in dispute after the death of Chuttoorbhooj Narain.

[397] The evidence upon this point is meagre and has left on my mind the impression that for some reason or other, which is not apparent, the parties have not placed before the Court all the circumstances relating to this arrangement.

Biseswar Narain, witness No. 1 for the plaintiffs, says upon this point, that after the death of Chuttoorbhooj Narain, Lalta Koer and Birajun Koer entered upon the possession of the property left by him; Lalta consented to this arrangement out of "generous affection" for Birajun Koer. In cross-examination the witness thus explains what this "generous affection" means. He says that in consequence of Birajun Koer's lamentations and cries, Lalta Koer associated her in the management of the affairs of the estate left by her husband. Gobind Lal, witness No. 2 for the plaintiffs, similarly says that it was in consequence of Birajun Koer's weeping and crying for her share that this arrangement was come to, but the witness is unable to say why Lalta assented to it. According to Gobind Dyal, the witness No. 3 for the plaintiffs, Birajun Koer's name was associated because he and the other well-wishers and the old servants of the family considered that this should be done with a view that Lalta might not maltreat her and refuse to maintain her. But this witness admits that Birajun Koer does not appear before him, and it is therefore probable that he was not aware of her lamentations and weepings for her share, if there were such "lamentations and weepings." Plaintiff's witness No. 4, Sriksissen Lal, deposes to Birajun Koer and Lalta Koer being in joint possession of the estate left by Chuttoorbhooj Narain. The witness No. 5, Parmes-suri Sahi, says that the name of Birajun Koer was jointly used along with that of Lalta Koer in consequence of the former claiming her share as the heiress of her husband. To the same effect is the deposition of Jugger Nath Pershad, the witness No. 1 for the defendant. Upon this point, the above is a summary of the oral evidence on the record.

The documentary evidence begins with the joint application of Birajun Koer and Lalta Koer, dated the 26th June 1873, for obtaining a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to collect the debts due to the estate of Chuttoorbhooj Narain. It is stated in this application "that these two ladies with mutual [398] consent have been in possession of all properties left by Chuttoorbhooj Narain by right of heirship." The rest of the documentary evidence consists of petitions, &c., in which these two ladies join with the co-sharers in various matters connected with the family properties, they being treated as jointly in possession of the property left by Chuttoorbhooj Narain as joint heiresses.

Upon this evidence it is clear to me that upon the death of Chuttoorbhooj Narain, Birajun Koer claimed a right in the property left by him. Whether that claim was based upon a right of inheritance to her husband's share, or upon her own right of maintenance, or upon a supposed right which, as the senior widow in the family, she might have thought that she was entitled to claim, it is not clear upon the evidence. But the evidence leaves no doubt in my mind that she put forward a claim with some degree of earnestness, and that with the advice of relatives, friends and servants of the family, Lalta agreed to settle this matter with her sister by making her a joint owner of the estate. As this estate had been hitherto treated as the sole property of Chuttoorbhooj Narain, it was thought that the best way of carrying out the arrangement would be to treat both these ladies as joint heiresses of Chuttoorbhooj Narain, although it was well known that Lalta alone was his heiress-at-law. The nature of the arrangement in question was therefore that Birajun was to remain in joint possession of the estate along with Lalta Koer as a Hindu widow.

The plaintiffs in this suit, as well as other co-sharers in the family estate, recognized this arrangement, but there is nothing on the record from which I can say that they agreed that this arrangement was to remain in force till the death of the (defendant) appellant.

This being the nature of the arrangement, the next question is, what is its effect as regards the right under the law of inheritance which accrued to the plaintiffs upon the death of Lalta Koer, the widow of Chuttoorbhoj Narain.

The plaintiffs claim through Chuttoorbhoj Narain, and therefore they are not bound by the arrangement made by Lalta Koei. As I have already remarked their recognition of the arrangement does not amount to a relinquishment of their right and [399] title on the death of the appellant. Upon the death of Lalta therefore the arrangement must be considered to have come to an end, unless she had the power under the Mithila law to alienate absolutely or for a definite period, even after her life, any portion of the property left by Chuttoorbhoj Narain. There is not the slightest doubt that she had no such power, so far as immoveable property is concerned. As regards the moveable property, the Subordinate Judge says that it is a settled law in Mithila that she has that power. It seems to me that, although the Subordinate Judge is in error in thinking that the law upon this point has been settled, yet his conclusion is right.

This case comes from Tirhoot, and is therefore to be decided in accordance with the Vivada Chintamani and Itinaker works of paramount authority in the countries governed by the Mithila law. It seems to me that according to these two Nibandhas, a Hindu widow succeeding to her husband's estate has the power of disposing absolutely of moveable properties inherited by her. The following passages from the Vivada Chintamani support this view — “Katiyana says that a woman on the death of her husband may enjoy his estate according to her pleasure, but in his lifetime she should carefully preserve it. If he leave no estate, let her remain with his family.

“A childless widow, preserving her chastity, shall enjoy her husband's property with moderation, as long as she lives. After her death, the heirs shall take it.”

This admits of two meanings. The one is that, on the death of the husband, his property devolves on his wife and becomes her own in default of other heirs. The other is that the property which she enjoys with the consent of her husband in his lifetime is to be regarded as her peculiar property.

Katiyana says as to the first of these: “Let a woman on the death of her husband enjoy her husband's property at her discretion.”

This refers to property other than immoveable.

The following provision is made for immoveable property “Let a woman enjoy it with moderation as long as she lives. After her death, let the heirs take it.”

[400] “Moderation” means without much expenditure.

“Childless widow” means one who has no heir of her own.

On the second it is said that “while he lives she should carefully preserve it,” or, in other words, the property shall be protected in the lifetime of the husband. If her husband have left no wealth the widow should live with his family. Hence the immoveable property, which a woman gets after the death of her husband, cannot be disposed of at her pleasure. The meaning of this is consonant with that of the husband's donation (which can only be enjoyed but not spent).

The texts of Katiyana do not refer to the peculiar property of a woman. The inconsistency owing to this is removed by the similarity of meaning. "As a woman cannot make a present of or at pleasure dispose of moveable property, given to her by her husband in his lifetime, so she cannot dispose of any immoveable property which she inherits on his death." (Vivada Chintamani, p. 263)

On the other hand, the following passage may be cited in support of the contrary view. Thus it is said in the Mahabharata "for women, the heritage of their husbands is pronounced applicable to use. Let not women on any account make waste of their husbands' wealth." Here waste means sale and gift at their own choice, p. 292.

It seems to me that the general rule laid down thus is subject to the exception mentioned at page 262, viz., that a widow has the power of alienating absolutely the moveable property inherited by her from her husband.

Of these passages the same view was taken by the pundits who were consulted in Sreenarain Rai v. Bhya Jha (2 Sel. Rep., 23). The same view is expressed in Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. III, p. 468 (London edition of 1801). "But the authors of the Retnakar and Vivada Chintamani," says the compiler of the Digest, "contend that a wife cannot give away the immoveable property of her husband which has devolved on her by the failure of male issue. but she may give away moveable effects. They expound the text of Katiyana as relating to the personal estate of her husband which has devolved upon her." In Doorga Dayee v. Poorun [401] Dayee (5 W. R., 141, 1 I. J. N. S., 128), which is a Tirhoot case, the same view of the law was taken, although the learned Judges to a great extent relied upon the Mitakshara law which, however, as decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Bhugwandeo Doobey v. Myna Bae (11 Moore's I. A., 487), does not authorize the widow to alienate absolutely the moveable property inherited by her from her husband. But the learned Judges also refer to the Vivada Chintamani.

There being then in the Mithila law this distinction as to the disposing power of the widow between the moveable and immoveable property, the arrangement by which Lalta Koer made the appellant her co-parcener in the estate left by Chuttoorbhooj is binding upon the respondents so far as the moveable property is concerned, but is not binding upon them so far as the immoveable property is concerned. Upon this point, therefore, the decree of the lower Court must be varied.

The next point that was urged before us is that the decision of the lower Court as regards the properties acquired out of the profits of the estate of Chuttoorbhooj after his death is erroneous. It seems to me that as regards these properties, the appellant is entitled to retain a moiety share. By the arrangement already referred to, she became a joint owner with Lalta in the estate in question, and consequently the respondents cannot claim the whole of these properties. According to Hindu law, Lalta Koer had full power to dispose of the profits of the estate during her lifetime, and by the arrangement in question she allowed a moiety share in these profits to the appellant. The respondents cannot, therefore, lay claim to the whole of the after-acquired properties, but only to a share to the extent of one-half. Upon this point also the decree of the lower Court must be modified.

The respondents object to the decree of the lower Court, fixing Rs. 400 as the monthly maintenance of the appellant, as too exorbitant. Having regard to the value of the estate in dispute, I should have considerably reduced the amount, even if the decree of the lower Court had remained unaltered. But as that decree will be modified in favour of the appellant by dismissing the plaintiffs' claim to the extent of a half share, in respect of the [402] personal properties and the properties purchased after the death of Chuttoorbhooj, the amount of maintenance must be still more considerably reduced. Having regard to the status of the parties and the value of the immoveable property of the appellant's husband for which the respondents will obtain a decree, and taking into consideration that under our decree the appellant will be entitled to not an inconsiderable portion of the estate left by Chuttoorbhooj, I am of opinion that Rs. 25 should be fixed as the monthly maintenance to be allowed to the appellant out of the estate of her husband which has devolved upon the respondent.

We accordingly modify the decree of the lower Court. The respondents will get a decree for the properties claimed with the exception of a moiety of the personal properties and the properties purchased in the benami of Jugger Nath Pershad and Gopi Lal, the suit must also fail as regards the money (Rs. 30,000) paid by the Maharajah of Bettea, and consequently the money covered by the bond executed by Mr Hudson. The maintenance of Burajun Koer will be fixed at the rate of Rs. 25 per month. Costs of all the parties to this appeal will come out of the estate. The order as to costs in the decree of the lower Court will stand.

Appeal allowed and decree modified.

possession, and consequently that it had been infructuous, Held, that the purchaser was entitled to bring a suit to obtain actual possession, but was bound to bring it within twelve years from the date of the sale, the period prescribed by art. 138, sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877).

[403] The decisions in Kristo Gobindo Kur v. Gunga Pershad Surma (25 W. R., 372) and Lalit Coomur Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty (10 C. L. R., 258) require such purchaser to obtain possession through the Court before bringing his suit, but they do not preclude him from enforcing his right by suit, when the formal possession given by the Court has failed to put him in actual possession.

THIS was a suit by a purchaser at an execution sale for a declaration of his title to the property, for ejectment of the defendants, and for khas possession to be given him.

The property in suit had been the subject of three separate sales, viz., one on the 25th January 1864, the second on the 30th March 1864, and the third on the 11th February 1869. The plaint was filed in the first instance on the 1st July 1881 in the Court of the Munsiff of Bolepur, but the subject-matter being undervalued, it was returned to the plaintiff on the 10th February 1882 for want of jurisdiction. The plaintiff then filed the plaint on the 11th February 1882 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and amongst other matters contended that the time during which the suit was on the file of the Munsiff should be excluded from the period during which limitation was to be calculated. He further alleged that after having obtained symbolical possession through the Court of the properties purchased by him, he had given the defendants permission to reside on the properties, and he claimed that the period during which the defendants so held under his permission should also be deducted from the period during which the limitation was running.

Both the lower Courts, however, found that the fact of the plaintiff having given the defendants permission to reside on the properties had not been proved, and as both plaintiff and defendants relied on art. 138, sch. II of Act XV of 1877, as the one which governed the case, they held that the suit was barred even when it was instituted in the Munsiff's Court, and consequently the suit was dismissed with costs.

Against the decision of the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and contended that the lower Courts were wrong in holding that the possession taken by him had no bearing upon the time allowed by limitation, and that [404] the suit being brought within twelve years from the date on which such possession was taken it was not barred. It was further contended that art. 138 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 had no application to the suit.

Baboo Mohany Mohun Roy appeared for the Appellant.

Baboo Troyluckho Nath Mitter for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J.—At the hearing of this appeal we were disposed to think that the Courts below had committed an error in applying to the case art. 138 of the Limitation Act, although both parties had admitted that the case must be governed by it. And if it had been shown that the formal possession awarded to the plaintiff on the 2nd of July 1869 had been followed by any act of possession, such as the grant of permission to the defendants which is alleged in the plaint, we should hold that this took the case out of the scope of art. 138. But we observe that the Court has negatived the plaintiff's allegation in this respect; and has found that there was nothing but the formal publication of plaintiff's possession. It seems to us, therefore, that the formal possession obtained through the Court having been infructuous, the plaintiff was entitled to bring a suit to obtain actual possession, but was bound to bring it within the period prescribed by Art. 138, viz., twelve years from the date of purchase.

The rulings cited, viz., Kristo Gobindo Kun v. Gunga Pershad Surma (25 W. R., 372) and Lalit Coomar Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty (10 C. L. R., 258) would require a purchaser to obtain possession through the Court before bringing such a suit as the present one, but would not, we think, preclude him from enforcing his right by suit when the formal possession given by the Court has failed to put him in absolute possession.

But we think the suit was out of time, and this appeal must be consequently dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES

[SUMMARY REMEDY AND REGULAR SUIT—

Although a speedy and summary remedy may be open to the execution-purchaser under sec., 318 of the C. P. C. 1882, his right to bring a regular suit for possession is not affected thereby, (14 Cal., 644, 9 Cal., 602, 10 Mad. 53, but see 25 W. R. 372, 10 C. L. R. 258). The two remedies are concurrent. If the decree-holder himself purchases the property, the case is otherwise (sec., 47 of the C. P. C. 1908).

In 10 Cal., 402 it was held that in cases where the execution-purchaser had formal possession which proved subsequently to be infructuous, limitation ran from the date of sale. This point was overruled in 16 Cal., 530 F. B. See also 25 Bom., 275 at 278 where it was held that limitation ran from the date of possession (formal though infructuous) under the sale.

False evidence—Separate trial—Procedure when more than one person is charged with having given false evidence in the same proceeding—

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 161—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193.

In order to sustain any conviction for giving false evidence upon an alternative charge when no evidence is offered to prove the falsity of either statement in particular, it must be clear that the two statements are contradictory.

* Criminal Appeal No 731 of 1883 against the order of F. H. McLaughlin, Esq., Sessions Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated 11th December 1883.

The law laid down by the Full Bench in the case of the Empress v. Kassim Khan (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 121) has been altered by the provisions of s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1892), and a witness who makes a false statement to a police officer in reply to a question which he is bound to answer, would be guilty of intentionally giving false evidence.

When four persons were accused of having given false evidence in the same proceeding, and the Sessions Judge, while professing to try each accused separately, heard the evidence of the witnesses only once held, that this was substantially trying the four prisoners together, and was an improper mode of procedure

THIS was an appeal against a conviction under s. 193 of the Penal Code. The appellant with three other accused were charged with similar offences arising out of the same enquiry and were each convicted and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The offence charged in each case was based upon statements made to the police during the enquiry instituted with reference to the death of one Abuchi Biswas and another, and contradictory statements made when the cases came before the Joint Magistrate for enquiry.

At the trial the four accused were, to use the words of the District Judge, tried separately, though the evidence of the witnesses was heard only once, and the Sessions Judge in his judgment stated that this course had been taken to prevent any possible allegation of illegality, though he considered that it was by no means clear that under s. 239 of the Criminal [408] Procedure Code the accused might not have been tried together. The nature of the statement upon which the conviction was based and sought to be upheld, sufficiently appear in the judgment of the High Court. No one appeared to argue the case on either side.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J—The appellant Nizam Sheikh was tried upon the following charge: "That you, on or about the 21st of May 1883, at Azugerah, in thanah Shazedpore, in the course of the enquiry into the cause of death of Abuchi Bewa and Kefat Chokra by the Subordinate Inspector of Shazedpore, stated in evidence, 'I came to the place of occurrence on hearing the screams of Abuchi Bewa. I saw Mora, Dhanoo and Pana carrying the dead body of Abuchi towards her house,' and that you, on the 14th day of August 1883, at Serajgunge, in the course of a judicial enquiry into the cause of death of Abuchi Bewa and Kefat Chokra by the Joint Magistrate, stated in evidence, 'I did not see Mohar, Panulla and Dhanoo dragging Abuchi Bewa on to her bari by night. I did not hear that night any one call out 'Help' I am killed' I did not see Mohar and his companions put Abuchi Bewa's body in the ghar facing east,' one of which statements you either knew or believed to be false, or did not believe to be true, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions, etc." The prisoner has been convicted upon this alternative charge and has appealed.

Under the provisions of s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a witness examined by a police officer making an investigation is bound to answer † [Sec. 161 —Any Police-officer making an investigation under this chapter may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, and may reduce into writing any statement made by the person so examined.

Such person shall be bound to answer truly all questions relating to such case put to him by such officer, other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture.]

truly all questions relating to such case put to him by such officer, other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture. A witness, therefore, who made a false statement to a police officer in reply to a question which he is bound by that section to answer would be guilty of intentionally giving false evidence, and the law laid down in the Full Bench case of the Empress v. Kassim Khan (I L. R. 7 Cal., 121) must be taken to have been altered by the Legislature.

[407] In order to sustain any conviction for giving false evidence upon an alternative charge when no evidence is offered to prove the falsity of either statement in particular, it must be clear that the two statements are contradictory. This is not clear in the present case. The statements before the police were :—

- (1) I came to the place of occurrence.
- (2) I heard the screams of Abuchi Bewa.
- (3) I saw A, B and C carrying the dead body of Abuchi towards her house.

The statements before the Magistrate were—

- (1) I did not see A, B and C dragging Abuchi Bewa on to her bari by night (whether she was alive or dead is not stated).
- (2) I did not hear that night any one call out " Help! I am killed "
- (3) I did not see Mohar and his companions put Abuchi Bewa in the ghar facing east.

It is obvious that no one of the first three statements is necessarily contradictory of any one of the second three statements

Then there is a further error in the proceedings before the Sessions Judge which would, in all probability, have proved fatal to the conviction. The Sessions Judge says in his judgment. " By request of accused's pleader, the witnesses have been heard only once, but the four cases," that is, the case of Nizam Sheikh and of the three other persons who were charged with similar offences, " have been tried separately." How, if the witnesses were heard once only, the four prisoners could have been tried separately, the Sessions Judge does not explain, and it is not easy to understand. If the Sessions Judge means that four separate records were made up, while the examination of the witnesses, which was the substantial portion of the trial, was conducted only once for all four prisoners, this is substantially trying the four prisoners together, and that this is an improper mode of procedure has been pointed out on more than one occasion [see for example Empress of India v. Anant Ram (I. L. R., 4 All., 293)] We direct that the prisoner Nizam Sheikh be acquitted and discharged. This judgment will govern the case of Nathu Sheikh, the case of Jatu Sheikh and the case of Chamu Chowkeedar

Magistrate, Jurisdiction of—Summary trial—Criminal trespass—Mischief—Penal Code, s. 427—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), s. 260.

A person may be tried summarily for criminal trespass and mischief unless there is a bona fide claim of right depriving the Magistrate of jurisdiction. Shakur Mahomed v Chunder Mohun Sha (21 W. R. Cr., 38) disapproved.

IN this case the accused were sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment by a Bench of Magistrates. The Sessions Judge of Rungpore transmitted the record to the High Court under s. 438 of Act X of 1882, with the following report:—

"The complaint was one of criminal trespass and mischief. The accused were charged with destroying some halai belonging to complainant partly by turning their cattle into it and partly by ploughing it up. They set up a claim to the land, which they said they held under a third party. The case was tried summarily and the accused sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. The judgment appears to rest principally on two documents referred to in it, which are not evidence against accused at all, the one marked A being a copy and not admissible till the original is accounted for, and the one marked B being a decree between complainant and a third party. The Deputy Magistrate, in his explanation herewith appended, says that there was other evidence besides these documents. In that case the judgment is bad for not recording the valid reasons, if there were any, for the conviction.

"Besides this, the case, it seemed to me, is not one which should have been tried summarily—Shakur Mahomed v Chunder Mohun Sha (21 W. R. Cr., 38) and In the matter of Issur Chunder Mundle (25 W. R. Cr., 65). I therefore recommend that this conviction be quashed, and that, if the Court think fit, the case be sent back to be re-tried by the ordinary procedure."

The District Judge admitted the accused to bail, stating that more than half the sentence had then expired. The Deputy Magistrate in the explanation forwarded by him to the Sessions Judge said, with regard to (1) the evidence on which the accused were convicted, and (2) the summary procedure adopted in trying the accused.

"With regard to (1) I most humbly beg to submit that the Bench of Magis-[409]trates did not convict the accused solely on the strength of the two documents mentioned in the judgment. Independent witnesses were examined from both sides, and the two documents have been mentioned simply as corroborative evidence for believing one set of witnesses in preference to the other. The Bench did not say that Mahabut Ali or the accused were bound by the decree of the Civil Court, but as the matter was once adjudicated by the Civil Court, no one had a right to disturb the order of the Civil Court. If any party was aggrieved, his remedy lay in moving the Civil Court and getting its order set aside by the same or any superior authority, and not to try himself to make order of the Civil Court inoperative. A Criminal Court is bound to accept the person put in possession by order of the Civil Court as being really in possession of that property.

"With regard to point (2) I beg to submit that I, have not with me the Weekly Reporter, and cannot therefore say what impediment there is in this case being tried summarily. When a person has been once put in possession of certain landed property by order of the Civil Court, the Bench believed that no private person had any right to dispossess him of it, but any person aggrieved by the order might either prefer a claim or bring a regular suit for getting the order set aside. Every man's property would be at the mercy of his rich opponent if for every act of aggression he is compelled to seek the assistance of the Civil Court, for which reason the Bench believed that the Criminal Court would be justified in interfering in such cases."

Prinsep, J.—The petitioners have been convicted in a summary trial of mischief and criminal trespass.

The Sessions Judge has submitted the proceedings in order that the conviction and sentence may be quashed. First, because "the judgment appears to rest principally on two documents referred to in it, which are not evidence against the accused at all." This objection, however, is effectually disposed of by the fact that there is ample legal evidence, and therefore, under s. 167 of the Evidence Act, we cannot interfere.

The Sessions Judge next relies on the cases of Shakur Mahomed v. Chunder Mohun Sha (21 W. R. Cr., 38) and Issur Chunder Mundle v. Rohim Sheikh (25 W. R. Cr., 65). With regard to the first case, we would refer to the case of Sonar Sardar v. Bukhtar Sardar (25 W. R., 46) explaining it as no authority for the proposition quoted, and with regard to the other case, we would remark that the present case cannot be regarded as a bono fide claim of right depriving the Magistrate of jurisdiction, so that the case quoted is not in point. We therefore see no reason to interfere.

Appeal—Order in execution of decree—Fraud—Cancellation of sale in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 2, 244, cl. (c) 311 and 588, cl. 16.

Where it was shown that a judgment-creditor was himself the purchaser at an execution sale, and the amount for which he so purchased the property of his judgment-debtor was set off against the amount due to him under his decree, and where on the application of the judgment-debtor the Court passed an order setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud practised by the judgment-creditor on the judgment-debtor in connection with the sale in consequence of which fraud the property had been sold at an undervalue, held, that inasmuch as the order involved the decision of a question between the parties to the suit relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree (the decree having been satisfied as far as the purchase money bid by the decree-holder went, and the order cancelling that pro tanto satisfaction), though not appealable under the provisions of s. 588, cl. 16, was appealable as a decree under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 2 and s. 244, cl. (c).

THIS was an appeal from an order setting aside a sale on the ground of fraud practised by the judgment-creditor, who was himself the purchaser, in agreeing with the judgment-debtor to give him further time to discharge the debt and then bringing on the sale in violation of that agreement.

The judgment-debtor in his application to the Original Court also applied to have the sale set aside under the provisions of s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), on the ground of material irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale, but that Court decided that no such irregularity was proved to have occurred. The Subordinate Judge, however, held that fraud had been practised by the decree-holder, and relying on the decision in Subaji Rau v. Srinivassa Rau (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 264) set aside the sale.

The decree-holder accordingly appealed to the High Court.

[411] Mr. Pugh, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerji and Baboo Nilmadhub Sen appeared on behalf of the appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, Baboo Ambica Churn Ghose and Baboo Koruna Sunkar Mookerjee for the respondents.

* Appeal from Original Order No. 271 of 1883, against the order of F. W. Wright, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated the 16th May 1883.

The Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and NORRIS, JJ.), which sufficiently states the facts for the purpose of this report, was delivered by

Maclean, J.—This appeal has been made under the following circumstances :—

The appellant is the judgment-creditor and purchaser at an execution sale which was concluded on 31st January 1882. He purchased the property for Rs. 2,700, and the amount was set off against the amount due under the decree.

The judgment-debtor (respondent) applied to the Court to set aside the sale under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code on the ground of material irregularities in publishing or conducting it. He alleged that the requisite notices had not been published, and also that the decree-holder, appellant, had agreed to give him further time to discharge the debt, and had brought on the sale in violation of that agreement.

The Subordinate Judge decided that no irregularity was proved to have occurred, but considering that the decree-holder was proved to have practised a fraud upon the debtor in bringing on the sale after agreeing to give further time he set aside the sale. He quoted Subaji Rau v. Srinivassa Rau (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 264) in support of this course.

This case shows that there is no specific provision in the Code, and that none is required authorizing the Court to set aside a sale under the circumstances stated above. It is, however, authority for another proposition, and that is for holding that there is no appeal against such an order.

It cannot be said that the order setting aside a sale, not made under the second paragraph of s. 312, but under the general power of the Court to check fraud, is appealable under the provisions of s. 588 (16), but it has been argued that the case is well within the terms of s. 244 (c), viz., that there was a question (1) between the parties to the suit, (2) relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. If this contention is correct the order setting aside the sale is undoubtedly appealable as being a decree. (See s. 2, Civil Procedure Code.)

On the other hand, it was urged that the question did not relate to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. Even if it should be held that the execution proceedings were closed by the sale, and that the confirmation or setting aside of the sale did not relate to the execution of the decree, a proposition against which Viraraghava Ayyangar v. Venkatacharyan (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 217), is authority, it seems to be difficult to arrive at the conclusion that the partial discharge or satisfaction of the decree was not effected by the order setting aside the sale. The decree was pro tanto satisfied by the amount of the appellant's bid having been set off against the amount due from the respondent. The order now appealed against cancelled that pro tanto satisfaction, and it, therefore, appears to us that this order related both to the execution as held in Viraraghava Ayyangar v. Venkatacharyan (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 217) and to the satisfaction of the decree. In this view of the case the appeal has been properly preferred to this Court. We do not find that the effect of s. 244 on the right of appeal was discussed in the case of Subaji Rau v. Srinivassa Rau (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 264) already referred to. We think, however, that the case of Luchmeeput Singh v. Sita Nath Dass (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 477) quoted by the appellant's counsel supports this view.

Upon the merits of the case we are unable to agree with the Court below. Apart from the question whether an agreement between the parties not brought to the notice of the Court can be recognized in the face of the provisions of s. 257 (a)* of the Code, we are obliged to hold that the evidence does not establish any agreement at all. At most it gives rise to a suspicion that there were a sort of promise on the part of the appellant that if he paid a certain sum of money which was not paid to him he would not press on the sale. On the other hand, there is no evidence as to when this promise was made, and as we find that the sale commenced on the 21st January 1882, and was continued [413] almost daily till its conclusion on the 31st idem, there would seem to have been no curtailment of the four days said to have been the period for which appellant agreed to wait for the promised payment.

We must, therefore, reluctantly say that no irregularity having been found to have taken place, a finding not impugned in appeal, the lower Court's order setting aside the sale is not justified by the evidence. We accordingly decree this appeal with costs. The sale must be confirmed

Appeal allowed.

The mortgaged property was included in the property dealt with by the will. B, the mortgagee, entered a caveat against the grant of probate, alleging that the will was a forgery, got up by the mortgagor for the purpose of saving the mortgaged property from being sold in execution of a decree against himself.

THIS was an application for probate which was made in the Court of the Judge of the District of the 24-Pergunnahs on the 14th of September 1881 by Surbomongala Dassi. The applicant stated that she was the wife of one Bhagabati Churn Nag, who was the son of Thakomoni Dassi, that Thakomoni Dassi died on the 16th of May 1881, having previously, on the 12th of May 1881, made and published her last will and testament, whereof she appointed the applicant sole legatee and executrix. It was of this will that Surbomongala Dassi applied for probate. A general [414] citation was issued on this application, and on the 2nd of November 1881 a caveat was put in by Shashibhooshun Biswas of Kidderpore. The case was then set down as a contentious cause, and Shashibhooshun Biswas filed a written statement.

In that written statement he alleged that the property purported to be disposed of by the alleged will of Thakomoni Dassi had been the property of her husband Tariny Churn Nag, who died on the 6th of July 1871 intestate, leaving him surviving his widow, the said Thakomoni Dassi, and an only son named Bhagabati Churn Nag, that in 1873, 1874 and 1876, Bhagabati Churn Nag had mortgaged portions of the property to different persons, by registered mortgage deeds, in which he (Bhagabati Churn Nag) had declared that the property was his, and that he had inherited it from his father, the said Tariny Churn Nag, that on the 24th of January 1877, he mortgaged the whole property to one Mirtunjoy Mookerjee, who on the 16th of July 1880 assigned his mortgage to the caveator Shashibhooshun Biswas for valuable consideration, that on the 4th of January 1881, the caveator instituted a suit on his mortgage, and obtained a decree on the 20th of August 1881, that in execution of this decree the mortgaged property was attached on the 5th of September 1881, and a notice of sale was served on Bhagabati Churn Nag on the 16th of September 1881. The written statement went on to submit that the property purported to be dealt with by the alleged will of Thakomoni Dassi was in reality the property of Bhagabati Churn Nag, that the alleged will of Thakomoni Dassi was a forgery set up by Bhagabati for the purpose of preventing the mortgaged property from being sold in execution of a decree against himself, and that the caveator was entitled to oppose the grant of probate applied for.

The Judge found on the evidence that the will was not proved, and he dismissed the application for probate with costs. The applicant appealed to the High Court on the facts, and also on the ground that "the Court below has erred in law in allowing the attaching creditor of Bhagabati to enter a caveat and oppose the granting of probate."

Mr. Evans and Baboo Biprodoss Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Sreenath Doss for the Respondent.

[415] The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by

Prinsep, J.—In this case Surbomongala Dassi, wife of Bhagabati Churn Nag, applied for probate of the will of one Thakomoni Dassi, dated the 12th of May 1881. A caveat was entered by Shashibhooshun Biswas, who objected that the property included in the will really belonged to Bhagabati Churn Nag, his judgment-debtor, and that the will was set up by his judgment-debtor, through his wife Surbomongala Dassi, in order to save the mortgaged property which had been attached, from being sold in execution of the decree. In other words, Shashibhooshun Biswas declared that Bhagabati Churn Nag, in order to defraud him, one of his creditors, had set up a false will and had drafted it in such a manner as to pass the property to his wife. The question that we have to decide is, whether under these circumstances Shashibhooshun Biswas can be allowed to object to probate being granted or not. In the case of Nobeen Chunder Sıl v Bhobo Soondery Dabee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 460), which is the last decided case in this Court touching upon the point now before us, a Division Bench, following the case of Umanath Mookhopadhyaya v. Nalmoney Sing (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 429) decided that an attaching creditor was entitled to oppose the grant of probate of a will, which had the effect of passing a property which should otherwise come to the heir. The case of Umanath Mookhopadhyaya v. Nalmoney Sing (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 429) was taken up to the Privy Council (L. R. 10 I. A., 80· I. L. R., 10 Cal., 19), and although their Lordships refrained from coming to any final decision as to the right of an attaching creditor to apply for the revocation of a probate, they expressed themselves thus: "Assuming that a purchaser (from an heir) can oppose the grant of a probate, or apply to have it revoked (which their Lordships do not decide), they entertain grave doubts whether an attaching creditor can do so, at least in a case which is not founded on the ground that the probate has been obtained in fraud of creditors. But as, after hearing the appellant's counsel upon the question of the execution of the will, their Lordships did not consider it necessary to hear the [416] counsel for the respondents, the question whether the Raja could apply for the revocation of the probate has not been argued before them, and therefore they give no final opinion upon it."

It therefore appears from the opinion expressed by their Lordships in the Privy Council that no attaching creditor can seek to revoke the probate of a will, or oppose the grant of probate unless he puts his case upon the ground that the will set up was in fraud of creditors. We think that the ground set forth in the application made by the objector in this case amounts to a statement that the will set up by the wife of the judgment-debtor is a forgery and a fraud upon the mortgagee. Under such circumstances, we are of opinion that the attaching creditor is entitled to oppose the grant of probate. Were we to come to any other decision the result would be that, although the attaching creditor would be in a position to contest the demand of any other person claiming the attached property, he would not be able to dispute any title derived under a will.

In regard to the merits of the case, we concur in the opinion expressed by the lower Court that the will is not proved to have been executed by the alleged testator, and we therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th February, 1884.

PRESENT

MR JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Biswa Sonan Chunder Gossyamy Judgment-debtor

versus

Binanda Chunder Dibingar Adhikar Gossyamy. * Decree-holder.*

Limitation—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 108, 230 and 647—Application for execution of decree—Practice of striking off execution proceedings—Procedure.

A decree was obtained on the 10th July 1858 and applications to execute it were made in June 1862 and January 1866. The last application prior to the coming into operation of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 was on the 10th January 1876. This proceeding was struck off. The decree-holder on the 13th June 1879 again applied for execution, the decree was transferred [417] to S for execution, where on objection that it was more than twelve years old and therefore barred by s. 230 of Act X of 1877, the execution proceedings were again struck off on the 17th January 1880. This order was appealed against, and eventually on the 25th April 1881 the application was re-admitted. In June 1881 an application was made to the S Court for transfer of the case for execution to D, which was granted and the case transferred, but no steps having been taken by the decree-holder in the D Court, it was struck off by that Court on the 19th August 1881. On the 4th March 1882 (the judgment-debtor having died meanwhile) an application was made to the D Court to restore the proceedings for execution against his representative. Notices were issued, and the 2nd June was eventually fixed for the hearing. On that day no one was present on behalf of the decree-holder (whose pleader had died in the meantime). And the case was again struck off. On the 11th July 1882 application was made to restore the proceedings, notices were issued, and a day fixed for hearing, and after numerous adjournments the objections of the judgment-debtor were overruled on the 5th March 1883 and execution of the decree granted. On appeal the Judge found that the execution proceedings had been continuous throughout, and that there had been no unreasonable delay in the prosecution of the execution proceedings. Held that execution of the decree was not barred by s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The rights of the parties to execution proceedings are not affected in any way by the case being "struck off" by the Court, there being no provision in the Civil Procedure Code for such a course. Baroda Soondari Debra v. Fergusson (11 C L R, 17) followed. The only proper mode of dealing with a case, whether a regular suit or a miscellaneous proceeding, when the parties do not appear, is to dismiss it. A case so dismissed can be restored on application under s. 108, which is by s. 647 applicable as well to execution proceedings as to suits and appeals.

THE facts of this case are stated as follows in the judgment appealed from:—

"The date of the decree is the 10th July 1858: it has several times been executed, but never fully.

"The last occasion on which the execution was taken out, prior to the coming into force of Act X of 1877, was in 1876.

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 340 of 1883, against the order of C. J. Lyall, Esq., Offg. Judge of Assam Valley Districts, dated the 27th July 1883, affirming the order of H. C. Williams, Esq., the Subordinate Judge of Durrung, dated the 5th March 1883.

"On the 13th June 1879 the decree-holder filed an application before the Subordinate Judge of Tezpur in which he stated that the judgment-debtor having concealed his property, the application for execution made in 1876 had been struck off; that the decree-holder had now discovered that the judgment-debtor had taken some property to his house, and that execution against this property was desired. Notice was accordingly issued to the judgment-debtor. The execution proceedings were then transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sibsagar. An objection was there taken [418] by the judgment-debtor that the decree was barred as more than twelve years old by the provisions of s. 230 of Act X of 1877. This objection was allowed by the Subordinate Judge and the execution case struck off on the 17th January 1880.

"This order was appealed against, and eventually on the 25th April 1881 the District Judge re-admitted the application under the last clause of s. 230 of the Code.

"In pursuance of the Judge's decision a petition was in June 1881 (date in month not stated) presented to the Subordinate Judge of Sibsagar, asking that the case might be re-admitted and the decree transferred for execution to the Subordinate Judge of Durrung. On the 13th July 1881 the Sibsagar Court wrote a proceeding transmitting the decree for execution to Durrung. On the 29th July 1881 the Subordinate Judge of Durrung recorded the following order on the proceeding received from Sibsagar: 'Register and give 7 days' grace to decree-holder to take the necessary steps.' On the 19th August the case was struck off the decree-holder having failed to take the necessary steps.

"On the 4th March 1882 (the judgment-debtor having meanwhile died) the decree-holder filed an application before the Durrung Subordinate Judge, asking that the case which had been struck off and sent to the record-room might be brought again on the file, that notice might be sent to the judgment-debtor's son who was his heir; and that the property specified in the application might be attached and sold. On the 1st April 1882, it was ordered that notice should issue to the judgment-debtor under s. 248, Civil Procedure Code, to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. The judgment-debtor having filed objections, it was ordered on the 1st May that the 18th May should be fixed for hearing the suit. On the 18th May the Deputy Commissioner being absent, the case was postponed till the 2nd June. On the 2nd June 1882, the following order was passed: 'No one is present on behalf of the decree-holder whose pleader has died. The case will be struck off.'

"A petition dated 16th June (but apparently not presented till 11th July) was then filed by the decree-holder before the Subordinate Judge, asking that the decree might be re-admitted.

"On the 11th July 1882 it was ordered that this should be brought up with the previous papers.

"On the 22nd July it was ordered that notice should be issued on the heirs of the judgment-debtor under s. 248 to show cause, the 22nd August being fixed for hearing.

"On the 22nd August the 'pleader for the opposite party being sick, case adjourned till to-morrow'

'On 23rd August the case was again adjourned till 28th August.

"On 28th August, at the request of the decree-holder's pleaders, the case [419] was adjourned till 6th September 1882, to see what execution of decree cases took place previous to 1879.

"On 6th September, 'no time, case postponed to 8th.'

"On 8th September three witnesses examined on behalf of decree-holder, and summons ordered to issue to objectors (that is, judgment-debtor's) witnesses to appear on 4th October next.

"4th October, 'case postponed to first open day after Doorga Pooja holidays.'

"Nothing seems to have taken place on the day fixed

"3rd February, 1883, 'at request of judgment-debtor, case adjourned till pleader returns'

"5th March 1883, objection raised dismissed, decree-holder to furnish list of property he desired to be attached by 14th."

From this order an appeal was preferred to the Judge on the following grounds.—(1) that the decree is barred from execution under s. 230 of Act XIV of 1882, (2) no steps having been taken to execute the decree between the 30th June 1862 and 10th January 1866 and between the 10th January 1876 and the 11th July 1879, the decree cannot be executed, (3) the appellant having received no assets from the judgment-debtor the decree cannot be executed against him, (4) the decree-holder has been satisfied already and what is claimed as due is interest upon interest.

In his judgment the Judge stated as to these grounds.—

"As regards the first ground it is urged that s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code gives, in the case of decrees more than twelve years old, only the right to one application for execution to be made 'within three years after the passing of the Code, the Code received the Governor-General's assent on the 30th of March 1877 and came into force on the 1st October 1877, taking the latter (as has been held to be the proper interpretation) as the date of passing, it is said that after the 1st October 1880 it was no longer possible to take proceedings for execution of the decree granting that the proceedings instituted on the 13th June 1879 were within time, these proceedings terminated with the order striking off the case on the 19th August 1881, the renewed application for execution presented on the 4th March 1882 was inadmissible, and it, too, was brought to an end by the order striking off the case on the 2nd June 1882, the present is the third application since the passing of the Act X of 1877 and is barred by limitation.

"In support of this contention I am referred to the rulings of the High Court in Afrannussa Chowdhuran v. Sherafutolla Chowdhry (9 C. L. R., 321) and Sreenath Goochoo v. Yusuf Khan (9 C. L. R., 335). In the former of these cases an application was made for execution within the three years, and granted, but erroneously [420] (as the High Court held) struck off on an untenable ground by the Judge. A second application was made and rejected under s. 230. The Court held that the decree-holder could not obtain relief on appeal against the second order, because his proper course was to have appealed against the first order. In the second of these cases an application to execute was made within time, and subsequently a second application was put in, asking that the properties specified in the first application might be released from attachment and certain other properties specified in the form attached in their stead. It was held that the latter was a second application and barred by the section referred to.

"On the other hand it is argued for the respondent that the orders of the 19th August 1881 and 2nd June 1882, striking the execution proceedings off the file, do not operate to terminate those proceedings, and that the proceedings consequent on the application of the 13th June 1879 must be regarded as continuous down to the present date. In support of this contention the following cases are quoted.—

“‘We wish to observe that it cannot be too widely known that when execution proceedings are struck off on the mere motion of the presiding judicial officer, the rights of the parties to those proceedings are not in any way affected. The striking off is not in accordance with any provision in the Code of Civil Procedure. It is done merely for the convenience of the Court, and with a view to diminish the number of cases which might otherwise appear to have been pending in their Court for a long time. When the striking off-takes place upon the application of the parties, or after their failure to appear when they have received due notice to appear, their rights may be affected by the striking off, but whether they are so or not would depend upon the circumstances of each case.’

“Applying the principles just stated to the present case, I find that the striking off the execution proceedings on the 19th August 1881 was not a termination of them. It is to be borne in mind that the case had been transferred from one district to another, and that a reasonable time ought to have been given to the decree-holder to prosecute them in the new Court. It appears, however, that the proceedings only reached the Durrung Court on the 29th July, and that they were struck off for default of [421] prosecution twenty-one days later, without, as appears from the record, any notice having been given to the decree-holder.

“The next question that arises is, whether, granting that the order of the 19th August 1881 did not of itself operate to bring the proceedings to an end, the failure of the decree-holder to take any further steps for six months afterwards (until the 4th March 1882) implied abandonment of the proceedings. Here the point is more doubtful, and the facts are not very fully disclosed on the record or by the pleaders. But it is admitted that in this interval the original judgment-debtor died, and that of itself is reasonable ground for admitting a certain amount of delay in further prosecuting the case. I think on the whole that the interval does not of itself prejudice the right of the decree-holder to continue the proceedings.

“The next question is, whether the order of the 2nd June 1882 was a termination of the proceedings. I am clearly of opinion that it was not. The Deputy Commissioner had been absent on the 18th May, the date fixed for hearing, and the 2nd June was fixed only in the usual manner by notice in Court for the information of the pleaders engaged. The decree-holder’s pleader had died between the two dates, only a fortnight apart, and on the 2nd June no one appeared. Granting that the case was not extinct as a result of the previous proceedings, I think that it was decidedly not brought to an end by the order of the 2nd June. Subsequent to this order no unreasonable delay occurred in prosecuting it, the next petition having been verified on the 16th June, and (apparently) prosecuted on the 11th July. Subsequent to that date nothing occurred to impose any check on the progress of the case. On the first ground of appeal, therefore, I find for the respondents.

"As regards the second ground, I have already said that the matter was not fully argued, but it appears to me that it is now too late to urge the Limitation Act in respect of periods prior to the admission of the application for execution of the 13th June 1879. I may refer to the decision of the Privy Council in Mangul Pershad Dicht v Grija Kant Lahiri (I L. R., 8 Cal., 51, L. R., 8 I. A., 123) as apparently conclusive on the matter.

"The third and fourth grounds of appeal were not placed before the Court, and in the absence of any argument in support of them, the respondent is entitled to a decision in his favour in regard to them.

"The appeal is dismissed and the order of the lower Court confirmed."

Baboo Bhoobun Doss for the Appellant

Baboo Jusodanundun Poramanick for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The facts of this case are fully set out in the judg-[422]ment of the learned Judge in the Court below, and it is not necessary for us to recapitulate them. The Judge refers to the following passage in the judgment of WHITE, J., in Barada Sundari Dubea v Fergusson (11 C.L.R., 17) "We wish to observe that it cannot be too widely known that when execution proceedings are struck off on the mere motion of the presiding judicial officer, the rights of the parties to those proceedings are not in any way affected. The striking off is not in accordance with any provision in the Code of Civil Procedure. It is done merely for the convenience of the Court, and with a view to diminish the number of cases which might otherwise appear to have been pending in their Court for a long time. When the striking off takes place upon the application of the parties or, after their failure to appear, when they have received due notice to appear, their rights may be affected by the striking off, but whether they are so or not would depend upon the circumstances of each case." It has been pressed upon us that the result of the application of this principle will be that decree-holders will manage to avoid altogether the provisions of the Limitation Act as to the execution of decrees. We are wholly unable to accede to this argument, and we desire to say that we concur in the view expressed in the passage which I have just quoted. If Mofussal Courts would follow the provisions of the Circular Orders laid down for their guidance, and post in their Court-houses a list of cases ready for hearing, specifying the date on which those cases are to be heard, parties would have no just ground of complaint if their cases, being taken up on the dates so specified, were dismissed in default of their appearance. It would be very desirable that Courts in the Mofussal should abandon the practice of "striking cases off." There is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for striking off a case. The only proper mode of dealing with a case, whether a regular suit or a miscellaneous proceeding, when the parties do not appear, is to dismiss it. When a case is dismissed in consequence of the parties not appearing, an application may be made to the Court under the provisions of s. 108. This section applies to regular suits, but under the provisions of s. 647 it is equally applicable to all proceedings other than suits and appeals. It is [423] therefore applicable to execution proceedings. When an execution proceeding therefore is dismissed in default of appearance of the decree-holder, he can within the time allowed by the law of limitation present an application under s. 108 asking that the order of dismissal be set aside, and that a day be appointed to proceed with the case. This application must of course set forth such matter as is specified in the section, and the grounds upon which it is made. If the Court of First Instance, having improperly set aside its order dismissing a suit or other proceeding, appoints a day for taking further steps in the matter of such suit or proceeding, there may be an appeal. The parties have thus full opportunity of litigating the question, whether an execution proceeding has been properly dismissed in consequence of the decree-holder not appearing at any stage at which such appearance may be necessary.

Now, let us apply these principles to the present case. The Judge has found that the execution was one continuous execution, and that the orders made upon the applications of the 4th March 1882 and 11th July 1882 merely restored the original execution proceedings to the file, and that, therefore, the original execution proceedings were being continued. If after the execution proceedings were struck off on the 19th August 1881, or on the 2nd June 1882, a proper application under the provisions of s 108 of the Code had not been made, the judgment-debtor might have objected in the first Court, and might have followed out his objection by preferring an appeal.

No such course was taken, and neither in the lower Appellate Court nor on the grounds of appeal now before us has it been urged that the Court of First Instance did not properly exercise its jurisdiction under s. 108 of the Code in restoring the execution proceedings to the file by its order in the petition of 4th March 1882, or by its subsequent order in the petition of the 11th July 1882. This being so, the only question which we have to consider is, whether the Judge in the Court below, having found that there has been one continuous execution proceeding throughout, we can say that the application of the 11th July 1882 is barred by s 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think we cannot say that it was so barred. Then the Judge having [424] found that there has been one continuous execution, no ground has been shown to us upon which we can question his finding upon this matter, which is a matter of fact. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES

[WHETHER SECTION 108 (Or. 9, RULE 13 OF THE C P C OF 1908) IS MADE APPLICABLE BY SECTION 647 (S 141 OF THE CODE OF 1908) TO EXECUTION PROCEEDINGS :—

Under the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad (7 All., 359 10 All., 71. 12 All., 179; 12 All., 392) and Bombay (6 Bom., 681) that the section applied to application to execute decrees but on the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta held that it did not apply (18 Cal., 635 but see 10 Cal., 416). So an explanation was added to the section by Act 6 of 1892 upholding the Calcutta view and superseding those of Bombay and Allahabad. Meanwhile, the Privy Council in 12 All., 179 adopted the Calcutta view. So in the Code of 1908 the explanation was omitted, the Privy Council judgment being enough to serve the purpose. Thus under the C P C 1908, Order 9, Rule 13 is not applicable to execution applications, See. 18 Bom. 429. But such dismissal is no bar to a fresh application, 18 Mad. 131.

Striking off execution Proceedings : its effect.—The rights of the parties to execution proceedings are not affected in any way by the case being struck off, there being no provision in the Civil Procedure Code for such a course, 10 Cal. 416; See also 16 Bom. 294; 3 M. L. J. 298 and 21 Mad. 261 where their Lordships held that the striking off the Munsiff's file meant no more than he (the Munsiff) ceased to show it as pending in his statistical returns, but the petition not having been dismissed or otherwise legally disposed of must be regarded as still pending (following the reasoning of MUTTUSAMI AYYAR J. in Appeal against Appellate Order No. 34 of 1892 unreported).

If under the Code of 1908, sec. 141 does not include execution proceedings, it is doubtful whether an execution application can be dismissed under O 9, rule 8, on the ground of absence of parties though it may do so under its inherent power, 15 All. 84. Compare 10 Cal. 416.]

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Bamasundari Dassi..... ..Plaintiff

versus

Krishna Chandra Dhur and others. . . . Defendants

Registration Act, 1877, s. 50—Registered and Unregistered documents—Priority—Notice of prior sale.

Quere.—Whether the case of a second registered purchaser with notice of a prior sale is an exception to the rule laid down in the Full Bench case of Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v Dataram Roy (I L R., 8. Cal., 597) The Court held that it was not necessary to decide the question in the present case inasmuch as the facts of the case did not justify them in finding that the purchaser had such notice.

THE plaintiff purchased from Ram Coomar alias Shih Nath Sen, the fourth defendant, a 5-gunda share of taluk Mohun by a registered kobala, dated the 22nd Bhadro 1285 (6th September 1868), for a consideration of Rs 100. The plaintiff thereafter applied under Bengal Act VII of 1876 for registration of his name in respect of the above share, but was opposed by the first, second and third defendants, who alleged that they had purchased the same property (among others) from the fourth defendant by an unregistered kobala, dated 4th Srabun 1276 (16th July 1869), and claimed to have their names registered in respect of the 5-gunda share. The Collector accordingly rejected the plaintiff's application for registration of her name, and registered the share in the names of the first, second and third defendants, who, as the plaintiff alleged, had, in collusion with the fourth defendant, opposed her in entering in possession of the disputed share.

[423] The plaintiff therefore brought this suit to set aside the defendants' kobala, for possession, and for registration of her name after reversal of the Collector's order registering the names of the defendants. The plaintiff alleged that the fourth defendant was a minor at the time of the alleged sale to the other defendants, and that the sale was therefore invalid, and that this kobala being unregistered could not have any effect as against hers which was registered.

The defendants alleged that the price of the land covered by their deed was less than Rs 100, and therefore there was no necessity for registering it, that the fourth defendant was not a minor at the time of sale, but that he and his mother had sold the property to pay the debts of the fourth defendant's father, one Sumbhoo Nath Sircar.

The Munsiff found that the fourth defendant was a minor at the date of the sale to the defendants; but that the sale was valid, having been made by his mother as guardian of the fourth defendant, in order to pay his father's debts. He also came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had purchased with notice of the defendants' purchase and possession, and that the defendants having been in possession under their purchase, and ever since the date of it, the plaintiff's deed of sale, though registered, could not prevail against the defendants' unregistered deed.

The Judge on appeal held that the sale by the fourth defendant to the other defendants was valid, although he was a minor at the time, inasmuch as it was not void because so made, but only voidable, and his subsequent conduct on obtaining majority had ratified it, and that from the possession by the defendants it was to be presumed that the plaintiff had notice of their purchase.

He therefore dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Appellant.

Baboo Harī Mohun Chakravati for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the plaintiff is purchaser under a [426] registered conveyance from defendant No. 4. Defendants 1, 2 and 3 are purchasers under an unregistered conveyance from the same person. The Judge in the Court below has decided that the title of defendants 1, 2 and 3 ought to prevail against that of the plaintiff. The Judge says in his judgment. "The Munsiff is wrong in finding, that now since the Act of 1877, registered documents of which the registration is compulsory, have no priority over unregistered documents executed before 1877, of which the registration was optional. Under the present Act no document executed after the passing of the Registration Act of 1864, if unregistered, and the registration was optional, can take effect against a later registered document. But the purchase under the later registered document cannot prevail against the former unregistered purchaser, if it is shown (1st) that the earlier bill of sale was a legal conveyance, and (2nd) that it was accompanied by delivery of possession. Such delivery of possession divests the vendor of all title and retention of possession by a prior purchaser over a long period, and makes it proper to presume that the second purchaser had notice." This must be taken to be an incorrect statement of the law since the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 597). The Judge then proceeds: "In this case undoubtedly possession was in 1276 (1869) transferred to the first purchasers, defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, who continued in peaceable and evident possession for nine years prior to the second sale, and for eleven years prior to the bringing of this suit. The plaintiff is a relative of defendant No. 4, and lives in a bari adjoining his, she is a woman, but a married woman, and her husband is a clerk in this office, and a man of some degree of education and intelligence; clearly then it must be presumed that plaintiff had notice of the former sale." The Judge accordingly bases his judgment on the ground that the registered purchaser had notice. This raises the question whether the case of a second registered purchaser having notice of a prior unregistered sale is an exception to the rule laid down in the Full Bench case—Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 597). This is [427] a point which can scarcely be said to have been settled by the decisions of this Court. In the case of Fuzluddin Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 336) the Chief Justice says (p. 342): "If, indeed, it could be shown that the subsequent purchaser under the registered instrument had notice of the conveyance by the prior unregistered deed, then the equitable doctrine which obtains in like cases in England; and which is explained in the case of Le Neve v. Le Neve (3 Atk., 646; 2 Wh. & Tudor L. C., 34) might prevent the registered purchaser from asserting his rights against the unregistered under s. 50." Clearly in this passage the learned Chief Justice does not decide the point. In the judgment of Mr. Justice PONTIFEX, at page 350, the question whether the plaintiff had sufficient notice was considered and decided in the negative. It may then be said that the question of notice was considered by one learned Judge to have arisen in that case. In the case of Dino Nath Ghose v. Aluck Moni Dabee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 753) Mr. Justice PRINSEP bases his decision upon the fact that the second and registered purchaser presumably had notice of the title of the first purchaser. My judgment in that case proceeded upon other grounds. In the Full Bench decision in Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (1 L. R., 8 Cal., 597), Mr. Justice PONTIFEX adverts to the question of notice, but inasmuch as the question of notice or no notice did not directly arise in that case, any observation made upon this point must be regarded as an "obiter dictum." We observe that the Madras High Court in two cases—Nallappa Goundan v. Ibrahim Sahib (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 73) and Kondayya v. Guruvappa (I. L. R. 5 Mad., 139)—have decided that the question of notice is immaterial, regard being had to the express provisions of the Registration Act. Now, if we had to decide the question whether the case of a second registered purchaser having notice is an exception to the law laid down in the Full Bench case, we might, perhaps, think it right under the circumstances to refer this question to a Full Bench, but we think that in the present case the question does not really arise. The Judge says in his judgment, "The plaintiff is a relative [428] of defendant No. 4, and lives in a bari adjoining his, she is a woman, but a married woman, and her husband is a clerk in this office, and a man of some degree of education and intelligence. Clearly then it must be presumed that plaintiff had notice of the former sale." We think that no such presumption arises upon the facts stated. There is some evidence that the plaintiff is related to defendant No. 4, although what degree of relationship does not appear, but admittedly there is no evidence on the record that the plaintiff lives in a bari adjoining that of defendant No. 4. In the case of Fuzluddin Khan v. Faku Mahomed Khan, already referred to, PONTIFEX, J., says, "According to the English decisions, the notice of fraud must be very clearly proved," and then he refers to the case of Wyatt v. Barwell (19 Ves., 435) the judgment in which contains the following passage. "We cannot permit fraud to prevail, and it shall only be in cases where the notice is so clearly proved as to make it fraudulent in the purchaser to take and register a conveyance in prejudice to the known title of another, that we will suffer the registered deed to be affected." Applying this principle to the present case, we think that the decision of the Judge, in the Court below, is erroneous—first, because there is no clear proof of notice, and second, because, he has raised a presumption upon facts which do not support the presumption raised. This being so, the question whether the case of a second registered purchaser having notice is an exception to the general rule laid down by the Full Bench case, does not arise, and it is unnecessary to decide it on the present occasion. We must set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and decree this appeal with costs of all Courts."

Appeal allowed.

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Noorjehan Begum

Sakhawat Ally and others

versus

Noorjehan Begum.

Act XL of 1858, ss 10, 12 and 21—Bengal Act IX of 1879, s. 10—

Cancellation of certificate

Where an application is made under the provisions of s. 21 of Act XL of 1858 to have a certificate granted under that Act recalled and a fresh certificate granted to another, the applicant should set forth in his petition a sufficient cause for such course being taken, and the Court should thereupon proceed to enquire judicially whether such sufficient cause is established.

When the estate of a minor consists in whole or in part of land or any interest in land and when such application is made, the Court can only proceed to act in accordance with the provisions of s. 12 of Act XL of 1858, and has no jurisdiction to grant another certificate to any fit person, such a course being confined to cases in which the property is of the description indicated by s. 10.

COLONEL HEDAYUT ALI, Khan Bahadur, died some time in the year 1881, leaving two widows, Noorjehan Begum and Goordustan Begum, a daughter Mussamut Amirunissa, an infant son and three daughters, also infants under the age of eighteen years. Noorjehan Begum, on the 4th October 1882, applied to the Court under the provisions of Act XL of 1858 and obtained a certificate appointing her guardian of the persons of the minor children and the administrator of the property of her deceased husband. On the 5th May 1883 Amirunissa applied under the provisions of s. 21 of Act XL of 1858 to have the certificate, which had been granted to Noorjehan, cancelled, and to have a fresh certificate granted to her appointing her the guardian of the persons and the manager of the estate of the minors in the place of Noorjehan. On the same day Noorjehan presented a petition to the Court praying that the estate of the minors might be placed under the management of the Court of Wards.

The District Judge thereupon, after making what he termed "a somewhat prolonged enquiry, local and otherwise, himself," held that Amirunissa was not a fit and proper person to take charge of [430] the persons of the minors, nor to manage their property, and rejected her petition, and he directed the Court of Wards, under the provisions of s. 10, Beng. Act IX of 1879, to have the estate of the late Colonel Hedayut Ali taken under its management together with the persons of the minors.

Against that order Mussamut Amirunissa now appealed to the High Court, and while the appeal was pending in the High Court, the Court of Wards refused to take charge of the minors or undertake the management of the estate.

Mr. Abul Hossem, Munshi Mohamed Yusoof and Baboo Saligram Singh for the Appellant.

Moulvie Serajul Islam for the Respondent Noorjehan who did not prefer any appeal against the order.

The Judgment of the High Court (MITTER and FIELD, JJ.) was as follows.—

Field, J.—In this case Noorjehan Begum, the widow of Lieutenant-Colonel Hedayut Ali, deceased, obtained a certificate on the 4th of October 1882, granted under the provisions of the Minors' Act XL of 1858. On the 26th of May 1883, a petition was presented by Amrunissa Begum under the provisions of s. 21 of the Act. This section provides that the Civil Court for any sufficient cause may recall any certificate granted under the Act, and may also for any sufficient cause remove any guardian appointed by the Court. It is clear that any person applying under this section ought to set forth in his or her petition a sufficient cause for recalling the certificate, and that the Court to which such petition may be presented ought to proceed to enquire judicially whether such sufficient cause is established. In the case before us the District Judge, after stating that he had ascertained by prolonged personal enquiry that there were dissensions amongst the members of the family of the late Colonel Hedayut Ali, which rendered it undesirable for his widow Noorjehan Begum to continue as manager of the property, and that none of the other members of the family were competent to manage, proceeded to apply, under s 10, Beng. Act IX of 1879, to the Court of Wards to have the estate of Colonel Hedayut Ali taken under the management of such Court of [431] Wards. Although the Judge does not in so many words say that he recalls the certificate previously granted on 4th October 1882, it is clear that he must have intended to do so, as otherwise he could not have applied to the Court of Wards, regard being had to the express language of s 21, Beng. Act XL of 1858, and s 10, Beng. Act IX of 1879. It is objected in appeal before us that the Judge had no power to recall the certificate without holding a proper judicial enquiry, and that he was not justified in acting upon the personal enquiry which he states in his judgment that he had made.

The difficulty which we experience in dealing with this objection is caused by the fact that Noorjehan Begum, to whom the certificate had been granted, has not appealed against the order of the Judge. She is however represented before us, and her vakeel has stated that the reason of her not appealing was that she was satisfied that the management of the estate should be taken over by the Court of Wards. A copy of the order of the Court of Wards has been placed before us, from which it appears that the Court have declined to assume charge of the estate, and it is represented to us on behalf of Noorjehan Begum that in consequence of the Court of Wards having so declined the charge she is now anxious that the certificate granted to her should not be recalled. It was pressed upon us that we should leave the District Judge to exercise his discretion in granting a certificate to some other suitable person, but unfortunately the state of the law appears to preclude the District Judge from the exercise of any such discretion. Section 10, Act XL of 1858, provides that "if the estate of the minor consist of moveable property or of houses, gardens or the like, the Court may grant a certificate to the public curator, appointed under s 19, Act XIX of 1841, or, if there be no public curator, to any fit person whom the Court may appoint for the purpose." No public curator has been appointed in these provinces under this section and in a case to which it applies the Judge may appoint any fit person, a case, that is, where the estate of the minor consists of moveable property, or of houses, gardens or the like. But this section can have no application to the present case. Section 12 clearly applies, which provides that—"If the estate of the minor consist, [432] in whole or in part, of land or any interest in land, the Court may direct the Collector to take charge of the estate, and thereupon the Collector shall appoint a manager of the property." In the present case a part of the estate consists of land, and the District Judge could only proceed under s. 12. As the law stood before the passing of Beng. Act IX of 1879, the Collector had no option but to obey the mandate of the Civil Court. Section 10 of the Court of Ward's Act IX (B. C.) of 1879 however expressly provided that it should be at the discretion of the Court of Wards to take charge of the person or property of a minor or refuse to do so. Unfortunately this Act, in allowing the Court of Wards this discretion, did not provide what course was to be pursued, if the Court of Wards refused to take charge of the person or property of the minor. This case, inasmuch as it was not contemplated by Act XL of 1858, was not provided for by that Act. Let us now turn to s. 21 of Act XL of 1858, which is as follows—"The Civil Court for any sufficient cause may recall any certificate granted under this Act, and may direct the Collector to take charge of the estate, or may grant a certificate to the public curator or any other person as the case may be" It is clear that these last words have reference to the previous provisions of the Act to which reference has already been made, and that a Civil Court when it recalls a certificate has no jurisdiction to grant another certificate to any fit person in cases in which s. 12 applies, that is, in cases in which a minor's estate consists, in whole or in part, of land. No doubt the Court would have jurisdiction to deal with any application made under the earlier section of the Act, but the Court has not itself the power of selecting a fit person. If therefore the order of the District Judge, which virtually recalls the certificate granted to Noorjehan Begum, be allowed to stand, the property will be without a manager, and the District Judge will have no jurisdiction to select a proper person to manage the property, unless some one comes forward and makes an application under s. 3. We think it is not desirable that the estate of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Hedavut Ali should be left in this condition. We think, therefore, that the proper order to make in this case is to set aside the order of the District Judge of the 23rd June, and to direct [433] him to proceed to make upon the proper materials a judicial enquiry upon the petition filed under s. 21 of the Act, and before proceeding to such enquiry he should call upon the petitioner to amend her petition by stating distinctly the sufficient cause alleged for the recall of the certificate.

Mitter, J.—The petition of appeal in this case, which is alleged to be on appeal against the District Judge's order of the 22nd of June 1883, mixes up with the matter of that order a further matter concerned with the order of the 23rd June with which we have just dealt. It appears to us that as so much of the certificate as appointed Noorjehan Begum guardian of the children was never set aside, and as she therefore continues to be the guardian and entitled to the custody of the minors, the Judge was correct in directing the minors to return to her custody. We, therefore, decline to interfere with this portion of the Judge's order.

Appeal allowed in part and order varied.

Enhancement of rent, Suit for—Service of notice of enhancement—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 14.

Service of notice of enhancement under s. 14 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 must be made strictly in the manner, provided by that section (Chunder Monee Dossee v. Dhuroneedhur Lahory (7 W. R., 2) followed.

When a tenure was held by a Hindu and three Santhals, and it was shown that service of the notice of enhancement had been personal on the latter, but only on the son of the former, who was an adult and living with his father as a member of a joint Hindu family, Held, that this was not sufficient service on the Hindu tenant

Quere—Whether, if it had been shown that the notice though served on the son had come into the hands of the father, that would not amount to a sufficient service of the notice.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate after an alleged service of notice of enhancement. The only material [434] point in the case was as to the sufficiency of the service of such notice. For this point the facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Baboo Prannath Pundit for the Appellants.

Baboo Bhowani Churn Dutt for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by

Tottenham, J.—In this case we feel constrained, though reluctantly, to hold that the lower Courts were wrong in deciding that there has been service of notice of enhancement upon the defendant No 1

The tenants are four in number, one being a Hindu and the other three Santhals. The Courts found that the notice of enhancement had been personally served upon the three Santhals. There was no personal service upon the Hindu tenant, but it was found that his son, who is an adult, had received the notice. The Courts below have held that this was sufficient service within the meaning of the law.

Section 14 of the Rent Law provides that the notice shall, if practicable, be served personally upon the ryot. If for any reason the notice cannot be served personally, it shall be affixed at his usual place of residence. The law does not provide that service on any member of his family or any other person shall suffice.

Our attention has been called by the respondents' pleader to the case of Nobodeep Chunder Shaha v. Sonaram Dass (L. R., 4 Cal., 592), in which it was held that where the tenure was owned by a joint Hindu family, it is sufficient service of notice of enhancement under s. 14 of the Rent Act, if any one of the co-sharers is served with the notice. That case does not apply to the present one, for the tenants are not members of a joint Hindu family. If they were, the service on defendants 2, 3 and 4 would, no doubt, have been sufficient. On the other hand, for the appellant the case of Chunder Monnee Dossee v. Dhuronedhur Lahory (7 W. R., 2), has been cited, in which Sir BARNES PEACOCK held that service of notice must be strictly in the manner provided [435] by the Act, and that if the notice was served upon the agent of a defendant who was a pardahnusheen lady, even if the agency were established, that would not suffice.

It seems to us that we are bound to follow this authority which is literally in accordance with the words of the Act.

We have been asked to take it that the lower Courts found that the notice, though served upon the son of the defendant, reached his, the defendant's, hand, and if we could be satisfied that such was the finding of the lower Courts, we should be disposed to think it sufficient, but we do not find this to be so. The first Court thought that most probably the notice was communicated to the defendant No. 1 by his son. The lower Appellate Court thought that the service effected on the adult son of defendant No. 1, who was living as a joint member of a Hindu family with his father, was a good service.

We think we are bound to insist upon the terms of the law being literally carried out. We must, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and direct that the suit be dismissed.

Under the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[It was held in 3 C. L. R., 432 that a notice though served on the son would be valid if it actually reached the father.]

Partition—Bulwara—Revenue-paying estate—Benj. Act VIII of 1876, Part II and s. 4, cls (8) and (9)—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 265.

In 1851 an estate was brought under butwara under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814. At such butwara a portion of the estate being land covered with water and unfit for cultivation was not divided, but left joint amongst all the co-sharers, the land-revenue payable on account of the whole estate being apportioned amongst the several estates into which the portion divided was split up. Subsequently, on the portion remaining joint becoming dry and fit for cultivation, an application was made by one of the co-sharers to the Collector to partition the same under the provisions of Beng [436] Act VIII of 1876, but that officer refused to do so, on the ground that the land "did not bear an assessed revenue and was not shown in the towji."

In a suit brought under the above circumstances to compel the Collector to make the partition and in the alternative to have it made by the Civil Court, Held, that, though the reason given by the Collector for refusing was an erroneous one, he was not bound to make the partition under the provisions of Beng Act VIII of 1876, as the land in suit was not liable for the payment of one and same demand of land-revenue, and was therefore not a joint undivided estate within the terms of s. 4, cl (9) of that Act.

Held, also, that the word "estate," as used in s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, must not be construed in the same limited and defective sense in which it is used in Act VIII of 1876, but must be taken to be there used in its ordinary signification, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition under the provisions of that section. Chundernath Nundy v. Hur Narain Deb (I L R, 7 Cal, 153) approved.

THIS was a suit brought to obtain a partition of certain defined lands within the limits of mouzah Hosainpur-Jamayad. The plaintiff alleged—and there was no dispute as to the facts—that in the butwara of that mouzah, which took place in 1851, the portion now sought to be partitioned was left ymali for all the co-sharers of the village, as it was then land covered with water and unfit for cultivation. In 1876, however, the land dried up, and the plaintiff applied in 1878 to the Collector to partition it. An Amin was thereupon deputed by the Collector to measure the land and ascertain the rates for the purpose of allotting the several shares, but ultimately, on the 9th January 1880, the Collector refused to make the butwara, on the ground that the land did not bear an assessed revenue and a number in the towji as a part and parcel of Hosainpur-Jamayad, and it was left as the ymali land of the several co-sharers at the butwara of 1851.

At that butwara the revenue was apportioned between the co-sharers, and the plaintiff contended that it not only represented the land of the mouzah which was brought under the division, but also the land which was then left ymali and which was now sought to be partitioned.

The plaintiff accordingly made the Secretary of State for India a party-defendant, and prayed that the order of the Collector might be set aside and that he be directed to partition the land in suit, and [437] in the alternative he asked that the land might be partitioned by the Civil Court and his share allotted to him.

In the Original Court the main contention was that between the plaintiff and the Secretary of State. A third party intervened and claimed to be entitled to julkur rights over the land in suit, but that portion of the case formed no portion of the subject-matter of the appeal, either in the lower Appellate Court or in the High Court.

The Original Court held on the issue between the plaintiff and the Secretary of State that to say that the land in suit did not bear an assessed revenue and a towji number was absurd, for the burden of the revenue was not taken off it at the butwara in 1851, but the land was merely left ymali and the revenue apportioned on the remaining lands of the village. In the Court's opinion this did not convert it into lakheraj, but it remained the mal land of the village. It held, therefore, that the Collector was wrong in refusing to make the partition asked for, and accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree, directing the Collector to make the partition and gave certain of the costs against the Secretary of State.

In the lower Appellate Court it was urged that the Civil Court could not interfere, and that the Collector had rightly interpreted the butwara law; that there was no provision of law by which the Collector could have made a butwara of the land, and that no costs should have been given against the Secretary of State, because he acted as a judicial officer in passing the order he did.

The lower Appellate Court, however, dismissed the appeal with costs, holding that the Collector had acted in his executive capacity, and that the decision of the Original Court, in holding that the land in suit must be taken to be land assessed with the (sic) revenue, and that it was an error if it did not appear in the towji roll.

Against the latter decision the Secretary of State now preferred a special appeal to the High Court.

The Senior Government Pleader, Baboo Annoda Persad Bonnerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by [438] Mitter, J.—This suit was brought for obtaining an order for partition of certain defined lands measuring 191 bighas 18 cottahs 10 dhurs and 7 chattaacks under the following circumstances.

The lands in suit originally appertained to an estate No. 1212 on the rent-roll of the Collector of Tirhoot. The plaintiff's predecessor in title held a share amounting to 5 gunda 9 annas in the said estate.

In 1851 this estate was brought under butwara under the then butwara law, Regulation XIX of 1814, and the share belonging to the plaintiff's predecessor in title having been separated was recorded as No. 4080 of the towji. The lands in dispute, however, being not then fit for cultivation but covered with water were not divided but left joint amongst all the co-sharers of the present estate, whose shares were recorded in separate numbers. In apportioning the entire revenue payable on account of the parent estate, calculation was made excluding the assets of the disputed lands.

Recently these lands having become dry have become fit for cultivation. The plaintiff (respondent) made an application to the Collector for the partition thereof, by allotting to him a defined portion in proportion to his share of 9 annas 5 gundas. The revenue authorities at first entertained this application and commenced the initial proceeding in the shape of measurement of the lands in suit for the purpose of making the allotment asked for, but subsequently they refused to proceed with the proceeding and rejected the application for butwara, "on the ground that the land did not bear an assessed revenue and was not shown in the towji." Thereupon the plaintiff commenced the present suit, making the Secretary of State for India in Council and his co-sharers defendants.

He made the Secretary of State for India in Council defendant because he contends that the revenue authorities under the butwara law were bound to effect the partition prayed for on his application. The suit was answered by the Secretary of State for India in Council by the plea that the revenue authorities far from being bound were not even competent to entertain the application for butwara, the co-sharers who were made defendants not having [439] contested the suit. The question discussed mainly in the lower Courts was the one thus raised between the plaintiff and the Secretary of State for India in Council. The decision of the lower Courts being against the latter, this appeal has been preferred to this Court.

It seems to us that the contention raised before us by the appellant is valid. There is no provision in the present butwara law, Beng. Act VIII of 1876, which applies to the facts of this case. Part II of the Act deals with the subject of the right to claim partition. This right is given to a recorded proprietor of a joint undivided estate only. By s. 4 a joint undivided estate is defined to be "all lands which are borne on the revenue roll of a Collector as liable for the payment of one and the same demand of land-revenue, etc., etc." Now the land in suit is not liable for the payment of one and the same demand of land revenue; because by the butwara of 1851 the land revenue which was demandable in respect of the parent estate was apportioned amongst the several estates into which it was divided, so that in respect of them it cannot now be said that the demand is "one and the same." The revenue authorities were, therefore, right in refusing the application for partition, although the reason upon which the refusal was made was erroneous. The said reason was, as already stated in the language used in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, "that the land did not bear an assessed revenue and was not shown in the towji." This is not correct, because what was done in the butwara of 1857 had not the effect of making these lands revenue-free, or excluding them from the revenue towji. A certain interest in the land in suit after the partition of 1851 continued to appertain to the new estates which came into existence after the butwara was effected. For instance, after this partition the estate allotted to the (plaintiff) respondent comprised the defined lands assigned to it and an undivided fractional share (represented by 9 annas 5 gundas) of the land in suit.

Although the contention made in this appeal is valid, yet we are not called upon to interfere with the decree for partition made in the lower Courts. That decree is quite in accordance with s. 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it was contended before us that the word "estate," which occurs in this section [440] is used in the same sense in which it is used in the butwara law, Beng. Act VIII of 1876. But this contention does not seem to us to be correct. The definition of "estate" as given in the butwara law, seems to be defective, for instance, it excludes definite lands held jointly by owners of estates recorded in the Collector's towji in separate numbers. There is no reason suggested why this restricted meaning of the word should be adopted in construing this word used in s. 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the other hand, it will facilitate the ends of justice in many cases if we construe the word "estate" here in its ordinary signification. In Chundernath Nundi v. Hur Narain Deb (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 153) this Court adopted this construction of s. 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The result is that, although the appellant was unnecessarily made a defendant, yet the decree that has been awarded is correct, except as to costs payable by him. But, under the circumstances, he is not entitled to recover costs against the (plaintiff) respondent, because the revenue authorities, by entertaining the application for butwara, put the latter to unnecessary costs.

We accordingly modify the decrees of the lower Courts by reversing those portions of them which award costs against the appellant who will be entitled to recover costs of this appeal from the respondent.

Appeal allowed and decree modified.

NOTES

[MEANING OF ESTATE—

What is an 'estate' within the meaning of section 54 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 (265 of the Code of 1882)? The word 'estate' is used in its ordinary meaning and should not be construed in a limited and restricted sense, 10 Cal., 435 Sheri lands, that is, lands held under a lease from government for a fixed period come within the terms of the section, 16 Bom., 528; but not isolated plots of land which fall short of being the share of a co-sharer of a Mahal, 6 All., 452, A ryotwari holding, has been held not to be an 'estate' within the meaning of the section, 6 Mad., 97, 7 Mad., 382.

As regards the applicability of the section to suits for partition of estates when no separate allotment of revenue is prayed for, see 24 Cal., 725 (745) F B The limitation applicable to the execution of the decree in this case was dealt with in (1899) 16 Cal., 598 (600).]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th February, 1884

PRESENT.

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Harrington. (Defendant) Appellant

Gonesh Roy.... . (Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Limitation—Absence of defendant from British India—Act XV of 1877, s. 13.

Section 13 of the Limitation Act, which excludes the time during which a defendant has been absent from British India in computing the period of limitation for any suit, does not apply to a case when, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, the defendant, though not residing in British India, is represented by a duly constituted agent and mookhtar.

[441] THIS was a suit to recover possession of 91 bighas 8 cottahs 18 dhurs of land, being a portion of some 190 bighas which the plaintiff held in the defendant's zamindari as mowasi kadimjote. The allegation in the plaint was that in the cultivation season the defendant demanded a termier kabuhat with an enhanced rate of rent, and as the plaintiff would not agree, the defendant on the 17th Jait 1287 F., corresponding with the 10th June 1880, dispossessed him.

The suit was instituted on the 25th May 1881 against a Mr Crowdy, who was the manager and mookhtar of the defendant and in charge of the Bhugwanpur Concern, and a summons was issued to him, and the 14th June fixed for hearing the case. On that date Mr. Crowdy presented a petition stating that Mr. E. T. Harrington was the proprietor of the Bhugwanpur Concern, and that the land claimed by the plaintiff was situate in that concern, that as the proprietor was in England, and he was simply the manager, he could not personally be made a defendant; and that the suit should have been brought against Mr. Harrington. The plaintiff was thereupon asked to state whether he meant to sue Mr. Crowdy as manager and mookhtar or as proprietor, and whether he alleged that Mr. Crowdy dispossessed him in his private capacity or as manager of the factory. In reply, on the 16th June, the plaintiff filed a petition stating that he did not know Mr. Harrington, but only knew

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 223 of 1883, against the order of W. Verner, Esq., Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 7th May 1883, reversing the order of Hafez, Abdul Kurim, Khan Bahadoor, Second Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 17th March 1882

Mr. Crowdy, and that he meant to make the factory defendant, and he prayed that the plaint might be amended by putting down in the place of the defendant—"E. T. Harrington, proprietor, by W. S. Crowdy."

Mr. Harrington was accordingly made defendant on the 16th June 1881.

In his written statement, amongst other pleas raised, he contended that the suit being one governed by s. 27, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, it was barred by limitation as the year allowed since the date of dispossession had expired before he was sued.

In answer to that plea the plaintiff contended that as Mr. Harrington was in England, under s. 13 of the Limitation Act no limitation could run.

The Original Court, without going into the other issues raised, dismissed the suit, holding that it was barred [442] On appeal the lower Appellate Court, while agreeing with the Court below that the period of limitation which governed the case was one year, and that it must be taken that the suit was instituted against Mr. Harrington on the 16th June 1881, said however that s. 13 of the Limitation Act applied, and reversing the decree of the lower Court remanded the case for trial on its merits.

Against this order of remand the defendant now specially appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale appeared on behalf of the Appellant.

No one appeared on behalf of the Respondent

The Judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by

Tottenham, J.—It is unfortunate that in this appeal nobody has appeared for the respondent, and therefore no arguments have been put before us in favour of the District Judge's order

It appears to us that the reason given by the District Judge for holding that the suit was not barred by limitation cannot be supported in law. The Judge relies on s. 13 of the Limitation Act, which provides that "in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded." He goes on to say "admittedly Mr. Harrington," the defendant in this case, "has been so absent from the date of dispossession till now" It seems, however, that Mr. Harrington is represented in this country by Mr. Crowdy, who, in the first instance, was made a defendant in the case as manager and mookhtar of the Bhugwanpur Factory.

If the Judge's interpretation of s. 13 were correct, there would be no limitation at all as against a proprietor residing in England although suits might be conducted for and against him through his agent in this country. It is impossible to believe that this was the intention of the law. Mr. Harrington, the proprietor, was not made a defendant until the 16th June 1881, and by s. 22 of the Limitation Act a suit as against him is to be taken to be instituted on that date. That was more than one year after the alleged dispossession. It seems a hard case that the plaintiff should be shut out from relief by his ignorance that Mr. Harrington was the real proprietor, but, as observed by the [443] Subordinate Judge, he was clearly aware that Mr. Crowdy was not the proprietor in that he sued him merely as "manager and mookhtar" It was, therefore, within his power to ascertain against whom the suit ought to have been brought.

Upon a strict interpretation of the law we think that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the suit was barred.

We must, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court with costs, one gold mohur.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[OVERRULED—

In this case it was held that s. 18 of the Limitation Act 1877 did not apply when to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, the defendants, partners in a firm, are during their absence, carrying on business in British India through an authorised agent. This was dissented from in 14 Cal , 457 , 9 C. P. L. R. 72 (74), and finally overruled in (1898) 25 Cal., 496 2 C. W. N. 269 F.B.]

Mortgage of leasehold property—Mortgagee in possession—Liability for rent—Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, ss. 65, 76.

Where the subject of a mortgage is leasehold property, and the mortgagee is put into possession under circumstances which amount to an assignment or transfer of the leasehold interest, the mortgagor becomes liable, as a rule, to pay the rent, but where the mortgagee is in possession and his name is registered in the landlord's books as the tenant, there can be no doubt as to his being liable for the rent

THE plaintiffs in this case were the owners of certain land, No. 8, Juggo Mohon Mullick's Place, and some time back let out to the defendant Toolamoney three plots out of the land above-mentioned, on which the latter built some tiled huts which she let out to tenants. Subsequently on the 10th Assar 1282 (June 1875), Toolamoney mortgaged the tiled huts on this land to one Nistoriny Dossee. Nistoriny then entered into possession and repaired and built other huts thereon.

This mortgage and the fact of Nistoriny being in possession coming to the knowledge of the plaintiff, his agent induced Nistoriny to have her name entered in the landlord's books as the tenant of the property, and received rent from her at the rate of Rs 59 a month and also a salam of Rs. 150.

In 1879, Toolamoney brought a suit against Nistoriny to redeem the property mortgaged and for an account, and obtained a [444] decree against her. Subsequently to this decree Toolamoney paid rent up to Aghran 1288.

* Small Cause Court Reference under s. 69 of Act XV of 1882 and s 617 of the Civil Procedure Code, cf. Baboo Koonjo Lall Banerjee, Second Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes.

Rent of the premises having since then fallen in arrear the plaintiffs brought this suit in the Court of Small Causes against Toolamoney and Nistoriny for Rs. 1,062, being the rent due from Pous 1288 to Joisto 1290.

The Second Judge of the Small Cause Court found that Toolamoney was the real tenant and that Nistoriny was merely the mortgagee in possession, and gave the plaintiffs a decree against Toolamoney, dismissing the suit as against Nistoriny, stating that his judgment was, however, contingent on the opinion of the High Court, whether on the facts stated and the law applied, the decree should be against Toolamoney alone or against both Toolamoney and Nistoriny.

On the reference Mr. Bonnerjee appeared for the Plaintiffs and Mr. Trevelyan appeared for Nistoriny.

No one appeared for Toolamoney.

The Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—The Judge of the Small Cause Court has made a mistake in this case.

Whenever the subject of a mortgage is leasehold property, and the mortgagee is put in possession of it, under circumstances which amount to an assignment or transfer of the leasehold interest, the mortgagee becomes liable, as a rule, to pay the rent. But in this case there is no doubt about the matter, because the mortgagee has not only obtained possession, but has had her name entered in the landlord's books as the tenant of the property in the place of Toolamoney. Nistoriny is, therefore, liable for the rent, and the suit must be dismissed altogether as against Toolamoney.

The Small Cause Court Judge appears to have been misled by the language of s. 76 of the Transfer of Property Act, but it will be found that neither that section, which relates to mortgagees in possession, nor s. 65, which relates to the duties of mortgagors, contain any rules applicable to cases like the present. Those cases are, therefore, governed by the general law.

The plaintiff will be entitled to the costs of this reference from the defendant Nistoriny.

[MORTGAGE OF LEASEHOLDS—

A mortgage with possession of leasehold property may be made either by assignment or sub-lease of the tenure.

[445] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 6th March, 1884.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
CUNNINGHAM.

The Corporation of the Town of Calcutta. Defendant
versus Anderson..... Plaintiff.

Liability of Commissioners of Corporation of Calcutta for breach of statutory duty—Calcutta Municipality Act (Bengal Act IV of 1876), ss. 189, 191, 213, 219, 220, 252—Obstruction in Public way—Suit for damages—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 5.

Under s. 189 of Bengal Act IV of 1876 the roads and streets in Calcutta are vested in the Commissioners of the Corporation of the Town of Calcutta, and s. 191 provides that "the Commissioners shall, so far as the Municipal funds permit, from time to time, cause the public streets to be maintained and repaired, and for such purpose may do all things necessary for the public safety and convenience."

Sections 252 and 213, respectively direct the Commissioners on opening the roads, and persons to whom they have given permission so to do, to fence and light any excavations so made.

In March 1882 the Commissioners, at the request of the Executive Engineer of the Public Works Department of the Government of Bengal, permitted the latter to open up one of the roads in Calcutta for the purpose of carrying off surplus water from a tank which was under the charge and control of such Executive Engineer aforesaid, and for the purpose of connecting the tank with the public sewer Permission was granted on the usual condition that a contractor licensed to do such works by the Municipality (but who was not in their employ further than the Commissioners had power to cancel his license, nor was he in the employ of the Secretary of State for India) should be employed in the work. Such a contractor was employed by the Secretary of State and obtained a license from the Commissioners empowering him to break open the road.

The road was opened, but was left unfenced and insufficiently lighted at night.

The plaintiff in driving along this road after dusk, drove into the hole and was badly injured, and sued the Corporation, the contractor and the Secretary of State for damages.

Held by the Court of First Instance (1) that the Secretary of State was not liable, because he came within the established rule that one who employs another to do what is perfectly legal must be presumed to employ that other to do this in a legal way, (2) that the Corporation who had a statutory obligation imposed upon them to repair and maintain the roads, were liable to the plaintiff for a breach of their statutory duty that where there is a [446] dangerous obstruction à fortiori where such dangerous obstruction results from a permission accorded by the Commissioners, they are to be held liable for damage caused by it; (3) that the contractor also was liable.

Held on appeal that the fact that the Commissioners gave permission to another person to open up the road, although for a perfectly proper purpose, would not relieve them from their statutory duty under s. 191 of Bengal Act IV of 1876

The fact that the plaintiff's attorney on being served with notice of appeal failed to notice that a party who had been a defendant in the Court below had not been made a respondent in the appeal, coupled with the fact that the application made by the plaintiff to make such defendant a party respondent after the period of limitation had expired, was not made at the earliest opportunity possible, is not a sufficient ground under s. 5 of the Limitation Act for non-prosecution of the appeal within the period allowed

APPEAL from a judgment of PIGOT, J., dated the 27th June 1883.

In the month of March 1883 the Executive Engineer of the First Calcutta Division of the Public Works Department, under whose charge were the Calcutta maidan and the tanks thereon, finding that a certain tank, called Monohar Dass' tank, overflowed its banks, applied for leave from the defendant Corporation to connect the said tank with the public sewer in Chowringhee Road, which permission the defendant Corporation gave under s. 213 of Beng. Act IV of 1876 on the usual condition that one of the contractors, licensed by the defendant Corporation to carry out such works, should be employed to do the work by the Government. In pursuance of this condition, one Nolit Mohun Chatterjee (one of the defendants) was employed, and he sent in an application to the defendant Corporation asking for permission to open up the road. Permission was granted, and on the morning of the 23rd March the road was opened up from the east side to the centre of the road, and the earth thrown up to a height of three or four feet alongside the excavation on its south side. It appeared from the evidence that there was no fencing placed round the excavation, and that until after such time as the accident, hereafter to be mentioned, took place the excavation was insufficiently lighted by one street lamp, such as is ordinarily used for road repairs, placed on the ground at the west end of the excavation on the north side of the mound of earth, and in such a position that the light from it was not visible [447] to persons going along the road either from the north or from the south. It also appeared that a public street lamp, which stood on the footway in a line with the excavation, was alight at the time of the accident. A little after seven o'clock on the evening of the 23rd, the plaintiff, who was being driven by a friend, one McDonell, was coming down Chowringhee Road from the north, in a gig, and owing to the insufficient light and want of fencing the horse fell over the mound, and the plaintiff and McDonell were thrown out of the gig, the plaintiff falling into the excavation and receiving considerable injuries, which kept him in hospital for five weeks and obliged him on leaving hospital to take a sea voyage, to recruit his health, which lasted another five weeks. Previously to the accident the horse had been driven for some miles, and it did not appear either that he was a restive horse, or that the pace at which he was being driven was excessive.

The plaintiff at first brought his action for damages against the Corporation and Nolit Mohun Chatterjee the contractor, but the Corporation in their written statement denied their liability, stating that the excavation was made under the orders of the Executive Engineer of Government, and not under their superintendence, and that if any one was liable it was the Secretary of State for India. The plaintiff then amended his plaint, making the Secretary of State a party defendant.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Hill for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Branson, Mr. T. A. Apcar, and Mr. Trevelyan for the Corporation

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Gasper for Nolit Mohun Chatterjee

The following is the judgment appealed from.—

PIGOT, J.—The plaintiff in this case sues the Corporation of the Town of Calcutta, the Secretary of State for India in Council and Nolit Mohun Chatterjee; and he states his cause of action thus—

"The defendant Corporation is a body corporate, in whom all public streets in the town of Calcutta (not being the property and kept under the control of the Government) and also all sewers, drains, tunnels and culverts in, alongside or under the [448] public streets, whether made at the cost of the defendant Corporation or otherwise, and all works, materials and things appertaining thereto are, and since the first day of July 1876 have been vested ; and since the date aforesaid the defendant Corporation has had the sole management and control of the said public streets, and it is, and since the date aforesaid, has been the duty of the defendant Corporation to maintain and repair the said public streets and for such purpose to do all things necessary for the public safety.

Chowringhee Road is one of the public streets in the town of Calcutta vested in the defendant Corporation as aforesaid

On or shortly before the 23rd day of March 1882, the defendant Corporation caused or authorized and permitted a deep hole or excavation to be made in and across a considerable portion of Chowringhee Road aforesaid, and opposite a certain tank called Monohur Dass' tank, and on the said 23rd March 1882 the defendant Corporation wrongfully and negligently permitted the said excavation to be and remain unfenced and unguarded and insufficiently lighted, so as to be dangerous to persons lawfully passing along the said road.

On the evening of the 23rd March 1882, between the hours of seven and eight o'clock P M , when it was already dark, the plaintiff was lawfully passing along the said road in a carriage which was being driven with ordinary caution, when, in consequence of the said excavation having been left in such unfenced, unguarded and insufficiently lighted condition, the horse attached to the said carriage fell into the said excavation, and the plaintiff was violently thrown out of the said carriage and into the said excavation.

The effect of the said fall upon the plaintiff was the plaintiff's forehead and scalp were severely lacerated, bruised and wounded, and his frontal bone was injured, and the plaintiff suffered great pain, and became and was for some time dangerously ill, and was compelled to remain in hospital under medical and surgical treatment from the said 23rd of March last until the 1st of May last, and was then discharged from hospital only in order that he might and upon the understanding or condition that he should take a sea trip, and by reason of his said injuries and the shock [449] to his nervous system the plaintiff's constitution and bodily health and strength have been injured, and the plaintiff has been and is permanently disfigured, and the plaintiff was thereby put to an expense of Rs. 117 for medical and surgical attendance and nursing.

The defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee was, as the plaintiff is informed and believes, employed as a contractor to make the said excavation, and the same was, as the plaintiff is informed and believes, in fact, made by or under the immediate directions* of the said defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee, and the plaintiff submits that it thereupon became and was the duty of the said defendant as well as of the defendant Corporation to cause the said excavation to be fenced, guarded and sufficiently lighted, and that the said defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee, as well as the defendant Corporation, is liable to the plaintiff for the damages sustained by the plaintiff from his said fall."

The Corporation of the Town of Calcutta put in a written statement and said :—

"The powers and duties vested in and imposed on the defendant Corporation are those prescribed and defined by Act IV of 1876 of the Bengal Council.

"By s. 213 of the said Act it is provided, inter alia, that no person shall make a hole in any public street without the permission of the defendant Corporation in writing, and when such permission is granted to any person, he shall, at his own expense, cause such hole to be sufficiently fenced and enclosed until the hole is filled up and otherwise made secure, and shall cause the same to be sufficiently lighted up at night

"In the month of March last the Executive Engineer of the First Calcutta Division of the Public Works Department under the Government of Bengal, in whose charge the maidan of Calcutta and the tanks therein are, being desirous, for the purpose of better draining the said maidan, to connect the tank known as Monohur, Dass' tank with the public sewer in the Chowringhee Road, applied to the said Corporation for leave to connect such tank with such sewer, which permission the defendant Corporation gave, and they authorised the said Executive Engineer under the said s. 213 to open the said Chowringhee Road for the purpose of connecting the said tank with the said sewer.

[450] "The said Executive Engineer, as the defendant Corporation is informed, entrusted the work of making the necessary excavation and laying the pipes for the purpose of making the desired connection between the said tank and sewer to the defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee, who was at that time one of the persons licensed by the Corporation to do such work, and who was bound to act in the performance of any such work in accordance with rules framed by the Engineer to the Corporation in that behalf, but the said last mentioned defendant was not in any way employed by, or acting as the agent or contractor of, the Corporation in respect of the said work, nor was the said last mentioned defendant under or subject to the defendant Corporation in any way further or otherwise than he was liable to have his license forfeited on the breach by him of any of the rules framed by the defendant Corporation for the guidance of such licensed drainage contractors "

They then plead that the excavation was made under the orders of the Executive Engineer, and deny it was made by them or under their superintendence, or that any duty was cast on them in respect thereof, and in para 6 put the plaintiff to proof and then say —

"The Chairman of the defendant Corporation was at first led to believe that the said excavation made by the said defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee was left entirely unlighted, but he has since been informed that it was lighted by two lamps and was situate immediately opposite to two bright gas lamps which are at the door of Mr. Gubbey's houses Nos 9 to 21, Chowringhee, and the defendant Corporation believes that if the conveyance in which the plaintiff was driving had been driven with due and proper caution the horse attached thereto would not have fallen into the said excavation.

"The defendant Corporation deny that they wrongfully and negligently permitted the said excavation to remain unfenced and unguarded and insufficiently lighted, and they submit that, under the circumstances hereinbefore stated, no duty devolved on them to fence, guard or light the same. .

"The defendant Corporation submit that if any one is liable to the plaintiff in this suit it is the Secretary of State for India in Council and the said Nolit Mohun Chatterjee "

[451] The plaintiff then amended the plaint, including the Secretary of State for India in Council as defendant, and setting out that the defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee made the excavation not as agent of the Corporation, but under the orders of the Executive Engineer of the First Calcutta Division of the Public Works Department under the Government of Bengal, the said Executive Engineer having, as the defendant Corporation further allege, applied to and obtained authority from the defendant Corporation to open the said Chowringhee Road for the purpose of connecting the said tank known as Monohur Dass' tank with the public sewer under the said Chowringhee Road, with a view to the better drainage of the maidan of Calcutta and of the tanks therein, including the said Monohur Dass' tank, such maidan and tanks then being in and under the sole charge and control of the said Government of Bengal.

The first question is, whether or not there was negligence, whether the excavation in the plaint mentioned was in such a condition and so kept at the time of the accident as to entitle the defendant [plaintiff?] to maintain a suit against any one, and on that a mass of evidence was gone into, the defendant Corporation putting the plaintiff to strict proof, and the Secretary of State setting up a defence to which I shall advert, it became necessary to prove the plaintiff's fall was caused by negligence.

The Secretary of State sets up that he has no knowledge of the matters of fact alleged in para 5 of the plaint filed in this suit, and puts the plaintiff to strict proof thereof. He pleads substantially that the work was undertaken with the permission of the defendant Corporation, and at the instance of the Public Works Department, and was made by the contractor, and goes on to say "This defendant believes that on the evening of the 23rd day of the said month of March, the said excavation was lighted by two lamps placed on each side of it by the defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee, and also by certain gas lamps on the opposite side of the said road, and that the same was then protected as aforesaid."

The defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee has filed no written statement, nor entered appearance until the case came on, and I had better deal with the point raised by his counsel, that the [432] evidence of Mr. Brame was not admissible because he was not represented at it.

I am of opinion that the contention cannot be sustained. The circumstances were such as to constitute that means of cross-examining within the rule under which a party to a case is not held bound by evidence given under such circumstances that he had no opportunity of cross-examination. Mr. Brame, an important witness, was leaving Calcutta, the case was in the day's list. an application was made to have him examined before he should leave, and the case being in the day's list and the parties bound to be present, I ordered that Mr. Brame's evidence should be taken by me in accordance with my practice of having a witness whose evidence is taken under such circumstances examined before me, in place of having his evidence taken at a de bene esse examination.

On the day on which I made that order, the defendant entered appearance. In any case, he had been duly summoned, if he was not at pains to appear, it was his fault. In every sense of the rule the defendant had an opportunity of cross-examining within the meaning of that rule. The evidence of Brame is therefore binding on that defendant.

Now, upon the question whether or not at the time of the accident the excavation, which is described in the pleadings, was properly lighted.

The chief witnesses were Brame, Anderson, McDonell, Warwick, Rustomjee and a syce.

The evidence on the other side consists of certain persons, one of them a bearer of the contractor Nolit Mohun, and six other persons, Sumshee, Pertab, Sudir. &c., servants of Mr. Gubboy, whose house is close to the excavation, and who were called to depose chiefly on this, that shortly after the accident the plaintiff's syce made certain statements, or that there were lights on the spot that are alleged by plaintiff's witnesses not to have been there.

I have no doubt the preponderance of testimony is quite on the side of the plaintiff, both in respect of position and intelligence of witnesses examined, the manner in which they gave their [453] evidence, and as to some of them there is an entire absence of bias and every possible guarantee of independence.

The accident took place close upon 7 o'clock, a little after 7, as to this there is no doubt.

Mr. Brame was on the spot three to five minutes to 7, and narrowly escaped from a similar accident. He says: "I remember an opening in the road on the evening and prior to that, I know Monohur Dass' tank opposite to Gubboy's house and Lindsay Street. The excavation was on the north-east corner of the tank at right angles with the road, as nearly as possible opposite Gubboy's house, it extended from nearly to quite half of the carriage way from the tank side. I saw it in the evening, I nearly tumbled into it, that's how I saw it, I saw it driving home in a brougham, while driving along my coachman suddenly pulled up, nearly threw the horse on his haunches, and threw me forward in the carriage, I found that my horse had his forefeet on the top of the mound of earth excavated from this opening, I got out of the carriage, it was dark, it was about five to three minutes to 7 I should say, I got out because I was afraid of the horse being restive, and getting down the excavation; I am certain there were no lights. I looked particularly to that point, because I thought it was a great shame the opening should be left open, and I looked to see if there were lights. There were no bamboos or any fencing that I could see. I saw no one by to warn people when I was there. At the time I lived at No. 3, Humayoon Place, just beyond Lindsay Street, between 17 and 18 Chowringhee, I did not see the accident, the subject of this suit; I had no sooner got to my house about 200 or 300 yards off, when I heard shouts and saw people running about three minutes after I had left the spot.

"To Court—There was no fog that evening.

"My animal is very steady and does not go fast, we were driving rather slowly, the brougham was a heavy one, and to that I attribute not getting into the excavation myself. My horse's forelegs were on the mound, which was immediately on either side of the excavation.

"The mound was about four feet high."

His evidence was not shaken, and in cross-examination, as [454] is generally the case with a straightforward witness who generally strengthens the case, he shows in most natural and proper way the fact of the evidence which he gave coming to the ear of the plaintiff; upon that evidence alone I should find it difficult to disbelieve plaintiff's case, unless it were clearly established that after Mr. Brame's accident and before the plaintiff's, lights were put up. There is no such evidence, and the evidence of Messieurs Anderson and McDonell, interested no doubt, and of Messieurs Rustomjee and Warwick places beyond doubt that the place was not lit up.

And when I refer to Mr. Anderson's evidence, I am glad to note there was a common expression amongst all the counsel in the case of consideration and respect for the manner in which he gave it; his evidence given in simply straightforward and modest manner must convince any one who heard it of his good faith.

Mr. Anderson says : " On 23rd March last year, I was driving that evening with Mr. McDonell in a tom-tom or gig ; Mr. McDonell was driving. We were going in the direction of Dhurumtollah along Chowringhee Road between 7 and 8 in the evening. We had driven round the Strand and got on Chowringhee Road, corner of Park Street, and were going in the direction of No. 15, Chowringhee.

" I first became aware of the accident before I fell into the drain , the sudden stoppage of the gig first brought it to my notice. A mound of earth thrown up on the road stopped the gig. Before the gig was stopped by the mound of earth, I have no reason to think anything was wrong. There was no fence round this mound of earth and no lights. I saw no light at all round this mound before I fell into the hole. The nearest light I observed was on the tramway side of the road, on the maidan side. The light was about opposite the entrance of Gubboy's house and a little in on the Tramway. I saw the light just as I was being pitched out , it was not visible before in the direction we were coming. I presume the earth thrown up from the drain obscured it. I fell into this drain , I was rendered unconscious for some time , when I regained consciousness, I saw the horse's feet on top of me, the horse fell across the drain. Mr McDonell and [453] some natives assisted me out , they got me out before they got the horse out ; the horse's feet were not on me, but on top of me, I mean above me, across the drain , he did not fall into the drain at that time. I was pulled out with the assistance of natives and walked home about 100 yards." Then he states the nature of the injuries caused and of the consequence of them. " Dr. Comley first came to see me. He would not undertake my treatment, but advised me to go up to the hospital. I had my wounds bathed and started off to the hospital in about half an hour , my chief injuries were about the head, I suffered very much pain from them. I was in the hospital from 23rd March to 1st May. Dr Birch and the house surgeon attended me, I forgot his name. The house surgeon dressed my wounds the day I arrived. I remained in the hospital until 1st May. Dr Birch took the case up on the following morning, and remained in regular attendance until I was discharged. I was unfit for work when I left the hospital. I went a sea voyage to Singapore. I was away five weeks , sometimes now I feel ill effects from my accident , I feel irritation, nervous irritation and headache. I feel the irritation in the region of the forehead. I sometimes suffer from headache. I have been very nervous since the accident. I feel startled by a sound, my memory is not so good as it was before. Things I have been told I forget soon after. I can't say I was nervous before this accident.

" I was not subject to headache before the accident, I have them now frequently.

To Court—

" I have headaches now frequently. I was daily in the habit of driving about before this accident occurred. I was never nervous in driving before the accident , since the accident I have not driven about so much, I am very much more nervous now."

He was cross-examined as to the horse and the ride and extent of ground traversed, and nothing of any consequence was elicited to shake his evidence. In one portion he says : " At the time of the accident, I can't say at what rate we were going , the horse was regularly used and coming back from a long journey , we had no reason to suspect any restiveness."

[456] Cross-examined, he did say that it was a horse which required a little caution to handle, but there is nothing to raise any reasonable suspicion that the horse was restive. McDonell who is no doubt interested in establishing the case, as he has also brought a suit, says "that he was first aware of the hole when the horse fell into it, with its head on the other side and its forelegs in the hole. It jumped over a mound, a slight mound, it jumped over this, it was a mound of earth. I can't say how high the mound was, there was no fence round the hole, nor round or on the mound. I saw no light before. I approached, I saw a light after, it was the extreme end of the west end of the hole, on the tramway line at the maidan end of the mound, on the ground. It was obscured by the mound, it was on the north side of the mound. I saw no other light in the neighbourhood of the hole. I could not speak as to any light near Gubboy's house. There was no light on the other side of the tramway on the maidan side, there was another hole on that side. I observed this light after the accident, it was an ordinary street lamp such as the Municipality use for street repairs. I was thrown over the hole when the accident occurred, I could not see down the hole, but I heard plaintiff talk. I did not assist in getting him out, I heard his voice from the hole." Then being cross-examined as to his driving, he says he has been able to drive all his life in Morayshire, and says he has driven this horse and another horse, a country-bred. He is a gentleman, who from his early training, would seem pretty sure to have learned how to drive. He says "I saw no lights round this excavation before the accident. I saw two lights after the accident. I did not examine them thoroughly, but I saw the one next the excavation which was an ordinary lamp. The one I saw was on the maidan side, we were going to the north, it was at the west side at the extreme end, the one near the excavation. I mean it was neither north or south, but at the west end."

This is important as regards the most plausible piece of evidence, that plan put in under the circumstances so surprising by Baboo Prossono Banerjee. That plan represents the mounds as crowded by gigantic lamps and conspicuously placed, so as to attract the attention of the most casual bystander. It will be noticed that [457] both the witnesses I have referred to unquestionably indicate the real place of such lamps as were there. On the ground at each end of the excavation, concealed from persons coming from north and south. I don't think it necessary to deal further with McDonell's first cross-examination.

In cross-examination by the Advocate-General, McDonell says that the accident was just after seven, he had his attention fixed on the horse, he required looking after, was not pulling. The phrase required looking after is ambiguous, but the whole effect of the evidence shows that there is nothing in the spirit or speed of the horse, or in the circumstances, to show anything of exceptional kind. He says our lamps were lit. Then in re-examination he adds a fact, which is not immaterial, not very important, that he first drove this horse in April 1882.

The next witness is of considerable importance, there is no suggestion against him, he lives on the spot, is familiar with that part of the road, which he contemplates from his verandah for an hour after sunset daily. It is Mr. Rustomjee. He says he was sitting in the verandah, when it was light, he could see the excavation, that is material, because he saw what went on and saw it at a distance at which Mr. Warwick is supposed not to have seen it. Mr. Rustomjee was at a height looking down at a scene which he was familiar with, which may account for this difference between the two witnesses as to this. "I was sitting in the verandah and I saw no lights at the place of the excavation; there were two mounds on either side, there were no lighted lamps on those mounds; to the best of my knowledge there was no fence round the excavation or the mounds. The excavation was opposite Mr. Gubboy's house, one of his lamps was lit, that was the public lamp; there is another lamp put up by Gubboy and connected with his house, that was not lit. I don't remember if there was any moon. Just as the plaintiff's trap fell into the hole my attention was drawn to it (he means the plaintiff's trap) I had not noticed it before."

Part of defendant's case was to suggest the existence of light from the moon, from Gubboy's lamps, and other lights not supplied by them, but suggested as being then alight, either to suggest that such lighting as it was their duty to make was not necessary, or to found a supposition of negligent driving.

[458] The moon and Gubboy's lamp are unworthy of consideration.

When Mr. Rustomjee's attention was attracted to the trap just as it fell down, it was not very dark. He says he was sitting facing south, he was positive that there were no lights at the time of the accident, they were brought immediately after the accident.

I am satisfied this was so, whether the person in charge, if any, neglected his duty is immaterial. I am satisfied that the mound was insufficiently lit, that as Mr. Rustomjee says the coolies brought the lights after the accident and that his account of what he says he saw is correct. No one who heard his evidence can doubt his good faith or good memory. Mr. Warwick gives similar evidence. I refer to the passage where he says he could not see the mounds from Rustomjee's house. There is little doubt from Rustomjee's elevation that he would be more likely to see the mounds than Warwick who was on the road. Mr. Rustomjee had been looking at the place for some time; he was familiar with the scene and would probably be able to distinguish to a later period the familiar outlines of the mounds as they gradually faded into the darkness of the evening.

Having read Warwick's evidence I do not at all think it touches Rustomjee's accuracy.

Mr. Anderson had just been taken up from the hole, some coolies had pulled him out. There was no fence whatever round the hole or mound. There was no light round the hole, but there was one on the other side of the tramway line near another hole. I saw no light by the pit itself. He went away down the hole.

It is to be observed that in the written statement of the defendant Corporation it is stated that at first the Chairman was led to suppose that negligence had been committed, but subsequently came to a different conclusion, and that the mound was lit by two lamps. For the defendant contractor there is the evidence of Saboo, trusted bearer of the contractor (his domestic servant). "I am employed in the office in Ezra street, in the service of Nolit Mohun Chatterjee. I know the tank opposite Gubboy's house. I put up a fence at the excavation and placed and lighted some lamps. I put the fence on the east side of the trench, the east side was opposite Gubboy's gate or the road. I put two drainage pipes at the east end of the trench and placed two small bamboos across, [459] one on the top end of the pipes and one at the middle. I tied the two cross bamboos to the pipes with ropes. There were two other bamboos, one on the north and one on the south side of the trench. They were lying on the mounds and the ends were tied to drainage pipes. I did this about a year ago. I was not present when the accident took place, I heard of it afterwards. I did this work before I heard of the accident in the office. I can't say the time of day I did this; it was sunlight, about noon, when I did this. I heard of the accident the next day, I spoke of lighting the lamps, I lighted lamps."

He says he lighted six lamps at this place and describes in detail making of fence around the mound ; and so the other witnesses are called. Shumsher Syce says he saw a syce holding the horse by the head, and the syce told him the Sahib was coming very fast and could not pull up, and he noticed four lights on top of the mound. If that be true, the lights were brought after the accident. If it be true that the syce said that the Sahib was going fast, it is evidence which creates no impression on my mind in the face of the other evidence in the case. It is denied that the syce did say it, if he did, he said, as I believe, what was not true.

Nukken says the same thing ; these are witnesses of that sort of intelligence with whom the border line of recollection and fancy are very vaguely defined

When placing the evidence of these witnesses side by side with the plaintiff's it really has no weight whatever, I shall not further deal with it, had their intelligence been equal to their efforts they would have presented their story with more definiteness. I must now refer to Prosonno Banerjee's evidence and to the map which he produced, and which, relying on his position, the learned counsel for the plaintiff allowed to be put in without cross-examination.

He said " My name is Prosonno Coomar Banerjee I am an Honorary Assistant Engineer, Public Works Department. I was Sub-Engineer last year. When the accident happened, I was Sub-Engineer I know the scene of the accident. I made a plan this is it I made it myself, an assistant sketched it in my immediate presence I measured the distances, I believe it to be a correct plan. I am skilled in this work. I have been 28 years an Engineer (plan put in, Exhibit 3) I supervised the work on [460] behalf of the Calcutta Division. I supervised it to the eastern limit of the boundary of the maidan. I saw the excavation on the road that was to the east of the eastern boundary of the maidan. I saw it on the 23rd March 1882, shortly before candle light It was say ten minutes to 7 o'clock" (suggesting that a plan tendered under his authority must carry conviction), the plan was not objected to, and I must take care that it shall not mislead. It represents the mounds crowned by lamps not represented by their natural size and in accordance with the proposition that the lamps were placed at the mounds He said he visited the scene of the accident just before and the day after He says, " I took the measurement of the plan, the measurements were drawn by me. the lanterns I purposely made big to show them."

After the plan was so put in on this evidence, it appeared that the mounds were drawn by him long before the accident, and that the plan has no real value whatever. He says, " I made the plan about 14 days or a month ago, I made the plans from memory, the mounds by guess and figurative, the bamboo was from memory " A plan ought not to be produced under such circumstances without suggesting to the Court a word of the character of the preparation with which it is made It is to be regretted that he did not reflect that such a map is likely to be accepted by this Court upon the faith of his positive and presumed scrupulousness, and ought not to have been handed in without a warning that it was made as it was.

I find then that the mounds and the excavation were not protected, and were a dangerous obstruction on the road What are the liabilities of the parties? Nolit is clearly liable. An argument was founded on case in Atkinson v. Newcastle, &c., Company (L.R., 2 Ex. D., 441), which deals with the question of liability of one on whom statutory obligation is imposed. I do not think that case applies. Then, from the Act, it was clear that a right of action was not intended to arise upon the breach of the statutory duty imposed. The duty then was solely the creature of the statute in question. I have no doubt the liability of a person obstructing does not depend on statute, although by s. 214 a liability is created, that [461] is, cumulative, and did not take away the ordinary liability. I need not therefore deal further with it. As to Secretary of State. In my opinion the Secretary of State is not liable, not on the grounds of high prerogative set up by the Advocate-General. If the case had depended on that point alone, I should have followed the case of The P. & O. Company v. Secretary of State (Bourke's Rep. A. O. C., 166).

In this case I think the Secretary of State is not liable, because he comes within the established rule that one who employs a contractor to do what is perfectly legal must be presumed to employ the contractor to do this in a legal way.

There is nothing to lead to the supposition that the contractor is a servant of the Secretary of State, and not being so, he comes within that rule.

If a man employs another to do a thing in its nature dangerous, those cases are authoritative for the proposition that he may be liable for damage caused by the doing of that act. It is agreed that the digging of a trench in the public road is so dangerous that the employment of a person to do that in itself renders the employer liable, if harm results.

In this case under s. 213 the opening of the road was perfectly legal. The precise point was dealt with in a case of Peachy v. Roland (13 C. B. O. S., 182), to which I shall presently refer. The other cases are Percival v. Hughes (9 Q. B. D., 441), Bower v. Peate (1 Q. B. D., 321), Gray v. Pullen (5 B. & S., 970; 34 L. J. Q. B., 265). Percival v. Hughes (9 Q. B. D., 441) in which C.J. HOLKER dissented, was the case of a building owner, the owner of the house. In that case there came in the consideration of the right to support, which is of a nature to create special obligation, so also Bower v. Peate (1 Q. B. D., 321) stands on same footing. The act done was in itself of a nature to create damage to the adjoining house, unless something additional was done, which it was held to be the business of the employer to have done. No doubt the cases run [462] rather fine. Gray v. Pullen (5 B. & S., 970) was a case of statutory liability, and took the plea of special liability. In this case I think the general rule of law applied in Peachy v. Roland (13 C. B. O. S., 182) should be applied, in that case A employed B to construct a drain in a public highway, B employed C to fill in the earth over the brick-work and to carry away the surplus. C, in performing his work, left the earth raised so much above the level of the road that D driving by in the dark was thereby upset, and sustained injury. Held that A was not responsible for the negligence of C.

I think I ought to follow that case. I do not think there is anything in the nature of the work the contractor was engaged to do, so necessarily dangerous as to bring the case within Percival v. Hughes (9 Q. B. D., 441) and the other cases cited. It is not worth while to notice that the marginal note was unfavourably criticized in a later judgment.

Next question is the liability of the Corporation. I am of opinion that the Corporation is liable. The leading case is now, I think, The Borough of Bathurst v. Macpherson (4 App. Cas., 256; s.c., 48, L. J., P. C., 61). Much of the argument on behalf of the Corporation was founded on the two classes of English cases which appear also to have been cited in the Borough of Bathurst case. Those cases are dealt with by Sir B. PEACOCK, at pp. 268-9.

I think the present case stands, with respect to those authorities, in the same position as the Bathurst case. and the observation of their Lordships apply here. The judgment, after dealing with the classes of cases referred to, goes on: "This Municipality has original and not merely transferred powers, and therefore does not fall within the class of cases referred to. It more nearly resembles the public body held liable to an action in Hartnall v. The Ryde Commissioners (4 B. & S., 361) a decision which has been recognised as sound law in several later cases. It was there held that the statute creating the Commissioners having expressly imposed upon them the obligation of repairing the roads, they were liable not only to [463] be indicted for a breach of that duty, but to be sued by anybody who could show, that by reason of such breach of duty he had sustained particular and special damage. In their Lordships' opinion no substantial distinction can be taken between that case and the present, in which the duty, for the reason above stated, has been found to exist, though not expressly imposed by statute "

Under the Act, s. 189, the Corporation has vested in it all public streets in the Town, and under the Act they shall, "so far as the Municipal funds permit, cause the public roads to be maintained and repaired, and for such purpose may do all things necessary for the public safety and convenience "

The word "may" in this section has a compulsory force. It is an enabling word where the thing to be done is for the public benefit The principle is referred to in 5 App. Cas., p. 225

Therefore, "the Commissioners shall cause the public streets, etc., and for that purpose shall do all things necessary, etc."

It has been argued that no duty is cast expressly on the Corporation to fence and light an excavation and mound made by third persons by their permission, and the two following sections are relied on. Section 213 is as follows —

"No person shall deposit any building material or make a hole in any public street without the permission of the Commissioners in writing, and when such permission is granted to any person he shall, at his own expense, cause such materials or such hole to be sufficiently fenced and enclosed, until the materials are removed, or the hole is filled up, and otherwise made secure, and shall cause the same to be sufficiently lighted at night " And s. 252 —

"When the pavement or surface of any public street, or when any sewer or drain shall be opened or broken up by the Commissioners, they shall, with all convenient speed, complete the work on account of which the same shall have been broken up, and fill in the ground and make good the pavement and surface and the sewer or drain so opened or broken up, and carry away the rubbish occasioned thereby, and shall in the meantime cause the place where pavement or surface shall be so opened or broken up to be fenced and guarded and sufficiently lighted during the night."

It is argued that as express duty cast on the Commissioners by s. 252, no duty could be held imposed on them other than [464] the duty expressed in s. 252, and that they are only liable in respect of unfenced or unlighted obstructions made by themselves. But I do not think the provisions of s. 252 should be read so as to abrogate by implication the duty cast on them by s. 191 in words much stronger than those contained in the section construed in the Bathurst case.

In that case the accident was caused by a drain made by the Commissioners and which was not kept in repair, and became damaged and caused injury. It might be argued that there is a difference between the case of persons who are bound to keep a road in repair and who are negligent in performing that duty in respect of constructions made by themselves, and the case where the negligence imputed is the not repairing structures or the not removing or guarding obstructions not made by themselves, and the duty charged is that of guarding the public and individuals from danger in respect of structures or obstructions not made by themselves. I am not prepared to hold that the distinction exists when the duty is created by language such as s. 191. The distinction cannot be drawn here so as to absolve the Corporation from liability. I shall deal with their position as owners presently, but being charged with statutory duties, they are, I think, liable for individual damage caused by the neglect to fulfil them and an action will lie.

The Privy Council, in the Dathin case, after referring to White v. The Hindley Local Board of Health (L. R. 10 Q. B., 219), say at page 266 "In the present case the barrel drain, even if the property of it did not belong to the appellants, was not only made by the appellants, but the sole control and management of it were by the statute vested in them. and in their Lordships' view this circumstance threw upon them a duty of a similar kind to that which was held to exist in the case just cited

"Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the appellants, by reason of the construction of the drain, and their neglect to repair it whereby the dangerous hole was formed, which was left open and unfenced, caused a nuisance in the highway, for which they were liable to an indictment.

"This being so, their Lordships are of opinion that the Corporation [465] are also liable to an action at the suit of any person who sustained a direct and particular damage from their breach of duty." It is no doubt the case that in no part of the Act is a liability to indictment expressly imposed on the Commissioners for non-performance of their duty but having noticed that, I now proceed to the next point, namely, that the Commissioners are made by s. 189 owners of the roads in respect of which the duty to maintain and repair is imposed by s. 191.

It was not said in Russell v. The men of Devon (2 T. R., 667), that had the men of Devon been a judicial person an action would not lie, the principle was that there was no judicial person who could be sued

Now here, then, is an original duty created. Here then is a property vested in a legal person on whom that duty is cast by the Act. What is the position of the Commissioners who constitute that person, having the entire property, control and management of roads transferred to them, and being required by law to maintain them?

In Conby v. Will (4 C. B., 556, 27 L. J., C. P., 318) the position of an owner of a road, not a public road, is dealt with, the action was against a person who had put up a construction upon it, an accident arising to a person lawfully or by invitation or allurement, going along a road rendered dangerous.

At page 563, Chief Justice says "It has been contended by Mr Huddleston that the owners of the soil, and consequently also any person having leave and license from them, may, as against any other person using the way by the like leave and license, erect an obstruction thereon without incurring any responsibility for injury resulting therefrom, unless in the case of holding out any allurement or inducement to such other person to make use of the way. It seems to me that the very case from which the learned counsel seeks to distinguish this is the case now before us. The proprietors of the soil held out an allurement whereby the plaintiff was induced to come upon the place in question. they held out this road to all persons having occasion to proceed to the asylum as the means of access thereto. Could they have justified the placing an obstruction across the way, whereby an [466] injury was occasioned to one using the way by their invitation? Clearly they could not.

BYLES, J., says: "It seems to me that the rule of law is precisely the same in respect of a private way, whether by prescription or by license. If the exercise of that right be obstructed, the party injured thereby has a right of action, just the same as if the way had been a public one."

The position here is this as contrasted with persons in Corby v. Hill (4 C. B., 556, 27 L. J. C. P., 318). There the liability of owners of roads is described. Here the persons in question is made owner of roads for the purpose of doing what an owner is bound to do. As such owners, and in virtue of their office under the Act, they do hold out the roads to the individuals of which the public is composed, for the use of such persons, and as fit to be safely used by them, a consideration of the consequence of holding that the liability of the Corporation is limited to the not fencing or not lighting in those cases where the pavement of a public street or sewer has been broken up by them, renders it difficult to suppose that such was the intention of the Legislature. Would it be contended that if a road fell in, they ought not to be liable to repair it. The word "maintain" in the section applies more nearly than "repair" to the obligation in the present case.

I think it was the intention of the Act to require that the Commissioners should not be content with the liability imposed by s. 214 on those who break up the roads. It is intended for protection of the Corporation, but can't be treated as absolving them from the duty of keeping the road in a fit and proper state. The Commissioners are not, I think, entitled, by permitting others to open up the road as they did in this case, to free themselves from the obligation cast on them by the Act. They are not entitled to promote, or to authorize, or to permit, dangerous obstruction to roads entrusted to them. The want of lights is an incident rendering an obstruction in the road a dangerous one, an unlighted mound is in itself a dangerous obstruction, and without going so far as to hold that it is the duty of the Corporation themselves to hang lights, it is sufficient to hold generally that where there is a dangerous obstruction a fortiori when such dangerous obstruction [467] results from a permission accorded by them, they are liable for damage caused by it.

I, therefore, hold that the Corporation are liable to the plaintiff in this suit, as to damages, no authority has been cited on this point. The damages alleged are entirely beyond what the plaintiff could claim. Happily his health is, in the opinion of doctors, not permanently or grievously injured, that he has sustained some permanent injury I cannot doubt.

I cannot but consider that he must have suffered permanent injury. He is disfigured. Such an accident can't pass over without leaving a permanent effect on his nerves, it makes the man a different man from what he was before the accident, I treat with utmost respect, of course, the views of medical men, but I must treat the matter as a jurymen, and from my own opinion upon the matter, from the evidence before me, and from matters of knowledge common to all persons. In Dr. Phillip's case (4 Q. B. D., 406) COCKBURN, C.J., says. "But we think a jury cannot be said to take a reasonable view of the case unless they consider and take into account all the heads of damage in respect of which a plaintiff complaining of a personal injury is entitled to compensation. These are, the bodily injury sustained; the pain undergone, the effect on the health of the sufferer, according to its degree and its probable duration as likely to be temporary or permanent; the expense incidental to attempts to effect a cure or to lessen ; the amount of injury ; the pecuniary loss sustained through inability to attend to a profession or business, as to which again the injury may be of a temporary character, or may be such as to incapacitate the party for the remainder of his life."

It would be preposterous to take test of how much money a man would take to be operated on as this gentleman was.

Upon the whole, I am anxious not to assess damages to such an amount as would be unreasonable, but I can't help feeling a substantial sum is due.

I assess his damages, having regard to no pecuniary loss suffered, but for the pain suffered and length of time and distress and discomfort at Rs. 6,500.

[468] Next, as to costs. Who shall pay costs of the Secretary of State ? I have had great difficulty in the matter.

The Advocate-General contended that the Municipality had insisted on his being made a defendant and should pay his costs.

There is something in that suggestion, the ground on which I have decided in favour of the Secretary of State is, that he employed the contractor, not high prerogative. If I had decided on the latter ground, I should not have awarded costs. I shan't take that course here. On the whole, taking into consideration the character of the case and the nature of the defence, and that the Secretary of State was made defendant at the suggestion of the Corporation, I shall direct the plaintiff to pay the costs of the Secretary of State in the first place and recover them from the Corporation.

The decree will be against the Corporation and the contractor for Rs 6,500 with costs, plaintiff to pay costs of the Secretary of State and recover them from the Corporation.

The Corporation appealed.

Mr Evans and Mr. Trevelyan for the Appellants.

Mr. Evans.—Before the Corporation can be found liable it must be shown that a duty was imposed upon them, and a breach of that duty must be shown. If the accident happened without any negligence on their part, they would not be liable for it—see Hammond v. The Vestry of St. Pancras (L. R., 9 C.P., 316). There, as in this case, was a statutory duty imposed on the vestry—can it be said that we were negligent in giving permission to the Secretary of State to open the road—is it necessary that we should have persons ready to light up the excavation, if the Secretary of State failed to do so. There is no allegation that we had any intimation of the fact that there was insufficient lighting.

[GARTH, C.J.—You gave permission to the Secretary of State and you must show that you took proper precautions.]

I contend that unless we have done something which we ought not to have done, no action will lie against us.

[GARTH, C.J.—The question is whether you are not bound to see that the road is kept in a proper state, and were you doing your best to maintain the road, when the accident happened.]

[469] The breaking up of the road was lawful and the permission to do so was lawful, and the act of opening was lawful ; that being so, am I bound to take care that the lights were lighted.

My contention is (1) that I am not an insurer ; (2) that I am only liable for negligence. (3) that I am only bound, according to Hammond v. The Vestry of St. Pancras, to use ordinary care and diligence. This is not a failure to maintain; it was for the benefit of the public that the act should be done, and it is contemplated by Bengal Act IV of 1876.

I am not bound to go so far as to say that under any circumstances I should not be liable; but I rely on the fact that I was not bound to do anything, unless notice of the failure of the Secretary of State to light had been given me by the Police. It is not an indictable act to open a road, or repair a sewer; it is a necessary matter, contemplated by the Legislature and not a breach of a statutory obligation to maintain.

[GARTH, C. J.—If you break up the road you are bound to light. And you say that if you give permission to another to break up the road, you can get rid of your liability.]

Lighting has nothing to do with maintaining. It was the duty of the Commissioners to open the road; they were compelled to do so under the words of the Act. The Court below has overlooked the fact, the Secretary of State was liable under the Act to light the road. See s 213.

In Wilson v. Mayor and Corporation of Halifax (L. R., 3 Ex., 114), the section is similar to the section under Bengal Act IV of 1876, there it was held that a right of action does not arise in favour of an individual unless there has been culpable negligence, or an omission which amounts to an act of omission.

[GARTH, C. J.—I don't think Wilson v. The Mayor and Corporation of Halifax applies, as there are words in the section in this case which were not in the section of the English Act.]

Forbes v. The Lee Conservancy Board (L. R., 4 Ex. D., 116), the importance of the case is not in its being on all fours with our case on the facts, for it is not, but it brings out the general principles used in construing these Acts, i.e., that those charged with discretionary powers are not to be held liable by reason of non-feasance in the exercise of [470] those powers. It is also useful to show the meaning attached to several of the decisions.

In Geddis v. Proprietors of the Bann Reservoir (L. R., 3 App. Cases, 430, 455) the principle laid down is, that where a person does any dangerous thing on his own land, which by a statutory provision he is permitted to do, no action will lie against him for doing that which the Legislature has authorized, if it be done without negligence, although it does occasion damage, but an action does lie for doing that which the Legislature has authorized, if it be done negligently. There is no case which goes the length of holding that where permission is given under statutory powers to do a lawful thing, the party granting the permission is to be held liable for the misfeasance of the other. Lord HATTERLEY in his judgment in the above case, at p. 438, points out what ought to be considered in such cases as the present.

But even presuming there to be a general duty on the Corporation to look after the roads, I submit that the evidence clearly shows there was no negligence on our part, and that we discharged every general duty imposed upon us. There is evidence that the lamps were there between 5-30 and 5-45 that evening, standing on the side of the road ready to be lighted. The contractor was bound down by an agreement with us to keep up proper precautions as to lighting and fencing when the streets were taken up. Is the cutting a breach of the statutory duty to maintain, if not, then we can only be charged with nuisance; the questions resolve themselves into this, does liability attach to us because I gave permission to another to open the road and he acted negligently, or am I liable on my general duty, and were we guarantors for the lighting.

Mr. Trevelyan on the same side.—The mere fact that a breach of a statutory duty has caused damage is not enough to give a right of action to an individual—Atkinson v. Newcastle Gateshead Water Works Co. (L. R., 2 Ex. D., 441); except in one or two cases it is only the creation of the nuisance which gives the right of action Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board (L. R., 12 Ch. D., 102); Hartnall v. Ryde Commissioner (4 B. & S., 361) was a peculiar case; the Act provided that the Commis-[471]sioners should be liable for refusing or neglecting to repair Gibson v. The Mayor Alderman and Burgesses of Preston (L. R., 5 Q. B., 218). Young v. Davies (31 L. J., Ex. 250, 7 H. and N., 760) shows that a surveyor of highways is not liable to action. We should not have been ordered to pay the costs of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Hill for the respondents were not called upon, the Court suggesting to Mr. Pugh (who had previously on the 22nd January 1884 applied for a rule calling upon the Secretary of State to show cause why the plaintiff should not be allowed to appeal against him) that he should take the rule, and that if good cause was not shown against it, an opportunity would be given him to argue on behalf of the respondent, if necessary, on the appeal against the Secretary of State. The rule was granted on the affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney, who stated that he did not notice at the time the notice of appeal was served upon him that the Secretary of State had not been made a respondent. The rule came on for hearing on the 4th February 1884.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) shewed cause. Permission to do the work was given to the contractor by the Corporation at the requisition of the Secretary of State, but the Secretary of State was not allowed to do the work except by a contractor licensed by the Corporation. The rule should not be made absolute, first, because in the appeal against the plaintiff by the Corporation it would be of no use for the Corporation to say "I am not liable but another is," and, next, because the lower Court has ordered the costs of the Secretary of State to be paid through the plaintiff. If the costs had been given directly between the Corporation and the Secretary of State, then there might be a ground of appeal for the Corporation.

The suit was heard on the 12th March 1883 and judgment given on the 27th June 1883, the costs of the Secretary of State have already been paid amounting to Rs. 2,731-8. The decree of the lower Court was, "suit dismissed against Secretary of State with costs. Suit decreed in favour of plaintiff with costs against the Corporation, and liberty to plaintiff to add costs payable to Secretary of State to his costs recoverable from the Corporation." Notice of appeal was given on the 20th July 1883, and the last [472] day of appealing, therefore, was the 20th July, the Corporation appealed as late as they could; the notice was served on the plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Orr. Mr. Orr's affidavit stating that he did not observe that the Secretary of State was not a party respondent, and that he first became aware of the omission on the 8th January 1884 is no sufficient ground to allow him to add us now. It is too late now to appeal against the Secretary of State. Section 5 of the Limitation Act (corresponding with Order 57, Rule 6 of the Judicature Act) is the only section which might admit of the appeal being allowed after time, but the case of the International Financial Society v. City of Moscow Gas Company (L. R., 7 Ch. D., 242) shows that the facts of this case are not sufficient to allow permission to appeal to be granted.

Cunningham, J.—The case you cite was a mistake of the party and not of the attorney.]

That makes no difference. See Highton v. Treherne (48 L. J. Exch. 167), where the attorney thought he had more time to appeal in, and the suit had suffered from that error.

The Courts have favoured the view I am putting forward—see Collins v. The Vestry of Paddington (L. R., 5 Q. B. D., 368), there must be some misconduct on the part of the other side, or death or something of the kind to allow of the order being made, but mere negligence on the part of the appellant's attorney is not sufficient. See page 25 of Rivaz on Limitation and the case of Carter v. Stubbs (50 L. J. C. L., 4). The case of Zaibunnissa Bibi v. Kulsum Bibi (I. L. R., 1 All., 250) is strongly in my favour, an error of calculation of time allowed for appealing is not sufficient cause under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

Mr. Pugh in support of the rule.—We say that permission to do the work was given to the Secretary of State, and that he employed the contractor, who applied for permission to open the road. With reference to the bearing of the order, as to costs, I say it is an order in effect that the Corporation should pay the costs of the Secretary of State, it is the old form of order that has been made use of—Rudow v. Great Britain Mutual Life Assurance Company (L. R., 17 Ch. D., 610).

[473] [GARTH, C.J.—Supposing Mr. Orr did not notice that the Secretary of State had not been made a respondent, he had ample time to make the discovery before the end of the year, it is not in the discretion of the Court to allow you to appeal, we must follow the Limitation Act.]

The case of Carter v. Stubbs (50 L. J. C. L., 4) was a question of appealing from an order of the Master, the defendant under the order was to file certain interrogatories, or in default the suit was to be dismissed, the suit was dismissed through the failure of the plaintiff to file his answer in time through some slip. I wish to show that the Court decided that it was not right that a man should be deprived of the limit of his litigation simply from a slip of the solicitor's clerk.

[GARTH, C.J.—Under the Judicature Act the Courts have a discretion, under the Limitation Act we have none, how do you account for the time between the 8th January and the 22nd January? Mr. Orr does not make his application till the 22nd, he ought to have come to the Court at once.]

Time must be given him to consult counsel, as to the case of Collins v. The Vestry of Paddington (L. R., 5 Q. B. D., 368) Lord Baggally only makes certain observations on general rules laid down by Lord Justice BRAMWELL, he does not say that the rule laid down was wrong. Looking at the question as to whether sufficient cause has been shown, the Court must consider what will be the effect of refusing me leave to appeal. As to the question of the Court of Appeal making the Secretary of State a party to this appeal under s. 582 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court would not be fettered by the Limitation Act in so doing. Then as to the question of the payment of costs as between co-defendants; the old form of order is no longer necessary. Child v. Stenning (L. R., 11 Ch. D., 82) and Rudow v. Great Britain Mutual Life Assurance Company (L. R., 17 Ch. D., 610).

Judgments were delivered by GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.

Garth, C.J.—This suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendants for injuries which he sustained in consequence of an excavation having been dug in Chowringhee Road in the execution of certain works, and left after dark in a dangerous condition.

[474] The plaintiff and a friend were driving a horse and gig along the road, and there being no sufficient lights or fences to prevent the accident the plaintiff was thrown from the gig into the excavation and sustained very serious injury.

The suit was originally brought against the Commissioners of the town of Calcutta, and the defendant Nolit Mohun Chatterjee who was the contractor employed to execute the work. But upon the Commissioners' submitting to the Court in their written statement that if any one was liable for the accident it was the Secretary of State for India or the contractor, the plaint was amended, and the Secretary of State was made a defendant.

At the trial, however, the learned Judge dismissed the suit against the Secretary of State, and gave a decree against the other defendants for Rs. 6,500 damages, from which the appellants (the Commissioners) have appealed to this Court.

Their counsel here have confined their argument entirely to the question of legal liability. They contend that under the circumstances the Commissioners had nothing to do with the work that was in progress, and that, whatever negligence might have been committed by others, they were in no way answerable for it.

In order to understand their view of the matter, it is necessary to explain how the works came to be executed, and why the Secretary of State was made a party.

The tanks on the maidan, as well as the maidan itself, on the east of Chowringhee Road, are the property of the Government and in charge of the Public Works Department.

One of these tanks opposite Mr. Gubboy's house, called "Monohur Dass' tank," was frequently overflowed in the rainy season, by which the maidan and footpaths became flooded. An application had therefore been made by the Government to the Commissioners to allow a pipe from the tank to be connected with the main sewer under Chowringhee Road, for the purpose of carrying off the surplus water from the tank.

This application was granted, but upon the usual condition that one of the contractors, who are licensed by the Commissioners to carry out such works, should be employed by the Government, and accordingly the defendant Nolit Mohun, who is one of such contractors, was so employed, and it was upon his [475] application on behalf of the Government that the leave was granted by the Corporation to open up the road.

The work was commenced on the morning of the 23rd of March 1882; a large excavation was made from the east side to the centre of the road during the day, which was left open during the night with a mound of earth three or four feet in height thrown up alongside of the excavation. The accident occurred after dark, a little after 7 P.M. No lights were there at the time to warn passengers of the danger, although two or three lanterns (unlighted) appear to have been placed near the eastern end of the excavation and nothing like a proper fence had been erected to prevent accidents.

The learned counsel for the appellants very prudently abstained from reopening before us the question which was raised in the Court below, as to the sufficiency of the fencing and lighting, but I think it right to say, by way of warning for the future, that, in my opinion, very different precautions ought to be taken on such occasions to secure the safety of the public, from those which were taken in this instance. A rough but strong bamboo fence of five or six feet high could easily be put up on both sides of the excavation at little or no expense, whenever such works are executed in a public street: and I consider it to be culpable negligence to allow an excavation of this nature to remain open at night in such a street (however useful or laudable its purpose may be) without sufficient protection being provided against accidents.

We have now to decide whether the lower Court was right in holding the appellants liable to the plaintiff.

The Commissioners of the town of Calcutta are incorporated by Beng. Act IV of 1876. By s. 189 of that Act all the public streets in the town (of which Chowringhee Road, the street in question, is one) are vested in them, and s. 191 provides that "the Commissioners shall, so far as the Municipal Fund permits, from time to time, cause the public streets to be maintained and repaired, and for such purpose may do all things necessary for the public safety and convenience."

There is no question here as to sufficiency of funds. The Commissioners have ample funds for maintaining and repairing [476] the streets, and for doing all that is generally necessary to secure the public safety and convenience.

It seems to me, therefore, that they were bound to maintain this street, and for that purpose to do what was necessary for the safety of the public. The last clause of the section only expresses what the law would imply without it, namely, that for the purpose of maintaining the street the Commissioners should have power to do all that was necessary for the public safety, and I think that in allowing an excavation to be made in the street, without taking proper steps, or seeing that proper steps were taken to protect the public from accident, they were guilty of breach of duty, for which they are liable to the plaintiff.

This seems to be entirely in accordance with the law upon this subject, as laid down in The Borough of Bathurst v. Macpherson (L. R., 4 App. Cas., 256), Gibbs v. The Trustees of the Liverpool Docks (3 H. N., 164) and other cases cited in Addison on Torts, 4th edition, 740.

But the Commissioners contend that this rule does not apply to them, because they were guilty of no negligence. They say that they did not make the excavation, and were not aware that it was insufficiently fenced or lighted; and that although it was made by their permission, it was only right and proper that the permission should have been granted, because the object of it was a reasonable one, and for the public benefit.

They say, moreover, that the negligence complained of did not consist in making the excavation (which was a proper thing to do, and was done in a proper way), but on the omission to light and fence it, which was a duty imposed by the Act upon the Government.

Section 213 of the Act provides that when permission is given by the Commissioners to make a hole in a street, the person to whom such permission is given shall fence and enclose it at his own expense, and s. 522 makes it the duty of the Commissioners to fence and light, whenever they open up the road. They say, therefore, that the Government is answerable for not properly fencing and lighting the excavation in this instance.

[477] This contention directly raises, what appears to me to be the only arguable point in the case, namely, whether the fact of the Commissioners giving permission to other persons to open up the streets, although for a perfectly proper purpose, relieves the Commissioners themselves from their statutory duty under s. 191.

Mr. Evans went so far as to contend that the Commissioners were bound to give permission to the Government as they are bound under s. 220 to give permission to persons, who wish to connect their drainage system with the common sewer. But this, I think, was not so. It was undoubtedly right and reasonable under the circumstances for the Commissioners to give the permission, but, at the same time, it was optional for them to give it or not.

This, however, does not, in my opinion, affect the question whether the fact of permission being given, coupled with the other provisions of the Act, has the effect of relieving the Commissioners from their obligations under s 191

I think that it does not, and that if it did, the public would often be placed in a position of considerable peril. It constantly happens that the persons to whom permission is thus given are householders and others of very slender means, and the so-called contractors, who are licensed by the Commissioners to do the work, are generally in small way of business; so that if the Commissioners could relieve themselves of liability by thus shifting it upon irresponsible persons, the public, in the event of accidents, would be wholly without redress.

It was argued that it might make a difference in the liability of the Commissioners whether they gave permission to open the roads to responsible or to irresponsible persons, but I think we have no right to construe the law in that way. It cannot be that the duty of the Commissioners under s. 191 is different in the one class of cases from what it is in the other.

I consider that under that section the Commissioners are bound, so far as the streets are concerned, to protect the rights of the public, and they ought to be especially careful, when those rights are interfered with by their permission, for collateral purposes, to see that what they have allowed to [478] be done does not cause any greater danger or inconvenience than is absolutely necessary.

I, therefore, consider that the Court below was right in holding the Commissioners liable.

I am bound to say that I feel more difficulty with regard to the order which has been made as to the Secretary of State's costs. The learned Judge considered that as the Secretary of State was not a defendant, in the first instance, and as he was made a defendant, only because the Commissioners in their written statement suggested that the Government was liable, these costs ought to be paid by the Commissioners.

He, therefore, ordered that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the Secretary of State in the first instance, and that the Commissioners should repay those costs to the plaintiff.

Mr Pugh has referred us to a case of Child v. Stenning (L. R., 11 Ch. D., 82) upon this subject which he contends is an authority in favour of the learned Judge's order.

It seems to me, however, that the circumstances of that are different from those with which we are now dealing, and I feel bound to say that I have great doubt as to the propriety of the order in question, but as my learned brother is prepared to confirm it, and as the order itself, assuming the Secretary of State to have been rightly relieved from liability, is substantially a just one, I shall not express any dissent from the judgment.

This appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

It only remains now that we should decide the rule which has been obtained against the Secretary of State.

Mr. Pugh, when this appeal was first called on, applied to us on the part of the plaintiff for a rule, calling upon the Secretary of State to show cause, why, notwithstanding the delay which has occurred, the plaintiff should not be allowed to prefer an appeal against the Government

He explained to us, with good reason, that so long as his client was sure of obtaining his damages and costs from the Commissioners, he was quite content to leave matters as they were, and incur no further expense in appealing against the Secretary of [479] State, but that as an appeal to this Court had been made by the Commissioners, it might be that the Commissioners would be relieved from liability, and that in that case the plaintiff would be without remedy, seeing that the other defendant, Nolit Mohun Chatterjee, was a man of no means.

We thought, however, that the delay, which had occurred, presented a great difficulty in the way of our granting this rule, so we determined to postpone Mr. Pugh's application until we had heard the present appeal.

The case having then been argued, we considered that if there were no insuperable objection to Mr. Pugh's application, the justice of the case required that the appeal should proceed against the Secretary of State.

I confess I had serious doubt myself, whether, having regard to the provisions of s. 213, the case should have been dismissed against the Secretary of State, and I had also serious doubt, whether under any circumstances the Secretary of State ought to have had his costs

We, therefore, thought it right to grant Mr. Pugh a rule, calling upon the Secretary of State to show cause why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to appeal against him.

This rule has now been argued, and we feel bound, though with great regret, to discharge it

If the question had been one for our discretion we certainly should have allowed the appeal.

The appellant had good reason for not appealing in the first instance, and it was only reasonable that he should wish to appeal when there was a chance of the Commissioners being relieved from liability; and the justice of the case, as I said before, was in favour of the whole case against all the defendants being fully discussed.

We consider, however, that, having regard to the language of the Limitation Act, we have no discretion in the matter. The plaintiff was bound to appeal within twenty days from the date of the decree, and before he could relieve himself from this obligation, he was bound to satisfy us (under s. 5) that he had a sufficient cause for not prosecuting the appeal within that period.

[480] We cannot say that any sufficient cause in point of law has been shown, and we must consequently discharge the rule

As we ourselves, however, suggested to Mr. Pugh, that he should take his rule, in order that, if possible, complete justice might be done between the parties, we think it right to make no order as to costs.

Cunningham, J.—I concur in thinking that the Original Court was right in holding that the Corporation is bound, in virtue of its general powers and duties under the Act, to take the necessary steps for keeping the public roads in a safe condition, and that its duty in this respect is not impliedly abrogated, in cases in which permission to make a hole is given under s. 213 by the provisions in that section, and s. 214 which impose a duty of fencing, enclosing and lighting holes on the person who is permitted to make them; nor by the provision in s. 252 as to the duties of the Corporation when streets are broken up or drains opened by the Commissioners. It was contended in appeal that as the Act empowers the Corporation to give permission to make holes, and imposes on the person so permitted the duty of fencing and lighting them, all that the Corporation was bound to do was to use a proper discretion in granting permission, and a reasonable care in seeing that the person, permitted to make the hole was complying with the law. In both these respects the Corporation had, it was urged, fulfilled its duty, the Secretary of State was clearly a proper person to have permission, and it was shown that reasonable precautions had been taken for securing the proper lighting of the hole. This argument appears to me to admit of two answers. In the first place the power to give permission to make holes in the road, and the duty imposed on the person making them to fence and light, does not, I think, relieve the Municipality from its general liability under the Act to keep the roads in a safe condition; and in the next place I do not think that reasonable precautions were taken in this case, because, whatever may have been done as to lighting, it is clear, on the evidence, that there was no adequate fencing and enclosing, and this was an omission which might easily have been observed and guarded against by the Municipal authorities.

[481] It was further contended that a mere breach of a statutory duty occasioning injury does not necessarily give rise to an action for damages; but that rule has never been held to apply in cases in which the breach has been one of a specific duty imposed in favour of the plaintiff, such as, in my opinion, there was in the present case. I think, accordingly, that there was here a negligent breach of duty on the part of the Corporation, and that the plaintiff was entitled to sue for damages occasioned by that breach.

I also think that there are no grounds for interfering with the order of the Original Court as to costs. The defendant Corporation in their written statement pleaded that they were in no way liable for the injuries occasioned to the plaintiff, but that, if any one was liable, it was either the Secretary of State or the contractor. Thereupon the plaintiff added the Secretary of State as a party to the suit. The Original Court having found that the Corporation is liable, and that the Secretary of State is not, it seems to me just that the Corporation, who put the Secretary of State forward as the proper defendant, should pay the costs which the improper addition has occasioned. A private person who seeks his remedy in consequence of having been injured by a gross act of neglect in maintaining the roads of the Corporation in a safe condition, may reasonably infer that such a body as the Corporation will not raise an unsustainable defence, or attempt to get rid of its liability by throwing it on a person who is not legally liable, and the plaintiff, having on the strength of the defendant Corporation's plea, added the Secretary of State, may with justice be allowed to recover from the Corporation the costs which that improper joinder occasioned. The powers, as to costs, conferred by Chapter XVIII of the Code are extremely wide, and the observations of the Master of the Rolls in Child v Stenning (L. R., 11 Ch. Div., 82) seem to justify the principle on which the present order has been made.

Appeal dismissed.

[On Appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh]

Legal Construction of Will—Devise of taluq— The Oudh Estates' Act, I of 1869—Requirement of registration— Acceleration of remainder on failure of life estate.

A gift in remainder, expectant on the termination of an estate for life, does not fail, but is accelerated, by reason of the gift of such prior life estate not taking effect.

The principle of the decision in Lamson v. Lamson (5 De Gex, M. & G., 754, 18 Beav., 1) held applicable to a will made by a Hindu testator.

A taluqdar, whose taluq was entered in the third of the six lists prepared in conformity with s. 8 of "The Oudh Estates' Act," I of 1869, devised his estate by a will, which was not registered, to one of his wives for life, and after her death to his younger son by her. Held, as a consequence of the above rule, that it was not necessary to decide, upon a claim by the elder son as heir-at-law, whether the widow, as a person "who would have succeeded to an interest" in the taluq, if the taluqdar had died intestate, would have been within the exception, in reference to the effect of non-registration of will contained in s. 13 of the same Act.

APPEAL from a decree (17th August 1880) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (13th March 1880) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The question raised on this appeal related to the effect, with reference to the Oudh Estates' Act, I of 1869, to be given to a will made by Raja Thakur Singh, Terbedi, taluqdar of the taluq of Terbediganj, in which the proprietary right had been conferred upon the Raja by sanad, dated 29th October 1860. The sanad contained the following clause: "It is another condition of this grant that, in the event of the original proprietor or his succeeding heir dying intestate, the entire estate shall descend in due order, according to the Raj or Gaddi, to the nearest male heir, such as sons and brother's sons, etc., and the original proprietor, or his succeeding heir, shall also have full power to transfer, [483] according to his wish in his lifetime, the estate, either in whole or in part, by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or declare as his successor any one whom he may have adopted, and cause him to be made a proprietor of the estate."

The Raja's name was entered in lists 1 and 3, prepared in pursuance of s. 8 of the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869. In list 1 his name was entered with those of the Oudh taluqdars generally. List 3 contained the names of those taluqdars whose estates did not, according to the custom of the family, descend to a single heir, but to whom grants had been made, as in this, declaring that the succession should thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture. The appellant, Adjudhia Baksh, as the eldest son of Raja Thakur Singh, claimed the taluq, both under the law of the Mitakshara, and also according to the provisions of Act I of 1869. Kalicharn, the other appellant, had purchased a share in the property, and his title depended on that of Adjudhia Baksh. The respondent, Rakhman Kuar, the fourth wife of the Raja, and his son by her, the respondent, Gujadar Baksh, a minor represented by his guardian Ramjivan, set up a title under the will. After the Raja's death, which took place on the 30th December 1875, the respondent, Rakhman Kuar, succeeded to the management of the taluq, having been put into possession of it under the order, in the Revenue Department, of the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, dated 26th June 1876. The Raja's will, which was dated 30th April 1875, contained the following :—

"I, Raja Thakur Singh, Terbedi, am taluqdar sanad-holder of taluq Terbediganj tahsil Haidarganj, district Bara Banki, in Lucknow Division.

"Whereas I have, up to this day, been loyal to both the Native and British Governments, and preserved a good name under both, have been loyally performing the duties appertaining to me, and have never failed in them, nay, even now I am in receipt of a pension from the Government, and whereas, by favour of both the Governments, I have acquired, by personal exertions, this entire estate of Terbediganj, and other villages, landed property and promissory notes, as detailed below, together with all moveable and immoveable property, and I hold and possess all of these without having any co-sharer or a co-parcener [484] therein, up to the time of this writing, and nothing of the above property is ancestral, it has been acquired with great pains and industry. I, therefore, desire that this, my estate, may continue intact. But I am sorry that I have married four times, my first wife being Rani Hans Kuar, second, Rani Biranj Kuari, deceased, third, Rani Phool Kuar, deceased, and fourth, Rani Rakhman Kuar, still living, each of whom has children, but none of the sons is so able and efficient as to be able to protect the estate and preserve my name after me. On the contrary, when during the mutinies the rebels plundered my property that was within the house at Lucknow, the sons of Rani Hans Kuar, my first wife, took all my property, such as was in the house at Terbediganj, and turned my mortal enemies, but, by the grace of God, and the happy associations of the Government, my life was preserved. I no longer approve of the unregistered will which I formerly executed in favour of Raja Dabi Baksh, son of Rani Phool Kuar, during the Summary Settlement, in accordance with a call from Government to make a will: I, therefore, actuated by the desire of insuring the protection of my estate, and the preservation of my name, do, whilst in full possession of my senses and mental faculties, of my own free will, and without coercion, hereby giving away and granting all my ilaka estate, all notes, goods, cash, jewellery, all documentary papers, the sanad granted by the Government, all property, small and large, moveable and immoveable, acquired and possessed by me, to Rani Rakhman Kuar, my fourth wife, make her owner and proprietress of all: provided that after my death, Rani Rakhman Kuar, having held and possessed all my property, her descendants shall, generation after generation, carry out the provisions of this will, and after paying up the expenses mentioned herein, apply the remainder of the profits to their own use. They have no authority to do otherwise. And Raja Gujadhhar Baksh, son of Rani Rakhman Kuar, being of under age, shall, when he attains the age of majority, carry on the work of management, with the advice of the aforesaid Rani; and after the said Rani, he shall be the heir to and representative of the estate, etc., each and everything. No one else can put forward any claims. Should any person do so, his claim will be declared null and void. [485] But none of my representatives and heirs shall have power to do anything against the provisions of this document."

This will was not registered according to the provisions of the Oudh Estates' Act, I of 1869.

The suit was tried on the issue whether the will was invalid under s 13 of the Oudh Estates' Act, I of 1869 1st, with regard to the widow 2ndly, with regard to Gujadhhar Baksh, her son. The District Judge of Lucknow on this gave judgment as follows —

"As regards s. 13 of the Oudh Estates' Act, it is clear that if the will convey a bequest in favour of this younger son, it would not be invalid through want of registration. If, by the terms of the will, themselves the subject of dispute, Gujadhhar Baksh is a legatee, he is a legatee within the terms of the Act, and, by [486] cl 2 of s 13, registration, in his case, was by its express terms unnecessary.

"As regards the widow, it is a very nice question whether, in the presence of male issue, she can be held to come within the meaning of the term, 'a person who, under the provisions of this Act, or under the ordinary law† to which persons of the testator's tribe and religion are subject, would have succeeded to such estate, or to a portion thereof, or to an interest therein, if such taluqdar had died intestate.' It goes without saying that by ordinary Mitakshara law she would not have succeeded to either the whole estate or to any share therein. All she would have had would, if the Raja had died intestate, have been a right to maintenance, and there may be room for doubt whether, by strict Hindu law, this right to maintenance could literally be held to be an interest in the estate to which she would have succeeded. I cannot, however, think that the

Cl. 1, s 13

* The Oudh Estates' Act, I of 1869, in s 13, provides as follows —

"No taluqdar or grantee, and no heir or legatee of a taluqdar, or grantee, shall have power to give or bequeath his estate, or any portion thereof, or any interest therein, to any person not being either—

"(1) A person who under the provisions of this Act, or under the ordinary law to which persons of the donor's or testator's tribe or religion are subject, would have succeeded to such estate, or to a portion thereof, or to an interest therein, if such taluqdar or grantee, heir, or legatee had died intestate; or

"(2) A younger son of the taluqdar or grantee, heir, or legatee, in case the name of such taluqdar or grantee appears in the third or fifth of the list mentioned in s 8

"Except by an instrument of gift, or a will executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the donor or testator in manner herein provided in the case of a gift or will, as the case may be, and registered within one month from the date of its execution

"By s. 22 the widow only succeeds to a widow's estate on failure of the eldest son and his male lineal descendants, the second and other sons and their male lineal descendants, each in succession, the son of a daughter, who has been treated by the taluqdar in all respects as his son, and the male lineal descendants of such son, an adopted son, the eldest and every other brother successively, then the first married widow, and then other widows.

"And s. 24 provides that the person for the time being in possession shall be liable to pay the maintenance allotted by that section to each widow, the junior widow being entitled to half of what the senior widow is entitled to."

framers of the law intended to limit the meaning of the term 'would have succeeded to an interest in the estate' so strictly as to exclude a widow, even in the presence of male issue, and thereby to render a will executed in her favour inoperative, simply because it was not registered within three months of its execution, and although not without hesitation, I lean to the opinion that registration of a will in favour of a widow, even although there be male heirs, is not imperative under cl. 1 of s. 13 of the Oudh Estates' Act. It is also urged that even, if under ordinary Mitakshara law, the widow could not be held to have been a person who would have succeeded to an interest in the estate, she was as a person to whom the estate might, under the provisions, 22, have ultimately descended— a person who would, under the provisions of the Act, have succeeded to the estate, or to an interest therein. And it is contested, in reply, that if every person covered by the 11 clauses of s. 22 be held to be a person who, under the provisions of the Act, would have succeeded to the estate, the provision as to registration would be subject to such wide relaxations as practically to defeat its own object.

"Read by the light of s. 13, cl. 1, the persons included in s. 22 must, I think, be held to be not persons who might (in the [487] absence of those to whom the estate would descend immediately) be capable of succeeding to it under s. 22, but bonâ fide, the persons who would have succeeded to the estate or to a portion thereof, or to an interest therein, had the taluqdar died intestate. But the fact of there being persons to whom the estate might ultimately descend, or rather of there being persons expressly pointed out by the Act as being persons to whom it might descend, is, I think, a fact which must be held to prove that in the event of intestate succession, they were persons who would have succeeded (not to the estate or even to a portion thereof), but to an interest therein. I think, therefore, that the widow must be held to be a person who, both under the ordinary Mitakshara law, and under the provisions of the Oudh Estates' Act, would have succeeded, in the event of the Raja's intestacy, to an interest in his estate in the sense of cl. 2 of s. 13 of the Act. Holding thus, I must hold that registration was not vitally necessary to the validity of the will, and that the will is genuine and valid. I must hold further, that the Raja did not die intestate, and that the plaintiff's claim, based on the clauses of the Act which govern intestate succession, is untenable. Whether the will gave to the widow an absolute estate, or only a life interest therein, vesting the remainder absolutely in the minor, Gujadhur Baksh, are questions which I do not feel called on to decide. They are questions with which, under the above view, the plaintiff has no concern, and with reference to which no contention has been raised between the defendants. The moveables are claimed by plaintiff as the furniture of the estate, and his claim to them falls with his claim to the estate itself."

The Judicial Commissioner on appeal held that the Court of First Instance had correctly decided that a widow entitled to maintenance out of a taluq was to be considered to have an interest in the latter, within the meaning of s. 13 of the "Oudh Estates' Act," I of 1869.

On this appeal—

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant. Mr. Herbert Cowell for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was contended that s. 13 of the "Oudh Estates' Act," I of 1869, required registration of a will in [488] favour of a widow. She would not, if the testator had died intestate, have succeeded to "such estate, or a portion thereof, or to an interest therein," within the meaning of the exception declared in s. 13. It followed, therefore, that the devise to her was inoperative, and the whole interest in the taluq immediately vested in the appellant, the heir-at-law.

Mr. H. Cowell for the respondent argued that the construction placed on the words of s. 13 by the Oudh Courts was correct. Those words were sufficient to comprehend the interest for a widow, and the gifts to her was maintainable, although the will was not registered. But even assuming that the gift to the widow failed, on account of the will not having been registered the inheritance would not, for that reason, pass to the heir-at-law. The gift in remainder in favour of Gujadhur Baksh, was unaffected by the non-registration, and this gift would be accelerated if the prior estate failed. To show that it would be so, he cited Lainson v. Lainson (5 De Gex, M. & G., 754, and 18 Beav., 1) : Jull v. Jacobs (L. R., 3 Ch. D., 703) Jarman on Wills, Chap. XVIII.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., replied, arguing that the general intention of the testator was in favour of the widow, and that to confer an estate upon her was his principal object.

At the end of the arguments of Counsel, SIR B. PEACOCK delivered their Lordships' Judgment.

Sir B. Peacock.—Their Lordships are of opinion that, upon the principle laid down by Lord Justice TURNER in the case of Lainson v. Lainson (5 De Gex, M. & G., 754, and 18 Beav., 1) to which they have been referred by Mr. Cowell, even if the widow was not a person who would have succeeded to any interest in the estate if the Raja had died intestate, the son's estate was accelerated. That being so, without expressing any dissent, from the opinion expressed by the learned Judges of the Court below, their Lordships are of opinion that, upon the legal construction of the will, the plaintiff has no valid claim to any interest in the estate.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed, and the decision of the Judges of the lower Court affirmed. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Solicitor for the Appellants—Mr. T. L. Wilson.

Solicitors for the Respondents—Messrs. Barrow and Rogers.

The British India Steam Navigation CoDefendants *

Bill of Lading—Exemption from damage occasioned by neglect of Company's servants—Suit to recover goods destroyed.

The plaintiff shipped two plate glass show cases from Calcutta to Rangoon by a steamer of the defendant Company, and signed a bill of lading which contained the following clause. "Carried and delivered subject to the conditions after mentioned . . . loss or damage for any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariners or other servants of the Company, etc., excepted." In landing the two cases, one of them was entirely destroyed owing to the carelessness of the Company's servants. The plaintiff sued the Company, setting out that the damage was occasioned by the negligence of the Company's servants. The defendant Company (who were not subject to the Carriers' Act) relied on the abovementioned clause in their bill of lading. Held, that the defendant Company were protected by their bill of lading, the terms of which had been accepted by the plaintiff.

THIS was a reference to the High Court under s 617 of Act XIV of 1882. The facts of the case are fully set out in the following order of reference of the Judge of the Small Cause Court.—

"The plaintiffs' cause of action, as set out in their plaint, is in these terms—

"That they despatched on the 31st March 1883 two plate glass show cases from Calcutta to Rangoon by the S.S. Chanda belonging to the defendant Company on payment of freight.

"That the first plaintiff was personally present at Rangoon to receive delivery of the said cases to whom the said cases were consigned.

"That the officers of the said vessel in landing the cases did so in such a careless and negligent manner as to completely smash one of them.

"The value of the case so smashed and damaged is Rs. 500, for which sum with all costs the plaintiffs pray for judgment."

[490] "The defendant Company put in the following defences to the action—

"(1) Deny carelessness and negligence as alleged in the plaint. (2) The cases were landed in the same good order and condition that they were received in, and the Company are not responsible for the contents. (3) Company not responsible for damage or breakage or any other consequence from insufficiency of package. (4) Under the contract of carriage the Company's liability ceased as soon as the packages were free of the ship's tackle, after which they are not responsible for any loss or damage, howsoever caused. (5) Company not responsible for any loss or damage from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariners or other servants of the Company. (6) Damages, if any, excessive.'

"On this statement of the defence I directed the attention of the plaintiffs' pleader to the third para. of the plaint, which sets out that the damage was caused by the carelessness and negligence of the ship's officers, and to the fifth plea of the defendants, and the exemptions in the bill of lading. The clause, so far as it is necessary to set it out, is in these terms. 'Carried and delivered subject to the conditions after mentioned Accidents, loss or damage from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariners or other servants of the Company, etc., excepted.'

"In reply the plaintiffs' pleader said that his case certainly was that the damage had been caused by the neglect and default of the Steam Company's officers and servants, and that the evidence which he would offer would support and prove the allegation contained in the third para of the plaint, and that that was his case.

"The attorney for the defendant Company thereupon asked me to hold that the clause in the bill of lading above set out was a sufficient answer to the plaintiffs' suit, which ought to be dismissed

"The plaintiffs' pleader applied that the question might be submitted for the opinion of the High Court. As his witnesses would prove what he alleged, it would be a useless proceeding going into evidence if in the end the result would be to prove the defence set up by the defendants.

[491] "In this view I concurred, and eventually it was agreed between the pleader and attorney of the parties with my consent that I should hear them on the question of law, and that the plaintiffs should submit a statement of the facts in writing, which for the purpose of this reference is to be taken as the finding on the facts. It will be noticed that the defendant Company denies the carelessness and negligence alleged, so that their defence amounts practically to a demurrer to the case set up by the plaintiffs

"W. E. Jellicoe, one of the plaintiffs, states that on the arrival of the steamer at Rangoon he went on board and saw the second officer who was in charge of the after hatch in which the cases were stowed, and obtained from him a promise that he would not land the cases until he (Mr Jellicoe) returned to superintend the process, that on returning to the steamer after a short absence he found that the cases had been landed and that one of them had been damaged, that he remonstrated with the second officer about his carelessness and the accident; that the officer expressed regret for not having kept his promise, but excused himself on the plea that he did not recognize them until it was too late, and said they were handled like a baby, that the durwan left on board contradicted the statement and said he had tried to prevent the accident, but the officer replied 'Who is going to delay the work and find special coolies for you, chalo', that thereupon the coolies heaved the case over and smashed it, that the two cases were put into one sling and lifted and were lowered on the wharf. on opening the sling the ship's coolies employed to clear it heaved the top case over, which fell upside down upon the wharf, from the height of the lower case, the fall being accompanied by a crash of breaking glass; the lower case was then lifted and carried away properly and was uninjured; that the landing was carried out under the immediate superintendence and direction of the second officer and in his presence. The plaintiffs, therefore, say that the damage was caused by the negligence and default of the ship's officer in landing the cases.'

"It is hardly necessary to say that the defendant Company do not come within the provisions of the Indian Carriers' Act, III of 1865, [492] and that the recent decision of the High Court in Mothoora Kanto Shaw v. The Indian General Steam Navigation Company, Limited (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 166) is not an authority in favour of the plaintiffs' contentions in this case. The main argument for the plaintiffs is, that the clause in the bill of lading on which the defendant Company rely should not be upheld by the Courts on the ground that it is contrary to public policy. The policy of the English law, in so far as it applies to common carriers, is very fully set out in the early part of the judgment of the Chief Justice in the case just mentioned, and the effect of the Indian Contract Act, s. 152, is also explained. Upon grounds somewhat similar to those set forth by the Chief Justice in explaining the reasons why common carriers under English law were held, within certain limits, to be insurers of the goods they carried, it was argued that the defendant Company could not get rid of its liability under s. 152 of the Contract Act by a clause in the bill of lading such as that now set up. But this argument overlooks not only a series of decisions bearing upon the point, and to which reference will presently be made, but certain observations of the Chief Justice in the case just mentioned and which touch on this very point. Referring to s. 152 of the Contract Act and the Bombay case, the Chief Justice says "If the Bombay Court is right, any contract or usage of 'trade which is inconsistent with the general law laid down by the Contract Act is invalid'—(and here it is argued that the clause in the bill of lading is inconsistent with the English law relating to common carriers and to the provisions of s. 151 of the Contract Act). 'Now it seems to me impossible to suppose that this was intended. The Act only lays down certain general rules which, in the absence of any special contract or usage to the contrary, are binding on contracting parties. But it could never have been intended to restrain free liberty of contract as between man and man. Or to invalidate usages or customs which may prevail in any particular trade or business'. That it seems to me is the whole point, and it is fully answered by the observations of the Chief Justice in this case. Parties are always free to make their own contracts, and if they have made a special contract they are bound by it.

"The only case cited by the plaintiffs' pleader in his argument, [493] was Phillips v. Clark (2 C. B. N. S., 156), and it was contended, on the judgment of COCKBURN, C. J., that as in that case, so in this, the contract is susceptible of two constructions, and that the more reasonable one should be placed upon it, viz., that it was not to be supposed that the plaintiffs intended that the defendant Company should be exempted from the duty of taking ordinary care of the goods the care required by s. 151 of the Contract Act, but that it was only meant to exempt them from ordinary common law liability, or from liability when they had exercised the care imposed by s. 151. In other words, that the clause of the bill of lading should be taken only in so far as it was consistent with the section of the Contract Act, and that it could never have been intended to relieve the Company from the responsibility for damage resulting from the direct negligence of their own officers and servants.

"It seems to me the distinction is plain enough. On the bill of lading in Phillips v. Clark (2 C. B. N. S., 156), the owner was not to be accountable for 'leakage or breakage,' i.e., leakage or breakage caused in the ordinary course of shipment and landing or from unpreventable causes during the voyage, 'the result of mere accident where no blame was imputable to the master and for which, but for the stipulation in question, he would still have been liable,' in the words of CROWDER, J., but there was nothing in that contract which exempted the owner generally from the negligence of his officers or servants, and Chief Justice COCKBURN in his judgment admits that 'a carrier may protect himself from liability for loss or damage to goods intrusted to him to carry even if occasioned by negligence on the part of himself or his servants, provided any one is willing to contract with him on such terms' Grill v. The General Iron Screw Collier Company (37 L.R., 3 C.P., 205) and The Duero (L.R., 2 Admr., 393) support this view. In the last case it was said a shipowner was not in the category of a common carrier. Sir R. PHILLIMORE said 'Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the shipowner was in the category of a common carrier, still it would be competent to him, under the authorities, to have protected himself from liability by such a bill of lading as this [494] at all events, if not to have protected himself from the negligence of the servants whom he employed.' It must be observed that it must be presumed that this bill of lading was accepted deliberately by the plaintiffs, though it was, of course, competent to them to have refused so to accept it. The contract does not appear to me in itself to have been unreasonable. There is also a decision of the High Court of Bombay, Graham v. Hill (10 Bom. H. C., 60), in which it was held that as no negligence had been proved the master was not protected by the exception 'damage from negligence', the converse of course holding good that if he had proved negligence he would have been protected.

"It was stated in the argument for the defendants that the High Court of Calcutta, in the case of Nund Coomai Dutt v. The P. and O. Co. (an unreported case) decided by Mr. Justice PHEAR on 14th January 1876, had also held to the like effect on a similar clause in the bill of lading

"It appears to me to be beyond all doubt settled that a ship-owner may limit his liability in respect to loss of or damage to goods which he contracts to carry, and that the Court will not go into the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the contract

"The plaintiffs have submitted ten questions, but it appears to me that the answer to the second question is practically an answer to the whole of them. The answer to that question, in my opinion, is that the defendants can, by a special contract, such as this bill of lading, get rid of their liability. The other questions only set out the arguments which were advanced for the plaintiffs in support of their contentions

"With regard to the third and fourth questions it may be observed that the practice with regard to the granting of bills of lading was not in dispute, but the mate's receipt states that packages are received 'subject to the conditions in Company's form of bill of lading to be granted for these goods.' This notice is sufficient to put a shipper on enquiry, and the plaintiffs admitted that they took no exception to the terms of the bill of lading when it reached them. It must, therefore, I take it in the words of Sir R. PHILLIMORE, be presumed that 'the bill of lading was accepted deliberately'

[495] "On the facts as set out and relied on by the plaintiffs I was of opinion that the defendant Company was entitled to the judgment of the Court, and that the suit should be dismissed, and I have accordingly dismissed it subject to the opinion of the High Court on the question, whether on the facts as stated by the plaintiffs the defendant Company is not exempted from the damage caused by the neglect and default of the officer of the ship and the other servants of the Company in landing the show case.

"It may be that if the plaintiffs had framed their cause of action differently and had not alleged and undertaken to prove carelessness and negligence on the part of the servants of the defendants but had thrown upon them the onus and odium of proving negligence of their own officer and servants as an answer to the claim, the result might have been different, or if the officer had been sued instead of the Company. But when the plaintiffs undertake to prove the negligence of the defendant's servants they, in effect, establish the Company's defence. In the Bombay case the defendant failed to prove his own negligence, he failed to show that he was a person not to be trusted with the carriage of goods, and as a consequence he had to pay. This may seem an extraordinary and not altogether satisfactory state of things, but it would appear to be the law on the cases cited. Mr. Leggett in his work on Bills of Lading, p 245, points out that there is something to be said for the ship-owners' view and in favour of the decisions which have been quoted. For the ship-owners it was said 'We find sea-worthy vessels with certificated masters, mates and engineers, we do our best to secure immunity from sea-damage, but if our servants act negligently and injure our interest, and at the same time inflict loss upon the goods on board, the fault does not rest with us, and we will not convey merchandise by our ships unless we are exonerated from all liability for the acts of the masters and crew over whom, when they leave port, we have no further control.' And the learned author goes on to point out that 'the question was then narrowed to that of a contract for the carriage of goods under conditional terms. The merchant was not compelled to forward nor the ship-owner to carry the goods, but if the former consented to the terms of [496] the latter, then the agreement rested on the limitation of liability as expressed in the bills of lading. A ship-owner insures his vessel against perils of the sea, but the destruction inflicted by winds and the waves does not include the at times equally disastrous losses brought by the carelessness or ignorance of his servants'

"The costs of the reference have been deposited by the plaintiffs"

No one appeared for the Plaintiffs

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C J. and CUNNINGHAM, J.) was as follows —

The Small Cause Court Judge having found as a fact that the plaintiffs in this case accepted the terms of the bill of lading, we think that we cannot do otherwise than confirm his judgment

The defendants, of course, are not subject to the provisions of the Carriers Act, and they have a right to impose upon shippers any terms, however unreasonable, which the latter think proper to accept. They may thus free themselves from the consequences of their own negligence or default, however gross or willful.

So long as the law allows one class of carriers to insist upon contracts of this kind, and the public submit to have their goods carried upon such terms, Courts of Justice are quite powerless to protect them.

Judgment affirmed.

Hurchunder Chowdhry and another . . . Defendants.¹

Right of suit—Sale in execution of decree—Right of purchaser under previous private sale— Notice of transfer -- Landlord and Tenant—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s 26.

The plaintiff purchased under a private conveyance from the registered tenant of a permanent transferable interest in land such as is described in s 26 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, but no notice of the transfer was [497] given to the zamindar. The zamindar subsequently brought a suit against the tenant for arrears of rent, and obtained a decree, in execution of which he caused the tenure to be sold, and himself became the purchaser. The plaintiff took proceedings under s 311 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale, but his application was rejected on the ground, an erroneous one, that he was not a proper party to take such proceedings, and he did no appeal against the order rejecting it. Heid, in a suit brought against the zamindar and the tenant to set aside the sale, that in the absence of fraud the suit was not maintainable. The plaintiff might have satisfied the rent decree and so prevented the sale, or he might have appealed against the order rejecting his application to set it aside, but having done neither, and the zamindar having had no notice of the transfer, the plaintiff was not entitled to treat the proceedings in the rent suit as a nullity on the ground that he was not a party to that suit.

THE plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their title as proprietors of a taluq, of which they alleged they became possessed by purchase partly from one Runa Bhina on the 12th Bhadro 1280 (27th August 1873) by private conveyance, and partly by purchase at an auction-sale in execution of a decree against Lala Mahomed Mondul, and the second defendant Sher Mahomed Mondul on the 20th March 1877.

The plaintiffs alleged that the first defendant, who was the proprietor of the zamindari to which the taluq appertained, had on the allegation that it constituted the jama of the second defendant, and acting in collusion with that defendant, who had, the plaintiffs alleged, never been in possession, obtained against the second defendant without the knowledge of the plaintiffs, an ex parte decree for arrears of rent of the taluq in execution of which decree he had fraudulently, and in an irregular manner, brought the taluq to sale on the 27th December 1879, and had himself become the purchaser. The irregularity complained of was the omission to issue any purwana of attachment, or notification of sale, either when the sale was originally fixed or after a postponement which took place, in consequence of which omission there had been a small attendance of purchasers, and the first defendant had purchased the property much below its value.

The plaintiffs took proceedings under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale, but their petition was rejected on the 23rd January 1880.

They therefore brought this suit to [498] have the sale declared void on the ground of fraud and irregularity, and for a declaration of the right to possession of the taluq.

The first defendant alone appeared to defend the suit. His allegations were, that the property was not worth so much as stated by the plaintiffs, and the suit had been greatly over-valued, that the order rejecting the plaintiffs' application under s 311 was final, and the plaintiffs themselves were not the judgment-debtors, and the suit therefore not maintainable; that the plaintiffs' vendors had no right to the property, and therefore could convey none to the plaintiffs, whose names, moreover, were not registered in the serishta of the zamindari, that the taluq was sold for arrears of rent of the entire mahal due to the first defendant, and therefore the plaintiffs' right was extinguished.

The defendant denied that there had been any irregularity, illegality, or fraud, in the conduct of the sale at which he had purchased the taluq, which he alleged was registered in the serishta in the names of the second defendant and his brother Lahu Mahmud, against whom the decree, in execution of which the taluq had been sold had been obtained.

The Munsiff found there had been no fraud by the first defendant in the proceedings against the second defendant, that the first defendant had no notice of the plaintiffs' purchase, and their names were not entered in the serishta, that whatever right the plaintiffs might have had was extinguished by the sale in execution for arrears of rent, and that the plaintiffs, having applied to set aside the sale under s 311, and that application having been rejected, could not now sue to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity. He therefore dismissed the suit, and an appeal by the plaintiffs was dismissed by the Judge.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Umakali Mookerjee for the Appellants

No one appeared for the Respondents

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (McDONNELL and FIELD, JJ) :-

Field, J. - In this case the appellant is the purchaser under a private conveyance of a taluq or tenure such as that defined in [499] s 26 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, that is, a permanent transferable interest in land intermediate between the zamindar and the cultivator. The zamindar, defendant No. 1, brought a suit for rent against defendant No. 2, who was the tenant of the tenure whose name was registered in the zamindari serishta. He obtained a decree, brought the tenure to sale, and himself became the purchaser. The plaintiff in this suit seeks to assert his right to the tenure, setting up a title based upon a private conveyance from defendant No. 2 alleged to have been executed before the proceedings in the rent suit. No intimation of this transfer was formally given to the landlord, and it has not been shown—I may say attempted to be shown—that he was aware of it.

There can be no doubt that the execution sale, under which defendant No. 1 purchased, was not a sale of the tenure itself under the provisions of the rent law, but that it was a sale in execution under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), and in this respect the present case differs from the Full Bench case of Sham Chand Koondo v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry, (21 W. R. 94). It is contended that all that passed by that sale was the right, title and interest of defendant No. 2, that inasmuch as the defendant No. 2 had, before the rent suit, conveyed away his interest to the plaintiff, there was no right, title or interest in him which could pass by the sale; that the title to the tenure is therefore in the plaintiff, who purchased bonâ fide a transferable tenure and that he must succeed in the present suit.

I may first observe that an execution sale under the provisions of Act X of 1877 is something different from an execution sale under the old Code (Act VIII of 1859). What was sold under Act VIII was "the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor." These words were omitted from the Code of 1877, and what was sold under that Code was the property of the judgment-debtor, that is, the thing itself was sold and not the judgment-debtor's right, title and interest in that thing. The Code of 1877 contains provisions for ascertaining and defining the judgment-debtor's interest in the property about to be sold, and there was one section (313) in that Code which allowed the purchaser to have [500] the sale set aside, if it were shown that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property. I do not think it necessary on the present occasion to determine what may be the effect of these provisions as compared with the provisions of the Code of 1859 in connection with the question of what passes to a purchaser at an execution sale. I think that the present case must be dealt with upon its own grounds. The plaintiff, notwithstanding his own laches, had two courses open to him in order to save the tenure from sale. When the landlord obtained a decree for rent, he could have satisfied that decree and thus prevented the sale. He had a second course under the provisions of the Code of 1877. Section 311 of that Code provides: "The decree-holder or any person whose immovable property has been sold may apply to the Court," &c., and it has been decided [see Bhagabuti Churn Bhattacharjee Choudry v. Bisheshwar Sen (I L R., 8 Cal., 367, 10 C L R., 141) and the cases there quoted] that the words "any person whose immovable property has been sold" include persons, other than the judgment-debtor. In the present case the plaintiff did make an application under s 311. That application was rejected on the ground that he had no locus standi. It was open to him to have appealed against the order rejecting his application. There being thus two courses open to the plaintiff to prevent the sale of the tenure which he is alleged to have purchased, he did not avail himself of one of them, and by a wrong decision of an inferior Court, upon the construction of the Code he was prevented from availing himself of the other. He has now brought a regular suit, and the question is, whether he is entitled to treat the proceedings in the rent suit, and the sale in execution as a nullity so far as he is concerned, on the ground that he was not a party to that suit. It appears to me that he is not so entitled. According to the common law, quite apart from any statutory provisions, when a tenant transfers his interest to a third person, in order to discharge himself from future liability for rent, and in order that the transferee may have the advantages of the tenancy, one or both of them must give notice to the landlord. In this country s 26 of the Rent Law expressly imposes the duty of giving notice upon all transferees of tenures, such as are described in [501] that section, and the tenure in the present case is one of those tenures. The tenant, the transferor, gave no information of the transfer to his landlord, and the plaintiff, the transferee, gave no intimation of his purchase. This being so, the latter has by his own laches placed himself in the disadvantageous position which he now occupies. In the course of the argument the case was put to us of a decree-holder who attaches and sells in execution of his decree property which belongs not to his judgment-debtor, but to a third person, and we were asked whether it could be contended that such a sale would convey a good title. I think it could not be so contended, but that is a very different case from the case which we have now before us. When a decree-holder seeks to execute his decree against property, moveable or immovable, it is his duty to make sure that the property which he brings to sale in execution is the property of his judgment-debtor, and, if he makes any mistake, he does so at his own peril. The circumstances of the present case are, I think, an exception to this general rule. The landlord, the decree-holder, knew that the person whom he sued was his tenant. No doubt that tenant had by law the right to transfer his tenure, but the same law cast upon the transferee the duty of giving the landlord due notice of the transfer, and unless the transferee discharged the duty so cast upon him, the landlord was not, in my opinion bound to look beyond the information contained in his serishta, and cannot be affected with knowledge of a fact not communicated to him by the person whose duty it was to communicate it. It will be borne in mind that he had not this knowledge from any other source and no case of fraud has been made out. In this exceptional case, therefore, the duty was, not upon the decree-holder, but upon the person who now comes into Court, and asks for redress. That person has been guilty of neglect in the transaction itself—neglect of a duty expressly imposed on him by the law—whilst the landlord, against whom he seeks redress, has committed no wrongful act, and has been guilty of no omission of duty. It appears to me, therefore, that the plaintiff is estopped by his own omission from saying in this suit as against the landlord that he had acquired a good title to the tenure. Then, there is another consideration. Section 316 of the Code provides that the sale certificate shall, so [502] far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, vest the title to the property in the purchaser. In the case now before us, the plaintiff claims under one of the parties to the rent suit, that is, the defendant, and I think that the provisions of this section are therefore applicable to him.

I am therefore of opinion that although the tenure in this case was sold under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and not under the special provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed in this suit.

We dismiss this appeal, but without costs, no one appearing for the respondent.

McDonell, J.—In this case it is found by the Court below that the zamindar was entitled to sell the whole tenure, and the sole question we have to decide is, whether he actually sold it. Both the Courts below have found as a fact that the whole tenure was sold, that the tenure was proceeded against and regarded as liable, and that the sale proclamation and sale certificate show that the tenure was sold. Under these circumstances I do not think that we ought to interfere, although there may have been irregularities in the sale proceedings, and I would therefore dismiss this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and Tenant—Occupancy of homestead land—Right of landlord to determine tenancy

The mere record of the name of a tenant, who is found in occupation of a particular piece of land, in Settlement proceedings, and of the rent payable by him does not invest him with any permanent title to hold it

Where an estate, at one time the property of the Government, was as a khas mehal settled ryotwari for a period of 30 years from 1247, and where in such Settlement A was recorded as tenant of the land at a stated rent Held that the Court was not bound to presume that the origin of A's title was a grant to continue in permanent possession

[503] Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Rutton Bepary (I. L. R. 3 Cal. 696), Addanto Charan Dey v. Peter Doss (13 B. L. R. 117, 17 W. R. 383) followed

THIS was a suit for ejectment, upon a notice to quit, in regard to 4 ghoomts and 13 biswas of homestead land which the defendants and their ancestors had held ever since the Government Settlement at an annual rent of nine annas and seven pies. The defendants in answer denied the receipt of notice, and disputed the plaintiff's right to eject them. The first Court, though found that not only had notice to quit been given, but also that it was sufficient, and held that by virtue of the Settlement made by Government the defendants acquired a title to hold the land at the same rent until a new Settlement should be made, and accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the Judge reversed the decision of the Court below, holding that the protection claimed by the defendants could only be claimed by a tenant on the ground that he had acquired a right of occupancy, or that the lease under which he held had not expired, but that neither of their contentions were or could be pleaded in this case. He was further of opinion that, though the defendant had been allowed to hold the land for a lengthened period without a lease at a small rent, that fact was not in itself sufficient to prevent them being ejected by the owner, and that there was nothing in the Settlement proceedings to justify the decision of the Court below. He accordingly reversed that decision and gave the plaintiff a decree with costs. The defendants now specially appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale for the Appellants.

Baboo Koruna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Respondent.

The nature of the contention raised on the appeal is sufficiently stated in the Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) which was delivered by

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 589 of 1883, against the decree of W. Wright, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Cuttack dated 29th of December 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Hurrey Kishto Chatterjee, Munsiff of Jajpur, dated the 31st of August 1881

Tottenham, J.—This was a suit to eject the defendant, after notice to quit, from a small piece of homestead land in respect of which it has been found that no right of occupancy could be acquired.

[504] The estate was at one time the property of Government, and as a khas mehal it was settled ryotwari for a period of 30 years from 1247 B. S. In that Settlement the defendant was recorded as tenant of the land in suit at a rent of nine annas seven pies per annum. Subsequently the plaintiff became proprietor of the estate. The first Court held that by virtue of the Settlement made by Government the defendant acquired a title to hold the land at the same rent until a new Settlement should be made, and that this action to eject him would not lie.

The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the fact that defendant had been permitted to hold the land for a lengthened period at a small rent was not per se sufficient to protect him from ejectment by the owner; and could see nothing in the Government proceedings at the Settlement to justify the Munsiff's inference in the matter. The Court accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

Before us the pleader for the appellant has contended.—

1st.—That the Munsiff's view of the effect of the Settlement was right, and that the plaintiff was bound to respect that Settlement.

2nd.—That the Court below ought to have presumed from the circumstances of the case that the origin of defendant's title was a grant to continue in permanent possession.

We think that neither of these contentions can prevail.

As to the first it seems to us that the mere record of the name of a tenant who is found in occupation of a particular piece of land in Settlement proceedings, and of the rent payable by him, does not invest him with any permanent title to hold it, and admitting that the purchaser from Government was bound to respect the Settlement made with the ryots during its currency, that consideration would not bar the present suit which was brought after the termination of the period of that Settlement. Any further Settlement must be made not with the tenants, but with the proprietor of the estate.

As to the second contention the authority cited is Govinda Chundra Sikdar v. Ayinuddin Sha Biswas (11 C. L. R., 281). But that case lays down no more than that the Court is at liberty to presume if it thinks fit from the particular circumstances of a case that the [505] land was granted for building purposes, and that the grant was of a permanent character.

We cannot hold that in the present case the Appellate Court committed an error of law in not making such presumption.

On the other hand, the plaintiff's right seems to be established by the authority of the cases, Addaito Charan Dey v. Peter Doss (13 B. L. R., 417; 17 W. R., 383) and Prosunno Coomar Debca v. Rutton Bepary (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 696). We must dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Lalla Dabee Pershad.....Plaintiff

versus

Santo Pershad and others.....Defendants.

Interrogatories—Failure to answer within the time limited—Dismissal of suit—Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, Ch. X, ss. 121, 126, and 136.

The question as to whether the Courts below have exercised a proper discretion in dismissing a suit under s. 136 † of the Civil Procedure Code is one into which the High Court will not enter on special appeal

When interrogatories are delivered with the leave of the Court under s. 121 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court orders such interrogatories to be answered within ten days under s. 126, there is virtually an order passed under the provision of Chap X of the Code, and consequently upon the party interrogated failing to comply with such order the Court has the power to pass an order under s. 136

In this suit, which was instituted on the 24th April 1880, the plaintiff sought to have his right determined to, and his possession confirmed in 16 cottahs of land with certain trees thereon. He also sought to have certain orders of the revenue authorities in respect of the boundaries of the land cancelled, and to have it declared that the land and trees in suit were situate within his mulikut village and not in that of the defendant

The defendant filed his written statement disputing the claim, and on the 11th August 1880 caused interrogatories to be delivered to the plaintiff's pleader, the return to which was ordered to be [506] made within ten days. More than that period having elapsed, and no answer having been filed, the defendant on the 31st August applied under s. 136 of Act X of 1877 to have the suit dismissed. The hearing of that application came on before the Munsiff on the 3rd September, and the plaintiff contended that that section had no application, but the Munsiff held that the section did apply and accordingly dismissed the suit. Before, however, that order was passed the plaintiff applied for further time in which to answer to be granted him, but the Munsiff refused to grant him any further time on the ground that such application was made too late.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 88 of 1883, against the decree of J. Tweedie, Esq., Judge of Shahabad, dated the 27th of September 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Bhagobuti Churn Mitter, Munsiff of Arrah, dated the 3rd of September 1880.

† [Sec. 136.—If any party fails to comply with any order under this chapter to answer interrogatories or for discovery, production or inspection, which has been duly served, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not appeared and answered ; and the party interrogating or seeking discovery, production or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and the Court may make such order accordingly

Any party failing to comply with any order under this chapter to answer interrogatories or for discovery, production or inspection which has been served personally upon him, shall also be deemed guilty of an offence under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code]

On appeal the Judge held that the Munsiff was right in refusing to grant further time, and in dismissing the suit. The appeal was therefore dismissed with costs.

Against that order the plaintiff now specially, appealed to the High Court.
Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Kahl Kissen Sen for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—Whether in this case the Courts below have exercised the discretion under s. 136 properly or not is a question which we cannot enter into in second appeal, and we express no opinion upon that point, but as regards the question whether the lower Courts had any power to deal with the case under s. 136, we are of opinion that the objection taken before us is not valid. When interrogatories are delivered with the leave of the Court under s. 121¹, the Court orders these interrogatories to be answered within ten days from the date of service thereof under s. 126. Therefore, there is virtually an order passed under the provisions of Chap. X. That being so, if the party interrogated fails to comply with that order, the Court has the power to pass an order under s. 136.

We are therefore of opinion that the contention of the appellant that s. 136 has no application to this case is not correct.

We therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[In (1891) 18 Cal., 420 F. B. this case was overruled as regards interrogatories.

In (1894) 19 Bom., 307 (809) it was held that an appeal lay against an order dismissing a suit under sec. 136 C. P. C., 1882.]

* [Sec. 121.—Any party may at any time by leave of the Court, deliver through the Court interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite party, or where there are more opposite parties than one, any one or more of such parties, with a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer.]

Merjah Janand and another Defendants

Res judicata—Decision of Collector in measurement proceedings—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s 18—Jurisdiction of Collector.

If a Collector professing to proceed under the provision of s 38, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, does not ascertain the existing rates of rent, but proceeds to assess the rents, in other words to determine what rates are in his opinion fair and equitable, he exceeds his jurisdiction and his proceedings are null and void. But if he has properly exercised the jurisdiction conferred on him by that section, his proceedings are conclusive between the parties in a subsequent suit for rent.

IN this case it was held that it did not plainly appear in the face of the proceedings that the Collector had not properly exercised the jurisdiction conferred upon him. The facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the Judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and FIELD, JJ.)

Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the Appellants

Baboo Griya Sunker Moozumdar for the Respondent

Field, J.—This was a suit for rent. It was brought upon the basis of a jamabandi or rent-roll which was drawn up by the Collector in previous proceedings under the provisions of s. 38 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. The only point which has been pressed upon us is that the proceedings of the Collector and the jamabandi drawn up by him were ultra vires, and that the defendants in the present case are not bound by them, because the Collector did not ascertain the existing rates of rent [508] (that being what s. 38 empowered him to do), but assessed rates, which were really enhanced rates. Several previous decisions of this Court have been referred to in the course of the argument by the learned vakeel for the appellant. We think there can be no doubt that if a Collector, professing to proceed under the provisions of s. 38 of the Rent Act, does not ascertain the existing rates, but proceeds to assess rates, in other words proceeds to determine what rates are in his opinion fair and equitable, he exceeds his jurisdiction and his proceedings are null and void. On the other hand, if the Collector exercises properly the jurisdiction conferred upon him by the section, then we think that his proceedings are conclusive between the parties in any subsequent suit for rent. There is a distinction between those cases in which the tenants have appealed against the proceedings had under s. 38, and another class of cases in which the proceedings had under s. 38 were sought to be used as evidence in a subsequent suit for rent.

*Appeals from Appellate Decree Nos. 1073 and 1079 of 1882, against the decrees of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, Rai Bahadur, First Subordinate Judge of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 30th of March 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Bepin Chunder Rai, Rai Bahadur, Additional Munsiff of Netrona, dated the 25th November 1880.

It is clear that in the first class of cases, questions might be raised which could not properly be raised in the second class of cases. In the second class of cases the proceedings of the Collector are used as a judgment, to show that the question as to the rates of rent is res judicata between the parties. It is a rule laid down by the Evidence Act in accordance with principles long established that the judgment of any Court when offered in evidence in a subsequent proceeding may be shown to have been made without jurisdiction, and therefore to be void. In exercising the special powers conferred by s. 38, the Collector is bound to conform strictly to the provisions of the section, and if it plainly appears on the face of his proceedings that he did not so conform, a finite effect cannot be given, to those proceedings and the judgment in which they have been embodied. What we have then to consider in the present case is whether it plainly appears on the face of the proceedings of the Collector that he was not properly exercising the jurisdiction conferred upon him by s. 38. We have read those proceedings, and it appears to us that it does not so appear. There are expressions used in the Collector's decision and in the judgment of the Judge to whom an appeal was preferred against that decision, which may appear equally [309] applicable to ascertaining or assessing rent, but when these expressions are read with the context, it does not appear to us that the Collector or the Judge did otherwise than ascertain the then existing rates of rent. In one passage the District Judge says: "The ryots of the mahal, the Amin said, had not, on account of the enmity which existed, given the exact rates, but he ascertained the rates from certain persons who had previously been ryots in the mahal." It also appears that certain previous butwara proceedings were used by the Amin, and these butwara proceedings would show the then existing rates, not recent or new enhanced rate. It, therefore, appears to us that there is nothing on the face of the proceedings to show that the Collector did otherwise than ascertain the existing rates, and that the Collector's proceedings and the jamabandi are binding on the ryots.

Then it is argued that it appears from one passage in the District Judge's judgment in the proceedings under s. 38, that the question of the Collector exceeding his jurisdiction was raised, and that the Judge declined to entertain it. If this were so, if the question was raised and the Judge declined to entertain it, it would be impossible to say that the question so raised, but not heard and determined, was res judicata. The passage relied upon is this: "From the Collector's order the present appeal is preferred. The first ground of appeal is to the effect that, inasmuch as the petitioner moved the Civil Court with the intention of illegally enhancing the rent of ryots, his petition was liable to be rejected. The intention, however, of the petitioner cannot now be considered, the present appeal being from the order of the Collector and not from that of the Subordinate Judge, admitting the right of the petitioner to an order under s. 38 of Act VIII of 1869." What the intention of the petitioner under s. 38 may have been is not material. The question which would have been material, and which does not appear to have been raised in the passage, which I have just cited, is whether the landlord was unable to measure the land comprised in his estate, by reason that he could not ascertain who were the persons liable to pay rent to him in respect of such land. There is no allegation that, although he alleged himself to be unable to [310] ascertain the persons liable to pay rent, he might have ascertained who those persons were if he had wished to do so. This being so it appears to us that there is nothing in the passage relied upon by the appellant's vakeel to show that the question of jurisdiction was raised, and that the District Judge in the former proceedings declined to entertain it. This appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs. This judgment will apply to No. 1079.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.

"Oudh Estates Act," I of 1869, s. 8—Talukdar in the second list—Estate descending to single heir—Primogeniture.

In the "Oudh Estates Act," I of 1869, rules were laid down as to the title of taluqdars whose estates the Government had created, and as to the mode of succession thereto.

On a question whether or not a taluq, to which the Act was applicable, descended according to the rules of lineal primogeniture, held, that where a taluqdar's name was entered in the second, but not in the third, of the lists maintained under the above Act, the estate, although it was to descend to a single heir, was not to be considered as passing according to the rules of lineal primogeniture.

APPEAL from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh (25th January 1881), reversing a decree (20th June 1880) of the Officiating District Judge of Faizabad.

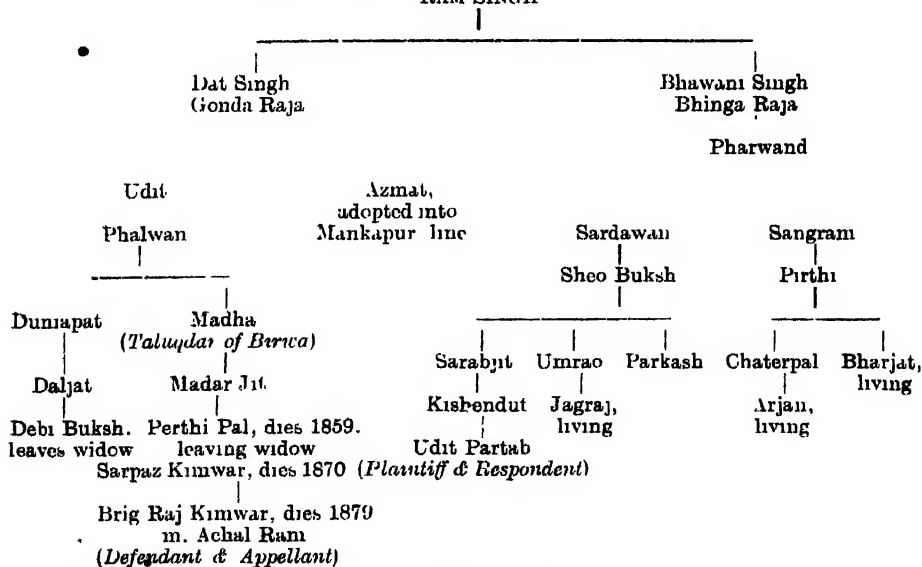

The question raised on this appeal related to the right of succession to the Birwa taluq in the pergunnah, tahsil, and district of Gonda, with the appurtenant estate of Mehnaon

The Birwa taluq was inserted in the first and second of the lists maintained under the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, as having belonged to Bhaiya Perthi Pal Singh deceased, as taluqdar, to whom the respondent Udai Partab Addiya Dat Singh claimed to be the nearest male heir, and entitled to succeed.

Raja Ram Singh of Gonda was the common ancestor of Raja Debi Buksh Singh, who, in 1856, at the annexation of Oudh, held the Gonda Raj; also of Bhaiya Perthi Pal Singh, who at the same period held the taluq of Birwa, the subject of the present dispute; and of Bishen Dat Singh, the present respondent's father, who at annexation held the separate taluq of Bhinga, in the neighbouring district of Baraitoh.

The Bhinga taluq was also restored to a descendant of Bhowani Singh, the former Bhinga Raja, and son of the common ancestor Ram Singh. Perthi Pal Singh left a widow and daughter only. With him, and with the ex-Raja of Gonda, the entire male line of descendants from Raja Uddyat Singh, the elder son of the said Ram Singh, and brother of the abovenamed Bhowani Singh, became extinct. Perthi Pal's male collateral relations were to be found among the descendants of Bhowani Singh, unless, as was alleged, the adoption of one of this line into the old Janvar family of Bhinga had separated the branch from the Gonda family. Of these descendants there were four surviving. In the senior male line there was the present respondent, sixth in descent from Bhowani Singh, there was also his cousin, Jagraj Singh, fifth, and Harbhagat Singh, fourth, in descent from the same ancestor, as appears from the following pedigree table —

RAM SINGH

[518] The widow, Thakurain Sarfraz Kunwari, who succeeded her deceased husband, Perthi Pal Singh, as taluqdar, made a will bequeathing all her property to the daughter, Thakurain Brijraj Kunwari, whom she had borne to Perthi Pal Singh. The daughter, on the death of her mother on the 27th of April 1870, succeeded her in possession of the estates which, as she was a minor, came under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. She was afterwards married to the present appellant, and died without issue on the 23rd February 1879. At her death her husband, Achal Ram, claimed the estates as her heir, and obtained possession of them. Whereupon the present respondent brought this suit, alleging that the deceased widow and her daughter had only held Birwa and Mehnaon for successive life-estates which had ended, and that on the death of the daughter, Brijraj Kunwari, the plaintiff, as the collateral heir of Perthi Pal Singh, the last male taluqdar, and last holder of an estate of inheritance, became entitled to succeed him.

The defence was that the plaintiff was not the next heir of Perthi Pal Singh, deceased, the family of the plaintiff having been separated from his family some generations back; that Perthi Pal Singh had made a will in favour of his widow and daughter; that the widow had secured to her a title as taluqdar, in accordance with the "Oudh Estates' Act," I of 1869, and that by a will, authorized by that law, she had bequeathed the estates to her daughter, from whom that daughter's husband, the defendant, derived his title.

The suit was heard by the District Judge of Faizabad. Issues were fixed as to the factum and effect of the alleged will of Perthi Pal Singh, and as to effect of the will of Thakurain Sarfraz Kunwari as to whether a legal title had been sufficiently made out by Udai Partab, the plaintiff, and on the question who, by Hindu law, with reference to the provisions of the "Oudh Estates' Act," I of 1869, was heir. The District Judge found that the will of Perthi Pal Singh, dated Kartik-Badi 13, Fasli 1267 (corresponding to the 26th October 1859) was genuine, and that by it the taluq of Birwa, and also Mehnaon, were left to his daughter, with a life-interest bequeathed to her mother, his wife. The District Judge held that the taluq was the special property [514] of Brijraj Kunwari, in the same way that in the case of Indar Bahadur v. Janki Kunwar (L. R., 5 I. A., 1) a taluq was held by a daughter.

The husband of Brijraj Kunwari was, in his opinion, entitled to the property as her heir; and against this title that of the plaintiff could not prevail. The plaintiff was representative and head of the Bhinga family, he was "heir by primogeniture to Perthi Pal Singh," and with reference to there being others of the Bhinga line related more nearly in degree to the deceased Perthi Pal Singh, who could come in before the plaintiff, the District Judge found that they had "resigned in the plaintiffs' favour", and that "the estate being one that devolved by the law of primogeniture, the plaintiff, as head and representative of his own line, was the rightful suitor." But he held that the defendant had the better title, concluding as follows:—

"In fine I consider that the judgment above quoted, Brij Indar Bahadur v. Janki Kunwar (L. R., 5 I. A., 1) rules this case, and that the property must descend to Brijraj Kunwar's heirs and not her father's. Therefore the defendant, Achal Ram, the deceased's husband, is the heir, and not the plaintiff, a collateral of her father's removed by some 12 generations in an ascending and descending scale."

The suit was, accordingly, dismissed with costs. The plaintiff, now respondent, appealed to the Judicial Commissioner, and the defendant filed a memorandum of objections to the judgment under s. 561 of Act X of 1877.

The Judicial Commissioner reversed the decree of the District Judge, and decreed in favour of the plaintiff. He held that the case of Brij Indar Bahadur v. Janki Kunwar (L. R., 5 I. A., 1) did not apply, and that the daughter, Brijraj, took "a mere woman's estate," as heir to her father. On the question whether the alleged will of Perthi Pal Singh was genuine, he was of opinion that it had not been proved, and he added: "I find that the alleged will of Bhaiya Perthi Pal Singh would, if genuine, have no effect on the claim to the taluq, and that if both wills set up be genuine, the heirs to Brijraj Kunwari's landed estate by Hindu law and Act I of 1869, must be sought among the male reversionary heirs [515] of the first taluqdar, Bhaiya Perthi Pal Singh, and that in no case would the defendant-respondent, Achal Ram succeed as heir to his deceased wife's taluq."

That part of his judgment which related to the question whether or not the plaintiff had shown a sufficient title is set forth by their Lordships.

On this appeal—

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, and Mr. J. E. Howara appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. J. F. Leth, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that even on the assumption that Perthi Pal Singh had died intestate, which was not admitted, the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner was wrong, the plaintiff not having made out his title. Thakurain Sarfraz Kunwar had taken an absolute estate under the law which was contemplated by the 11th clause of s. 22 of the "Oudh Estates' Act," I of 1869. Her daughter had obtained a complete title from the mother, and on the daughter's death her property devolved upon her husband, the appellant. At the same time complete as that title was, there was no necessity for resorting to it, for the plaintiff's title had not been proved. There was no evidence establishing that the Birwa taluq descended according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, and the Commissioner appeared to have been under the misapprehension that there was a primogeniture sumud. A nearer heir excluded a more remote one, for, although the taluq descended to a single heir, the rule of lineal primogeniture (which would, if established, have been the only basis on which the plaintiff's claim could rest) had not been shown to govern the descent of the estate. There were other bundhus, distant kindred, nearer than the plaintiff, who was thirteenth in degree from Perthi Pal Singh, whose estate was entered in the second and not in the third of the lists maintained under Act I of 1869. This showed that the rule of lineal primogeniture did not apply, and, therefore, the nearer in degree would exclude the more remote. The fact that the taluq was impartible did not affect the Hindu law of inheritance. Reference was made to Mitakshara, Chap. 11, s. 5; Brij [515] Indar Bahadur v. Rani Janki Koer (L. R., 5 I. A., 1); Tekant Doorga Persad Singh v. Tekaitni Doorga Kunwari (L. R., 5 I. A., 149); Periasami v. Periasami (L. R., 5 I. A., 61), Mayne Hindu Law and Custom, para. 461.

For the respondent it was argued that, as this taluq was an impartible estate descending to a single heir, the question was as to the right of succession to an estate in the nature of a Raj, the ordinary law, to which the taluqdar had been subject, being that which was contemplated by Act I of 1869, s. 22, para. 11. Independently of the finding below, that primogeniture prevailed in this family, the estate in question being impartible and descending to one of the issue of the family of the last male proprietor, the "single heir" had to be discovered by the application of the rule of primogeniture. This application of the mode, employed in accordance with Hindu law, in most of the cases of impartible property, to fix "who was the single heir," was appropriate here. Moreover, the evidence showed that in this family there was a presumption in favour of the rule of primogeniture; and although the taluq of Birwa had not been inserted in the third (or primogeniture list) of the lists maintained under Act I of 1869, it was not to be inferred that that mode of descent was excluded in this case. There were both new and old taluqs subjected to the Act, and this was an old one.

Reference was made to Strange, Hindu Law, chap. 6; Periasami v. Periasami (L. R., 5 I. A., 61). It was submitted that the respondent had made out a title as he had shown that, he being the last of the elder line of the descendants of the Bhinga Raja, was in a position to represent that branch as its head.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., in reply, contended that no presumption arose in this case as to the application of the rule of lineal primogeniture; and that, unless the respondent was brought within that rule, the nearer heir excluded the more remote. All that was meant by a "single heir" was a single heir who was also nearest in degree.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by [517] Sir B. Peacock.—This was a suit brought by Uday Partab against Achal Ram, who was the husband of Brijraj Kunwari, deceased, and who obtained possession of the estate in question upon the death of his wife. The plaintiff alleged himself to be the heir of Perthi Pal Singh, and in the action of ejectment it was necessary for him, before he could turn out the defendant, to prove that he had a better title. He attempted, in support of his title, to show that the estate was to descend according to the rules of lineal primogeniture. If that rule prevailed he appears to have been the heir of Perthi Pal Singh. A question was raised in the suit whether Perthi Pal Singh had made a will; but it is unnecessary to decide that question, because whether he made a will or not, or whether his daughter, Brijraj Kunwari, the wife of the defendant, took an absolute estate or not, is immaterial, if the plaintiff fails to prove that he has a better title than the defendant. It is necessary, therefore, for the plaintiff to make out that the estate descended according to the rules of lineal primogeniture as distinguished from descent to a single heir amongst several in equal degree.

The estate in question was a taluq created by the Government of India after the confiscation of Oudh. Perthi Pal Singh, upon whom it was conferred, died before Act I of 1869 was passed, but the taluq was one in respect of which the Government of India laid down certain rules as to the title of the taluqdars whom they had created and as to the mode of succession. The preamble of Act I of 1869, intitled "The Oudh Estates' Act," is in these words. "Whereas after the re-occupation of Oudh by the British Government in the year 1858, the proprietary right in divers estates in that province was under certain conditions conferred by the British Government upon certain taluqdars and others: And whereas doubts may arise as to the nature of the rights of the said taluqdars and others in such estates and as to the course of succession thereto: And whereas it is expedient to prevent such doubts and to regulate such course and to provide for such other matters connected therewith as are hereinafter mentioned, it is hereby enacted as follows." Among other enactments is s. 8, which provides that, "within six months after the passing of this Act the Chief Commissioner of Oudh subject to such instructions as he may receive from the [518] Governor-General of India in Council, shall cause to be prepared six lists; namely, first, a list of all persons who are to be considered taluqdars within the meaning of this Act." Perthi Pal Singh, who had been allowed to contract for the revenue, and with whom a summary settlement had been made, was entered in the first of the lists as a taluqdar; and he must therefore be deemed a taluqdar within the meaning of the Act. He was also entered in the second of the lists, which is a list of the taluqdars whose estates, according to the custom of the family on and before the 13th day of February 1856, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir. Therefore the taluk must be considered as a taluk which ordinarily descended upon a single heir : but it omits altogether to state that that heir is to be ascertained by the rules of lineal primogeniture. The third list is "a list of the taluqdars not included in the second of such lists to whom sunnuds or grants have been or may be given or made by the British Government up to the date fixed for the closing of such lists, declaring that the succession to the estates comprised in such sunnuds or grants shall thereafter be regulated by the rules of primogeniture." Perthi Pal Singh was not entered in that list, and it is contended that because he was in the list of estates which ordinarily devolved upon a single heir, it is to be presumed that the heir was to be ascertained according to the rules of lineal primogeniture. Their Lordships cannot concur in that contention. They are of opinion that when a taluqdar's name was entered in the second list and not in the third, the estate, although it is to descend to a single heir, is not to be considered as an estate passing according to the rules of lineal primogeniture.

Now the plaintiff having to make out his title, the District Judge in the first Court found that the estate was to descend according to the rules of primogeniture, not saying lineal primogeniture. There was no evidence to show that the estate had descended according to the rules of lineal primogeniture, even if such evidence could have got rid of the provisions of the Act. The Judicial Commissioner also found that the estate descended according to the rules of primogeniture, and it is said that there were two concurrent findings upon a question of fact; but when their Lordships come to examine the [519] reasons and the grounds of the Judicial Commissioner, they find that he was in error. He says that there was a sunnud granted to Perthi Pal Singh, according to which the estate was to pass according to the rules of primogeniture. He says "In the present case the confiscation was admitted in favour of Bhaiya Perthi Pal Singh, and the grant as by sunnud is to him and his heirs male according to the law of primogeniture, so that unless his daughter from some cause takes a full proprietary heritable estate, those entitled to succeed after her must be sought for amongst the heirs of Bhaiya Perthi Pal Singh." Then he enters into the question whether the plaintiff is the nearest heir according to the rules of lineal primogeniture. Both Courts appear to have failed to consider this case with reference to the principle that a plaintiff seeking to recover possession of an estate against a person who is in possession must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of his adversary's title. That is a principle of law, and a very essential principle to be acted upon. The Judicial Commissioner, after deciding that the male reversionary heirs of Perthi Pal Singh were to come in, says : "There remains the question as to whether the plaintiff-appellant, Bhaiya Udai Partab Singh, is such male reversionary heir, considering that, as stated in an early part of this judgment, according to ordinary Hindu law, Harbhagat Singh was the nearest collateral heir male to Bhaiya Perthi Pal Singh at his death, and failing him Jabraj Singh, Arjan Singh, and the sons of Harbhagat Singh would have precedence as collateral male heirs. Those named above are not parties to this litigation, and no right that they might have as against Udai Partab Singh would be prejudiced by a decree in his favour against Achal Ram, who is found to have no right or title at all in the taluqa. And in one sense there is a community of interest in all the males of the Bhinga branch, that the Birwa-Mehnaon estate should not pass to a stranger, to the prejudice of their reversionary rights to succeed the last male proprietor. In both these estates the succession is to be regulated by the rule of primogeniture; and plaintiff-appellant, as senior heir male of the Bhinga Bissin family, has succeeded to, and is in full proprietary possession of, that taluq. He may, therefore, well be held to [320] be representative of the reversioners in his branch, and anyhow it does not lie in the mouth of defendant-respondent, who is found to have no legal warrant for his possession of the Birwa estate, to deny that the plaintiff has a locus standi, on the ground that it may be that he may not afterwards be found to be the man among the reversioners whom he represents, who should succeed." In short, the Judicial Commissioner comes to the conclusion that, inasmuch as the defendant is shown to have no title according to his ruling, therefore he has no right to say that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed. He entirely reverses the rule on which actions to recover possession are founded, namely, that he who seeks to turn another out of possession must first prove that he has a better title. His judgment is consequently erroneous, and ought to be reversed.

It has been stated that the judgment obtained by the plaintiff has been executed, and that the defendant has been turned out of possession. There is no evidence to that effect; but if it is the case the defendant ought to be restored to possession, and ought not by reason of his having been turned out under an erroneous judgment to be placed in the position of having to seek to recover possession himself and to prove his title.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner be reversed, and the decree of the Officiating District Judge affirmed, that the respondent do pay the costs in the lower Appellate Court; and that, if the appellant has been put out of possession under the decree of the lower Appellate Court, he be restored to possession.

The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal.

[321] APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

versus

Luckhi Ram.....Plaintiff.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 266, proviso, cl. 1 - Attachment of monthly allowance.

A heritable right to receive a certain monthly allowance originally assigned in lieu of a share of landed property is not a mere right to maintenance or anything else exempted by the proviso to s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is saleable in execution of a decree.

THIS was a suit upon a bond for the sum of Rs. 3,000 with interest. One of the conditions of the bond was as follows :—

"I, Salamat Hossein, mortgaged and hypothecated the allowance of Rs. 100, which, on account of the inheritance of Bibi Fasihunnissa Begum, the late wife of mine, is paid to me, Salamat Hossein, in lieu of my right to the estate, month by month from the deorhi of Khugra. I again pledge the same," etc., etc. The plaintiff sought to enforce a lien on the monthly allowance secured to him by the bond. The Subordinate Judge gave him a decree for the realization of the amount by the sale of the mortgaged property.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twisdale (with him Munshi Mohamed Yusuf) for the Appellants, contended, as it had been in the Court below, that the right to receive the allowance was not property which could be seized in execution under s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Nilmadhub Bose for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Tottenham, J.—The only question laid before us in this appeal is whether or not the right to receive a certain monthly allowance is seizable and saleable in execution of a decree. The appellant, Salamat Hossein, who is the party entitled to the allowance, mortgaged it under a bond executed by himself and other persons to the plaintiff respondent in consideration of a loan advanced by the latter. The decree provides for the realization of the amount due by the sale in the first place of the mortgaged property.

It is contended that the right to receive the allowance is not property which can be seized in execution under s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It seems to us that, under the circumstances, it is saleable, for it is shown to be a heritable right derived by the appellant from his deceased wife to whom it was assigned in lieu of her share of landed property. It is thus not a mere right to maintenance, nor anything else exempted by the proviso to s. 266; and as the appellant himself mortgaged it with a stipulation that it should, if necessary, be sold for the liquidation of his debt, it does not lie in his mouth to deny that it can be seized and sold. His pleader has relied upon the case of Nilkanto Dey v Hurrosoonderee Dossee (I L R, 3 Cal, 414) in which a question arose as to the attachment of malikana payable by the Collector to the judgment-debtor. But in that case it was not ruled that the right to malikana could not be sold, but only that the attachment was not sufficiently made by the mere issue of a notice to the Collector under s 237 of Act VIII of 1859. The case does not help the appellants before us. We granted time to enable the parties to come, if possible, to an amicable settlement, but they have found it impossible to do so and we do not see our way to impose terms on the plaintiff or to stay execution. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MR JUSTICE McDONNELL AND MR JUSTICE FIELD

Ramjan Mohaldar

Plaintiff

Appeal from order. Suit of the Small Cause Court class. Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) ss 562, 586, 589 cl (29) and 589.

A Court in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction passed an order under s 562 of the Civil Procedure Code remanding a case of the Small Cause Court class as described in s 586. Held that under the express words of the second portion of s 589 of the Code an appeal does lie to the High Court from such an order.

IN this suit the plaintiff on the allegation that the defendants had prevented him from fishing in a certain gulku laid a claim for damages to the amount of Rs 305. The Munsiff dismissed the suit on the sole ground that the plaintiff could not recover damages before he obtained actual possession. On appeal, the District Judge held that a suit for damages would lie and remanded the case for trial on the other issues. On appeal to the High Court from that order, a preliminary objection was taken by the respondents (plaintiffs) pleader, viz, that no appeal would lie because the suit was one of the Small Cause Court class, and the amount of the damages not exceeding five hundred rupees.

* Appeal from Appellate Order No 318 of 1883, against the order of R H (reverses Esq) Officiating Judge of Rajshahye dated 13th of August 1883 reversing the decree of Biboo Kuruna Dass Bose, Munsiff of Maldah, dated 25th of November 1882 and remanding the case.

Baboo Kallikissen Sen for the Appellants.
 Baboo Gopeenath Mookerjee for the Respondents
 The Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Field, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken in this case, viz, that no appeal will lie because the suit is one of the Small Cause Court class being a suit for damages. Section 586 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that “no second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable in Courts of Small Causes, etc. The present appeal is not a second appeal. It [524] is an appeal from an order falling under cl 28 of s 588. Section 589 provides as follows. An appeal from any order specified in s 588, cls (15), (16) and (17), shall lie to the High Court. “When an appeal from any other order, that is, any other order than the orders specified in cls (15), (16) and (17), is allowed by this chapter,” (and it is clear that an appeal under cl 28 comes within this description), it shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in relation to which such order was made, or, when such order is passed by a Court (not being a High Court) in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, then to the High Court.”

Now if the present case had to be governed by the first portion of this sentence, it might be contended that, as no appeal lies from the decree in the suit in relation to which the order was made, therefore no appeal will lie from the order, but this first portion of the sentence does not apply. The portion which applies is the second portion, viz “When such order is passed by a Court (not being a High Court) in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, then to the High Court.” The order in the case now before us was passed by a Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, and therefore, under the express words of this section, the appeal lies to the High Court. There may have been an oversight on the part of the Legislature but we think that upon the interpretation of this express language, we must hold that an appeal in a case of the Small Cause Court class lies to the High Court from an order made under s 562 remanding a case.

The question raised upon the appeal itself has, we think, been properly decided by the Judge in the Court below. This appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

[525] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 4th January, 1884.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Luchmon Sahai Chowdhry and another.....Plaintiffs
versus Kanchun Ojhain and others.....Defendants *

Limitation—Suit for declaration of title—Suit to set aside an order of revenue authorities—Land Registration Act (Act VII of 1876), s. 89—Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 14.

The Civil Court has no power to set aside an order passed under the Land Registration Act, and when a prayer for such relief is contained in a plaint which also asks for a declaration of right and title to, and confirmation of possession in property, such prayer may be treated as mere surplusage

When, therefore, a plaint was filed containing separate prayers for the above relief, and when the original Court held that the main object of the suit was to have certain orders made by the revenue authorities set aside, and that the suit was accordingly governed by art. 14 † sch. II of the Limitation Act, and passed a decree dismissing the suit as having been brought more than a year after the date of such orders, Held, that such a decree was wrong; that the suit being one simply for the declaration of the plaintiffs' title in respect of the property in dispute, art. 14 had no application to the case.

IN this case the plaintiffs sought to be confirmed in the possession of, and to have an adjudication of, their right and title to a share in certain mouzahs in the district of Durbungah. They alleged that they had purchased the share in question, and that upon their submitting a petition for the registration of their names in respects thereof, the defendants filed a petition of objection denying the purchase, and that the plaintiffs were in possession of the disputed share as they alleged.

This petition of the plaintiffs was disallowed on the 21st June 1879, and that order was upheld by the Collector on the 28th August 1879, on an appeal being preferred to him. The plaintiffs then carried their appeal to the Commissioner, but that officer, on the 2nd July 1880, dismissed it on the ground that no appeal lay to him from an order passed by the Collector, merely affirming the order of the Deputy Collector.

* Appeal from Original Decree No 197 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Koilas Chunder Mukerji, Rai Bahadur, First Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore, dated 6th March 1882.

† [Art. 14 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
To set aside any act or order of an officer of Government in his official capacity, not herein otherwise expressly provided for.	One year ...	The date of the act or order.]

The plaintiffs accordingly, on the 1st July 1881, filed this suit, praying—[526] (1). That the Court would be pleased to confirm, by adjudication of their right, title, and possession, their possession in the disputed mouzahs.

(2). That the Court should adjudge that the defendants had no right or title to the possession of the share in the mouzahs in respect of which their names had been registered, and which were claimed by the plaintiffs.

(3). That the Court should set aside the orders made in the Revenue Department, dated the 21st June 1879, the 28th August 1879, and the 2nd July 1880, and grant the plaintiffs a decree for the registration of their names in the Collectorate in respect of the shares claimed.

In the lower Court the only issue determined was that of limitation. That Court held that, as the main object of the suit was to set aside the Collector's and Revenue Commissioner's orders refusing to register the plaintiffs' names in respect of the disputed share under the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), and as the prayer for the declaration of right was merely a subsidiary prayer, the suit was governed by art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act, which allowed only one year from the date of the order. It further held that the time during which the appeal was pending before the Commissioner could not be deducted, inasmuch as no appeal lay to that officer at all under s. 85 of the Land Registration Act, and that the period should therefore be calculated from the 28th August 1879, and that the suit was therefore barred. The Court also refused to apply art 144 of sch. II of the Limitation Act to the suit on the ground that that Act only applies to cases in which possession is asked for.

The Court accordingly dismissed the suit with costs.

Against that decree the plaintiffs now appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Mahomed Yusuf for the Appellants.

Baboo Unnoda Pershad Banerjee, Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, and Baboo Raghunundan Pershad for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the High Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ), was delivered by Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court dismissing the plaintiffs' suit as barred by limitation under [527] art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act is erroneous. It is true that the plaintiffs in the plaint prayed for the reversal of the orders passed under the Land Registration Act VII of 1876, but that prayer may be treated as mere surplusage. The Civil Court has no power to set aside an order passed under the Land Registration Act. The second clause (a), section 89, of the Land Registration Act provides that nothing contained in that Act shall be deemed to "preclude any person from bringing a regular suit for possession of, or for a declaration of right to, any immoveable property to which he may deem himself entitled," and that is the clause under which the plaintiffs in this case are entitled to maintain this suit for declaration of their right to the property in dispute, and if they can successfully establish that right in a Civil Court, then under the decree of the Civil Court they would be entitled to have their names registered. On the production of that decree and on a proper application being made by the plaintiffs, the revenue officers will rectify their register in accordance with the declaration made by the Civil Court. Therefore it is quite clear that art. 14 has no application, because it is not a suit to set aside any act or order of an officer of Government in his official capacity. It is simply a suit for declaration of the plaintiffs' title, in respect of the property in dispute. Whether the six years' limitation, or the twelve years' limitation applies, we need not discuss, because in either case the claim is within time. All that we decide in this appeal is simply this, that the plaintiffs claim on the face of the plaint is not barred under the provisions of art 14 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act

We set aside the judgment of the lower Court and remand this case to that Court for trial on the merits Costs, as usual, will abide the results

Appeal allowed and case remanded

[328] APPELLATE CIVIL

The 5th March 1884

PRESENT

MR JUSTICE TOLLINHAM AND MR JUSTICE NORRIS

Hanuman Kamat (Plaintiff) Appellant

versus

Dowlut Mundar and others (Defendants) Respondents

*Hindu law Mitthala Sale by one of several co sharers in a joint estate
How far alienation by father of joint family property is binding on sons Antecedent debts*

Although no member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitthala or Mitthala law has authority without the consent of his co sharers to sell or mortgage even his own share in order to raise money on his own account and not for the benefit of the joint family yet if a father does alienate even the whole joint property of himself and his sons in order to pay off antecedent personal debts the sons cannot void such alienation unless they prove that the debts were immoral

But to make the alienation to this extent binding upon the sons who did not consent to it it must be shown that it was made for the payment of antecedent debts and not merely in consideration of a loan or of a payment made to the father on the occasion of his making the alienation In the case of a voluntary sale the purchase money does not constitute an antecedent debt such as to render that sale binding on the sons unless they prove the transaction to have been immoral

In this case the first defendant, Dowlut Mundar was the father of the defendants Nos 2 to 6 defendant No 7, Sarober being the son of Hanuman, defendant No 2 In March 1867 a conveyance of a 1 anna 6 gundas 2 cowries and 2 krants share in a certain mouzah was executed by one Raghunundun Jha in favour of Hanuman Subsequently at an execution sale the rights of Damuda Jha and others in a 6 annas 3 gundas 1 cowrie 1 krant share in the same mouzah was purchased in the name of Sarober, making in all an 8 anna share in the said mouzah In August 1879 Dowlut Mundar executed in favour of the plaintiff a deed of sale, purporting to convey 2 annas and 10 gundas out of the said 8-anna share standing in the names of Hanuman and Sarober. After obtaining such conveyance the plaintiff applied to the Collector to have his name registered as proprietor of the share [529] so purchased by him, but on an objection to such registration being preferred by Hanuman and Sarober, his application was rejected.

He accordingly brought the present suit to obtain possession of the share so purchased by him, and to have the order of the revenue authorities set aside.

Hanuman and Sarober alone appeared and contested the plaintiff's claim.

The fact of the purchase of the respective shares in the names of those two defendants has not been disputed, but the plaintiff alleged that all the defendants were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mithila law, and that the purchases were made in these names out of joint family funds by Dowlut Mundar and on behalf of the joint family, and that Dowlut Mundar had caused those defendants to file the petition of objection before the Collector to prevent him obtaining possession of the share which he had purchased.

Hanuman and Sarober both filed written statements, denying that they were joint either with Dowlut Mundar or with each other, and alleging that the respective shares had been bought by them each out of his own separate funds.

The first Court held that the defendants were members of a joint family, and that the property in suit was the property of the joint family, and in this finding of fact the lower Appellate Court concurred.

Amongst the issues raised in the first Court the only one material for the purposes of this report was whether or not the share in the property claimed by the plaintiff was sold by Dowlut Mundar for the benefit of the joint family, and with the consent of all the defendants. Upon this issue the first Court found that the defendants Hanuman and Sarober were present when the conveyance to the plaintiff was executed, and that it was executed with their consent; that the consideration money was paid to Dowlut Mundar, and that it was not proved by the sons that the share had been sold for immoral purposes, or that the purchase-money had been applied to such purposes. That Court accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree.

Hanuman and Sarober thereupon appealed, and the lower Appellate Court disagreed with the finding of the Court below, that [530] those defendants had been present at the execution of, and consenting parties to, the conveyance, and held that that fact had not been proved, that though there was some evidence that shortly after the sale Rs. 1,100 had been paid by Dowlut Mundar to one Bhukun, being the principal and interest on a loan alleged to have been expended on the marriage of the sons of some of the defendants, there was no sufficient ground for holding that the sale had been effected for the benefit of the members of the joint family. That Court further held that upon the authority of Sadabar Prasad Sahu v. Foolbash Koer [3 B. L. R., (F. B.) 31], it was precluded from making a decree as against Dowlut Mundar, and the other defendants, who did not contest the suit, and accordingly reversed the decree of the Court below, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff now specially appealed to the High Court against that decision.

Mr. O. C. Mullick, Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Aubnash Chunder Bannerjee for the Appellant.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Troilockya Nath Mitter for the Respondents.

The following cases were cited and relied on at the hearing of the appeal. On the question as to the son's liability for the debts of the father—Girdhari Lall v. Kantoo Lall (14 B. L. R., 187; 22 W. R., 56); Suraj Bunsí Koer v. Sheo Pershad Sing (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148; L. R. 6 I. A., 88); Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdry (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855; 6 C. L. R., 473); Rampal Singh v. Degnarain Singh (10 C. L. R., 489); Gunga Pershad v. Sheo Dyal Singh (5 C. L. R., 224).

And upon the contention that the father's share was at least liable, and that the plaintiff had a right to have the father's share ascertained upon partition—Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Sing (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198), Phoolbas Koonwar v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 226), Mahabees Pershad v. Ramyad Singh (12 B.L.R., 90, 20 W. R., 192).

[531] The Judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by

Tottenham, J.—This suit was brought to obtain possession of a 2½ annas share of a certain mouzah by virtue of a conveyance executed in the plaintiff's favour on the 1st of August 1879 by Dowlut Mundar, defendant No. 1. Plaintiff was unable to get possession by reason of the opposition of defendants 2 and 7, a son and grandson of Dowlut, who set themselves up as the exclusive owners of the property claimed by plaintiff, and denied that Dowlut had any interest in it.

The other five defendants are all sons of Dowlut.

The suit in the Courts below, and the present appeal to this Court, have been defended by only defendants Nos. 2 and 7, and since the appeal was filed, the defendant No. 1, Dowlut Mundar, has died. A moiety of the village in question has been found to be the joint property of the seven defendants, composing a family governed by the Mithila law. And the question before us is, whether the alienation made by the father, Dowlut, is binding upon the son and grandson who contest it.

The plaintiff in his plaint alleged that the sale was made to him under necessity and for the benefit of Dowlut's family. In evidence he attempted further to prove that the sale was made with the direct assent even of the defendants 2 and 7.

The lower Appellate Court has found that this was not so; and has also found that the sale was not shown to have been effected for the benefit of the family. It held that the family were not bound by it, and considered that the ruling in the case of Sadabart Pershad Sahu v. Foolbash Koer [3 B. L. R., (F. B.) 31] forbade the passing of a decree for the plaintiff even for so much of the share claimed as belonged to Dowlut himself and to the other non-contending defendants.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff appellant has impugned the lower Appellate Court's decision that the sale by Dowlut is not binding on the respondents on this ground, that they have not proved that the money raised by the sale was obtained for immoral purposes or for the discharge of immoral debts; and he [532] contends that in a suit in which the son contests the validity of an alienation made by the father, it is incumbent upon him to prove that the object was to pay off immoral debts, and not upon the purchaser to prove that there was legal necessity for the sale.

We have considered all the cases cited to us as bearing upon this point, and the outcome of them all appears to be that, although no member of a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara or Mithila law has authority, without the consent of his co-sharers, to sell or mortgage even his own share in order to raise money on his own account, and not for the benefit of the joint family, yet if a father does alienate even the whole joint property of himself and his sons, in order to pay off antecedent personal debts, the sons cannot avoid such alienation unless they prove that the debts were immoral.

But to make the alienation to this extent binding upon the sons who did not consent to it, it must be shown that it was made for the payment of antecedent debts, not only in consideration of a loan, or of a payment made to the father on the occasion of his making the alienation.

It cannot be said that in the case of a sale voluntarily made the purchase money itself constitutes an antecedent debt, such as to render that sale binding on the sons, unless they prove the transaction to have been immoral.

In the present case the facts found by the lower Appellate Court are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a decree; for the Judge does not find that there was any antecedent debt, for the liquidation of which the father sold the property. On the contrary, though one witness deposed that a sum due to him was paid off shortly after the sale, the Judge evidently does not believe that the sale was effected for that purpose.

So far as the contesting defendants, therefore, were concerned, we cannot say that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in deciding in their favour. And as regards the other contention on behalf of the plaintiff appellant that the Court below should have given him a decree so far as concerned the interests of the non-contending defendants, we feel bound to hold that the sale having been found not to have been for the benefit of the family, and not having been shown to be necessary for the payment of antecedent debts [533] the authority of the ruling in Sadabart Pershad Sahu's case was binding on the lower Court, and it rightly refused to recognize the alienation.

It would be still more difficult to give effect to it now that the defendant No. 1 who was the vendor is dead, and his interest in the property has thus become extinguished. Even if the lower Court had a discretion in the matter, we cannot say that as a matter of law it was bound to exercise it.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd February, 1884.

PRESENT.

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Jugatmoni Chowdrani.....Plaintiff

versus

Romjani Bibee and others..... Defendants *

Wuqf, Essentials of—Increase in value of wuqf properties how appropriated.

Where by a *sunnu*d a gift was made of the then income of certain villages with a specification that one-third of it was for the defrayal of the expenses of the servants of a mosque and fursh and light, etc., one-third for the expenses of a mudrassa, and the remaining one-third for the maintenance allowance of the mutwulli, Held, that the gift complied with the four essential conditions necessary to create a valid wuqf according to Mahomedan law. Held, also, that in the absence of any express direction as to what was to be done with any surplus profits of the dedicated property, the reasonable presumption is that the improved value of the dedicated property, or any excess of profit over and above the amount stated in the *sunnu*d, was intended by the grantor to be devoted to the same purpose for which the amount, which was the actual value of the property at the time of the gift, was expressly assigned

IN this suit one Jugatmoni Chowdrani sued for possession of certain villages. She based her claim upon a dur-mokurruri lease granted by one Azizunnissa Bibi, who, it was alleged, had obtained a maurusi lease of the property from one Jaffir Ali. The defendants, among other things, contended that Jaffir Ali held possession only as mutwulli, and had no proprietary right to the villages, and that it was not competent to him to grant a permanent lease thereof. They relied upon two old *sunnu*d's which provided that "Mouzah Adoni, etc., [334] bearing a jumma of Rs. 1,080, are fixed and confirmed as mudud-mash bafurzandan in favour of the mutwulli, and the other servants of the said mosque; that the said mouzah, etc., etc., should be given over to their possession bafurzandan, so that they may enjoy the proceeds of the aforesaid mouzahs and defray the expense of fursh, lighting, etc., and ever be employed in prayers for eternal and perpetual wealth." There was then a memorandum or endorsement to the effect that mouzah Adoni, appertaining to pergunnah Luskerpore, of which the annual income of Rs. 1,080 should be divided into three portions, one-third or Rs. 360 per annum for the defrayal of the expenses of the servants of the mosque and fursh and light, etc., one-third or Rs. 360 per annum for the expenses of a mudrassa, and the remaining one-third or Rs. 360 for the maintenance of the mutwulli. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, but held, relying on Futtoo Bibee v. Bhurat Lal Bhukut (10 W. R., 299) and Basoo Dhul v. Kishen Chunder Geer Gossain (13 W. R., 200), that the properties were not wuqf, but merely heritable estates burdened with a trust. On appeal to the High Court an objection was taken to the judgment of the Court of First Instance, under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the pleader for the respondents supported the decree upon the question of wuqf, which had been decided against them in the lower Court.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 225 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Girish Chunder Chowdhry, Rai Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, dated 20th of June 1881,

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Rajendra Nath Bose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

McDonell, J.—Mr. Gregory, who appears on behalf of the respondents, has contended that under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he is to support the decree of the Court below upon the question of wuqf, which was decided against him in the lower Court. We think that this contention is sound, and we proceed accordingly to deal with the question of wuqf. The first grant is to be found at page 50 and following pages of the paper-book, and it is dated [335] so far back as the year 1756. It recites that a firman is issued to the effect that mouzah Adoni, etc., appertaining to taluk pergunnah Luskerpore, etc., Sirkar Barungabad, in the province of Bengal, which yields a sum of Rs. 1,080, be fixed (granted) bafurzandan as detailed in lieu of Rs. 3 per day for the expenses of fursh, lighting, and servants of the mosque, and mudrassa erected by Dost Mahomed Khan in Lalbagh, pergunnah Asadnugur, Sirkar Oodnir as mudud-mash of the mutwulli Bedar Ali and other servants of the aforesaid mosque. It then directs that the authorities, amlas and others do give over the said mouzah in their appropriation bafurzandan, without any change or alteration, and that they should raise no objections as to malwajhat and other items of expenditure, and should not demand a fresh sunnu every year. There is then a memorandum, or endorsement to the effect that mouzah Adoni, appertaining to pergunnah Luskerpore and so forth, of which the annual income is Rs. 1,080 in lieu of Rs. 3 per day for the defrayal of certain expenses as aforesaid, has been granted; and attached to this document there is a specification of the manner in which the sum of Rs. 3 per day is to be spent. This sum is divided into three portions, one-third or Rs. 360 per annum is for the defrayal of the expenses of the servants of the mosque and fursh and light, etc., etc., one-third or Rs. 360 for the expenses of a mudrassa at one rupee per day, and the remaining one-third or Rs. 360 for the maintenance allowance of Bedar Ali, son of Dost Mahomed Khan. These three portions make up the total of Rs. 1,080 and the nett jama of the villages granted is shown to amount to the same sum.

The second grant is dated 14 years later, 1770 A. D., and it recites that the first grantee, Bedar Ali, who had been adopted by Dost Mahomed, having been found incompetent to discharge the duties of mutwulli, had been turned out of the house, and the said Dost Mahomed Khan has applied for a sunnu in his own name. The new grant is then made to Sheik Fukeerulla, nephew of Dost Mahomed Khan, and the document concludes as follows:—

“For this purpose mouzah Adoni, etc., appertaining to the said pergunnah, etc., bearing a jumma of 86,500 damao which are equivalent to Rs. 1,080, are fixed and confirmed as mudud-mash [536] bafurzandan in favour of Sheik Fukeerulla, the mutwulli, and other servants of the said mosque. It is that the said mouzah, etc., should be given over to their possession bafurzandan without in any way raising objections, so that they may enjoy the proceeds of the aforesaid mouzahs and defray the expenses of fursh, lighting, etc., and ever be employed in prayers for eternal and perpetual wealth.” Then follows an account similar to the account of the manner in which the proceeds are to be spent, set out in the first instrument and to which I have already referred.

The first question with which we shall deal is, whether this instrument is one which creates a wuqf valid according to Mahomedan law. Let us see what are the essentials of such a grant. In the first place, the appropriator must destine its ultimate application to objects not liable to become extinct; secondly, it is a condition that the appropriation be at once complete; thirdly, that there be no stipulation in the wuqf for a sale of the property and expenditure of the price on the appropriator's necessities ; and fourthly, perpetuity is a necessary condition. We think that this grant fulfils all these four essentials. Then it is provided by the Mahomedan law that if a man appropriate his land for the benefit of a musjid and to provide for its repairs and necessities, such as oil, &c., this is valid appropriation. Looking at the instruments of grant in this case, it appears to us that there was a valid appropriation. But then arises the question what was appropriated. It has been contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that all that was the subject of appropriation was the annual sum of Rs. 1,080 ; and that all the surplus profits of the villages over and above this annual sum must be taken to have been given to Fakeerulla and his heirs who are related to Dost Mahomed Khan, who obtained the grant and erected the mosque. We have considered this argument, and it appears to us that what was appropriated was not the annual sum of Rs. 1,080, but the whole of the villages. We think that the specification contained in the two instruments was merely intended to indicate the proportions in which the money was to be expended on the different objects of the appropriation. It is [537] true that the grantor does not seem to have contemplated an increase in the value of the property. Certainly he has made no express provision for any surplus profits that such increase or an improved value of the property might yield over and above the annual sum of Rs. 1,080 : nevertheless, looking at the express terms of the grant, it appears to us, as I have already said, that the whole of the annual profits of the villages was the subject of appropriation. We think that in dealing with the surplus profits we must decide that those profits are to be appropriated in the same proportion to the objects for which the sum of Rs. 1,080, which was at that time the annual profit of the villages, was expressly appropriated. In putting a construction upon this grant of the Mahomedan Government, we may refer, by way of illustration, to the case of jagirs, which were grants of land to those retainers of the Mahomedan Government who were still in service. They were assignments, not of the land, but of the revenue, and were made as an appendage to the dignity of mansub, a kind of nobility conferred for life. These jagirs were of two kinds, conditional and unconditional. Conditional jagirs were granted generally to the principal servants of the Emperor, in order to meet the expenses of a particular office, and these were held only so long as the office was retained. Unconditional jagirs were independent of any office, and were personal grants for the maintenance of a dignity. These grants were for life only. If the lands produced more than the mansubdar's allowance, which was always fixed, he was bound to account for the surplus. Now it is a matter of history that these jagirs, which were at the time grants for life only, have become hereditary, and that the taufir or excess over and above the allowance fixed in the grant, instead of being accounted for and made over to the Government, has become the property of the jagirdar, and his descendants ; in other words, that all surplus, over and above the specific money amount of the grant, has followed the same object and destination as this specific amount.

A tonkha or Mahomedan assignment to revenue was in all probability something of the same kind. There is nothing before us to show that there was in this case any express direction as [538] to what was to be done with any surplus profits over and above Rs. 1,080 ; but we think that, looking at the express terms of the second grant, dated 1770, with the light which is to be obtained from similar grants made by the Mahomedan Government, the reasonable presumption is that the improved value or any excess over and above Rs. 1,080 was intended by the grantor to be devoted, or has come to be regarded by the grantee as devoted to the same purpose for which the amount of Rs. 1,080, which was in 1770 the actual value of the property, was expressly assigned. In this view of the case we come to the conclusion that the whole property is wuqf; and, therefore, it was not competent to Jaffir Ali to alienate it. It may be well to say that the dur-mokurruri lease granted by defendant No. 4 and the mokurruri lease which was obtained from Jaffir Ali, though in the form of leases, are really alienations of the greater portion of the beneficial interest in the property. We are, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the Court below must be upheld, although upon a different ground to that upon which that Court has proceeded. This appeal must in consequence be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 21st February, 1884.

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR JUSTICE FIELD.

Fakaruddin Mahomed Ahsan... .Petitioner

versus

The Official Trustee of BengalOpposite party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244 and 647—Execution proceedings—Review.

Where a judgment-debtor, pending the execution proceedings, was granted permission to examine the state of the accounts, but failed to do so, and then made a fresh application to the Court for the same purpose after the execution proceedings had been struck off, and the decree declared to be satisfied Held that the question must be determined with reference to the provisions of s. 647 of the Civil Procedure Code and the only course open to the judgment debtor would have been to apply for a review of the order which declared the decree to be satisfied and struck off the execution proceedings.

Held, also, that the words, "the following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree," of s. 244 of the Code of Civil [539] Procedure, must be interpreted to mean the Court executing the decree at the time when the application is made, and that they do not include the Court which has executed the decree and has, therefore, become functus officio.

THIS was an application made by the petitioner for the refund of Rs. 2,33,183 from the Official Trustee who was late the holder of a decree against the petitioner. On 3rd February 1883 the judgment-debtor (petitioner) applied to the Court for liberty to examine the state of the accounts. The request was granted, but the judgment-debtor neglected to take any further steps.

* Appeal from Original Order No. 377 of 1883 against the order of F. McLaughlin, Esq., Judge of Pabna, dated the 27th of August 1883.

On 7th May the decree was struck off as fully satisfied, the money having been paid out of Court. On 3rd July an application similar in terms to the one of 3rd February was made, but disallowed by the District Judge, and the petitioner thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Grya Sunkur Mozoomdar for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Macnam for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the High Court was as follows :—

In this case the execution proceedings were struck off by an order dated the 7th May 1883, which set forth that the decree was satisfied. The petition which forms the subject of this appeal was filed on the 3rd July following, and in that petition it was sought to re-open the whole of the accounts between the parties.

It has been contended to-day before us that this petition of the 3rd July ought to be read with a previous petition of the 3rd February 1883. As to this petition of the 3rd February, the Judge says : "In February last, the judgment-debtor applied to scrutinize the state of the account, and the request was granted." The original petition has not been produced before us to-day, and we must accept the account given of it by the District Judge. Accepting this account, it appears clear that all that was asked by the petition of the 3rd February was permission to examine the accounts, and that this permission was granted. This being so, it was open to the judgment-debtor, having examined the accounts between the 3rd February and 7th May, to object to the manner in which they were taken, and, if necessary, to the sum total for which execution was issued. Nothing of this sort was done, and we [540] must take it that the effect of the order of the 7th May was to close the execution proceedings.

It is contended that the judgment-debtor had a right to apply on the 3rd July to re-open the accounts, and it is said that, as there is no special provision of the Limitation Act applicable to an application of this kind, the judgment-debtor was at liberty to make this application at any time within three years. Art 178.—There is no section of the Code of Civil Procedure which gives the judgment-debtor a right to make an application of this kind,—that is, an application, after the execution has been closed and the decree satisfied, to re-open a matter which might have been discussed or argued in the course of the execution proceedings. We think, having regard to the provisions of s. 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that if the judgment-debtor having neglected the opportunity which he had between the 3rd February and the 7th May to examine the accounts, desired to show that more money had been levied from him under the execution than was due from him under the decree, the only course open to him would have been to apply for a review of the order of the 7th May, which declared the decree to be satisfied, and struck off the execution proceedings.

It has been contended that the matter of this petition of the 3rd July 1883 was a matter which the Court was bound to investigate under s. 224 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section runs as follows :—"The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree." As we understand these words, we think they must be interpreted to mean the Court executing the decree at the time when the application is made, and that they do not include the Court which has executed the decree, and has thereby become functus officio. We were pressed with the case of Sheikh Ali Hossein v. Sheikh Muzhur Hossein (4 C. L. R., 577). That was a case decided under the old Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859 read with Act XXIII of 1861). The facts of that case are not clearly stated either in the judgment, or in the statement of facts given by the reporter. Mr. Justice BROUGHTON says: "The payment of Rs. 1,275 by the judgment-debtor in December 1868 was a payment made [541] in consequence of a decree having been passed against him, and an account having been made, showing that a balance of Rs. 732 was still due from him. That account was not a final one, but subject to revision, and appears to have been subsequently revised." We are not in a position, therefore, to say what was the nature of the account in that case, and how far the decision itself is applicable as a precedent. The view which we take of the law is in accordance with the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Ramanadan Chetti v. Kunnappu Chetti (6 Mad. H. C. R., 304). That also was a case under the old law. We think, however, that this question must now be determined with reference to the provisions of the new Code, and as s. 647 has made applicable to all proceedings other than suits or appeals, the provisions of the Code which are applicable to suits or appeals, we think, as already stated, that the only course open to the judgment-debtor was to apply for a review. We are then asked to treat this application of the 3rd July as an application for review, but we are of opinion that this course is not open to us. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Decree, Execution of—Step in execution of decree—Informal application for execution—Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 179.

An application for execution of a decree having been made on the 19th January 1882 within time, but not in the form prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as it did as from Appellate Orders Nos. 200 and 201 of 1883, against the orders of H. Beveridge, Esq., Judge of Patna, dated 29th of March 1883, affirming the orders of Baboo Porosh Nath Banerjee, Second Subordinate Judge of that district, dated, respectively, the 27th of January 1883 and 30th of December 1882.

not contain the right number of the suit in which the decree was passed, an order was made on the 19th January directing the petitioner to amend the application within four days by giving the correct number. That order was not complied with, and the petition was left on the file of the Court without being [542] disposed of in any way till the 21st September 1882; on which date more than three years having then elapsed since the date of the decree, it was returned to the vakil of the petitioner for amendment within eight days. The required amendment was made, and the application again placed on the file of the Court on the 22nd September.

On an objection being taken that the decree was barred, and that execution could not issue, Held, following the principles laid down in the case of Syud Mahomed v. Syud Abeddollah (12 C.L.R., 279), viz, that it was the duty of the Court to dismiss the application when it found that it was informal, and thus to give the applicant an opportunity of putting in a proper application, and that the decree-holder should not be made to suffer for such omission on the part of the Court, that the former application could not, though informal, be treated as a nullity; and that the application on the 22nd September must be taken as having been presented with the object of amending the original informal application, and that it was in continuation of the execution proceedings commenced however informally on the 19th January 1882; and that consequently the decree was not barred. Held, also, that the fact of the application having been returned to the vakil for amendment instead of being amended while on the file of the Court, made no difference to the application of the above principle.

THE facts of these two appeals, which were analogous ones, are sufficiently stated for the purpose of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory for the Appellants.

Moulvie Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the High Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—In this case an application for execution of the decree of the Appellate Court, which was passed in the month of February 1879, was made on the 19th January 1882. The petition did not contain the right number of the suit in which the decree was passed, and an order was made on the 19th January, directing the petitioner to amend the petition by giving the right number within four days. This order was not complied with, but notwithstanding the petition was left on the record of the Court without being disposed of in any way. It was brought up again on the 21st September 1882, and on that date it was returned to the vakil of the petitioner to amend it by [543] giving the correct number of the suit within eight days from that date. The required amendment, however, was made on the day following, viz., on the 22nd September 1882, and the application was put upon the record again. Thereupon the Court directed it to be registered and ordered notice to issue. It is quite clear that if the application be considered to have been made on the 22nd of September, the decree would be barred by limitation as it was more than three years from the date of the decree. If, on the other hand, the application is to be considered as having been made on the 19th January 1882, it would be within time. The lower Courts have decided in favour of the decree-holder. The objection taken before us in appeal is, that under the circumstances stated above the lower Court should have held that the application was really made only on the 22nd September 1882, and therefore was barred by limitation. Our attention has been called to a decision in the case of Syud Mahomed v. Syud Abeddollah (12 C. L. R., 279), and although the facts of that case are not exactly similar to those of the present, yet the principle upon which that decision proceeds seems to us to be applicable here. The only difference that we can find in the facts is that, in the case under consideration, there was originally an order requiring the appellant to amend the application within four days, whereas in the case cited there was no limit fixed by the Court requiring the petitioner to amend the application. There is also another difference in the facts, viz., that in the case now before us the petition was actually returned to the vakil for amendment, while in the case cited the petition always remained on the file of the Court. But these are differences upon points which are not essential. The principle upon which the decision cited proceeded was that, as it was the duty of the Court to dismiss the application when it found that it was informal, and, as the Court did not so dismiss it, the decree-holder ought not to suffer for the omission on the part of the Court to dismiss the application, and the reason assigned for this is that, if the Court had done its duty and dismissed the application, the decree-holder might have put in a proper application on the [544] next day. Applying the same principle here, if, on the 19th of January, which in that case was within time, or on the expiration of four days from that date the application had been refused, the decree-holder would have been in time to make a fresh application in proper form. Therefore, it seems to us that the Court not having dismissed the application on the expiration of the four days allowed by it, and allowed the petition to remain on the file, the case comes within the purview of the decision cited. As to the other difference it is no difference at all, because, instead of allowing the vakils to amend the petition while it was on the file of the Court, the Court simply allowed the vakil to take it away and to amend it within the time given by the Court. That would not make any difference as to the application of the principle upon which the decision cited was passed. That being so, and it not being shown that the decision cited does not correctly lay down the law, we dismiss these appeals but without costs.

Appeals dismissed

Watson & Co. Defendants

versus

Nistarini Gupta..... Plaintiff.

Vis major—Ijara settlement—Land acquired by Government for public purposes—Deduction from rent.

An ijaradar took on lease certain lands, giving a habuliat, which contained the following clause —“In regard to the aforesaid rent we take upon ourselves the risk of flood and drought, of death and flight, of alluvion and diluvion, of profit and loss In no case shall we be able to claim a reduction in the rent, nor will it be open to you to demand more on account of alluvion,” &c.

During the lease part of these lands were taken up by Government for the purpose of a railway, and compensation was paid to the lessor therefor The ijaradar claimed to make a deduction from his rent for the land taken away from him Held, that such a claim did not come under the meaning of the word ‘abatement’ as used in the rent law, nor was it intended by the parties to be within the clause of the lease, but the land having been taken from the whole area demised, not by natural causes, but by vis major, the ijaradar was entitled to a deduction from the rent on his showing that there were tenants of his on the land who, before the land was taken by Government, paid rent to him which they had now ceased to pay.

[545] IN this case the defendants took from the plaintiff an ijara settlement of certain lands at an yearly rental of Rs 585 for a term of ten years from 1277 to 1286.

During the continuance of this settlement part of the lands included in the ijara were taken up by the Northern Bengal Railway Company, and for these lands so taken up the plaintiff had received compensation from Government. The habuliat given by the defendants contained, amongst others, the following clause :—

“In regard to the aforesaid rent fixed at Rs 585, we take upon ourselves the risk of flood and drought, of death and flight, of alluvion and diluvion, of profit and loss. In no case shall we be able to claim a reduction in the rent, nor will it be open to you to demand more on account of alluvion,” &c.

The defendants paid their rent up to 1285, and for 1286 paid to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 63 only, stating that they were entitled to obtain a deduction in their rent for the lands taken up by the Government for the railway.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1529 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo G C Chowdhry, Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, dated 11th of May 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Kali Charan Ghosal, Sudder Munsiff of Beauléah, dated 16th of August 1881.

The plaintiff then brought the suit for arrears of rent for the year 1286, contending that the words of the kabuliat prevented the defendants from making any deduction for any purpose. The defendants contended that the deduction should be made.

The Munsiff dismissed the plaintiff's suit, deciding that the defendants were entitled to an abatement of rent.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who found that it was clearly the intention of the parties that the lessee should not be able to claim abatement on any account, and that although the ground on which abatement was claimed by the defendants was not specially mentioned in the kabuliat, yet the words "in no case" were wide enough to prevent them claiming any abatement for any purpose whatever, and he therefore held that the defendants were precluded under the terms of the kabuliat from claiming any abatement, and gave the plaintiff a decree.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Bhowani Charan Dutt for the Appellants.

[546] Baboo Kahi Prosunno Dutt for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by Field, J.—We think that the lower Appellate Court has taken a mistaken view of this case. The suit was one for rent against an ijaradar. The ijaradar claimed a deduction in respect of certain land which was taken up for public purposes, that is to say, for a railway. The Munsiff held that the special stipulation in the kabuliat relied upon by the plaintiff did not cover a case of this kind. The Subordinate Judge took a different view and held that the clause in the kabuliat was wide enough to cover the case of land taken for public purposes.

We have heard the clause in the kabuliat, and we think it was intended to meet the ordinary cases in which the area of land demised is diminished by diluvion,* or other similar causes, and that the present case is not within the intention of the parties. Looking at the question from another point of view, it would be inequitable that the zamindar, who has received the whole amount of compensation, should be allowed further to obtain from the ijaradar the former rent undiminished, in other words, after receiving the principal, should be allowed to continue to receive interest on this principal in the shape of rent. We think that this is not properly a case of abatement, as that term is ordinarily used in the rent law. It is a case in which the tenant seeks to have a deduction in respect of land taken away from the whole area demised, not by natural causes, but by vis major. In this view we think that the ijaradar is entitled to a deduction. But in order to obtain this deduction, we think he ought to show that in consequence of the land being taken for the railway, his receipts from the tenants of his ijara have been diminished; in other words, that there were tenants on the land who, before it was taken, paid him rent, which they have ceased to pay since it was taken for the railway. The appellants' vakil informs us that there is evidence of this nature on the record, and we must direct, therefore, the lower Appellate Court to consider such evidence and decide the case accordingly. We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case for a fresh decision. The costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

Landlord and Tenant—Suit for arrears of rent—Ejectment—Transferable tenure—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, ss. 22, 59.

In a suit for arrears of rent and for ejectment by a landlord against a tenant who had a right of occupancy in the holding transferable by sale,

Held (MITTER, J., doubting), that the tenant was not liable to ejectment, and that the landlord's only remedy was to sell the holding under the provisions of s. 59, Beng. Act VIII of 1869. Kristendra Roy v. Aena Bewa (I.L.R. 8 Cal. 675, 10 C.L.R. 399) followed.

Per MITTER, J.—Quare, whether having regard to the provisions of s. 22, Act VIII of 1869, which is not controlled or modified by any subsequent section of the Act, all ryots, whether they have a right of occupancy or not and whether such right of occupancy be saleable by the custom of country or not, are not liable to ejectment if an arrear of rent remains due at the end of the year.

THE plaintiff in this suit sought to recover the sum of Rs. 24-5-9, being principal and interest for arrears of rent in respect of some 32 bighas of land situate in mouza Parasin Pranpore at the annual jama of Rs. 141-1-3 for the year 1288 F. S. He also sought to eject the defendant from the land.

The defendant, while admitting that he held the land, contended that the jama payable by him was only Rs. 138-5-3 per annum, and that out of this amount the plaintiff allowed a remission of Rs. 5-12; that he had already paid Rs. 118, and that only Rs. 14 were due from him. He further contended that he was not liable to be ejected from his holding.

The following issues were framed:—

- (1) What is the annual jama payable by the defendant to the plaintiff?
- (2) What amount of rent is the defendant entitled to by way of remission?
- (3) Is the defendant liable to be ejected?

The first Court found the two first issues in favour of the plaintiff, [548] and on the third issue, upon the evidence, found that the defendant's jote was transferable, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for ejectment.

The plaintiff then appealed against that portion of the decree which declared that the defendant was not liable to be ejected, but the lower Appellate Court confirmed the decision of the lower Court, holding that an order for ejectment could not be passed in the case of such a tenure, and that it must be brought to sale.

The plaintiff thereupon specially appealed to the High Court on the same grounds as those upon which his original appeal was based.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2772 of 1882, against the decree of J. Tweedie, Esq., Judge of Shahabad, dated September 12th, 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Dwarka Nath Bhattacharji, Second Munsif of Arrah, dated January 19th, 1882.

Baboo Aubinash Chunder Bannerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Ragnundun Pershad for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the High Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was as follows :—

Maclean, J.—The lower Appellate Court has found, affirming the finding of the first Court, that the defendant-respondent holds a transferable tenure and therefore cannot be ejected under the provision of s. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

The question submitted for our decision is whether a landlord is precluded from ejecting such a tenant, viz., a tenant with a right of occupancy, such right being transferable by sale, and is confined to the course laid down in s. 59 of the Act.

In the case of Turbhobun Sing v. Jhono Lall (18 W. R., 206) it was explained that sale, and not ejectment, was the landlord's proper remedy. In the latter case of Krishtendra Roy Chowdhry v. Aena Bewa (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 675 ; 10 C. L. R., 399) the very question now raised seems to have been discussed, and the decision was against the right of the landlord to eject. The decision under appeal now is in accordance with the cases I have quoted, and should, in my opinion, be confirmed. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Mitter, J.—If the question for decision in this case were res integra, I should hesitate much to adopt the conclusion to which the lower Courts have come. Section 22 of Beng. Act VIII [349] of 1869 says: "When an arrear of rent remains due from any ryot at the end of the Bengalee year or at the end of the month of Jeyt of the Fasli or Wilayutti year, as the case may be, such ryot shall be liable to be ejected from the land in respect of which the arrear is due: provided that no ryot having a right of occupancy or holding under a pottah, the term of which has not expired, shall be ejected otherwise than in execution of a decree, or order under the provisions of this Act."

It is clear, therefore, that all ryots, whether having a right of occupancy or not, and whether such right of occupancy be saleable by the usage of the country or not, are liable to ejectment if an arrear of rent remains due at the end of the year. This provision is not controlled or modified by any subsequent section. Upon the Act itself, therefore, the soundness of the conclusion to which the lower Courts have come is open to doubt. But as there is no conflict of authority on this point, and as it has been understood that the law has been settled in the way in which the lower Court's decision goes, I concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 179, cl. 4.

An application made by a judgment-creditor to take out of Court certain moneys, the sale proceeds realized by the sales of certain properties of his judgment-debtor in a previous execution, cannot be considered to be an application to the Court to take a "step in aid of execution," and is not therefore within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179, sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Debee (I.L.R., 8 Cal., 89); Venkatarayalu v. Narasimha (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 174) dissented from.

[550] THIS was an appeal from an order holding that the execution of a decree was barred. The application for execution was made on the 1st March 1883, and was within three years of another application, dated the 5th August 1880, made by the judgment-creditors for the purpose of taking out of Court the sale proceeds realized by the sale of certain properties of the judgment-debtors in a previous execution. The judgment-creditor contended that that application constituted the taking of some step in aid of execution; and that consequently they were within time, and that execution of decree was not barred, but the Munsiff rejected this contention, and held that the execution was barred, and this decision was upheld on appeal by the lower Appellate Court.

The judgment-creditor now specially appealed against that order.

Munshi Mahomed Yusoof for the Appellant.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—The lower Courts in this case have held that the decree-holders right to execute the decree is barred by limitation. It is contended before us that this decision is wrong, because the present application, which is dated 1st March 1883, is within three years from the date of another application, dated 5th August 1880 made by the judgment-creditor in order to draw out the sale proceeds realised by the sale of certain properties of the judgment-debtor in a previous execution. In support of this contention our attention has been called to the decision in Venkatarayalu v. Narasimha (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 174). The lower Courts have decided this case on the strength of a ruling of this Court in the case of Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Debee (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 89). We have examined both these rulings, and we find that the one of our Court is exactly in point. No doubt in the Madras case it was given as an additional reason over and above the one on which the decision mainly rested, that such an application as this was an application which came within the purview of the words "an application to take some step in aid of

We therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss 248, 259, 345, 437—Further enquiry, Power of District Magistrate to direct—"Subordinate Magistrate"—Compoundable offence

A criminal charge under s 448 of the Indian Penal Code having been instituted, the accused was sent up by the Police before a Deputy Magistrate of the first class. Previous to any evidence being taken, the complainant intimated to the Magistrate that the case had been amicably settled, and that he did not wish to proceed further in the matter, upon which the Magistrate recorded an order, "Compromised defendant acquitted." Subsequently the Magistrate of the district, relying upon ss 248 and 259, and professing to act under s 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directed the Deputy Magistrate to send up the parties and proceed regularly with the case.

Held, that ss 248 and 259 had no bearing on the case, and that the mere fact of the accused had been sent up by the Police did not prevent the offence, which was legally compoundable, from being compromised, and that consequently the order of the Deputy Magistrate was perfectly correct and legal.

Held, further, that in addition to the Magistrate's order not being warranted by the fact, it was ultra vires, inasmuch as the Deputy Magistrate was a Magistrate of the first class and not "inferior" to the District Magistrate and to give the District Magistrate jurisdiction to call for a record under s 435 from another Magistrate and to act under s 437, the latter must be inferior. Nobin Krishno Mookerjee v Russick Lall Laha (I L R 10 Cal., 268) followed.

THE facts of this reference were as follows —

On the 2nd December 1883 Pir Bux complained to the Police at thana Mahinapore against Nowab Jan, charging him with house-trespass. The Police sent up the accused to the Deputy Magistrate of Lalbagh for trial, under s. 448 of the Indian Penal [552] Code, on the 6th December. After two adjournments, when no evidence had been taken, the case being fixed for the 21st December, an application was made by Pir Bux to the Deputy Magistrate on the 20th December, informing him that the matter had been arranged and that he did not wish to proceed with the prosecution. The case being one under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code, and being one in respect of a compoundable offence, the Deputy Magistrate on the same day recorded an order, "Compromised, defendant acquitted," and the defendant was accordingly released.

Thereupon the District Magistrate on his own motion, or at the instance of the Police, recorded certain remarks to the effect that when a case had been sent up by the Police no withdrawal by any private person could stop its being proceeded with, and relied upon ss. 248 and 259 of the Criminal Procedure Code in support of that view. He thereupon ordered the Deputy Magistrate, "under the closing portion of s. 437, to send for the parties and to proceed regularly with the case."

This course having been pursued and having resulted in the conviction of the accused and in a sentence of imprisonment being passed, the Sessions Judge, on the proceedings being brought to his notice, submitted the record for the order of the High Court, addressing at the same time a letter to the Registrar of the High Court, of which the following is an extract:—

"The District Magistrate was wrong in thinking he could set aside that order of acquittal. Section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code dealt with a different condition of things. He was wrong in discussing ss. 248 and 259, which have nothing whatever to do with s. 345 of the Criminal Procedure Code and deal with altogether different contingencies. The offence being under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code, and the person whose property had been trespassed on having compounded it, the Deputy Magistrate was compelled to acquit. Nowab Jan, having been acquitted, and rightly so, was not liable to be tried again for the same offence, and to be convicted and sentenced."

No one appeared on the hearing of the reference.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by [553] Mitter, J. (MACLEAN, J., concurring).—We have no doubt that the District Magistrate has mistaken the law throughout.

It appears that on a charge preferred by Pir Bux, the Police sent up one Nowab Jan for trial, under s. 448 of the Penal Code.

Pir Bux subsequently, on 19th December, petitioned the Magistrate (of the first-class), asking that as the case had been amicably settled, and that as he did not wish to proceed with the case, it might be disposed of.

The Magistrate accordingly endorsed the petition, "Compromised; defendant acquitted."

As it appears that Pir Bux was the person described in the third column of the table attached to s. 345, and that the offence is described in the second column of that table, it is clear that the order of the Magistrate of 20th December is quite correct and legal.

Neither s. 259 nor s. 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code has any bearing on the case; as all that is necessary regarding the compounding of the offence that was under investigation is to be found in s. 345, and we do not understand the law to be that no Magistrate under any circumstances has power to allow a case that is sent up by the Police to be withdrawn.

The District Magistrate's order purporting to be passed under s. 437 was therefore not warranted for the reasons given above; and it was also ultra vires from the fact that Mr. Beames is a first-class Magistrate and is not therefore inferior to the District Magistrate. To give the District Magistrate jurisdiction under s. 435 to call for a case from another Magistrate, the latter must be "inferior." See Nobin Kristo Mookerjee v. Russick Lall Laha (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 268).

We set aside all the proceedings subsequently to the 20th December, including the conviction of Nowah Jan, dated 27th February 1884, and the sentence passed upon him.

Conviction set aside.

Certain joint property in which five brothers were interested being the subject of a suit in which the rights of all parties were fully ascertained and decreed, one of such parties (who died after the decree) was declared entitled to a 5/30th share in the joint estate.

Subsequently to this decree several orders were made in the suit, appointing a Receiver, ordering partition, and excluding certain properties from partition and directing an account.

On partition, a 5/30th share in the properties ordered to be partitioned was allotted and made over to the guardian of the infant children of the sharer who had died, the remainder of the unpartitioned property being in the hands of the Receiver. On the taking of the account, it was ascertained that the deceased sharer had during his lifetime overdrawn from the joint estate, and that the sum so overdrawn by him would have to be made good out of the 5/30th share decreed to him ; it being alleged by the present petition that the sum allotted to him would be insufficient to cover the deficiency, and there being certain Government securities and a small sum in cash belonging to the private estate of such deceased sharer in the hands of the Bank of Bengal, the Court, on an application made for the purpose, directed letters of administration limited to the Government securities and cash to issue, considering that the facts of the case warranted a departure from the rule laid down in Ram Chandra Seal (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 2).

THIS was an application for letters of administration to the estate of one Suttia Krishna Ghosaul, deceased, limited to certain Government securities of the value of Rs. 6,000 and Rs. 160 in cash.

The petitioners were Suttia Bhooson Ghosaul, the eldest son of the deceased, and Soudaminey Dabee his sole widow as guardian of two infant sons of the deceased. The deceased, who died in August 1880 intestate, left the petitioners him surviving, being entitled under a decree in suit No. 568 of 1871, dated 28th November 1872, to a 5/30th share in certain joint property, subject to the right of his mother Siboosondery to certain maintenance therefrom ;

the decree directing partition of the estate, and appointing certain persons Receivers and Commissioners of partition. In January 1878 an order was obtained appointing [553] F. J. Ferguson, Receiver, in the place of the Receivers appointed under the decree, and certain property was also thereby excluded from partition, and in March 1880 certain of the properties were ordered to be excluded from partition, such properties still remaining in the hands of the Receiver. On the 31st August 1880 the widow of the deceased was appointed guardian ad litem of her infant sons, and in September 1880 the four infant sons were added as defendants in the place of their deceased father in the suit of 1872.

By certain orders, dated 12th January 1881, and 17th December 1881, the Commissioners of partition appointed in the suit certified that a 5/30th share of the moveable and immoveable property had been allotted to the present petitioners, and such share was made over to the Receiver, but was subsequently made over to the widow of the deceased as guardian of the infant sons, on her giving security, the properties which were excluded from partition remaining as above-mentioned in the hands of the Receiver. By an order, dated 19th May 1881, the Receiver was directed to pay over the nett income of the joint estate in his hands to the parties according to their shares, and certain accounts were ordered to be filed, and from such accounts it appeared that the deceased in his lifetime had overdrawn from the joint estate a sum of Rs. 35,925, and that this sum was due and payable by his estate to the joint estate. By a decree in a suit between Siboosoondery Dabee v. Bussomuty Dabee, dated 3rd March 1881 (which suit was ordered to be consolidated with suit No. 568 of 1871), Siboosoondery Dabee, the mother of the deceased, was declared entitled to a 1/3rd share of the real properties allotted to the respective heirs of the deceased. [The amount to be received by Siboosoondery and the amount due from the estate of the deceased as overdrawn were stated to amount to more than the value of the properties allotted to the heirs of the deceased by the return of the Commissioners of partition.] On the 26th March 1881 Soudaminy gave birth to a posthumous son, Suttyakanto Ghosaul, and he was added as a party defendant to the suit No. 568 of 1871, and his mother was appointed his guardian ad litem, and on Suttya Bhooson Ghosaul attaining majority, Soudaminy was discharged from acting as his guardian.

[556] Beside the properties mentioned above, and those in the hands of the Receiver, the Receiver was in possession of a sum of Rs. 20,050 in Government paper, which was directed to remain subject to the payment of certain costs incurred; and in addition to the interest of the deceased in the joint estate, the deceased was at his death possessed of, as his own separate property, certain Government securities for Rs. 6,000 standing in his own individual name, a portion of which, Rs. 2,000, had been placed by him in the Bank of Bengal as security against overdrafts, and which sum, together with a cash balance of Rs. 160, was still in the hands of the Bank, and the remaining portion of which, viz., Rs. 4,000, being in the hands of Soudaminy.

Such being the position of affairs regarding the share of the deceased in the joint family property and in his separate estate the petitioners above-mentioned (there having been no previous grant of probate or letters of administration taken out with regard to the estate and effects of the deceased), asked for a grant of letters of administration to the estate and effects of the deceased, limited to the Government securities for Rs. 6,000 and 160 lying in the Bank of Bengal, such application as regarded the widow of the deceased being durante minoritate.

Mr. Stokoe for the Petitioner.—The facts set out in the petition show that what has been allotted in severalty, and which is not in the hands of the Receiver, will be insufficient to settle the charge against the estate of the deceased, and that the interest of the parties that would have to be administered has virtually been sufficiently dealt with by the suits which have been going on, and that in effect there is no matter of administration to be performed with regard to the 5/30th share coming to the heirs of the deceased. Section 4 of Act V of 1881 applies to Hindus where administration is granted, therefore as we say there can be no object in vesting in us as administrators the property which is already in the hands of the Receiver, I ask the Court to except from the grant of letters of administration such properties, and to grant us letters limited to the Government paper for Rs. 6,000, and the cash in the hands of the Bank of Bengal; we should not be allowed to deal as administrators with the property in the hands of the Court.

[557] No doubt Mr. Justice PONTIFEX in the case of Ram Chund Seal (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 2) has decided that only general letters of administration can be granted to Hindus, but the question has been commented in on the case of Grish Chunder Mitter (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 483). It has already been adjudicated that the five children are entitled to the property, and it has been paid over to the mother as guardian ad litem, but I submit the property has been severed so as no longer to belong to Suttia Krishna Ghosaul's estate.

Cunningham, J.—It appears to me that the circumstances set out in the petition of the applicants are sufficiently special to take the case out of the operation of the rule laid down by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX in the case of Ram Chund Seal (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 2) and therefore I make the order as prayed.

Application granted.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Act X of 1877, s. 602—Extension of time for giving security in appeal—Custom—Wajib-ul-arz.

The words in s. 602 of Act X of 1877, relating to the time within which security is to be given, are directory only; and although they are not to be departed from without cogent reason, the Court from which appeal is preferred has the right of extending the time. In this case, a satisfactory explanation having been given of delay in giving security until after the time limited by the above section had expired, held that the Court had rightly exercised discretion in extending the time. In the matter of the petition of Soormukhi Koer (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 272) approved.

The paternal grandmother of a deceased village shareholder claiming to inherit in preference to his male collateral relations, the issue was fixed with the assent of the pleaders on both sides, whether the plaintiff, as a female, [558] was excluded from inheriting by the custom of the family, or tribe. Held, that this was substantially a question of fact, and that on the evidence, which included the village wajib-ul-arz, the customary exclusion of females was not proved.

APPEAL from a decree (29th October 1880) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (8th July 1880) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by Bhagana, the respondent, the widow of Sadanand, formerly kabuli-at-dar, or shareholder, responsible for the revenue of a five annas four pie share in mouzah Rahem-nagar, pargana Bijour, in the Lucknow district. She claimed to have a declaration of her right on that share against the nephews of Sadanand. The latter had two brothers, from whom he was disassociated, and died in 1849 leaving a son, Suraj Buksh, born of the respondent Bhagana. Suraj Buksh inherited his father's property, and with him till his death in 1879 his mother Bhagana lived. He left a son, Pirthi Pat, who died in the same year, leaving a daughter. After the death of Pirthi Pat, whose name during his life was not entered in the Collectorate books as in possession, his grandmother continued to hold the land. But on the 30th January 1880 the sons of the brothers of Sadanand (deceased) obtained dakhil kharij or alteration of entry of names, from the tahsildar of Lucknow. Bhagana then brought the present suit, to which the defence was made that she, being a female, was excluded from the inheritance by the custom of the family and tribe, Pande Brahmins in Oudh.

In the Court of First Instance it was held that no custom to that effect had been proved, the wajib-ul-arz (or village administration paper signed at settlement), contradicting it, save as to certain specified female relations, viz., daughters and unmarried women. The Judicial Commissioner, in affirming this judgment, observed that the evidence had not proved that, by custom, a grandmother could not succeed.

On this appeal—

Mr. J. H. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. J. G. W. Sykes for the Respondent

A preliminary objection was taken for the respondent, objecting that the Judicial Commissioner had without legal authority [559] extended the time for giving security; and that even if he had such authority, where a proper case was made out for the exercise of a judicial discretion, such a case had not been made out here. Mr J G W. Sykes contended that under s. 602 of Act X of 1877 the limit of time was enacted by law, and therefore could not be extended. In this case the appellants had already exceeded it when they made their application to have it extended. Whatever could be done for them could only have been on application to this Committee. He referred to Act VI of 1874, s. 8, and s. 11, cl. 6, and cited In re Lalla Gopeechand (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 128), In re Funendro Deb Roy (23 W. R., 220); In re Soormukhi Koer (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 272).

The latter case was distinguishable from the present. It decided that the requirements of s. 11 of Act VI of 1874 were not imperative, the Court having a discretion to allow security and costs to be deposited after the period mentioned in the Act when the Court had been closed at the expiration of that period, allowing the deposit to be made on the day of re-opening. Now, provision for the case of the Court being closed had been made, and the appellants in the present case had not the same kind of excuse, their explanation being that, wrongly advised, they attempted to make the deposit in the Court of First Instance, which caused the delay.

Mr J. H. W. Arathoon for the appellant relied on the Full Bench decision in Soorjmukhi Koer's case

Their Lordships having intimated that the appeal should proceed--

Mr J. H. W. Arathoon was heard for the Appellants.

Counsel for the respondent was not called upon

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. P. Collier—This was a suit brought by Mussumat Bhagana against the defendants for the purpose of recovering a certain mouzah. The only question in the case was this, whether the Mussumat, who was the grandmother of one Pirthi Pat, succeeded to the real property of Pirthi Pat, or whether the male descendants [360] collateral to her husband, succeeded to that property. The parties were both represented by Counsel, and they agreed to this issue "Is plaintiff, as a female, excluded from inheritance by the custom of the family and tribe." On defendants' side. It appears to their Lordships that, this issue having been settled by the learned Judge by the consent of Counsel and the cause having been tried upon it, it is the only issue now before us, and the question to be determined is whether, the two Courts, that of the Subordinate and of the Judicial Commissioner, having found as a fact that the defendant had not sustained the burden of proof laid upon him, viz, that the plaintiff, as a female, was excluded from the inheritance, that finding shall or shall not be affirmed.

The question of the custom, or no custom in the family is substantially one of fact. If their Lordships could see that any proposition of law was mixed up with it they might be disposed to review it, but no such proposition arises upon the evidence, and further they are disposed to say that the conclusion of the Courts upon the evidence seems to them to have been right. The evidence was in substance that of a great number of members of the family, and strangers, of whom more might have been called, to the effect generally that there was such a custom in the family, which is a mere assertion by the witnesses of the question to be tried in the cause. But it would appear that all the witnesses founded their opinion upon one particular case, viz, that upon the death of Baijnath, the father of the husband of the plaintiff, instead of his widow or mother taking his uncles and nephews took. The Courts say that that being the only instance in the family, does not sufficiently prove custom. Further it is to be observed that that evidence was in a great degree contradicted by a paper called a wajib-ul-arz, which was put in, whereby the general contention of the defendants, which was that no female whatever could succeed, was, to a certain extent at all events, modified. The wajib-ul-arz is in these terms "If the deceased have two or more wives lawfully married then the property left by the deceased would be divided among the number of wives in this way that if there be one son from one wife, and two or more from the other, then the one son from the former would take one-half, and the two or more from the latter would take the other [361] half, sub-dividing it equally among themselves but a wife having no male issue shall receive no share, she shall, however, receive maintenance from the sons of the other wives who have inherited a share. In our family the custom is to give no share to daughters. If none of the wives lawfully married to a deceased co-sharer have any issue, in such a case of course the childless widow shall have possession of the share of the deceased. If a widow being childless desire to adopt a son, she can adopt one of the nearest male members of her deceased husband's family. She shall not be competent to adopt her brother or brother's son. Women not lawfully married, and their issue, provided they bear good moral character, will be entitled to receive only food and clothing, but shall not receive a share." This vajib-ul-arz seems very much indeed to qualify the general statement of the witnesses that no female could succeed in the family, for it distinctly states that under some circumstances wives and widows succeed, although it does not distinctly state that grandmothers do.

On the whole, therefore, it appears to their Lordships that the finding upon this one issue, which was settled by both the parties and by both Courts, is right.

It should be stated that it appears in this case that Pirthi Pat had a daughter about seven years old, but by consent of both parties that daughter is excluded from consideration in the case, and the case has been treated as if that daughter had not existed. Their Lordships think it right to say that that daughter, being no party to this suit, is in no way bound by this decision, and they give no opinion with respect to what her rights may be.

Under these circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment appealed from was right, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm that judgment with costs.

It only remains to state that a preliminary point was raised as to whether the Judicial Commissioner had a right to extend the time for giving security in this appeal. Their Lordships upon that point have to say that they concur in the view which was taken by the Full Bench of the Court in Calcutta, that the words in the Act which have been quoted relating to the giving of security are directory only, and, although not to be departed from without [562] cogent reason, in this particular case it seems to them that the Commissioner has exercised a right discretion. Under these circumstances their Lordships do not give weight to the objection against the admission of the appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th March, 1884.

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR JUSTICE FIELD

Abdool Adood and others . Defendants

versus

Mahomed Makmil and another . Plaintiffs

Onus of proof—Hindu customs amongst Mahomedans—No presumption when no allegation of custom made.

A and B were two brothers, Mahomedans, who lived together in commensality. A, whilst so living with his brother, purchased certain lands under a conveyance executed by the vendor and A. In a suit by the heirs of B against the heirs of A to obtain possession of such lands, in which they alleged they had been dispossessed by the heirs of A, the Court found the land to be joint family property and to have been purchased with joint funds. On appeal, the onus of proving that the land was purchased by A alone was put upon A, held, that there being no allegation that the parties had adopted the Hindu law of property, the Judge, by applying to Mahomedans the presumption of Hindu law, had cast the onus on the wrong party.

THE plaintiffs in this case sued to recover possession of certain lands from which they had been dispossessed by the defendants.

The plaintiffs alleged that the land in question had been bought by two uterine brothers (the father of the plaintiffs and the father of the defendants), who were Mahomedans, living in commensality with each other. That on the death of the plaintiffs' father, their mother and uncle lived together and held joint [563] possession of the land, and that on the death of their mother they took possession of the share to which they were entitled, but that the defendants had dispossessed them, and this suit was therefore brought by the plaintiffs for the purposes above-mentioned. Both parties to the suit were Mahomedans.

The defendants contended that their father had purchased the land when living separate from the plaintiffs' father, and that the conveyance had been signed by their father alone.

The Munsiff found that the land was purchased by the father of the defendants alone, at a time when he and the plaintiffs' father were living in commensality, and that therefore it must be considered to be joint family property, and he gave the plaintiffs a decree.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who found that the conveyance was executed in the name of the defendants' father, but as the two brothers lived in commensality, the defendants not having proved that the purchase was made by the defendants' father on his own account, the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree. He, therefore, upheld the decision of the Munsiff.

The defendants appealed to the High Court

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1319 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Ram Coomar Pal, Roy Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, dated 16th of May 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Romesh Chunder Bose, Roy Bahadur, Munsiff of that district, dated 21st November 1881.

Munshi Serajul Islam for the appellants contended that the Judge was wrong in holding that, from the mere fact of the family living together, the property was therefore joint, the presumption of Hindu law ought not to have been applied to the case of Mahomedans, and that, by thus presuming, the onus of proof had been wrongly put upon the defendants.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

McDonell, J.—This appeal is concerned with plot No 1 only. The parties are Mahomedans. The property in dispute was purchased by a conveyance executed in the name of the defendants' father. The plaintiffs, however, claim a share on the ground that, although the conveyance was in the name of the defendants' father, the family was at the time living in commensality, and the funds with which the purchase was made were joint funds.

The Munsif dealt with the question on the ground that the purchase was made from joint funds, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to a share.

[564] The case then came on appeal before the Subordinate Judge. He first held that the suit in respect of this plot was barred by s 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

A review was then applied for and granted, and upon the review he changed his mind as to the applicability of s 13 and then proceeded to deal with the merits. He says in his judgment "True that the kobalas of purchase were executed in the name of the defendants' father, but as the two brothers lived together at that time, the defendants should have proved that the purchase in question was made by the defendants' father alone, but this they have not been able to do."

It is now contended before us that in this passage the Subordinate Judge has applied to Mahomedans a presumption peculiar to Hindu law, and that by so doing he has cast the burden of proof upon the wrong side, that is, upon the defendants instead of upon the plaintiffs.

We think that this contention is correct. The Munsif, as I have already said, although observing that the Mahomedans by living a long time amongst Hindus, had adopted the manners and customs of Hindus, did nevertheless decide the question, not upon any presumption of Hindu law, but upon evidence that the property was purchased with joint funds. There was no allegation, that by custom the parties to this suit had adopted the Hindu law of property, and this being so, we think that the Subordinate Judge was bound to decide upon the allegations and the evidence whether the property was purchased from joint funds. The burden of proving that it was purchased with joint funds was, of course, upon the plaintiffs, but by applying the presumption of Hindu law in the first instance, the Subordinate Judge has cast the burden of proof upon the defendants, and in this we think he has committed an error. We must, so far as regards plot 1, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and remand the case for a proper decision. The costs will abide the result.

Decree reversed in part and case remanded.

[565] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 21st February, 1884.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

Narain Chunder Dhur.....Plaintiff

versus

Cohen. Defendant.

Market rate—Ascertainment of market rate in suit on an agreement of indemnity—Evidence

Where the Court has had the advantage of having in evidence before it a record of the market rate of any particular day made up by a broker of intelligence and experience, such a record should be received as evidence of the particular state of the market on that day.

THIS was a suit upon an agreement which was entered into by Cohen to indemnify the plaintiff against any loss which might be sustained under a contract entered into between Narain Chunder Dhur and the Camberhatty Co., Limited. The facts were that Cohen, who was a broker, had informed the plaintiff that he knew of a contract for the purchase of six lacs of gunny bags, which contract he advised the plaintiff to take over, he (Cohen) being willing to give the plaintiff an indemnity against loss on the contract. The contract was taken over by the plaintiff, and the indemnity given by Cohen.

The contract resulted in a loss, and the indemnity was put in force against Cohen. His defence was that, even assuming the agreement to be an agreement of indemnity, the plaintiff was not entitled to ask for damages, inasmuch as he (Cohen) had, a month after the contract had been taken over by the plaintiff when the market rate had gone up, informed him that he (Cohen) had a purchaser who would take the contract off the plaintiff's hands.

Mr. Gasper and Mr. Sale for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hill, Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Handley for the Defendant

During the hearing it was sought to prove the market rate of gunny bags on certain particular days, and for that purpose Mr. Delius, a member of the firm of Poppe, Delius & Co, brokers, was called and examined by Mr. Gasper, the witness giving the following evidence. "My firm makes out weekly quotation of rates of gunny bags. I have a return here for the 27th March 1882. [566] It was drafted by me or my partner, it is very difficult to say by which of us, written by my baboo, and signed by myself. The returns of the 3rd, 10th, 17th, 24th April, were all signed by me. They must have been made by me, because my partner was at home at the time. The return for the 20th March 1882 is signed by me; it must have been so, as my partner was at home. These returns are made out according to the tone of the market during the week, particularly on the closing day, and likewise the rates. It is difficult to explain how the market rate is ascertained. The contracts which we enter into constitute one of the elements from which these returns are made up. Many transactions are often made which we do not take notice of. We ascertain the market rate from the better class of buyers. We disregard speculators' contract, and purchases by bad buyers, as they can't buy except at higher rates than European buyers or first-class buyers. For instance, I know the rate at which my buyers will buy to-day, though the mills may be asking more than those rates, still I know that I can get the bags at the rates my buyers will buy at. I strike the market rate from what the producers are asking and my buyers are willing to pay. Our quotations vary from 4 annas to 8 annas according to the state of the market within that basis. The quotations are made on the day previous to the date they bear."

Mr. Gasper submitted the witness could refer to the quotation.

Mr. Hill objected.

Pigot, J.—The question is what was the rate prevailing in the market at the time the memorandum was prepared for what I may call sound business. The returns prepared by this gentleman are, as Mr Dehus states, records made by him at the time of what he knew, or believed he knew, to be the fact with regard to the market rate of such transactions. The facts which were then present to his mind were—(1) What within his knowledge buyers were willing to offer, and what within his knowledge the producers or sellers were asking. Along with that there was the further fact, the transactions which were actually entered into, and upon these classes of facts, all of which are facts, he compiled this record. Now, the market rate of any day is nothing more than a compilation of the result of various facts connected with the trade of that day, [567] and what I desire to do in ascertaining the particular state of the market on any day, is not to cast on the Court the duty of gathering rates from contracts and from them to strike for itself the market rate, but I desire to hold that when the Court has the advantage of having in evidence before it, a record of the rates made by a gentleman of intelligence and experience on that day, it should have that advantage, the advantage of having the rates made out in that way, in preference to computing the rate for itself. I, therefore, admit the quotations.

NOTES.

[MARKET VALUE—EVIDENCE—

"It might be supposed that to know value is merely to know what other people say the thing is worth—merely to have heard them offering and accepting prices. But the answer is that these various instances of offers or acceptances of prices, averaged into a mean or probable figure, are what constitute value. The statements of persons declaring their estimates of the prices they would give or receive are not taken, on the credit of those persons, as trustworthy assertions of the fact of value, but merely as items of conduct which themselves make up that total fact of conduct which we call value. Thus, if A sits in a merchant's office and listens to the terms accepted and rejected for a dozen articles he acquires a first-hand knowledge of value, but if he goes in and asks the merchants to tell him the value of a given article, his knowledge is based on a belief in the truth of the merchant's assertion. In the former case his knowledge is not based on hearsay," Wigmore on Evidence (1901) Vol. 1, sec. 719, pp. 815, 816 citing from STORY J in Alfonso v. U. S., 2 Story 426.

"It is not necessary, in order to qualify one to give an opinion as to values, that his information should be of such a direct character as would make it competent in itself as primary evidence. It is the experience which he acquires, in the ordinary conduct of affairs, and from means of information such as are usually relied on by men engaged in business for the conduct of that business that qualifies him to testify," ibid, citing from WEELS, J. in Whitney v. Thatcher, 117 Mass 53, where brokers' testimony was admitted.

Price lists and market reports are not generally admissible ipso facto, though testimony based upon them may be, see Wigmore, sec. 1704, Vol. III (1904) and Sup. Vol. V.]

Where two mortgagees, in execution of their several decrees, attached the same property, of which a moiety without further specification was respectively mortgaged to each of them, and subsequent to the attachments the property was sold in execution of one of the decrees Held, that notwithstanding the whole interests of the mortgagor was intended to be sold, the purchaser took one of the moieties subject to the lien of the unsatisfied mortgagee, and that omission or neglect on the part of the Court executing the decree to give specific direction as provided by clause (b) of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code did not prejudice the rights of the unsatisfied mortgagee or discharge his encumbrance

ONE Nusiruddin borrowed two sums of money from the plaintiff and the defendant No 2 under two separate mortgage bonds executed in their favour on the same date. Both the bonds, after enumerating the several zamindaries in the possession of the mortgagor, continued in these terms "A moiety of all the abovementioned zamindaries bearing the abovementioned [568] sudder jamas, I do mortgage and hypothecate as security for repayment of amount covered by the bond with interest." Among the properties hypothecated was an 8 annas 3 pie 1 kag 9½ tils share of Jote Gokul. The loans not having been repaid, defendant No. 2 brought a suit and obtained a decree on his mortgage bond on the 23rd November 1877, and on the 8th June 1878 attached the mortgagor's interest in Jote Gokul. The plaintiff also obtained a decree on his mortgage bond and attached the same property (Jote Gokul) on the 11th February 1879. After these attachments, and on the 18th March 1879, defendant No. 2, in execution of his decree, brought to sale the mortgagor's interest in Jote Gokul, which was purchased by defendant No. 1. The plaintiff was then about to bring the property again to sale in execution of his decree, whereupon defendant No 1 objected, on the ground that he had purchased the entire interest of Nusiraddin in Jote Gokul, and that the same or any portion thereof cannot be resold to the prejudice of his rights. The Subordinate Judge summarily allowed the objection, and in consequence the plaintiff instituted the present suit, in order to enforce his lien and bring to sale that moiety of Jote Gokul which was mortgaged to him. The Court of first Instance, under all the circumstances of the case, decreed the claim of the plaintiff "to proceed against the mortgaged share of Jote Gokul" in execution of his decree. Thereupon defendant No. 1, the purchaser, appealed to the High Court

Mr. Pugh, Baboo Mohinee Mohun Roy, Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter and Baboo Mookoond Roy for the Appellant.

* Appeal from Original Decree No 91 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Bhugwan Chander Chunderbatty, Rai Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Rungpore, dated the 5th of January, 1881.

Mr. M. Ghose and Baboo Koolodu Kinkur Nath Roy for the Respondent.

The arguments sufficiently appear in the Judgments of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.).

Field, J.—In this case one Nusiruddin Mahomed Chowdhry borrowed, on the 25th Assar 1279, corresponding with the 8th July 1872, two separate sums of Rs. 5,000 each, one from the plaintiff Johiruddin Mahomed Abu Ali Soher Chowdhry, and the other sum from defendant No. 2, Khaja Enayetoolla [569] Chowdhry, each of these loans was secured by a mortgage of one moiety of the mortgagor's share (consisting of 8 annas 3 pie 1 kag 9½ tils) in Jote Gokul. The loans not having been paid, defendant No. 2 brought a suit upon his mortgage bond, and on the 23rd November 1877 obtained a decree. In execution of this decree, he, on the 8th June 1878, attached the mortgagor's interest in Jote Gokul, and on the 18th March 1879 this interest was brought to sale and purchased by defendant No. 1, who is the appellant before us.

It has been contended by the learned counsel for the respondent, that what was sold was not the mortgagor's interest in the whole share which belonged to him, but his interest in a moiety of that share only. We think, however, that upon a true construction of the documents, we must take it that the whole interest was intended to be sold.

The plaintiff also brought a suit upon his mortgage bond, and obtained a decree on the 15th June 1878. In execution of this decree, he attached the same property, Jote Gokul, on the 11th February 1879, that is, after the attachment, but before the sale, in execution of the decree obtained by defendant No. 2. The plaintiff was then about to bring the property again to sale in execution of his decree, whereupon the defendant No. 1 objected, contending that he had purchased the property free of incumbrances, and that it was not competent to the plaintiff to bring it to sale a second time in execution. The Court in which the execution proceedings were pending allowed this objection, and, in consequence, the present suit has been instituted by the plaintiff to enforce his lien and bring to sale, in execution of his mortgage decree, that moiety of Jote Gokul which was mortgaged to him by the bond upon which that decree was obtained.

Two essential questions have been argued before us in this appeal. The first question is concerned with the contention unsuccessfully pressed upon the Court below, viz., that the decree which the plaintiff now seeks to execute had been substantially satisfied by reason of an ujana arrangement between the plaintiff and the heirs of the mortgagor.

We have heard the evidence upon this point, and we are of opinion that, although there are several matters which create a [570] suspicion that the defendant's contention may not be without foundation, yet it is impossible for us, upon the evidence, to say that this contention has been proved. On this point, therefore, we concur in the conclusion at which the Court below has arrived.

The second point is a much more difficult one. It is contended that when the property, Jote Gokul, was sold on the 18th March 1879, after the two attachments made under the two decrees to which I have already referred, it must be taken that the property was sold wholly unincumbered, wholly free, that is, not only from the mortgage of defendant No. 2, but also from the mortgage of the plaintiff in the present case, which, as has been stated, bound one moiety of the property. In support of this argument the learned counsel has relied upon certain cases to which I shall presently advert, and also upon the provisions of s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Before dealing with these arguments it will be useful to state two propositions which appear to have been established by decided cases.

The first of these propositions is, that the mere taking of a money decree by a mortgagee, so long as that decree is unexecuted, will not destroy his mortgage lien, but that if the mortgagee who has obtained such a decree, proceed to execute it by bringing to sale the mortgaged property, the lien will be gone and the property will pass unincumbered to the purchaser. This proposition is supported by the following cases Narsidus Jitram v. Joglekar (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 57), Hasoon Aira Begum v. Jawadaonnessa Satooda Khandan (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 29), the Full Bench case of Syud Enum Momtazooddin Mohamed v. Haran Chunder Ghose (14 B. L. R., 408; 23 W. R., 187), Rag Kishore Shaha v. Bhadoo Noshore (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 78), and Jonmenjoy Mullick v. Dossmoney Dossee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 714). In the Full Bench case in 14 B. L. R., 408, and in some other cases it was observed that the rights of third parties are not affected by proceedings in a suit brought by the mortgagee. And this brings us to the second proposition, as to which there [571] appears to be no doubt, namely, that the purchaser, at an ordinary execution sale of property subject to previous mortgage, buys the property subject to that lien, in other words, buys merely the right of redemption. This proposition is established by the following cases Gopal Sahoo v. Gunga Pershad Sahoo (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 531), Lala Joogulkishore Lall v. Bhukha Chowdhry (9 W. R., 244), Kasimunnissa Bibi v. Hurannissa Bibi (2 B. L. R., App., 6), Kameessia Pershad v. Doulut Ram (19 W. R., 83). See also Macpherson on Mortgages, pages 97 and 165. It would follow from the second of these propositions, apart from other considerations, that the appellant purchased the moiety of Jote Gokul, which was mortgaged to the plaintiff subject to the plaintiff's lien.

But it is contended that, because the plaintiff attached that moiety, while it was also under attachment in execution of appellant's decree, it must be taken to have been sold free from both incumbrances, and that plaintiff's lien has been transferred by the sale from the property to the purchase-money. Before considering the cases relied on in support of this argument, I may observe that the moiety mortgaged to plaintiff was not sold in execution of his decree. It would appear from the first proposition above stated that, in the case of a money decree, it is the sale which has the effect of extinguishing the lien. The only difference between a money decree and a decree for the specific enforcement of the lien (the plaintiff's decree is of the latter description) is that the former creates a judicial lien only from the date of attachment, while the latter creates such lien from the date of the decree. When the mortgagee sues for the specific enforcement of his lien, he is further protected by the principle of lis pendens against alienation from the date of instituting his suit. A mortgagee who obtains a decree in such a suit would appear to be a judicially secured creditor holding a stronger position than a mortgagee who obtains merely a money decree. If the latter does not lose his lien until the property is sold in execution of his own decree, it would seem improbable that the former is in a worse position.

[572] I now proceed to examine the cases, the first of which is that of Syud Nudr Hossein v. Baboo Pearoo Thovildancee (19 W. R., 255). The facts of this case, disencumbered from a good deal of intricacy, appear to be as follows. The respondent, Baboo Pearoo, had purchased at an execution sale the interest belonging to Meer Hossein in a mortgage decree obtained by a person who is called "the Mohunt" throughout the judgment. In other words, the respondent stood in the position of the original mortgagee who had obtained the decree in the Court of the Principal Sudder Amin of Moorshedabad on the 14th April 1864. This decree directed "that the suit be decreed, and that the plaintiff do recover from the defendant the amount of claim with interest." It was not a decree enforcing any mortgage lien against any mortgaged property. The decree was transferred under a certificate for execution into the Dinagapore District, and the property, which formed the subject of the suit in appeal before the High Court, was attached in execution. While that attachment subsisted, one Poran Behee, who had obtained a decree against the mortgagor, took out execution against the same property and brought it to sale. At the sale the property was purchased by a certain person whom I may call "B." As a matter of fact, it was found that "B" had purchased with funds belonging to Mirza Mohamed, and the High Court, on this ground, ultimately held that the respondent was entitled to execute the decree against the property. But the contention with which we have to deal was this. It was urged that the respondent was entitled to execute the decree originally obtained by the Mohunt against the mortgaged property notwithstanding the sale under Poran Behee's decree. In other words, it was contended that the sale under that decree did not get rid of any lien that might be supposed to have been created by the Mohunt's decree of the 14th April 1864. Mr Justice PONTIFEX, who delivered the judgment, says (at the top of page 259) "I am of opinion that, as the form of mortgage or charge created by the bond of 28th Augrahan 1268 did not vest any estate in the Mohunt, but only established a lien as incident to the money debt, such lien continued [573] an incident of the debt when it passed from a contract debt into a judgment debt, and so continued when such judgment debt was subsequently assigned to Meer Hossein. Otherwise the right to the lien must have remained in the Mohunt." The instrument which created the charge in that case is not now before us, and it is impossible for us to say, therefore, whether the bond creating a lien, such as has been described by Mr Justice PONTIFEX, was, in any respect, like the mortgage deed in the present case.

Then, at page 260, Mr Justice PONTIFEX says "Moreover, in the case before us, at the date of the sale to Meer Hossein, the property over which the lien extended has already, in fact, been attached by the Mohunt under the decree of the 14th April 1864. It seems to me clear that an attachment under a money decree on a mortgage bond and the mortgage lien cannot co-exist separately in the property hypothecated, and that such an attachment must be treated, when existing, as an attachment enforcing the lien."

"This attachment existing at the date of Meer Hossein's purchase passed as an incident of the decree purchased by him, and as the property was sold on the 29th April 1865, pending such attachment, the lien was transferred from the property to the purchase monies, and, therefore, the property became thenceforth discharged from the lien."

It has been contended that the learned Judge here intended to lay down, as a general proposition, that when a mortgagee, who has obtained a money decree, proceeds to an attachment, his lien is gone. I think that the remarks of the learned Judge must be read with reference to the peculiar circumstances of the case which was before him. In that case, as has already been pointed out, the decree was not a decree to enforce the mortgage against the property, and I think that this makes a difference between that case and the case which is now before us. I have already pointed out that, as the bond in that case is not before us, we are unable to say what was the nature of that instrument. The facts of that case are not therefore so clearly analogous to the facts of the present case, that any principle there laid down must necessarily apply. The question whether the property was sold in execution of the Mohunt's decree, as well as of that of Poran Bebee, [374] does not seem to have been considered. It would appear that the Mohunt or the assignee of his decree applied to have the sale proceeds detained in Court to satisfy his decree, on the ground that he had first attached, and this conduct might well be regarded as an admission that the sale was in execution of his own decree, as well as of that of Poran Bebee, certainly as an admission that the property had been sold free of his incumbrance which was transferred to the sale proceeds. The next case is that of Raj Chunder Shaha v. Hui Mohun Roy (22 W. R., 98). All I need say about this case is this, that the plaintiff there sought to obtain the sale proceeds. He did not seek to proceed against the mortgage property itself. By the prayer of his suit he elected to look to the sale proceeds instead of the mortgaged property for the realization of his mortgage loan.

Then we have been referred to the case of Modhoo Soodum Singh v. Moun-dee Lall Shahoo (23 W. R., 373). That case also is not in point. At page 375 Mr. Justice MITTER says, referring to the case in 19 W. R. "In other words, the rule of law laid down is this, that wherever a decree-holder, holding a simple mortgage, attaches the property hypothecated, the sale which follows, whether in the execution of his decree or that of any other person, has the effect of transferring the property hypothecated to the purchaser freed from the mortgage liability. It is not necessary for us in this case to go to that length."

All that need be said about this case is that, assuming the proposition laid down in the case in 19 W. R., 255, to be correctly stated by Mr. Justice MITTER, the Judges did not find it necessary on that occasion to adopt this view.

Then there is the further case of Gopce Singh v. Kisha Lal (25 W. R., 187). That case also is not in point, for Mr. Justice MARKBY says "Whether or not those objections are valid would depend upon the determination of the question, what were the rights that were really brought to sale. Both the plaintiffs and the defendants think that the properties were sold in execution of the plaintiffs' decree alone, and the lower Court has adopted that view. Notwithstanding that the parties are agreed upon this point, it is [375] open to us to put our own construction upon the sale proceedings which constitute the only evidence on the record bearing upon this question. These proceedings are two in number, one recorded on the day of the sale and the other on the 25th April 1873 confirming the sale. After perusing these proceedings, we think that the reasonable construction that we ought to put upon them is that all the properties were sold at the instance of all the mortgagees for the satisfaction of their decrees, and, therefore, free from their respective mortgage liens."

In the case now before us the property in dispute was not sold at the instance of both the mortgagees, but at the instance of one of them only, therefore, the facts are not analogous, and it may be said that, having regard to the language used by Mr. Justice MARKBY, the inference to be drawn is that, if the property had not been sold at the instance of all the mortgagees, it would not have been sold free from their respective mortgage liens.

It appears then to me that the cases which have been relied upon by the learned counsel do not establish the proposition contended for.

I have then to consider the effect of s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides for a rateable distribution of the proceeds of an execution sale amongst decree-holders who, prior to the realization of assets by sale or otherwise, have applied to the Court for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction. The section contains the following proviso. "Provided that when any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree is subject to a mortgage or charge, the Court may, with the assent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same right against the proceeds of the sale as he had against the property sold "

In the case before us the Court did not make any order that the property, Jote Gokul, should be sold free from the plaintiff's incumbrance, nor was there any express direction or notice to purchasers that the property was sold subject to such incumbrance. It is clear then that the Court omitted or neglected to give specific directions upon the subject of the plaintiff's incumbrance [576] when the property was sold in execution of the decree of defendant No 2. Is it reasonable that the plaintiff should be prejudiced by such omission or neglect ?

A further proviso to s 295 is contained in clause (c), which directs that when immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the discharge of an incumbrance thereon, the proceeds of sale shall be applied first to defray the expenses of sale, second, to discharge the interest and principal due on the incumbrance, third, to discharge the interest and principal due on subsequent incumbrances, if any. This proviso does not appear to have any application, as the moiety of Jote Gokul mortgaged to plaintiff was not sold in execution of any decree ordering its sale for the discharge of any incumbrance thereon.

It was observed, with reference to ss. 270 and 271 of the old Code, Act VIII of 1859, which, to some extent, correspond with s. 295 of the present Code, that the rule of procedure contained therein was not intended to interfere with the substantive rights of the parties. See the cases of Hassoon Aina Begum v Jawadoonnissa Satooda Khandan (I L R, 4 Cal, 29) and of Raj Chander Shaha v Hur Mohun Roy (22 W R, 98). It appears to me that this is a principle which may, with equal propriety, be followed in construing the provisions of s 295 of the present Code. I take it that this section was intended to afford an additional facility to decree-holders. I think that the Legislature could not have intended, without using express language to effectuate such intention, to take away any rights which belong to persons in the position of mortgagees.

In this view, seeing that no specific direction as to the plaintiff's mortgage was given at the time of the sale under which defendant No 1 purchased, I think we cannot say that the fact that the plaintiff did not avail himself, as he might have availed himself of the facility afforded by s 295, now prevents him from maintaining the present suit.

I may add, in conclusion, that if the effect of plaintiff having obtained a decree and then proceeded to attach was to destroy the lien which, if he had obtained no such decree, he undoubtedly could have enforced notwithstanding the auction purchase of the defendant, the plaintiff would be really in a worse position after [577] using reasonable diligence to enforce his claim than he would have been if he had lain by and done nothing.

No doubt, as said by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX in the case in 19 W R., "an attachment under a money decree on a mortgage bond and the mortgage lien cannot co-exist separately in the property hypothecated and the attachment must be treated as an attachment enforcing the lien." But when this enforcement is not carried on to a sale in execution of the decree under which such attachment was made, it is difficult to understand how the lien is lost. Under clause (b) of s 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Court had a discretionary power to sell, in execution of defendant No 2's decree, the moiety of Jote Gokul mortgaged to plaintiff free from his mortgage, if he was never [ever?] asked for his assent, and the Court did not exercise its discretionary power. I do not see how we can now deal with the plaintiff, as if the Court had exercised its discretionary power with his assent.

I am, therefore, of opinion that plaintiff is entitled to enforce his lien against the moiety of the property mortgaged to him, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs

McDonell, J.—I concur in holding that plaintiff is entitled to enforce his lien against the moiety of the property mortgaged to him, and generally for the reason stated by my learned brother

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 4th March, 1881

PRESENT.

MR JUSTICE MITTER AND MR JUSTICE MACLEAN

Sheo Sohve Roy and others. . Defendants

Luchmeshur Singh . . . Plaintiff.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss 45, 140, 142—Suit for possession—

Dispossession during unexpired ticca by plaintiff's predecessor—

Limitation—Expiry of lease.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff in 1880 to recover possession of certain lands from which his predecessor in title had been dispossessed, in which suit the Court of First Instance found that the defendant had dispossessed [578] the plaintiff's father in 1860, during the unexpired term of a lease granted by the plaintiff's father to a ticcadar,

Held, that the preponderance of authority in India was in favour of the view that limitation ran from the date of the expiry of the ticca, and not from the time when the defendant had been held by the Court of First Instance to have dispossessed the plaintiff's father.

THIS was a suit brought on the 31st December 1880 by the Maharajah of Darbunga to recover possession of 30 bighas of land which he alleged to be part of his permanently settled village of Ram Bhaddurpur, and from which he alleged he had been dispossessed by the defendants, who were the proprietors of the contiguous village Purwana, in 1277 (1870), and that the dispossession complained of occurred in the following manner, viz., that one Moni Dut Roy, one of the proprietors of mouzah Purwana, took a kutkina of mouzah Ram Bhaddurpur from the ticcadar of the said mouzah during the minority of the plaintiff, and whilst so in possession settled the land with one Kishen Jha who ceased to pay rent in 1277, and that on this the dispossession took place.

The defendants contended that the whole of the disputed land belonged to their settled estate Purwana, the settlement having been made with them by Government in the year 1860, in the presence of the plaintiff's father, when an objection of the ticcadar of plaintiff's father to the settlement had been rejected, and that therefore the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation under arts. 45 and 142* of Act XV of 1877

The Munsiff found that the plaintiff had proved his title to the land in suit up to 1849, but that the Collector's award made in April 1860 settling the land with the defendants and rejecting the claim made thereto by the ticcadar of the plaintiff's father bound the plaintiff's father, no steps having been taken to set it aside, that the defendants had therefore obtained possession in 1860 (prior to the death of the plaintiff's father, who died in October 1860), and throwing the onus on the defendant of proving that they had a right to hold the land by showing a 12-years' adverse possession, held that they had succeeded in so doing, and therefore dismissed the plaintiff's suit

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that [579] the plaintiff had clearly shown that he had both possession and title in 1849, and therefore it was for the defendants to show that some time after that date and before the date of the Maharajah's death, in October 1860, their adverse possession began, that (for certain reasons given by him, which are unnecessary for the purposes of this report) dispossession by the defendants did not take place in 1860, but that it took place in 1870. He, therefore, reversed the decision of the Munsiff and gave the plaintiff a decree. In deciding that the lower Appellate Court had rightly placed the burden of proof on the defendants, the Subordinate Judge relied on the cases of Radhu Gobind Roy Saheb v. Inylis (7 C. L. R., 364), Kali Churn Sahu v. Secretary of State (1 L. R., 6 Cal., 725. 8 C. L. R., 90), Monmohun Ghose v. Mothura Mohun Roy (8 C. L. R., 126), remarking that he did not agree with the argument advanced by the defendants' pleader that these cases applied only to cases where possession could not for one reason or another be visibly exercised

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) (with him Mr. Gregory and Bahoo Rajendro Nath Bose) for the Appellant, contended on the second branch of the cases, that possession adverse to a lessee was also adverse to the lessor—Prosunomoyi Dasi v. Kali Das Roy (9 C. L. R., 347)

Baboo Ram Charan Mitter for the Respondent, on the question as to whether limitation ran from the expiry of the ticca lease or from the date of dispossession, cited Krishna Gobind Dhu v. Hari Churn Dhu (1 L. R., 9 Cal., 367, 12 C. L. R., 19), Womesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (10 W. R., 15)

Mitter, J.—The only point upon which we called upon the respondent to answer this appeal is the question of limitation. The Court of First Instance found that the dispossession of the plaintiff's predecessor in title took place in the year 1860. There was no appeal against that finding by the defendant

Description of suit	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run
For possession of immoveable property, when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession.	Twelve years	The date of the dispossession or discontinuance]

There was an appeal by the plaintiff-respondent before us, and the District Judge throwing [580] the onus of proof upon the defendant, came to the conclusion that it was not made out by him that the dispossession took place earlier than 1870. The District Judge in throwing the onus of proof on the defendant followed certain decisions cited by him, but these decisions have been since considered in a Full Bench case, Mahomed Ali Khan v Khaja Abdul Gunny (I L R., 9 Cal, 744), and they have been explained as referring to certain peculiar circumstances which distinguished them from ordinary cases where limitation is pleaded. In the Full Bench decision it was laid down as a general rule that the burden is on the plaintiff to make out that his claim is not barred by limitation. Therefore, if, upon another ground, we could not uphold the decision of the lower Appellate Court, it would have been necessary to remand this case to that Court for a finding upon the question of limitation, but it seems to us that, accepting the finding of the first Court, that the dispossession took place in 1860 which finding was not questioned by the defendant, the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation. It is an admitted circumstance in this case, that in that year the mouzah in which the land is alleged to be was not in the khas possession of the plaintiff's predecessor in title, but was in the possession of a ticcadar. It is also not disputed that if the 12 years be counted from the date when the term of the ticca came to an end, the plaintiff would not be barred by limitation. On the other hand, if the period prescribed by the law of limitation is to be computed from the date of dispossession as found by the first Court, the claim of the plaintiff would be barred by limitation. Upon this point, viz., whether the one or the other period of time is the proper point from which limitation is to run, there is a conflict of authority. They have all been placed before us, and we are of opinion that the preponderance of authority is in favour of the proposition that the claim is not barred by limitation. As we agree in that view we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[581] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 21st March, 1884

PRESENT ·

MR JUSTICE MITTER AND MR JUSTICE MACLEAN

Jadunundun Singh Plaintiff

versus

Dulput Singh and others Defendants ·

Pre-emption—Ceremonies of “immediate demand,” and “demand with intocation”

A person claiming a right of pre-emption made the talub-i-mowashibat in the presence of witnesses, but when doing so was neither at the place, the subject of the right of pre-emption, nor was he in the presence of the vendor or vendee

Held, on second appeal, that the lower Appellate Court having found that the talub-ish-had was invalid on the ground that there was no evidence of a demand with invocation of witnesses having been made the right of pre-emption could not be claimed

THIS was a suit brought to enforce a right of pre-emption with regard to the share in certain properties of defendants 1 and 3, which share had been sold by them to defendants 4 and 5 under a bill of sale, dated 12th July 1878

The plaintiff, a Hindu of Behar, who described himself as the shah-khalit (a partner in the substance of the property sold) stated that he first heard of the sale on the 28th July 1878, from one Dashiuth Singh, and that he immediately on hearing this repeated thrice, “It is my right, I have purchased,” at the same time calling upon the persons present to bear witness to the fact, and that he then went to the vendor with the sum of Rs 99 and asserted his right, expressing his readiness to purchase, and having performed the talub-ish-had in due form tendered the purchase money which, however, the defendants refused to accept, whereupon he calling upon the persons present to bear witness went to the purchasers, and went through the proper ceremonies, but they refused to receive the consideration or return the bill of sale, and that he therefore brought this suit for the purposes abovementioned

The defendants contended that the plaintiff was not a shah-khalit, and that the parties to the suit being Hindus, amongst whom the [582] custom of pre-emption had never been in vogue, the suit would not lie, and further that the preliminary ceremonies of talub-i-mowashibat and talub-ish-had had not been duly performed. The Munsiff found that the plaintiff was not shah-khalit, nor was he a shah-jar, that the parties being Hindus of the province of Behar the Mahomedan law of pre-emption was therefore in vogue, that he had substantially, by immediately on hearing of the sale making a demand three times and offering the purchase money to the vendor and vendees before witnesses, complied with the Mahomedan law, it not being imperative that the precise words given in the Mahomedan law should be used, and that the evidence proved that due diligence had been used by him in asserting his right, and that therefore the preliminary ceremonies of talub-i-mowashibat and talub-ish-had had been duly performed, but held that the plaintiff being neither a shah-khalit nor shah-jar the suit must be dismissed.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 673 of 1883, against the decree of Baboo Tivolkhya Nath Mitter, Additional Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated 4th October 1852, affirming the decree of Baboo Bhagobati Churn Mitter, Munsiff of Arrah, dated 29th May 1879.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge, the defendant also appealing on the ground that the performance of the talub-i-mowashibat and talub-ish-had had not been proved.

The Subordinate Judge held that it was necessary that the talub-ish-had should be performed in the presence of the vendor or vendee, and that this talub should be performed in strict adherence to the Mahomedan law, that it was necessary that at the time of making this talub the pre-emptor should say that he had performed the talub-i-mowashibat, and that as the plaintiff had not proved that he told the vendor or vendee that he had performed this first talub, and there being no sufficient evidence to prove that he had called upon the bystanders to bear witness in language corresponding in substance with "be you my witness," etc., as laid down in the case of Sham Lall Sahoo v Bhee Afsuroonissae (22 W. R., 184), he dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and decreed the cross appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Pran Nath Chowdhry for the Appellant

Baboo Mohesh Chander Chowdhry for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mitter, J.—We think that this appeal must fail. The lower [583] Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the second talub, i.e., the talub by invocation of witnesses, was properly made in accordance with the provisions of the Mahomedan law. The defect pointed out by the lower Appellate Court was that the pre-emptor did not invoke witnesses to bear testimony to the fact that he claimed the property as pre-emptor. In this second appeal, it is contended before us, that it was not necessary according to Mahomedan law, because on the evidence regarding the first talub, which has been believed by the Appellate Court, it was shown that the performance of the first talub was accompanied by the necessary invocation of witnesses, and in support of this contention, the case of Koromali v. Amir Ali (3 C L R., 166) has been cited. The decision, as reported in the Calcutta Law Reports, seems to a certain extent to support this contention, but if the decision of the lower Appellate Court upon this point, which was confirmed by this Court, be taken into consideration, it would appear that what was laid down is (and this is also in accordance with the Mahomedan law), that if the first talub be made in the presence of either the seller or the purchaser, or be made at the premises sold, and then invocation of witnesses takes place, a second talub by invocation of witnesses would be unnecessary. That is laid down in page 484 of 'Baillie's Mahomedan Law.' At page 483, Edition of 1865, he says "To give validity to the talub-ish-had, it is required that it be made in the presence of the purchaser, or seller, or at the premises which are the subject of sale." This shows that it is essential that this talub should be made in the presence of the purchaser, or the seller, or at the premises which are the subject of sale. And then at page 484 he says. "The talub-i-mowashibat, or immediate demand, is first necessary, then the talub-ish-had, or demand with invocation, if, at the time of making the former, there was no opportunity of invoking witnesses, as, for instance, when the pre-emptor, at the time of hearing of the sale, was absent from the seller, the purchaser, and the premises. But if he heard it in the presence of any of these, and had called on [584] witnesses, to attest the immediate demand, it would suffice for both demands, and there would be no necessity for the other." That being so, we think that the contention raised before us on behalf of the appellant fails; because in this case it is not shown that the first talub was made in the presence of either the seller, or the purchaser, or at the premises which constituted the subject of the sale. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR JUSTICE NORRIS

Jan Mahomed and Jabar MahomedAppellants

versus

Queen-Empress *

Penal Code, ss. 24, 25, 464, 467, 471—Using as genuine a forged document with intent to defraud—A sunnud conferring a title of dignity is not a valuable security.

The accused, in order to obtain a recognition from a Settlement Officer that they were entitled to the title of "Loskur," filed a sunnud before that officer purporting to grant that title This document was found not to be genuine. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused under ss. 471, 464 of the Penal Code Held, on appeal, that even supposing the accused had used the document knowing it not to be genuine, they could not be found guilty, as the intention of the accused was not to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss to any one, then intention being to produce a false belief in the mind of the Settlement Officer that they were entitled to the dignity of "Loskur," and that this could not be said to constitute "an intention to defraud "

A sunnud conferring a title of dignity on a person is not a valuable security within the meaning of the Penal Code

ON the 4th March 1883 Jan Mahomed and Jabar Mahomed presented a petition to the Settlement Officer of Cachar in which they stated that their father Rizak Mahomed had received from the Rajah of Cachar a sunnud conferring on him the title of "Loskur," and that this sunnud had been lost, and asked that certain respectable people living in the neighbourhood might be examined, and that the petitioners' title might be recognized in the new settlement Subsequently on the 31st August they filed another

* Criminal Appeals Nos. 87 and 104 of 1884, against the judgment of H Muspratt, Esq Sessions Judge of Cachar, dated the 16th January 1884

[585] petition to the same end, with a *sunnu*d which they stated was in the name of their grandfather, and further stated that the petition of the 4th March was incorrect. The *sunnu*d then filed purported to bear the seal of the Rajah of Cachar

On the matter coming up before the Deputy Collector, Jan Mahomed and Jabur Mahomed were committed to the Sessions and charged under ss. 464 and 471 of the Penal Code, and at the same time he sent up one Waris Meah for having used as genuine a true pottah, but to which an addition had been made after his name of the letter signifying the title of "Loskur" and for having filed it before the Settlement Officer with the same view in end as the two other accused in the case firstly mentioned

The Sessions Judge found (agreeing with the assessors) that the appearance of the paper led to the conclusion that it was not so old as it purported to be, and that the seal, when compared with a seal of the Rajah on a true *sunnu*d filed in Court, was obviously a forgery and bore no resemblance to the true seal, and holding that the *sunnu*d was a "valuable security," as the Rajah sold the titles to persons under these *sunnu*ds, and that the accused in filing the *sunnu*d acted fraudulently, as they filed the *sunnu*d with intent to defraud the Settlement Officer into the belief that the forged *sunnu*d was a true document, and that they were entitled to be called "Loskur" in the new settlement papers, convicted them of fraudulently using as genuine a document which was a valuable security and which they knew to be a forged document and sentenced them each to rigorous imprisonment for 18 months, under ss. 471 and 464 of the Penal Code

With regard to the case against Waris Meah, the Sessions Judge, agreeing with the assessors, found that the accused had attempted by forgery to defraud the Settlement Officer and to make him believe that his title of "Loskur" had been recognized by the Rajah of Cachar, and that the said title should by right be entered in the new settlement, and that the pottah was a valuable security and gave to the accused a legal right to the land, he, therefore, convicted him of using as genuine a forged document which he knew to be a forged document, and under ss. 471 read with 467 of the Penal Code sentenced him to [586] six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50, or, in default, to a further period of six months.

The prisoners in these two cases appealed to the High Court.

No one appeared for the prisoners

The Judgments of the Court were delivered by Mitter, J.— I do not think there is sufficient evidence in this case to prove that the Exhibit A is a false document. The Sessions Judge has relied upon some roobakarees which, on their bare production only, cannot be treated as evidence. Excluding these, the conviction stands mainly upon two grounds 1st, on a comparison of the seal upon the Exhibit A with that of another document proved to have been executed by the Rajah of Cachar—the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the two impressions of the seals do not tally, 2ndly, the appearance of the paper shows that it is not so old as it purports to be.

These grounds are, in my opinion, insufficient to support the conviction. It may be that the Rajah changed his seal, and this circumstance may account for the difference between the impressions of the seals

The second ground is based upon mere conjecture. Then, even granting that the Exhibit A is a forgery, I do not think that it has been shown that the appellants knew it to be so. Further, on accepting all the facts as correctly found by the Sessions Judge, I do not think that the appellants are guilty of any offence under the Penal Code. The facts are simply these: The appellants in order to get a recognition from a Settlement Officer that they are entitled to the title of "Loskur," produced a sunrud purporting to have been granted by the Rajah of Cachar. The document is found not to be genuine. The question is, supposing the appellants used this document knowing it to be not genuine with intent to obtain recognition of their alleged "Loskur" title from the Settlement Officer, is it an offence under s 471 of the Indian Penal Code or under any other penal law of the country? The Sessions Judge found the appellants guilty under s 471 of the Indian Penal Code. In using this document, if they had no fraudulent or dishonest intention, they cannot be guilty under s. 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

[587] Section 24 of the Code defines the word "dishonestly." It is to the following effect: "Whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing 'dishonestly.'" Now, the intention of the appellants was not to cause wrongful gain, or wrongful loss to any person.

The word "fraudulently" is thus defined in s 25 of the Code: "A person is said to do a thing 'fraudulently' if he does that thing with intent to defraud, but not otherwise."

In this case evidently the intention of the appellants was to produce a false belief in the mind of the Settlement Officer that they are entitled to the dignity of "Loskur," and in order to produce this belief they produced the sunrud "A," which has been found to be not genuine. Without defining precisely what would constitute "an intent to defraud," we are clear that it cannot be held in this case that the appellants produced the sunrud to "defraud" the Settlement Officer, and therefore it cannot be said that they used the document "fraudulently," as defined in s 25 of the Indian Penal Code. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the Sessions Judge that the appellants are guilty under s 471 of the Indian Penal Code. Nor does the act of the appellants in our opinion amount to any other offence. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and acquit the appellants.

Mitter, J.—In the appeal by Waris Meah, which is against the conviction by the same Sessions Judge, the same question of law arises. For the reasons given in Appeal No. 87 we are of opinion in this case also that, taking the facts found by the lower Court as correct, the appellant is not guilty of any offence. The Sessions Judge has convicted the appellant of using a document which he finds to be a valuable security. The document in question in this case is a sunrud of a similar description conferring a certain dignity upon the grantee. A document of this description cannot, in our opinion, be held to be a valuable security, as defined in the Indian Penal Code. We, therefore, set aside the conviction of the appellant in this appeal also.

[588] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 22nd April, 1884.

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM

Koylash Chunder Doss and others. . . . Plaintiffs

versus

Tariney Churn Singhee and another Defendants

Specific performance—Contract—Letters—Earnest-money.

The defendant in the name of his wife wrote to the plaintiffs a letter, the material portion of which was as follows —

“ The value of your house, No 10, Rutton Mistry's Lane, has been fixed through the broker at Rs 13,125, agreeing to that value I write this letter Please come over to the house of my attorney between 3 and 4 this day with the title-deeds of the house, and receive the earnest There shall be no doing otherwise ”

The plaintiffs through their manager wrote in answer to the defendant's wife —

“ You having agreed to purchase our house for Rs 13,125 have sent a letter through the broker, and we are agreeable to it, and we will be present between 3 and 4 this day at your attorney's and receive the earnest ”

The plaintiffs and defendants met at the attorney's office in the absence of the attorney, and no inspection of title-deeds or payment of the earnest-money therefore took place

Held, in a suit for specific performance of the above contract, that the first letter contained no absolute proposal or undertaking to purchase, but merely fixed the price to be given for the house, leaving the inspection of title-deeds and the payment of earnest-money to be settled at the meeting asked for

That both parties having treated the payment of earnest-money as an element in the contract, the contract could not be completed till the amount of earnest-money had been ascertained

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice PIGOT, dated the 29th June 1883.

The plaintiffs alleged that on the 3rd of September 1883 they agreed to sell to one Tariney Churn Singhee, in the name of his wife, Runginee Dossee, a certain house in Rutton Mistry's Lane in Calcutta for the sum of Rs. 13,125, these terms being settled by a broker named Hurro Chunder Ghose, who brought about an interchange of letters between the plaintiffs and the defendants, which letters ran as follows —

To Baboo KOYLASH CHUNDER DOSS and BABOO GIRENDRO NATH DOSS, Mohassoys.

[589] The value of your house, No 10, Rutton Mistry's Lane, in Puttuldanga, has been fixed through Sreejoot Hurro Chunder Ghose, broker, at Rs. 13,125, agreeing to this value I write this letter. Please come over to the house of the attorney, Baboo Mooraly Dhur Sen, this day between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon with the title-deeds of the house and receive the earnest. There shall be no doing otherwise. Fms. 1289, 19th Bhadro

(Sd) RUNGINEE DOSSEE.

To Sroemutty RUNGINEE DOSSEE, Mohassoy

You having agreed to purchase our house, No 10, Rutton Mistry's Lane in Arcoly, for Rs. 13,125, have sent a letter this day through Sreejoot Hurro Chunder Ghose, broker, and we are agreeable to it, and between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon this day we will be present at the house of your attorney, Sreejoot Baboo Mooraly Dhur Sen, Mahassoy, and receive the earnest. Finis 1289, 19th Bhadro

(Sd) KOYLASH CHUNDER DOSS.

GIRENDRO NATH DOSS.

The plaintiffs called at the defendants' attorney's office, and met the defendants in the absence of their attorney, and alleged that Tarney Churn Singhee on that occasion agreed to abide by his wife's letter, and promised to let them know the next day when the agreement should be carried out.

On the 5th September 1882 the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants calling on them to perform their contract, or in default threatened to bring a suit against them in two days' time

On the 7th the defendants' attorney wrote to the plaintiffs denying having entered into any contract. The plaintiffs then brought this suit for specific performance of the contract

The defendants contended that the broker had misstated the number of rooms in the house, and that the letters interchanged were merely preliminary to the signing of the necessary agreement of sale, and did not amount to an agreement or contract to purchase, and that if they did amount to a contract, such contract was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation of the plaintiffs' agent.

At the hearing the broker stated that with regard to the writing of the letters he had said to the defendants "If you have made up your mind to take this house give me a pucra contract that I may take it away," and that he considered the second letter to be the pucra contract.

No evidence was given by the defendants

[590] Mr Allen (with him Mr Trevelyan) for the Plaintiffs

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr M P Gasper) for the Defendants, contended that no condition as to possession being mentioned in the letters, and there being a tenant in the house, there was no contract that could be specifically performed, the matter only being in the region of negotiation, no details of the contract having been given, and cited Williams v Briscoe (L R., 22 Ch. D., 441), Rummens v. Robins (3 de G. J. and S 88), The South Wales Railway Co. v. Wythes (5 de G. M and G, 880), Hudleston v Briscoe (11 Vesey. 583).

Mr Trevelyan in reply.

PIGOT, J., found that the letters contemplated a further writing being drawn up at the attorney's, and held that on the documents and facts it had not been proved that the defendants entered into the contract sued on, and therefore dismissed the suit

The plaintiffs appealed

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), Mr Allen and Mr. Doss for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General.—Section 4 of the Contract Act (cl. a) shows us that all that is required to make a contract is a proposal and an acceptance

Section 12 (cl. c) of the Specific Relief Act gives an example of a contract which may be specifically performed Now we find exactly those conditions in our contract, viz., in the letters

[GARTH, C J.—I fail to see any finality of the agreement, the letter asks you to accept the earnest-money, and there can, therefore, be no contract till the earnest-money is accepted.]

I say the earnest-money is immaterial to the contract, the case has not been decided on that ground, but because the letters are said only to amount to a preliminary agreement to a contract

The case of Rossiter v Muller [L R, 3 Ap. Cas, 1124 (1143)] lays down that such a correspondence amounts to a contract, and that the only essential requirements to form a contract are the parties, the subject-matter and the price, all of which we have in our letters

[591] [GARTH, C J—For three reasons the letters were never intended to be a contract, viz —

- (1) Earnest-money was intended to pass
- (2) The title-deeds were to be produced
- (3) The parties were to meet at an attorney's--doubtless to draw up some sort of an agreement]

Ridgway v. Wharton (6 H of L Cas., 238) shows that an attorney in drawing up a deed cannot alter the terms of the contract, the letters, therefore, form the contract

Bownewell v. Jenkins (L R, 8 Ch. D, 70) was a case where a plaintiff wrote saying "I offer such and such a share for your leasehold property, this offer being made subject to the conditions of the lease being modified to my solicitor's satisfaction." Modifications were made, and the Court of Appeal held that, notwithstanding the reference to a future contract, the letters constituted a complete contract

As regards the question of earnest-money in England earnest-money is a good legal symbol in cases where there is no written contract, but where there is a contract in writing, it is valueless, it has no legal significance. The Statute of Frauds does not apply to natives

But even supposing that it has a legal significance, the new Beebloom Coal Co v. Bularam Mahata (1 L. R, 5 Cal, 932) shows that uncertainty is no sufficient ground for a party being refused specific performance of a contract, so the fact that the amount of earnest-money was not settled is no ground for refusing us relief

As regards our taking the title-deeds the next day, we could not get specific performance till we had given a good title, but we were not bound to make out a good title the next day to the one on which the letters were sent, even if we were bound to take the title-deeds the next day and did not do so, that would only entitle the other side to at most to damages, but would not put an end to the contract. I rely on the letters and the evidence of the broker who alleged that the letters were to make the contract pucca—how can it be said that production of the title-deeds formed part of the contract—it is one of the matters [592] that arise after the contract has been made, the stage of contract is then passed.

Mr. Allen on the same side. As to what is necessary to complete a contract, see Fry on Specific Performance, p. 145, para. 324. This is a parol contract evidenced by the letters. Fowle v. Fierman (9 Ves., 351) shows that specific performance has even been given of letters which were not intended at the time to be a complete final agreement

Kennedy v Lee (3 Mer., 441) shows that all that is required to make a contract is that the amount and nature of the consideration to be paid and received should be ascertained, together with a reasonable*description of the subject-matter of the contract In fact, that the parties should be at one—and when once at one, nothing can vary or alter such a contract.

Thomas v Dering (1 Keen, 729) establishes that, although there may be no intention at the time of making a contract, of making a complete contract, yet the Courts will enforce it

The Proprietors of the English and Foreign Credit Co. v Arduin (L R., 5 Eng. and Ir. Ap., 80) is an authority to show that the defendants are precluded from saying the letters are not a proper contract, we having understood their letter to be an unconditional acceptance

Hussey v Horne-Payne (L R, 4 Ap Cas, 311). Roidly v. Fitzgerald [6 H. of L Cas, 823 (876)] , Sanderson v The Cockermouth and Workington Railway Co (11 Beav, 497) were also cited

Mr. Bonnerjee for the Respondents cited Williams v Bruscoe (L. R., 22 Ch. D., 441) and Rummens v. Robins (3 de G J. and S, 88).

Judgments of the Court were delivered by GARTH, C.J , and CUNNINGHAM, J.

Garth, C.J.—This suit is brought to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a house.

The lower Court held that the alleged contract was not proved and dismissed the suit [593] The plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and he has relied in support of his case upon two letters, which passed on the 3rd of September 1882, as well as upon the conduct of the parties, and a conversation which occurred on the afternoon of the same day after the letters were exchanged.

The negotiation, it seems, was brought about by a house-broker named Hurro Chunder Ghose, who knew that the defendant was on the look-out for a house in the particular locality, and proposed to him to buy this one. After looking over a portion of the house, and hearing Hurro Chunder's description of it, the defendant, at Hurro Chunder's suggestion, wrote the following letter to the plaintiffs in his wife's name --

To Sreejoot Baboo KOYLASH CHUNDER DOSS, and Sreejoot Baboo GIRINDRA NATH DOSS, Mohassoys.

The value of your house, No 10, Rutton Misty's Lane, in Patuldaugah, has been fixed through Sreejoot Hurro Chunder Ghose, broker, at Rs 13,125 , agreeing to that value I write this letter. Please come over to the house of the attorney, Baboo Mooraly Dhur Sen, Mohassoy, this day between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon with the title-deeds of the house, and receive the earnest

There shall be no doing otherwise Fms 1289, 19th Bhadro

Sree RUNGINEE DOSSEE, now residing in the house No. 49, Jhamapuker.

By the pen of Sree KISORY MOHUN GHOSE.

Upon receiving this letter from Hurro Chunder, the plaintiffs through their manager wrote the following letter to the defendant's wife .—

To Sreemuttv RUNGINEE DOSSEE, Mohassoy

You having agreed to purchase our house, No 10, Rutton Misty's Lane, in Alcooly, for Rs. 13,125, have sent a letter this day through Sreejoot Hurro Chunder Ghose, broker, and we are agreeable to it, and between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon this day we will be present at the house of your attorney, Baboo Mooraly Dhur Sen, Mohassoy, and receive the earnest. Fms. 1289, 19th Bhadro

Sree KOYLASH CHUNDER DOSS

and

Sree GIRINDRO NATH DOSS.

By the pen of Sree MOHINDRO NATH MOOKERJEE. .

The plaintiffs contend that these letters constituted, and were intended to constitute, a pucca or binding agreement. The defendant, on the other hand, contends that they were only intended as commencing the negotiation, which was to have been [594] completed by the payment of the earnest-money, and the execution of a regular byna contract.

At the trial, however, no evidence was given on behalf of the defendants. The learned Judge decided against the plaintiffs on their own showing, and I think that he was right.

It seems to me that the real question is, whether the two letters, which were exchanged on the 3rd of September, do, in fact, constitute a complete and binding agreement.

For the purpose of determining this question, we must gather the intention of the parties from the letters themselves, and not from what was said or intended before the letters were exchanged.

In consequence of some doubt being suggested during the argument, as to whether the letters had been correctly translated, we sent for one of the Court interpreters, and asked him to translate them in open Court. His translation agreed substantially with that which had been previously furnished, and by the aid of it the construction which I put upon the defendant's letter is this.

"As the value of your house has been fixed by Hurro Chunder, the broker, at Rs. 13,125, and as I agree to that value, I write this letter to request that you will come to the house of my attorney, Mooraly Dhur Sen, between 3 and 4 o'clock to-day, bringing with you the title-deeds of your house, and receive the earnest-money. If you will not fail me in this, I will not fail you."

The letter in answer appears to mean this

"As you have agreed to purchase my house for Rs. 13,125, and have sent me your letter to that effect, we agree to your proposal, and will be at the house of your attorney to-day between 3 and 4 o'clock, and receive the earnest-money."

Mr. Allen has contended that the first portion of the defendant's letter is an absolute proposal by him to buy the house for the sum named, independently of all other considerations, and that the remainder of the letter forms no part of the proposal, but merely suggests the time, place and manner in which the proposal is to be carried out.

If this were really so, I should quite agree with Mr. Allen that [595] the case would come within the principle of Rossiter v. Miller (L. R., 3 Ap. Cas., 1124) and the other authorities to which he has very properly called our attention. But I cannot take that view of the letter. It contains, as it seems to me, no absolute proposal or undertaking to purchase the house, what had been done at that time, with the aid of the broker, was merely to ascertain the proper price, and all that the defendant meant to say was "so far as price is concerned, I am quite content with that which my broker has fixed--and if you are also content, I beg you will come to my attorney's office with your title-deeds, when we arrange matters, you shall receive the earnest-money."

His intention, as it seems to me, was that the matter should be finally settled at the attorney's office, and two very important matters were left for that occasion--namely, the inspection of the title-deeds, and the amount and payment of the earnest-money. It was very proper that the defendant should not commit himself to any binding contract, till he knew something, at any rate, of the nature of the plaintiff's title, and as regards the earnest-money, it must be observed that both parties treat that as an element in the bargain. How then could the contract be said to be complete and binding, until the amount of the earnest-money had been ascertained

In point of fact, no meeting took place at the attorney's office, because the attorney was not there, and the defendant refused to consult any other attorney, but suppose the meeting had taken place, and parties had been unable to agree as to the amount of the earnest-money, how could it possibly have been said that they had arrived at any binding agreement.

Mr. Allen tried hard to escape from this difficulty in one of three ways

1st.—By the argument, which I have already mentioned, that the payment of the earnest-money did not affect the contract itself, but only the way in which it was to be carried out

But it seems to me that both parties treated it as an element in the contract, and if so, the contract could not be complete until the amount of the earnest-money was ascertained

[596] 2ndly —He argued that the Court could ascertain the amount of the earnest-money, as it has ascertained in several cases the price of the property sold.

But the amount to be paid for earnest-money must, from its very nature, be a matter of agreement between the parties, it cannot be ascertained by the Court, for the best of reasons, because it is paid not on the completion but on the making of the contract, or at any rate at some time before the completion 3rdly —Then lastly, Mr. Allen argued, that assuming the earnest-money to have been an element in the contract, his clients were content to waive it. But no notice of any waiver appears to have been given, and even if it had been, the defendant had by that time repudiated the contract. If the contract was incomplete and not binding on the 3rd of September, nothing that was afterwards done by the plaintiffs could have made their position any better.

I am satisfied, on the whole, that looking to the letter itself, the defendant never made or intended to make any absolute proposal to purchase the property. I think he never intended to bind himself to anything, till his attorney knew something of the plaintiff's title, and the amount of the earnest-money had been ascertained.

As soon as these additional matters had been adjusted, the earnest-money would have been paid and a byna contract prepared. That is undoubtedly the usual course in native transactions of this kind, and it seems to me that what was said by the plaintiffs' manager in giving his evidence strongly confirms that view

Then lastly, Mr. Allen contended that what was said by the defendant when the parties met afterwards at Baboo Mooraly Dhur Sen's office was sufficient to constitute a binding contract, according to the plaintiffs' manager's evidence, the defendant said "By the letter you have given me, you have bound yourself to sell the property to me, and by the letter I have given you, I have bound myself to take the property"

Even assuming this to be true, I think it makes the plaintiffs' case no better. It was no new promise, but only a reference to [597] the letters which had passed; and I don't think it would justify us in putting a different construction upon the letters, than that which they bear upon the face of them. Besides which, as the amount of earnest-money was not then fixed, the words said to have been used by the defendant would not relieve the plaintiffs from that difficulty.

But even if I were disposed to take a different view of the evidence of the plaintiffs' manager, I think we should clearly be bound, before deciding in the plaintiffs' favour, to give the defendant an opportunity of contradicting this statement, and going generally into his case.

The learned Judge, as we understand, dismissed the suit upon the plaintiffs' own evidence, and without calling upon the defendant to go into his case. As it is, I agree with the Court below and think the appeal should be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

Cunningham, J.—I also think that the original Court was right. The main argument in the appeal was that as the parties to the contract, the subject-matter and the price were all ascertained, there was a binding agreement from which neither party was at liberty to recede. This rule, however, cannot be applied without qualification to the present case. The cases to which reference has been made—Ridgway v. Wharton (6 H. L., 238), Rossiter v. Miller (L. R., 3 Ap. Cas., 1124), Bournewell v. Jenkins (L. R., 8 Ch. D., 70); Crossly v. Maycock (L. R., 18 Eq., 180), Chinnock v. Marchioness of Ely (4 de G. J. & S., 638)—in my opinion, establish the rule that, if the material ingredients of the agreement are ascertained, and if there be a distinct offer on one side, and a distinct acceptance on the other, a contract arises, notwithstanding that the parties may have recorded their intention that it shall be put into a more formal shape by a solicitor. But, on the other hand, if on the true construction of the correspondence and evidence it appears to have been the intention of the parties that they are not to be bound till the agreement has been put into a formal shape and approved by them, then the parties ought not to be bound till that formal document has been executed. In the present instance I think that the proper construction [598] to be put on the letters is that the defendant did intimate his intention not to be bound till the deeds had been produced at his attorney's and with his attorney's approval the byna-putro executed, and the byna or earnest-money paid.

I concur on the ground on which the original Court held this to be the right construction, and especially on the fact that neither of the letters was written by the contracting parties, and that the request in the defendant's letter to the plaintiffs to come over to the house of Mooraly Dhur with the title-deeds was not agreed to in the plaintiffs' letter, nor was in fact complied with. I concur accordingly in thinking that the original Court was right in dismissing the appeal.

[CONTRACT—WHEN CONCLUDED—

See the Notes of Messrs. Pollock and Mulla to sec. 7 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, 3rd Edn. at pp. 44, 45.

Upon the conditions in this case as to inspection of title deeds, and the payment of purchase-money, they observe as follows:—"It looks as if there had been some misapprehension here. In English practice, at any rate, a contract for purchase of land is not suspended until the title has been shown: there is a complete contract as soon as all the terms—including special conditions, if any, as to title—have been agreed upon, subject to the purchaser's rights to rescind, or to compensation, if a title is not shown according to the contract, and often by agreement, to the vendor's right to rescind if he cannot remove any objection. It looks very much as if some well-known customary proportion of earnest-money was really intended by the parties, but apparently there was no proof of this."]

M. Jones..... .Defendant.

Mahomedan law—Waqf—Endowment—Valuation of suit—Removal of trustee—Court-fees' Act, Act VII of 1870, s 7, cl. (3), and sub-clause (f), and clauses 3 and 6 of art. 17, schedule II

IN a suit for the removal of the defendant from the management of certain trust funds on the ground of misconduct, the plaintiff stamped his plaint with a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10, and valued the suit at Rs. 7,000 "for the purpose of jurisdiction "

Held, that the Rs. 7,000 must be taken, under the circumstances, to be the plaintiff's interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and that the Court-fee must be estimated upon that sum.

Delroos Banoo Begum v Ashgur Ali Khan (15 B. L. R., 167) followed

THE question which arose in this case was as to the proper Court-fee payable on the institution of the suit. The plaint stated as follows:—"The value of the waqf which the plaintiff seeks in this suit cannot be ascertained by any money value. Consequently, this suit is brought on payment of a Court-fee of Rs. 10, and this suit is approximately valued at the sum of Rs. 7,000 for the purposes of jurisdiction." The facts of the case and the argument made use of on both sides are fully set forth in the judgment appealed from, which is as follows —

"Eliza Jones, deceased, the widow of the late Nawab Maharajuddawla of the Oudh family, by her last will and testament, dated the 14th November 1852, made over Government securities to the value of five lacs of rupees to her brother and two sisters or their last survivor, on condition that they should never dispose of them, that the interest on three lacs of rupees should be expended on the necessary expenses connected with her tomb and the tomb of her husband, and that with the interest of two lacs of rupees they should enable pilgrims to go to Mecca, etc., and that after the death of her heirs, the Government should carry out the above trusts.

"The defendant is the last surviving sister of the said testatrix and has been managing the trust for some time. The plaintiff, as one of the near-[600]est relations and next heir of the testatrix, charges the defendant with waste and misconduct of omission, commission and misappropriation of the said sum of money, and asks for the following relief in this suit, namely —

"(ka) To enquire how the defendant has been using and spending the said Government securities of five lacs of rupees or the interest thereon.

"(kha) If on such enquiry it be found that she is not performing the religious duties with the said interest as required or according to the injunctions contained in that will, then to appoint another proper person (in her stead), or to make over the said Government securities to the Government, so that the religious duties intended by the testatrix may be fulfilled.

“(ga) To compel the defendant to make good any portion of the said sum, or the Government securities that will be found to have been misappropriated by the defendant, and to make over the same either to the person appointed by the Court or to the Government, as the case may be.

“(gha) To prepare a scheme, if necessary, to give full effect to the provisions of the said will “(gna) To order the defendant to pay the plaintiff all the costs of this suit “(cha) And to pass such just and proper order as may be required by the circumstances of the case, so that the intentions of the testatrix as regards the religious duties may be properly carried out.

“The plaintiff values such a suit at Rs 7,000 only, and affixed a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only on the plaint. That valuation is clearly for purposes of jurisdiction, and has nothing to do with the amount of Court-tees to be levied. The defendant, amongst other objections, urges that the will has been under-valued, and that the proper Court-fee stamp has not been affixed on the plaint. It is evident that this point must be settled before any other question can be gone into.

“After hearing counsel on both sides, I am of opinion that the case does not fall within the sub-articles III and VI, article 17, schedule II of the Court-fees' Act. At very first sight it is apparent that sub-article III does not apply, for no declaration whatever, such as a declaration of the validity or invalidity of the will or any of its provisions or even interpretation of any of its provisions, is prayed for. It may be that the case may require interpretation of some of the provisions of the will for the purpose of seeing whether any of the prayers can be granted, but that is not what is “prayed for.” Besides, in suits of this kind any consequential relief is conceivable, such relief is expressly and directly prayed for in prayers (kha) and (ga) in which the plaintiff seeks for the removal of the defendant from the office of manager, trustee or mutwali, and appointment of another in her stead, or for the transfer of the wagf or trust property to the hands of the Government, and the realization from the defendant of any sum found to [601] have been misappropriated by her. As regards the provision of sub-article VI, the subject-matter in this suit is not such that its “money value” cannot possibly be estimated. The whole sum of five lacs of rupees, together with interest which has accrued thereon, is the subject-matter of this suit, for under prayer (kha) it is asked that the whole of that amount may be transferred to another person or to Government. Again, in prayer (ka) an account of the original sum and receipts and disbursements of the interest is sought for. Now, for accounts there is an express provision in sub-clause (f), clause IV, s 7 of the Court-fees' Act. Sub-article VI of article 17 in sched II of the Act does not apply to the suit at all, because for its application two conditions are necessary, namely (1) the impossibility of estimation of the money value of the subject-matter, (2) a want of a provision expressly applicable to the case. But there is a provision elsewhere directly applicable to cases of accounts, etc., and hence sub-article VI does not apply.

“So far as the taking of accounts is concerned, the plaintiff had undoubtedly the right to exercise his own discretion in valuing the relief sought for under the last two paragraphs of clause IV of s. 7. But under the last paragraph, the Court has yet power to see whether such discretion or option has been properly exercised or not under s 51 of the present Procedure Code, which corresponds to s. 31 of Act VIII of 1859 therein referred to. Section 3 of the present Code makes s. 54 applicable. If this were, however, a suit for accounts only, I might take Rs. 7,000 as the value of the relief, though that value has been given for purposes of jurisdiction only, and that too apparently under no principle whatever.

"But it appears to me that this is a suit for 'moveable property other than money, where the subject-matter has a market value' within the meaning of clause III, s. 7, for Government securities indisputably come under that category, and their transfer to other hands is expressly sought for in prayer (kha). It is said that so far as the plaintiff is concerned, the subject-matter of the suit has no value at all, for he has no interest therein, nor does he claim any interest of his own. That may be the case, but if he has any right to bring such a suit, he stands in the same position as one who sues in his own right and for his own private benefit or in some representative character, such as the guardian of a minor, so far as Court-fees are concerned. The law does not say that the relief must be a personal relief to the plaintiff.

I hold therefore that inasmuch as the Court may have to order that the whole amount of Government securities worth Rs. 5,00,000 be taken away from the defendant and made over either to the plaintiff or some one else or to the Government according to the case and the prayers in this plaint, this is a suit "for moveable property other than money when the subject-matter has a marketable value." This suit must be valued at Rs. 5,00,000, [602] and stamp-fees paid according to that value. The prayer for accounts is merged in the general prayer for the whole of the subject-matter. Plaintiff to value the suit and pay the Court-fees accordingly in the course of two months."

Before the expiration of the time allowed by the Subordinate Judge for payment of the additional fee, the plaintiff obtained a rule in the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, calling on the defendant to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be quashed, but on the 13th of July 1882 this rule was discharged on the ground that the proper course for the plaintiff to adopt was to wait until his plaint should be rejected by the Subordinate Judge under s. 54, cl (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the 12th of August 1882 the plaint was rejected, and thereupon the plaintiff preferred this appeal on the following grounds --

(1) That the Court below ought to have held that the plaint falls within clause 3 or clause 6 of art 17^e of schedule II of the Court-fees' Act, and was therefore properly stamped, (2) that the Court below has misconceived the true nature of the suit, and has erred in supposing that the inquiries which the plaint asks for in any way alter the character of the same, (3) that the Court below ought to have held that this was only a declaratory suit, where no consequential relief was asked for, (4) that the Court below has erroneously supposed that the suit asks for the appointment of your petitioner as trustee,

(5) that the Court below is wrong to hold that the sub-clause (f) of s. 7* of the Court-fees' Act is applicable to any portion of the suit, (6) that the Subordinate Judge has erred in holding that the suit falls within cl. 3, s. 7† of the Court-fees' Act, and that the plaint should have been stamped with Court-fee payable for Rs 5,00,000.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Korunasindhu Mookerji for the Appellant

Mr Hill and Munshi Seraqul Islam for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered —

Prinsep, J.—The matter raised in this appeal relates to the assessment of Court-fees on the plaint. The suit, as we under-[603]stand it, is a suit for removal of the defendant from the management of certain trust funds on proof of his misconduct. The Subordinate Judge has held that the Court-fees payable should be assessed on the value of the trust property—that being, in his opinion, the subject-matter of the suit.

It appears to us that the subject-matter in this suit is not the corpus of the trust property, but the right to retain the control over it. Under such circumstances, the suit would ordinarily fall within sch. II, art. 17, cl. 6 of the Court-fees' Act. But in the present matter we have the fact that the plaintiff has valued the subject-matter of suit for the purposes of jurisdiction, as he states, at Rs. 7,000. We regard this value as not being merely for the purposes of jurisdiction, but also as affording a basis for the assessment of Court-fees. We accept the principle laid down in the case of Delroos Banoo Begum v Ashqui Ali Khan (15 B L R, 157)

But the circumstances of that case are very different from those of the case now before us, so far as we can gather the facts from the papers printed in the paper-book. In the case of Delroos Banoo Begum v. Ashqui Ali Khan (15 B L R, 157), it would seem that the mutwali was in receipt of certain emoluments derived from a specific share of the income of the waqf property, whereas it is not stated in the case before us that the manager is in receipt of any such emolument. Taking, however, the sum of Rs 7,000, stated in the plaint, we think that the Court-fees should be assessed at least on that amount. The case will be returned to the Court of the Subordinate Judge who will proceed with the trial, provided that the plaintiff deposits the proper amount of Court-fees within fourteen days from this date.

O'Kinealy, J.—I concur in the decision arrived at by my learned brother, for I think the case falls within the principle laid down in the case of Delroos Banoo Begum v Ashqui Ali Khan (15 B L R., 157). At page 187 of the report in delivering the judgment of the Court, GLOVER, J., said "The plaintiffs ask for distinct and important consequential relief, they ask not only that the defendant may be declared to have wasted the endowment and thereby to have betrayed her trust, but also that she may be [604] turned out of her mutwaliship, and they, the plaintiffs, be appointed in her room. The plaintiffs say Computation of fees payable in certain suits.

*[Sec 7 — The amount of fee payable under this Act in the suits next hereinafter mentioned shall be computed as follows. —

For accounts

(f) — For accounts—according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal.

In all such suits the plaintiff shall state the amount at which he values the relief sought, and the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, section thirty-one, shall apply as if, for the word 'claim,' the words 'relief sought' were substituted.]

For other moveable property having a market-value.

† [Sec. 7 cl (3) — In suits for moveable property other than money, where the subject-matter has a market-value—according to such value at the date of presenting the plaint.]

that what they claim does not admit of being properly estimated by a money-value, but this is not so. Under the tanhatnama the mutwals were to receive six twenty-eighths of the produce of the estate, a very considerable sum, and the plaintiffs' claim to this share as an appurtenance to the office of mutwal was easily to be estimated in money. I am of opinion that the plaint ought to have been engrossed on a stamp of proper value." By this I understand the Court was of opinion that the suit should be valued according to the interest of the plaintiff in the subject-matter of the suit, and in this case the plaintiff has valued it at Rs 7,000.

False statement before a Registrar—Prosecution under the Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 82, cl (a) and s 83—ss. 72 and 73.

Where the accused was tried for intentionally making a false statement in the course of certain proceedings taken before a Registrar Held, that even assuming that such proceedings were taken under s 72 of the Registration Act, and not as they should have been under s. 73, the appearance of the accused before the Registrar and his taking no objection to the form of the proceedings will cure the irregularity for the purposes of a criminal trial under the provisions of the Registration Act Nor under similar circumstances will the want of verification of a petition of appeal on the part of the applicant, as provided by s 73 of the Act, oust the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court

[605] Held, also, that except as directed by s 82 of Act III of 1877, the Magistrate has no authority on his own mere motion to frame a charge against the accused in consequence of evidence, given in the course of the trial by the Registering Officer, in respect of certain statements made before him during registration proceedings

IN this case one Batesar Mandal was alleged to have executed a kabulhat in favour of the Maharajah of Durbhanga, and his presence or testimony being necessary for the registration of the document, he was summoned before the Sub-Registrar, and, after having been duly affirmed, denied having signed the kabuliat, registration of which was accordingly refused. In due course the manager of the Maharajah presented a petition to the Registrar purporting to be an appeal, with the following declaration at foot. "I do declare that what is set forth in this petition is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.—(Signed) Abdul Wahid, Mukhtar." After the petition had been filed, it was marginally marked in the Registration Office, "Appeal No. 15 of 1883." The Registrar, after the necessary inquiries and the examination of Batesar Mandal and others, gave this decision "I have not the slightest doubt that the witnesses of the respondent and the respondent himself have deliberately given false evidence in the case. The appeal is decreed and the kabuliat is directed to be registered. Batesar Mandal is directed to give security for his appearance on the 10th instant before the Magistrate to whom he and his six witnesses are made over with a copy of the judgment.' Pursuant to this order the accused afterwards appeared before the Joint Magistrate. In the course of the investigation by the Joint Magistrate into the alleged false statement made before the Registrar, the Sub Registrar was examined as a witness, and in consequence of his evidence the Magistrate on his own motion further charged the accused with having made a false statement before the Sub-Registrar. When the case was ripe for judgment a petition was presented to the Sessions Judge, praying him to send for the record and refer the case to the High Court. The Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court. Mr. Gasper for the accused contended (1) that, as regards the charge, the whole proceedings before the Registrar were coram non judice, inasmuch as they were taken by way of [606] appeal and not as they should have been under s. 72 of Act III of 1877, (2) that inasmuch as the application made to the Registrar had not been verified in manner required by law for the verification of complaints, the whole proceedings before that officer were null and void, (3) that as regards the charge of giving false evidence before the Sub-Registrar, inasmuch as there was no sanction whatever for the prosecution, the Joint Magistrate had no authority to frame a charge against the accused.

* Criminal Reference No 17, and letter No. 29, from F Cowley, Esq, Sessions Judge of Purneah, dated the 25th February 1884

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) so far as it is material for the purpose of this report, ran as follows —

With regard to the first point we were, during the argument, inclined to think that Mr. Gasper's contention was well founded, but upon consideration and on examination of the authorities we are of opinion that it cannot be sustained. For the purpose of this case we assume that the proceedings before the Registrar were taken under s. 72 of the Act and not as they should have been under s. 73, and that what the Registrar heard was an appeal and not an application. Now, no doubt, the accused, when he appeared before the Registrar, might have pointed out this irregularity, and might have asked the Registrar to make no order or to dismiss the appeal, but he appeared, made no objection to the form of the proceedings, and must be held to have waived the irregularity. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that upon the authority of Reg v. Barry [28 L J. (M C) 86, 8 Cox C. C., 121], Queen v. Fletcher (L. R., 1 C C R., 320), Turner v. Postmaster-General (5 B. and S., 756), Queen v. Hughes (L. R., 4 Q. B D., 614. 14 Cox C. C., 285), the accused may properly be charged with giving false evidence at the enquiry before the Registrar. We are also of opinion that the accused waived any irregularity in the verification of the petition of appeal treating that document as an application under s. 73, and that the second contention by Mr. Gasper fails. See the cases above cited and Queen v. Smith (L. R., 1 C. C. R., 110. 11 Cox C. C., 10).

As to the third point raised, we are of opinion that the Joint Magistrate had no authority to frame the second charge. The [607] prosecution for the offence of giving false evidence before the Sub-Registrar was neither commenced by him, or by any of the officers mentioned in s 83, nor was it sanctioned by any or either of them. These being our views on the case the Magistrate will proceed to dispose of the first charge against the accused as he may think proper, having regard to the evidence before him, of the sufficiency of which we offer no opinion. The proceedings on the second charge must be set aside.

Additional charge quashed

Khadem Ali Plaintiff

Tajimunnissa and others Defendants

Restitution of conjugal rights—Registration of Mahomedan marriages—Bengal Act I of 1876, s 6, sch A—Copy of entry in register—Evidence.

A husband and wife, Mahomedans, registered their marriage under Bengal Act I of 1876, setting out in the form prescribed in schedule A to the Act, as "a special condition" that the wife under certain circumstances therein set out might divorce her husband.

These circumstances occurred, and the wife divorced her husband. Held, in a suit by the husband for restoration of his conjugal rights, that the "special condition" was a matter which, under the provisions of the Act it was the duty of the Mahomedan Registrar to enter in the register, and that therefore a copy of the entry in the register was legal evidence of the facts therein contained.

THIS was a suit brought by one Khadem Ali against Tajimunnissa, his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights. The wife's father, defendant No. 2, her brother defendant No. 3, and some other relatives were also made defendants.

The plaintiff alleged that his wife's father and brother took his wife to their house promising to send her back in 15 days, but that they failed to do so. Defendants Nos 2 and 3 contended that the plaintiff had maltreated his wife and had driven her away, and [608] that she, therefore, divorced him as she was entitled to do under "a special condition" of the register of her marriage, drawn up in compliance with schedule A of Bengal Act I of 1876, which set out in art 14 that the wife might divorce the husband if he maltreated her, or took away her ornaments. A copy of this register was put in evidence.

Defendant No. 1, the wife, alleged that a quarrel having arisen between her and the plaintiff's mother (with whom she never agreed), plaintiff had assaulted and maltreated her, and that she had therefore divorced him and had gone to live with her relatives.

The Munsiff found that the defendants had failed to prove any quarrelling in the husband's house, and that their witnesses gave such unreliable evidence as to the assault and as to any divorce having taken place, whilst, on the other hand, he found that the defendants had taken the wife away from her husband, he therefore gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant No. 1 appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who himself examined the plaintiff and defendant No. 1, and on the evidence of defendant No. 1 he found that she had been cruelly maltreated by her husband, and held that under the special conditions above referred to she had rightfully divorced him; he, therefore, reversed the decree of the Munsiff. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Serajul Islam, for the Appellants, contended that the recital in the register of the Marriage Registrar ought not to have been used in evidence, as the register had not been duly proved, and that it could not be used as evidence that the parties had agreed that the wife should be at liberty under certain circumstances to divorce her husband.

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Respondent.

Judgment of the High Court was delivered by Field, J.—The only point upon which we need make any observation in this case is the contention that a copy of a register kept under the provisions of Bengal Act I of 1876, was not admissible in evidence to prove that the parties had agreed that the wife would, under certain circumstances, have the right to divorce her husband. Section 6 of the Act directs that every [609] Mahomedan Registrar shall keep certain books, and amongst them Book I, which is a register of marriages in the form "A" contained in the schedule annexed to the Act. Now, the 14th clause of form "A" is "Special conditions, if any." It is clear, therefore, that the special condition relied upon in this case was a matter which, under the provisions of the Act, it was the duty of the Mahomedan Registrar to enter in the register kept in accordance with the directions of the Act.

This being so, we think that the copy of the entry in the register was legal evidence.

We have heard the learned vakil on the other points raised in the case, and we do not think there is any ground upon which we can interfere.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[In (1892) 19 Cal. 689 19 I. A., 157 which was a suit for dower settled on a Mahomedan lady at the time of her marriage, the Privy Council held the register of marriages admissible and relevant evidence (as regards the amount of dower) within the meaning of the 32nd section of the Indian Evidence Act of 1872, as having been made by the Muhtahid in the discharge of his professional duty. This particular register (referring to the register admitted in the suit) appears to have been kept since the annexation of the province, and all marriages are recorded in it; it contains columns for the names and descriptions of the parties, the names of the vakils of the bride and bridegroom respectively, and the amount of the dower, together with the date of the marriage.]

Roghoobur Singh . . . Plaintiff

Execution sale—Money decree—Mortgage decree—Notice—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s 287

A creditor obtained two decrees against his debtor, one being a mortgage decree to enforce his lien on certain property, and the other a simple money decree. In execution of the second decree the property over which the judgment-creditor had a lien was sold and was purchased by a third person. Subsequently, in execution of the first decree, at the instance of the judgment-creditor, this same property was advertised for sale, but on the auction-purchaser objecting, the judgment-creditor brought a suit against him to enforce his lien on the property in the hands of the auction-purchaser. Held, that it lay on the plaintiff, in order to entitle him to recover in the suit, to show that the defendants purchased with notice of the lien.

Held, further, that the fact that for some purpose at some time or other the judgment-creditor informed the Court of the mortgage is not evidence of notice on the auction-purchaser.

ONE Hanuman Dutt Singh borrowed two sums of money from [610] Roghoobur Singh, the plaintiff in this suit—one on the 9th Aughran 1273 F, and the other on the 11th. The debts not being repaid, the plaintiff, after the death of Hanuman Singh, brought a suit against his sons as heirs, Rughunandan Singh and others, and obtained on the 31st December 1873 a decree to enforce his lien on 2½ gundas share out of a 2-anna putti of mouzah Syedpore Sulha in respect of the loan of the 11th Aughran. The plaintiff also obtained a money decree against Rughunandan and others on the 15th July 1876 in respect of the other loan. In execution of the latter decree 2½ gundas share out of the 2-anna putti which formed the subject of the mortgage decree was brought to sale on the 7th January 1878. Execution was then taken out on the decree of the 31st December 1873, and the mortgaged share of 2½ gundas share out of the 2-anna putti was advertised for sale, but on the petition of the defendants, auction-purchasers under the money decree, the sale was stopped and the plaintiff brought a suit to enforce his lien on the property in the hands of the auction-purchasers. The Court of First Instance dismissed the claim, on the ground that, although the plaintiff had by a petition of the 29th November 1877 brought the mortgage alleged by him to the notice of the Court, it did not appear that “the fact of the mortgage was proclaimed at the time of the sale in such a manner as to make the defendants, the purchasers, aware of it.” On appeal, the Subordinate Judge decreed the claim, and thereupon an appeal was preferred to the High Court.

Wilson, J. (TOTTENHAM, J., concurring)—We are unable to concur in the view taken by the lower Appellate Court in this case

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 665 of 1883, against the decree of Baboo Bolak Chand, Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, dated 22nd of December 1882, reversing the decree of Syed Abdul Karim, Munsif of Begnsaraie, dated 20th of January 1882.

It appears that the plaintiff held two decrees against the same person : one, a mere money decree, and the other, a mortgage decree. In execution of his money decree he caused to be sold the property which was the subject of his mortgage decree, and [611] he now in this suit proposes to proceed on his mortgage decree against that property in the hands of the auction-purchaser.

The law, it appears to us, has long been settled on this matter, that one who has caused the property of his judgment-debtor to be sold in execution cannot afterwards set up any claim of his own against that property unless he shows that the purchaser purchased with notice of his claim. Several cases have been referred to before us which seem to show that. The first case is the case of Dullab Sircar v. Krishna Cumar Bakshi (3 B. L. R., 407, 12 W. R. 303), the second, which is to the same effect, is the case of Dooler Chund v. Mussamul Oomda Begum (24 W. R., 263), and there is the more recent case of Tukaram Bia Atmaram v. Ram Chandra Bia Budaram (1 L. R., 1 Bom., 314). Those cases were all decided when the former Procedure Code was in force. The matter is even stronger under the Code now in operation, because s. 287 of the present Code expressly requires that every incumbrance to which the property is liable shall be inserted in the sale proclamation. The law, therefore, remains the same now as then, the reason for it being somewhat stronger. It lies, therefore, on the plaintiff, in order to entitle him to recover in this suit, to show that the defendant purchased with notice of his claim, and the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that he did purchase with notice. That finding, of course, would be binding upon us if there was any evidence on which it could properly be based. But it is admitted by the pleaders on both sides that there is no evidence bearing on the matter except that which is referred to in full by the Munsif in his judgment at page 5 of the Paper-book under the head "finding on the first issue." The Munsif says "The onus of proving whether the defendants did or did not purchase the 2½ gundas barani share of mouzah Syedpore Sulha with knowledge of the debt alleged by the plaintiff is on the plaintiff. But he has not filed any documentary evidence to show that the lien was proclaimed at the time of sale of the barani share aforesaid, and it is admitted that there was no oral evidence on the subject at all. If such proclamation be not shown, the mere filing of the [612] petition, dated the 29th November 1877, made by the plaintiff is not enough to prove the said proclamation, because it appears from the above copy that the plaintiff had brought the mortgage alleged by him to the notice of the Court. But it has not at all been shown on behalf of the plaintiff that the fact of the mortgage was proclaimed at the time of the sale in such a manner as to make the defendants, purchasers, aware of it." The only fact, therefore, which is in evidence and which could have any bearing on this matter in the plaintiff's favour, is that, on the 29th November 1877, at what stage of the proceedings it does not appear, he filed a petition in which he informed the Court of his mortgage. If there were a charge against the plaintiff of having deliberately and fraudulently concealed his mortgage, no doubt this matter would be of considerable importance. But the fact that, for some purpose at some time or other, he informed the Court of the mortgage is not evidence upon which the conclusion could be arrived at that the defendants purchased with notice.

For this reason we think that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed and that of the Munsif affirmed.

The appellant will have his costs in this and the lower Appellate Court

Appeal allowed.

Compromise and decree thereon—Application to set aside compromise—

Review of judgment—New suit

For the purpose of setting aside a decree passed in pursuance of a compromise come to out of Court, there are two available modes of procedure—(1) by suit; (2) by a review of the judgment sought to be set aside, the latter being the more regular mode of procedure. Lalji Sahu v The Collector of Tirhoot (6 B L R, 49), Mewa Lal Thakur v. Bhujhun Jha (13. B L R, Ap 11), Galbert v Endean (L R 9 Ch D 259) followed

THIS was a rule obtained by Aushootosh Chandra and his brother calling upon one Tara Prasanna Roy to show cause why a [613] compromise entered into by them with Tara Prasanna Roy should not be set aside. There were two appeals pending in the High Court between these parties—Aushootosh Chandra and his brother were appellants in the one, and respondents in the other, and Tara Prasanna respondent in the one, and appellant in the other. Before the hearing of these appeals negotiations for a compromise were set on foot, on the faith of which Aushootosh Chandra and his brother applied to the Court on the 31st January 1884, stating that, the matters in dispute between them had been settled out of Court, and asking that their appeal against Tara Prasanna might be dismissed and the appeal of Tara Prasanna decreed. Orders were made for decrees to be passed accordingly; but as the applicants did not set out in their petition the terms of the compromise, no terms were embodied in the decree. Subsequently, Aushootosh Chandra and his brother presented a petition to the Court to set aside the decrees, stating that the condition of the compromise provided that a sum of money was to be advanced to them by Tara Prasanna on a certain date, and that this term had not been complied with and that several decree-holders who were to have been satisfied by that money had consequently come in and were about to sell the properties of the petitioners. The High Court thereupon issued a rule against Tara Prasanna to show cause why the terms of the compromise should not be set aside, and the rule came on for hearing on 24th April 1884. Both sides put in affidavits—the petitioners supporting by their affidavit the petition on which the rule was obtained, and Tara Prasanna Roy affirming that it was a term of such advance that the petitioners should show a clear title to the property on which the advance was to be made and that they had not done so.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ) was delivered by

Wilson, J. (TOTTENHAM, J., concurring)—This was a rule obtained ob-[614]tained to show cause why a compromise should not be set aside. It was shown that there were two appeals pending in this Court between the same parties, in one of which the present applicants were appellants and in the other their opponent was appellant. It appears that a petition was presented by the present applicants stating that the matters in dispute in those appeals had been settled by compromise out of Court, and asking in substance that their appeal should be dismissed, and that in the case in which they were respondents a decree should be made against them, and orders were made for decrees to be passed accordingly. The petition did not set out the terms of the compromise. The terms, therefore, could not be embodied in the decrees. The compromise was only referred to. It is now stated that the facts are such that the present applicants are entitled to have that compromise disregarded, and to have the appeals proceed.

Now, the first question which we have to consider is, supposing the facts to be of such a nature as they are alleged to be, can we entertain this application in its present form? We think we cannot. The mode in which such a miscarriage, as is said to have occurred in this case, is to be dealt with has been considered on more occasions than one, and it seems to be clear that there are two modes in which the matter can be dealt with. In the first place, a suit will lie to set aside the whole transaction. It is not necessary for us to consider whether in the present case, if a suit were brought, it ought to be brought in the Mofussil or in the Original Side of this Court. It is for the parties to consider that. On the other hand, it has also been held that there is another and a more proper mode of procedure, by applying for a review of judgment.

In the case of Lalji Sahu v. The Collector of Tirhoot (6 B. L. R., 649) a decree had been made founded on a compromise. An application for a review was made, and facts were brought to the knowledge of the Court, showing that the compromise ought to be treated as a nullity, and the Privy Council appear to us clearly to treat that application for review as a proper mode of raising the question whether the compromise ought to be treated as a nullity or not. A similar [615] question came before this Court in the case of Mewa Lal Thakur v. Bhughun Jha (13 B. L. R., App. 11). That was a case in which the decree was obtained by fraud, and the parties had proceeded by a suit to set it aside. The case was heard by Mr. Justice PHEAR and Mr. Justice MORRIS, and judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice PHEAR, who said "It seems to us that this suit has been to a considerable extent misdirected. It has already been mentioned that the immediate aim of the plaintiff is to get a decree, which was formerly passed against him by a competent Court, set aside on the ground that it was obtained by fraud and collusion. But the proper course for obtaining such an object as that is to go to the Court which passed the decree either within the time specified in s. 119 of the Civil Procedure Code, if the circumstances are such as would justify action under that section, or at any time (so that it be done with due diligence), if the ground upon which the decree is sought to be set aside be a good ground for reversing and altering the judgment upon which the decree was passed."

These decisions seem to us to be authorities for saying that a mode of proceeding in such cases is by a suit, but that the more proper mode is by an application for review. The question which is now before us arose before the Court of Appeal in England in the case of Gilbert v. Endean (L. R., 9 Ch. D., 259). In that case the very procedure adopted here was adopted by the parties. A compromise had been arrived at in the course of a suit, and an application was made by motion to set aside that compromise and to allow the suit to proceed, as if the compromise had not been made. The Vice-Chancellor allowed the application. In the Court of Appeal it was pointed out that such an application was not the right mode of procedure. We think that is so in this country also, and the proper course is that which we have already pointed out. It occurred to us that we might possibly treat this application as an application for review. But whether we can do so without straining matters unduly we think it unnecessary to say. It is undesirable in the interests of the applicants. The materials are very scant, and it might very well happen that the [616] Judges by whom the application might be dealt with might feel bound to dismiss the matter on that ground. We think it better, therefore, to leave the parties to make a fresh application for review if so advised. If they elect to make that application it ought to be made on very much better materials than those before us, and that the whole of the facts in the matter on the best evidence available should be before the Judges before whom the application is made.

NOTES.

[MODE OF ATTACKING COMPROMISE DECREE-

Under the C. P. C 1908, sec 96, sub-clause 3 no appeal lies from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties. This provision was not contained in the previous Codes and it gives effect to the previous case-law, making, however, a departure in the case of matters extraneous to the subject-matter of the suit, which were held appealable (30 Mad 421, 26 Bom 76, 34 Cal, 456) See 36 Bom 77, 26 Cal 891, 5 C W N 877, 6 C W N 82.

In the case of Mussammatal Gulab Koen v Badshah Bahadur (1909) 13 C.W.N. 1197 10 C.L.J. 420 MOOKERJEE and CARNDUFF, JJ, exhaustively dealt with this subject and as regards this case it was there observed -

"An examination of the grounds of the decision of this Court in the case just mentioned (10 Cal 612), shows first that the decision of the Judicial Committee relied upon by the learned Judges is not an authority in support of their view, secondly, that the observations in the case of 22 W R. 213 upon which reliance was placed were not necessary for the purpose of the decision in that case, and that their binding effect has been very much weakened by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in two subsequent cases, and thirdly that the observations of Sir GEORGE JESSEL in Gilbert v Endeau 9 Ch D 259 do not support the view that a consent decree can be reviewed on the ground of fraud, though they no doubt support the proposition that such a decree can be attacked in a new action on the ground of fraud. It may further be observed that the consent decree in the case of 10 Cal, 612 was not impeached on the ground of fraud, and the case therefore cannot be treated as an authority upon the question as to the appropriate mode in which a consent decree can be vacated on that ground." In that case the following conclusions were drawn on a review of the authorities, (1) a consent decree may be impeached either by an application for review or by a regular suit, (2) a regular suit is the preferable and the appropriate, though not the exclusive remedy in a case in which a consent decree is assailed on the ground of fraud, (3) when a consent decree is assailed on the ground of fraud, misrepresentation, mistake, coercion, undue influence, or any similar grounds, it ought to be attacked by an original suit, (4) a previous unsuccessful application for review is no bar to such a suit. All the previous cases like 24 Cal., 908, 26 Cal, 891 3 C W N, 670, 5 C W N 877, 6 C W N., 82, 34 Cal, 83, 11 C W N., 579, 10 C W N, 529 2 C L. J., 508, 11 Bom., 708 were fully reviewed in this case.]

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Statute 13 Eliz., c. 5—Fraud upon creditors—Hibba—Equity and good conscience.

Whether or not the Statute 13 Eliz., c. 5 * which may or may not extend to or operate in the "mofussil" is more than declaratory of the common law, so far as it avoids transactions intended to defraud creditors, its principles, and those of the common law for avoiding fraudulent conveyances, have received effect in the Indian Courts, and have properly guided the decisions of the Courts in administering law according to justice, equity and good conscience

A hibba having been found on the evidence to have been made not bona fide, nor on any good consideration, and by it creditors being delayed in their just rights, the maker having intended to protect his property thereby from those who at the time were his creditors. Held, that the hibba was void according to equity and good conscience

APPEAL from a decree (23rd April 1880) of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, varying a decree (9th May 1878) of the District Judge of Dacca.

This appeal arose out of proceeding in execution of a decree, and raised the question whether properties which were admitted [617] to have belonged, at one time, to the judgment-debtor, who had died before these proceedings were taken, had ceased to belong to him in his lifetime, in virtue of a hibba executed by him in favour of his son. This instrument was alleged to have been merely colourable, and made for the purpose of protecting his property from his creditors. The property in dispute consisted of villages in the zillas of Dacca and Daulatpur formerly belonging to Abdul Ali, who died in 1867. Against Abdul Ali the respondents, as representatives of his deceased wife, Ifthakharunnissa, obtained a decree in 1866 for Rs. 52,913, for dower due. In execution of this decree the respondents took the proceedings out of which this appeal arose. In answer to the respondents' petition for attachment of these villages, the appellant, a grandson of Abdul Ali, objected that they formed no part of his estate, having been given in a hibba, dated 4th October 1849, to his son, Wahed Ali, father of the appellant. Wahed Ali, who was 18 years old in 1854, executed on the 11th March 1853, ikrarnamas, stating, among other things, that Abdul Ali had remained, notwithstanding the hibba, in possession and management of the villages. Afterwards, in 1859, Wahed Ali sued his father to have the ikrarnamas set aside, and to have effect given to the hibba. This suit was dismissed by the District Court of Dacca, on the ground that the gift was purely nominal and invalid for want of possession given. The High Court having reversed this decision, it was restored by the Judicial Committee, which held that it was not necessary to come to any conclusive finding as to the effect of the hibba of 1849, further than that it was benami, or more probably to be followed by a family settlement—Ameeroonissa Khatoon v. Abedoonissa Khatoon (L. R., 2 I. A., 87, 15 B. L. R., 67). The

* By Statute 13 Eliz., c. 5, all covinous conveyances, gifts, and alienations of lands or goods, whereby creditors may be in anywise disturbed, hindered, delayed or defrauded of their just rights, are utterly void.

Committee held that the ikrars provided that the father should have possession and control of the property during his life, and that, accordingly, the form of a suit to enforce rights which others might have under them to any share of the profits, accruing during his lifetime, would be one charging him in the character of manager.

Meantime the respondents, then minors acting by their guardian, obtained the above-mentioned decree of 1866.

[618] Execution proceedings having extended over a lengthened period, in 1878 the District Judge of Dacca had them before him for orders. He disallowed objections taken by Ameerounissa Khatoon, mother of Abdul Hye, on her own, and on her son's, account. On appeal to the High Court a Divisional Bench (MITTER and WHITE, JJ.), holding that a decision was required as to whether or not Abdul Hye derived title under the ikrars, remanded the proceedings. Another District Judge of Dacca, who had succeeded to the office after 1878, then gave the finding in part set forth in their Lordships' judgment. This was followed by the decision of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (WHITE and MACLEAN, JJ.) to the effect that the hubba of 4th October 1849 was a contrivance on the part of Abdul Ali to defraud his creditors, and should be treated, therefore, as a nullity.

On this appeal—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Appellant, contended that the objections raised on behalf of the minor appellant to the sale of the properties ought to have been allowed. Under the operation of the hubba of 1849, and the subsequent ikrars, a family arrangement had been constituted, and whatever share the appellant might have on the family estate was derived from his father, Wahed Ali, so that he had a right to insist upon the validity of the hubba. This was consistent with the language of the judgment in Ameerounissa Khatoon v. Abedoonissa Khatoon (L. R., 2 I A, 87, 15 B. L. R., 67).

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. Hunter for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Lord Fitzgerald.—It is fortunately unnecessary to state in detail the complicated transactions and the very protracted litigation which characterize the case now before their Lordships. The present proceeding relates to the execution of a decree against Abdul Ali, obtained so far back as 1866 by some of the representatives of his deceased wife, Ifthakharunnissa, and in respect of which a very considerable sum is still due.

The main question for consideration is whether certain property which the decree-holders have attached, and which they [619] seek to sell, formed part of the assets of Abdul Ali at the time of his death, and is liable to his creditors, and the answer to this question depends on whether a certain hubbanama, dated 19th Assin 1256 (4th October 1849), made by Abdul Ali, in favour of his son, Wahed Ali, is benami, or is fraudulent and void as against his creditors, and in order to determine these questions, it is necessary to examine the position of Abdul Ali and the condition of his family when that gift was executed.

Abdul Ali was a zemindar, and prior to 1849 had married twice, first Ifthakharunnissa, and secondly, Nurunnissa, by whom he had a son, Wahed Ali, and a daughter.

In October 1849 he was under a considerable liability for the dower of Ifthakharunnissa, so large that after her decease two of her representatives (the present decree-holders) obtained a decree as for their share for Rs 62,000.

He was in 1849 the owner of a variety of small properties, collectively of considerable value, but probably not more than sufficient to enable him to meet his engagements ; and being thus situated, he appears, voluntarily and without any consideration, to have made the hibbanama of the 4th October 1849.

That instrument is as follows :—

“ To the Worthy of Remembrance,

“ Sriman Meah Wahed Ali of good behaviour.

“ Deed of gift of jumma lands executed by Moulvi Abdul Ali —As it is known that in such times as these there is no certainty of any man's life, and as I am now past 55 years of age, and that I have only you, my minor son, and a daughter, Srimati Fukurunissa Khatoon, who is now without husband or offspring now in existence, and as on my death it would not be to be wondered at that you and your sister should fall to quarrelling about the property left behind by me, and as my daughter aforesaid having had from her husband zemindaries and talooks, many properties, and is therefore well provided for, and I having already bestowed by regular deeds some of my property to my wife, Srijuta Nurunnissa Khatoon, and being in undisturbed possession with full rights of the remainder of the zemindaries and talooks which I own and possess ” (the properties are here enumerated), “ I of my own free will and plea-[620]sure, being in sound health and of my full knowledge, and as it would be difficult for you to live well and comfortably without my giving you all those talooks and zemindaries, do hereby confer upon you the above-mentioned 10 annas 13 gundas 1 cowri 1 krant share of pergunnah Nurullapore, and the 7-anna share of pergunnah Idrakpore, in separate and respective shares, and in pergunnah Chunder-dip, the kharija talooks of Jowar Lalwa Banekachi, in their entirety, and I cause you to be put in possession thereof. You shall therefore enjoy possession of all dwelling grounds, garden lands, cultivated and waste lands, homesteads, orchards, churs and sandbanks, new formations and reformatations, roads and pasturages, with trees, rivers and water-courses, ponds and tanks, water and forest privileges, and proceeds of fruits, haunts, markets, ghats (river crossings), bazars and all matters therein connected with the said talooks and zemindaries, with tenants, zaerats, talookdars, howladars, and all other rent-holders, rents in their entirety, to excavate or to fill up, to settle thereon dwellings, plant orchards and gardens, and by collections of the revenues and by a transfer from the former names to your own of all those talooks and zemindaries, at the office of the Collectorate, and becoming full owner in right of me, with power to give or to sell, and you and your heirs in succession shall enjoy possession thereof, and the rights of myself and my heirs therein are hereby abandoned and cease. To which effect I have executed this deed of gift.

“ Dated the 19th Assin 1256.”

This grant appears to have been duly registered, but the instrument remained in the hands of Abdul Ali, and never appears to have been in possession of or under the dominion of the grantee.

Wahed Ali was then but ten years of age, and his father, Abdul, continued in the possession and apparent ownership of the property granted, and took and received and applied to his own use the whole of the income and profits. He appears to have continued in such possession to the time of his death.

The property comprised in the gift seems to have been substantially the bulk of Abdul's then assets, and certainly, if that gift was to take effect, he left himself without the means of meeting his then existing liabilities.

[621] The gift was not followed or completed by any actual change of possession, or of management, or apparent ownership.

On the 24th Jeyt 1258 (6th June 1851) Nurunnissa, the second wife of Abdul and mother of Wahed, also executed a hibbanama in favour of her son Wahed of considerable property obtained from her husband Abdul or inherited in her own right, but no question arises on this instrument in the appeal now before their Lordships.

Wahed being still a minor, and shortly before he attained 18, was made to sign two ikrars, both dated 29th Falgoon 1259 (11th March 1853), that from Wahed Ali to his father recites the hibba of the 19th Assin 1256 (4th October 1849); and that his father, mother, and "half-mother" being alive, full brothers and sisters and half-brothers and sisters might be born to him. After further reciting that as Abdul, by reason of his gift to Wahed, was unable to make suitable arrangements for their maintenance, it became incumbent on him to do so out of the property received by him in gift, it then contains an agreement by Wahed to maintain his sister Fakhurunnissa, and any other sisters or half-brothers to be afterwards born in joint mess during their minority, and on their coming of age to allow them certain fixed stipends for maintenance. He also agreed, in case any full-brothers should afterwards be born, that he and they, subject to such allowances, should enjoy the properties in equal shares. These words follow this disposition. "And thus I do make my brothers and sisters co-sharers in the property received by me in gift and the profits thereof." The ikrar concludes by declaring that during the father's lifetime the whole of the property named in it will remain in the father's charge, and under his management and control.

Some time after the signing of these ikrars, Abdul married Ameerunnissa, mother of the minor appellant.

After Wahed attained 18 he signed a third ikrar, dated 16th Aughran 1263 B. E. (30th November 1856), in which, after reciting the two hibbas from the father and mother, it thus refers to the two former ikrars. "That I being your only son, and on account of your having no other son possessed of all your affections, you had, so as to prevent that any disputes could arise with [622] any one in future, bestowed upon me by your favour, and through the execution of a deed of gift dated the 19th Assin 1256, your ancestral zemindaries, specified in the schedule. Besides this, having settled upon my late mother, Nurunnissa, as her marriage dower, your zemindari of Tuppah Hawali Jehanabad, and your talooks, etc., my mother aforesaid as the owner thereof bestowed them upon me through a deed of gift dated the 24th Joistee 1258, and I being the owner and in possession of that property, worth, in accordance with the deed of gift, Rs. 80,000 I did formerly give and execute, as addressed to you and to my mother, separate ikrars (agreements) to the effect that all the properties named in the schedule of the aforesaid deeds of gift and other properties should during your lifetime remain under your control and in your possession. That I did not possess the right of sale and gift over that property, and that should uterine brothers to me be born, the property, received in gift from my mother should be enjoyed by all of us in equal shares and promising, should I have sisters or half-brothers and sisters, to make monthly allowances to them." It then recites that the father had contracted a marriage with Ameerunnissa, who is stated to be a lady of good family, that provision had been made for the children of the former marriages by the earlier ikrars, and that it was proper to make some provision for her and any children to be born of Ameerunnissa. It then states an agreement by Wahed to make allowance to the daughters of the marriage, and that should any sons be born, they, his half-brothers, should enjoy the property with him in equal shares, adding, "and thus I constitute my brothers and sisters sharers in the property and in the profits thereof." Wahed then grants an allowance to Ameerunnissa of Rs. 150 per month for her table, and Rs. 500 a year, her clothes. The ikrar contains a statement that the father was in possession of the property by virtue of the former ikrars, and concludes by declaring that it will remain in his control and management.

during his lifetime, and that neither Wahed nor his heirs should interfere or lay any claim thereto.

Soon after this last marriage of Abdul Ali disputes arose in the family, which resulted in a suit being filed in 1865 by Wahed against his father, to obtain possession of the properties conveyed [623] to him by the hibbas, and to have it declared that the said ikrars were not executed by him but were forged documents.

Abdul Ali's defence to this suit was that the hibbas had not been executed bonâ fide, but for the purpose of diminishing his credit.

Pending the litigation Wahed died in August 1866, and Abdul died in June 1867, leaving his widow Ameeroonissa and her two sons, the appellant Abdul and his brother Lotif, surviving. Lotif died soon afterwards.

After the death of Abdul the decree-holders sought execution against his assets, and, inter alia, against parts of the property included in the hibbanama of 19th Assin 1256 (4th October 1849), which they contend is benami, that is to say, they allege that it was a transaction not intended to operate according to its tenor and effect, but merely as a cover from creditors, and further that it was fraudulent and void against creditors. If they are correct in those contentions that instrument cannot stand in their way, the property remained the property of Abdul, and the ikrar under which the appellant claims is equally inoperative against them. Their Lordships pass by a mass of litigation and a labyrinth of complicated questions which arose from time to time between the parties, and which will be found clearly described in the judgments pronounced from time to time in the progress of the cause by Mr Justice MITTER and other Judges, and their Lordships desire to confine their observations to the questions which arise on this appeal.

The questions which their Lordships have to determine are, whether the gift of 1849 was one of those known as a benami transaction, or was it otherwise fraudulent and void as against the decree-holders, whose decree was obtained in respect of a pecuniary liability existing at the time of the grant and still undischarged.

Their Lordships have considered those questions quite irrespective of the statements, or declarations, made by Abdul post litem motam in the litigation between him and Ahmed, [Wahed?] and where his object was to defeat his own deed.

On a fair and full consideration of the state of circumstances existing at the time of that hibba, and the course [624] of conduct pursued afterwards, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that it was benami to this extent, that it was a mere pocket instrument, not intended to operate according to its tenor and effect, but by which property was put in the name of Wahed but for the benefit of Abdul.

The possession remained with Abdul, and he appears during his life to have acted as uncontrolled owner and for his own sole benefit. There is some remarkable documentary evidence too from which it appears that after the hibba, there having been from time to time accretions to the lands comprised in the hibba, and which according to the law of India follow the principal, those accretions were claimed by Abdul, and he obtained grants of them to him and his heirs.

The hibba was not, and could not, be dealt with as a family settlement, there does not appear to have been any occasion for it, and the grantee was a boy of ten, who is afterwards made to sign an ikrar, by the concluding provision of which it is declared that the property is to remain in the control and management of Abdul during his life, and that neither Wahed nor his heirs should lay claim thereto.

But, supposing the hubba to be operative as between the parties, their Lordships have still to consider whether it is to be upheld as against creditors.

By Statute 13 Eliz., c. 5, all covinous conveyances, gifts, and alienations of lands or goods whereby creditors might be in anywise disturbed, hindered, delayed; or defrauded of their just rights, are declared utterly void.

Whether or not that statute (which may not extend to or operate in the mofussil in India) is more than declaratory of the common law, so far as it avoids transactions intended to defraud creditors, there seems to be no doubt that its principles and the principles of the common law for avoiding fraudulent conveyances have been given effect to by the High Courts of India, and have properly guided their decisions in administering law according to equity and good conscience.

Mr. Justice WHITE, in delivering the judgment of the High Court, observes 'What was the position of Abdul Ali when he executed the hubba of 1849? At that time he had hanging over [625] his head a larger liability under the kabinnama, or deed of dower, which forms the subject of the present suit, and which he had executed when he married his first wife Iftakharunnissa. She had died leaving a married daughter, who has since died leaving infant sons. The decree-holders, who are only some of the heirs, claim a 2 annas share of the dower, and have been held entitled to Rs. 62,000 odd. The entire liability under the kabinnama was, therefore, not far short of five lakhs of rupees."

It is not necessary to adopt the whole of that statement. It is sufficient to say that the liability was very large.

The Judge of the District Court at Dacca makes use of the following remarkable language. "However binding the documents may be as among the parties to them, we are beyond all doubt dealing with a gigantic fraud as regards third persons. Until, however, we get a law directed against voluntary and fraudulent conveyances, we must go on searching in each case for specific proof of fraud, etc., generally, as now, finding that proof insufficient." But in observing on that passage, Mr. Justice WHITE, in the Appellate Court, observes "If the hubbas are found, upon proper evidence, to be a contrivance to defraud creditors, they will not stand in the way of the decree-holders executing their decree against the properties mentioned in the hubbas. The Statute 13 Eliz., c. 5, which was enacted for the purpose of rendering conveyances in fraud of creditors void, is considered to be in affirmance of the general principles of the law by which fraudulent transactions are liable to be vacated at the instance of those affected by the fraud. This statute has been universally applied within the territorial jurisdiction of this Court on its Original Side, and whether it has or has not been applied by name in the mofussil, the principle on which it is founded has been frequently asserted there, and is in accordance both with Hindu and Mahomedan law."

Then Lordships observe then that in the primary Court, where the Judge had the witnesses before him, he treats the transaction as a gigantic fraud as regards third persons.

The Judges of the High Court of Bengal arrived at a similar conclusion on the facts of the case. Their Lordships would be slow to differ from these tribunals thus concurring on conclusions [626] of fact, and they do not find it necessary to do so. They have come to the conclusion that the hubba of 1849 was a covinous instrument, not made bonâ fide or on any good consideration, and by which creditors (the holders of the decrees) have been delayed in their just rights; and, taking the whole transaction together, they are of opinion that the intention of the settler was to protect the property from those who were his creditors at the time.

Their Lordships are of opinion that according to equity and good conscience the hibba is fraudulent and void as against creditors, and that the decree appealed from is right, and should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed; and will so humbly advise Her Majesty

The 5th December, 1883

PRESENT

LORD FITZGERALD, SIR B PEACOCK, SIR R. P COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE

Hardi Narain Sahu . . . (Defendant) Appellant

versus

Ruder Perakash Misser (a minor) by Abdul Hve and others . . . (Plaintiff) Respondent.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Rights of purchaser of co-sharer's interest in joint family property - Formal objection to minor's representative

When the right, title, and interest of a co-sharer in joint family estate are sold in execution to satisfy a decree against him personally, the purchaser acquires merely the right of the judgment-debtor to compel a partition against the other co-sharers. Deendyal Lal v Jugdeep Narain Singh (L R , 4 I A , 247 I L R , 3 Cal , 198) referred to and followed

A money decree having been made against the father of a family, and the decree-holder having caused to be attached the family estate, and brought to sale the father's right, title, and interest therein. Held, that by the sale, not the father's share, but that interest which he had, viz , the right which he would have had to a partition, and to what would have come to him under it, passed to the purchaser

The family, governed by the Mitakshara, consisting of father, mother, and minor son, at the time of the decree, the Court below had decreed [627] to mother and son, one-third each, leaving one-third to the purchaser. A second son was born, and the mother died pending this appeal, the two sons becoming parties in respect of her share. Held, that on this appeal, preferred by the purchaser, the decree should stand, the appellant having got quite as much as he would have got if the decree had been more correct in form, as he had obtained all that he would have been entitled to on a partition, without being left to demand it

The suit having been brought by a manager, appointed by the Court of Wards on behalf of an infant who had a right to sue, an objection to the manager's authority was disallowed, as merely technical APPEAL from decrees (23rd April 1881 and 9th September 1881) of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, reversing a decree (25th July 1877) of the Judge of the Bhagulpur district.

The appeal related to the question, what were the rights of a purchaser at an auction sale of the right, title, and interest of a co-sharer in a joint family estate. The family, governed by the Mitakshara, consisted (at the time when the judgment under appeal was given) of a father, mother, and minor son. The property was half a village in the Monghyr district, mouzah Singhôl, the whole village having belonged to Jai Perkash Misser, from whom it was inherited by his two sons, one of whom was Shib Perkash Misser, the father of the minor plaintiff, Ruder Perkash Misser. Each brother took half of mouzah Singhôl, on a partition in 1871. Shib Perkash Misser, after that date, became indebted to the appellant Hardi Narain, a mahajan, who, on 4th March 1873, obtained a decree against him for Rs. 6,939, and in execution attached, caused to be put up for sale, and himself bought the right, title, and interest of Shib Perkash in eight annas of mouzah Singhôl.

Meantime, in the same year, Shib Perkash Misser made a gift of his interest in the family property, dated 30th July 1873, in favour of Ruder Perkash his minor son. And in 1873, upon an application made by the minor's mother, Dhanapati Koer, the Judge of the Bhagalpur district, on the 1st September in that year, made an order directing the Collector of the Monghyr district to take charge of the minor's estate. This Collector, having done so, appointed Abdul Hye to be the manager of the minor's estate.

[628] In April 1867 the minor, by his manager, brought the suit out of which this appeal arose, alleging that from the date of his birth, in 1866, he had acquired rights in the family estate, the half of mouzah Singhôl, which being the property of a joint family, and without specification of shares, was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against his father. He, therefore, claimed to recover possession with mesne profits.

The defence was that the sale was binding on the plaintiff, who was bound to pay the debt of his father, the family estate being liable to be sold, as it had been, in satisfaction of the decree. It was also objected that the minor was not legally represented by the Court of Wards under s. 12 of Act XL of 1858.

Afterwards, on a petition for the appointment of the manager, Abdul Hye, to represent the minor in this suit, the District Judge, on 7th June 1877, recorded that it was unnecessary to pass an order thereon, as the Collector was the proper person to represent the minor.

Issues having been fixed, raising the questions whether the plaintiff was duly represented, and whether the attachment and sale had deprived the minor of his interest in the half of mouzah Singhôl, regard being had to the nature of the debt on which the decree was obtained, the Judge of the Bhagalpur district dismissed the suit. His reasons were (1st) that the plaintiff, under the Mitakshara, was not entitled to maintain this suit, which was for the recovery of the whole of the ancestral family estate, one-half of mouzah Singhôl, during the father's lifetime, also (2ndly) that the said family estate had been sold in execution of a decree as (in the Judge's view of the law) it lawfully might have been, for the payment of the debts of the father, not proved to have been incurred for any immoral or unlawful purpose. On appeal to the High Court, a Divisional Bench (MITTER and TOTTENHAM, JJ) refused to allow an objection that the order of the District Judge, directing the Collector under s. 12 of Act XL of 1858 to take charge of the minor's property, was wrong, holding that this did not affect the case as now presented to the Court. They also rejected another contention that this suit could not be decided [629] on the merits because, as it was alleged, the plaintiff was bound by an order, passed upon his father's petition, refusing to set aside the sale under s. 256 of Act VIII of 1859. Their judgment proceeded thus :

"As regards the grounds upon which the lower Court has dismissed the suit, it seems to us that the District Judge is clearly wrong in holding that under the Mitakshara law, the plaintiff during his father's lifetime is not competent to maintain this suit for the whole of the share of the property in dispute, which belonged to the joint family. On the other hand, the suit would have been open to objection, if he had brought it for an undivided share of the family property (vide XII, Weekly Reporter, page 478).

"It is not absolutely necessary in this case to determine whether the debts, for the satisfaction of which Shib Perkash's property was sold, were of such a nature as would be binding upon the sons. It seems to us that what was sold in execution of decree against Shib Perkash was simply his rights and interests in the disputed property, and that the present case is governed by the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L R., 4 I A., 247, I L R., 3 Cal, 198)."

The judgment concluded as follows.—

"We do not think that, for the purpose of determining what the interest of Shib Perkash is in the disputed property, the respondent Hardi Narain should be referred to a separate suit. Following the decision of this Court in Special Appeal No 1728 of 1877, decided on the 11th April 1878 (an unreported case), we think the matter may be enquired into and finally determined in this suit. In that enquiry the mother of the minor is a necessary party, and in her absence we refrain from expressing any opinion as to the contention raised before us, that the family being governed by the Mithila law, the father is entitled to a double share. In the lower Court the respondent Hardi Narain alleged that the family is governed by the Mithila law and there is nothing in the record which would go to show that he gave up that contention. There is no difference between the Mitakshara and the Mithila law, so far as the questions [630] disposed of by our present judgment are concerned. Therefore we have treated the case with reference to those questions, as if it was governed by the Mitakshara law. There may be some difference between the two schools of Hindu law as regards the question of the father's share in a partition of ancestral property. But upon that point, as we have already said, we express no opinion now. For the purpose of disposing of that question, we remit the following issues for the determination of the lower Court. —

"First—Is the family of the plaintiff governed by the Mithila or the Mitakshara law?"

"Second.—If governed by the former law, whether Shib Perkash was the eldest born son of his father, and what is his share in mouzah Singhôl?"

"In the trial of these issues, the mother of the plaintiff is a necessary party, and accordingly we direct her to be made a party to the suit."

The successor in office of the District Judge having made the return that the family was governed by the Mitakshara, the same Bench of the High Court gave judgment as follows.—

"We are of opinion that the finding of the lower Court, that the plaintiff's family is governed by the Mitakshara law, is correct. Upon the evidence there is no room for doubt that the plaintiff belongs to a tribe of Brahmins called Shukaldipi, living in various parts of Northern India, quite separated in social intercourse from the other tribes of Brahmins. Although they are scattered over a large tract of country, they are not blended with the tribes of Brahmins of the districts in which they reside. A short description of their tribe is to be found at page 102, Sherring's 'Hindu Tribes and Castes.' 'The Shukaldipis are found,' says Mr. Sherring, 'in considerable numbers in their primitive seat, yet many families have migrated to other parts of the country. They do not, however, form alliances with other Brahmins, though they freely intermarry amongst themselves.'

"Although there are some discrepancies and contradictions in the depositions of the witnesses examined by the plaintiff, [631] yet all are agreed upon this point, that the Shukaldipis are governed by the Mitakshara law. The two witnesses examined by the defendant also prove that Shukaldipi Brahmins residing in countries on the south of the Ganges are governed by the Mitakshara law. Although the plaintiff's family resides in a country governed by the Mithila law, yet the two facts clearly established in the case, viz, (1) that it belongs to a tribe of Brahmins who do not intermarry with the Mithila Brahmins, and (2) that the aforesaid tribe of Brahmins is generally governed by the Mitakshara law, are almost conclusive proof that the plaintiff's family is governed by this latter law. Therefore, the father's interest in the family property must be defined by the Mitakshara law.

"It has been contended before us, that since the institution of the suit, another son has been born to Shih Perkash, and that he is entitled to a share on partition. But this contention is not valid. The property that passed to the defendant by the auction sale was the share and interest of the father seized and attached in execution of decree in the month of April 1873 [see Suraj Bums Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (L R, 6 I A, 88, I L R, 5 Cal, 148, 4 C. L R, 226)] The defendant is, therefore, entitled to the share which would have been allotted to the father if a partition of the family property had taken place then. And as under the Mitakshara law the mother is entitled to a share on partition, the property is to be divided into three equal parts, one share being allotted to the defendant, and the remaining two to the minor plaintiff and his mother, respectively. There is no prayer for partition of the estate by metes and bounds. Nor is it essentially necessary to effect such a division to constitute a partition under the Mitakshara law. A partition under that law may be effected by defining the extent of the rights of the several members. We, therefore, award to the minor Ruder Perkash and his mother two-thirds share of the property in dispute, and direct that each of them do recover possession of their respective shares in the property in dispute. Under the circumstances of the case, we think that each party should bear his own costs in this litigation in all the Courts "

[632] The decree which followed upon the foregoing judgment was afterwards amended, upon a review, by the addition of an order for mesne profits. After this appeal had been preferred to Her Majesty in Council, Dhanabati Koer, the wife of Shih Perkash Misser, died leaving another son, born after the date of the decrees under appeal. The parties on the record were altered accordingly.

On this appeal—

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. C. Macrae for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was objected that the order of September 1873, directing the Collector to take charge of the minor's property having been incorrect, this suit was not properly brought in the name of the manager. It was argued that as the minor would not have been bound by an adverse decree made in a suit brought in his name by a person not having a title to sue, so also this suit could not be maintained with this defect in it.

For the respondent it was answered that if the Collector was not guardian of the infant on behalf of the Court of Wards before the order of 7th June 1877, he thereupon became guardian ad litem.

Their Lordships decided that the objection was untenable. Reference was made to s. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877. For the appellant it was then argued that the judgment of the High Court could not be upheld. As regards the liability of the family estate to be sold in execution of the decree of 4th March 1873, that estate was then and had been during the time when the debts were incurred, in the hands of the father, Shib Perakash Misser, as manager. He being competent to contract debts, binding on his son, and rendering the family estate liable, had done so. Ancestral property was not exempted from liability in respect of a man's debts because a son was born to him, the legal obligation being imposed on the son to pay his father's debt unless incurred for any immoral or illegal purpose. Reference was made to Swag Bunsu Koer v Sheoprosad Singh (L R, 6 I. A., 88, 1 L R., 5 Cal., 148, 4 C. L R, 226) and Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lal (L R, 1 I. A., 321), where, as here, a Hindu family consisted of [633] father and son, the father was manager of the joint property, and was guardian of the son and the father's act of getting into debt bound the share of the son in the family property, save in the excepted case of debts improperly incurred, which had not arisen here. The father could impose, and by his getting into debt had imposed, the burden of satisfying the decree. That shares in ancestral estate might be so charged as that upon partition they went to creditors appeared from the decisions of the High Court. Reference was made to Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Naram Singh (L R, 4 I. A., 247, 1 L R, 3 Cal, 198). But it was distinguished that in this case "the right, title, and interest" of the father in the family estate was his interest as a manager who had incurred debts binding on the other members of the family.

Reference was also made to Umbica Prosad Tewary v Ram Sahai Lal (I.L.R., 8 Cal., 898).

As regards the interest of the deceased wife and mother. It was a question whether she could be said to be entitled to a share under the Mitakshara, see chapter I, ss 7 and 11. It was true that the wife of the father had been held entitled to a share on a partition taking place between a father and a son in Sumrun Thakoor v Chunder Mun Misser (1 L R, 8 Cal, 19). But, in the absence of a partition (and here there was no partition except so far as the High Court treated the family estate as subject to partition), the wife was entitled only to maintenance, not to a share.

For the respondent it was submitted that the question being what was the interest of the father, when his "right, title, and interest" were brought to sale, it could be ascertained by determining what share he would obtain upon a partition. Each member of the family had an equal interest, and the extent of that interest was determinable by what they would receive upon partition. The appellant by his purchase acquired only the right, title, and interest of the respondent, Shib Perakash Misser, in the eight annas of mouzah Singhol, which was an undivided one-third share therein.

Reference was made to the judgment of MITTER, J, in Umbica Prosad Tewary v. Ram Sahai Lal (I.L.R., 8 Cal, 898) and Ramphul Singh v. Deg Narain Singh (I L R, 8 Cal., 517).

[634] The minor plaintiff would have been entitled to a decree for possession of the whole family estate subject to the declaration that the respondent, as purchaser, had acquired the undivided one-third share, and was entitled to take the whole subject to a deduction of that share, or those shares, which (as in Deendyal's case) belonged to the other co-sharers. In this case, however, the High Court, avoiding circuits of procedure, had directed a partition declaring the minor to be entitled to possession with mesne profits.

The plaintiff had, therefore, got no more than he was entitled to, the appellant suffering no loss, but receiving what otherwise he would have had to resort to a partition in order to obtain.

Mr R. V. Doyne replied, contending that it could not be insisted that the proceedings were of the same effect as a partition

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir Richard Couch—Three questions have been raised before their Lordships in the hearing of this appeal. The first was disposed of in the course of the argument. It was this. That the suit was brought by the manager appointed by the Court of Wards on behalf of the infant plaintiff, and that the manager had no authority to represent the plaintiff in it. Without considering whether he had authority or not, their Lordships were of opinion that, if the plaintiff had a right to sue, the objection was only a formal one, and could not be allowed to be raised in the present appeal.

The next and the principal question in the case was, what right or interest in the property, which is the subject of the suit, was acquired by the appellant, Hardi Narain, by his purchase at the sale in execution of a decree which he had obtained against the father of the respondents, Shub Perkash Misser? It appears that Shub Perkash Misser was indebted to Hardi Narain, partly on account of a mortgage, and partly for further advances, and that Hardi Narain brought a suit against him in order to recover the debt, and obtained a decree on the 4th of March 1873. The decree was the ordinary one for the payment of the money, and this case is distinguishable from the cases where the father, being a member of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, had mortgaged the family property to secure a debt, and the decree [635] had been obtained upon the mortgage and for a realization of the debt by means of the sale of the mortgaged property. It is a simple money decree, which states that the claim was to recover Rs 6,335, principal and interest, and is. "That a decree be passed in plaintiff's favour for the amount of claim and interest on the principal for the period pending judgment of the case, and costs with interest on the entire amount, at the rate of eight annas per cent per mensem from to-day till realization." The property was attached on the 1st of April 1873, and the attachment being by an order prohibiting the defendant from alienating the property, it purported to be, as it must have been, an attachment of the entire eight annas, but what was attached and subsequently sold really was the right, title, and interest of the father, against whom the decree had been obtained, in the eight annas, and it is clear from the terms of the sale certificate that this is what was sold and purchased by the appellant. The sale certificate, which was given after some questions had been raised by the father with respect to the regularity of the sale, and the sale had been confirmed by the High Court, which questions it is not necessary to consider—stated that an application had been made, and the sale proclamation was issued—"and the said property was on the 5th August 1873 sold for Rs. 6,800; and whatever rights and interests the said judgment-debtor had in the said property were purchased by Baboo Hardi Narain, decree-holder, auction-purchaser." It then went on, after speaking of the payment of the purchase-money, to say. "Therefore this sale certificate is granted to Baboo Hardi Narain, decree-holder, auction-purchaser, and it is proclaimed that whatever rights and interests the said judgment-debtor had in the said property having ceased from the date of the auction sale passed to the said decree-holder auction-purchaser." Therefore what was purchased on that occasion were the, rights and interests of the father, and this is precisely like the case of Deendyal

Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 247, I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198), where their Lordships held that, the purchase being as it was here, by the person who had obtained the decree, only that passed which the father, the person against whom the [636] decree was obtained, had. The judgment in that case defines what is actually sold. At page 253, speaking of the decision of the High Court at Calcutta in the Full Bench case which is so often referred to, their Lordships say "So long as Bhagwa lived"—that is, the man against whom the decree was obtained—"he had an interest in this property which entitled him, if he had pleased, to demand a partition, and to have his share of the joint estate converted into a separate estate." The bond-holder had sued on his bond, obtained a decree, taken out execution against the joint property, and become the purchaser of it at the execution sale. The interest which is purchased is not, as Mr. Doync argued, the share at that time in the property, but it is the right which the father, the debtor, would have to a partition, and what would come to him upon the partition being made. That is the answer to Mr. Doync's argument that the father was entitled to a half. What the father was entitled to, and what the purchaser became entitled to, was what the father would get if a partition had been made, which was only a third of the eight annas share. According, therefore, to the authority of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 247, I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198) the present appellant became entitled only to the one-third, treating it as if the sale was to operate as a partition at that time.

The case of Deendyal has been recognized in a subsequent case of Suraj Bunsu Koer v. Sheo Prosad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148, 4 C. L. R., 226), in which that decision was acted upon, and which case is also applicable to the present.

The other question which has been raised before their Lordships is this. The High Court, when the case came before it on appeal—having satisfied itself that the present appellant, by his purchase, took only the interest which the father had, and if a partition had been made at the time of the sale the mother would have been entitled to a third, and the son, who was then living, would have been entitled to another third—directed that the mother should be made a party to the suit, it having been found that the rights of the parties were governed by the Mitakshara law. The mother having been made a party, the High Court then made what in effect is a partition of the property which was the subject of the suit, making a decree that the [637] mother and the son should each recover one-third, leaving the remaining third in the appellant's possession. After the decree and pending this appeal, the mother died, and a second son having been born, the two sons are now parties to this appeal in respect of her share. The question which has been raised is whether the decree which has been made by the High Court ought to stand or not.

According to the judgment of their Lordships in Deendyal's case, the decree, which ought properly to have been made, would have been that the plaintiff, the first respondent, should recover possession of the whole of the property, with a declaration that the appellant, as purchaser at the execution sale, had acquired the share and interest of Shib Perakash Misser, and was entitled to take proceedings to have it ascertained by partition. So that, in fact, the appellant has got a decree more favourable to himself than he was entitled to. He retains possession of one-third, instead of being turned out of the possession of the whole and left to demand a partition.

Their Lordships, therefore, think that there is no ground for altering the decree of the High Court, although it may have gone beyond what was necessary or proper. The decree is not strictly right, but the appellant does not suffer by that. He gets all that he would be entitled to if a partition were made.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court and to dismiss the appeal. The appellant will pay the costs

Appeal dismissed.

[I THE AUTHORITY OF THIS CASE—

This case like Deendyal's case was misunderstood until the Privy Council decision in 13 Cal. 21. Will—Stridhan—Maintenance to widow not expressed nor denied by will

The right to maintenance being one given to a widow by the Hindu law, that right cannot be taken away except by express language to that effect

A gift of stridhan is not equivalent to a provision for maintenance

ONE Joytara Bih and her daughter, the former being the elder widow of one Huridhun Sirdar (deceased), sued the younger widow of Huridhun and her children to obtain maintenance at the rate of Rs 8 per mensem out of the estate of the deceased Huridhun

The defendants contended that the deceased had left a will, and that under the tenth paragraph of that will there was a gift to Joytara, in the following words—"of gold and silver ornaments and clothes and the cash and the money due to her by others as belonging to the funds, which she possesses either known to the family or not," and that there being no separate provision in the will for the maintenance of Joytara and her daughter they were not entitled to claim it

The Munsiff held that the will made no provision for the plaintiff's maintenance, but that they were entitled to obtain it under the Hindu law, and he therefore decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs, allowing maintenance at the rate of Rs. 3 and Re 1-8 per mensem, respectively, to the mother and daughter.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that, inasmuch as the will allowed no maintenance to the widow, she was not entitled to claim it, but held that the daughter, who was unprovided for by the will, was entitled to obtain maintenance until the time of her marriage, and he fixed Rs 2 per mensem as the maintenance payable to her.

[639] The plaintiff, Joytara, appealed to the High Court.

Moulvi Scrapul Islam for the Appellant contended that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the effect of the will was to exclude the widow from maintenance, and that the maintenance allowed to the daughter was too small.

Field, J.—We think this appeal must succeed with respect to the claim for the widow's maintenance. The Subordinate Judge argues that, because there is no express provision for maintenance in the will, the widow is not entitled thereto; and he considers further that, as she was allowed to retain certain clothes and ornaments, it was unnecessary to give her any maintenance in addition. We think that a gift of stridhan is not equivalent to a provision for maintenance; and the right to maintenance being one which the widow has under the Hindu law, that right cannot be taken away unless by express language to this effect. We therefore set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Munsif, making an allowance of Rs. 3 a month to the widow as maintenance.

As to the daughter's allowance, we see no reason to interfere. The appeal will be decreed with costs to the appellant in proportion to the amount as to which she succeeds.

Appeal allowed.

Hindu law—Inheritance—Insanity

In order to exclude a person from inheritance under the Hindu law, on the ground of insanity, it is sufficient to prove insanity at the time when succession to the property opens out

THIS was a suit to obtain possession of 1 anna 15 gundas share in taluq Kismut Durgapur by right of inheritance, and to [640] set aside a putna Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2119 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Gonesh Chunder Chowdhry, Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, dated 24th July 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Probode Chunder Dut, Munsif of Natore, dated the 31st of August 1881.

pottah. One Rama Nath Sidhanto was the original owner of the share. After his death, his two daughters, Gourmoni and Kalimoyee, came into possession of the property in the ordinary course of succession. Kalimoyee died leaving a son, Sossi Saran. Subsequently, on the death of Gourmoni, who left no issue, the plaintiff, as the grandson of the original owner's brother, claimed the property from the heirs of an alleged putnidar of Gourmoni, alleging, among other things, that Kalimoyee's son, Sossi Saran, being insane at the time of Gourmoni's death, was incapable of inheriting. The defendants alleged that Gourmoni had granted to their father a putni of these lands, and that since their father's death and the death of Gourmoni they had been in possession, and had paid rent first to Sossi Saran and afterwards (on his disappearance) to his wife as the mother and guardian of his infant sons, that Sossi Saran was not insane.

The Munsif found that Gourmoni had no power to alienate beyond her lifetime, and that Sossi Saran was insane at the time of Gourmoni's death, and was therefore incapable of succeeding to the property of Rama Nath. He, therefore, gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the appeal, holding that Sossi Saran was insane at the time of Gourmoni's death, adding "that he may not have been a perfect idiot, but I think there can be little doubt that his mind was deranged, and that he was unfit for the ordinary intercourse of life, and as such was incapable of inheritance."

Baboo Sreenath Das and Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellants

Mr. Evans, Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy and Baboo Kishori Mohun Roy for the Respondents

• The Judgment of the High Court was delivered by Field, J --The first point raised in this appeal is, that insanity at the time when the inheritance falls in is not, according to the Hindu law, a disqualification for inheriting, but that according to that law it must be shown that the person who is sought to be disqualified was insane from his birth. We find [641] that this question has been concluded by authority. See the case of Dwarka Nath Bysak v Mahendra Nath Bysak (9 B. L. R., 198). It was then decided on appeal from the Original Side, that insanity at the time when the succession opens out is sufficient to disqualify. We find that the same point had been previously decided by two learned Judges of this Court in the case of Brāja Bhukan Lal Ahluw v Bichan Dobi (9 B. L. R., 204, note). It was held the other day by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Ram Sahye Bhukkut v Lala Laljee Sahye (I L. R., 8 Cal., 149, 9 C. L. R., 457) that under the Mitakshara law a person who is at the time insane is not entitled to share upon a partition in a joint family. This case though not a direct authority, supports the view taken in the two previous cases already referred to. We must, therefore, decide against the appellant upon the first point.

Then it is contended that there is no sufficient finding to support the judgment of the Court below. It is said that the Subordinate Judge has not found that degree or that kind of mental derangement which would be sufficient to create disability. The Subordinate Judge proposes to himself as the second issue to be tried whether, at the time of the death of Rama Nath's daughter, Gourmoni, her sister's son, Sossi Saran, was insane, and he answers this by saying in his judgment "It appears to be clearly and satisfactorily proved that Sossi Saran was insane at the time of Gourmoni's death." He then goes on to add a few remarks and finishes up by saying: "I think there can be little doubt that his mind was deranged, and that he was unfit for the ordinary intercourse of life." It is said that his being unfit for the ordinary intercourse of life is not evidence of insanity. We think the Subordinate Judge did not mean to say that it was. The observation that he was unfit for the ordinary intercourse of life was added on to the finding that his mind was deranged, and might well be meant to imply that this was the consequence of mental derangement. We think there are no grounds for this appeal, which must therefore be dismissed with costs

[642] CRIMINAL MOTION

The 22nd April, 1884

PRESENT

MR JUSTICE MITTER AND MR JUSTICE NORRIS

In the matter of Jhabbu Singh and others

Petitioners

Limitation—Act XV of 1877, s 12—Exclusion of time in obtaining copy of judgment

Certain accused persons were convicted on the 29th February 1884, and made their first application for a copy of the judgment on the 25th March, tendering stamped paper for such copy on the 26th and 29th March. The copy was prepared on the 30th, and the prisoners, who had been admitted to bail on the 5th March, presented their appeal on the 7th April 1884, which was rejected as being out of time. Held, that the appeal ought to have been admitted.

ON the 29th February 1884 two men were convicted of robbing and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. On the 5th March they presented a petition through a Mukhtar, stating that they had been unable to appeal because they were unable to obtain a copy of the judgment (at that time they had as a matter of fact made no attempt to do so), but that they would appeal as soon as they obtained a copy, and they further asked to be admitted to bail. The Sessions Judge released them on bail. The prisoners applied for a copy of the judgment on the 25th March, the stamp sheets of paper for the copy being filed on the 26th and 29th March, on the 30th March the copy was ready for delivery. The memorandum of appeal with the judgment were presented on the 7th April 1884, the portion of the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to receive the appeal ran as follows "It appears at first sight that the appeal is out of time, it should have been presented by the 30th March, it remains to be seen how many days are to be deducted in calculating the period of thirty days allowed by law."

"On examining the copy of judgment, I find that the application for the copy was made on the 25th March, the requisite stamped sheets were filed on the 26th and 29th, and the copy was ready for delivery on the 30th. How many days are there to be deducted?"

* Criminal Motion No. 123 of 1884; from an order of W H. Page, Esq. Officiating Sessions Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 8th April 1884

"In my opinion only two, because by 'the requisite stamped sheets' is meant the full number of stamped sheets required. [648] But the appellants' pleader asks, how could the appellant know the number required? I answer that he had had from the date of his release to the date of his application for copy (nearly three months) to find out. The appellant says he had not funds, but if he had applied from the jail for a copy he would have received it without any cost. If he had applied for a copy within a few days of his conviction, I should have said that he had a right to claim a deduction of the whole time. I find that the appeal is presented out of time and therefore decline to receive it."

The prisoners applied to the High Court under the revisional sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. *

Baboo Juggut Chunder Bannarjee and Baboo Taruck Nath Dutt for the Applicants.

No one appeared for the Crown.

The Opinion of the High Court was delivered by Mitter, J.—We think that the appeal was within time and should have been registered. We accordingly direct it to be registered and heard by the Sessions Judge.

Order reversed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Burmah Courts—Transfer of case—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 178—Reference to High Court—Burmah Courts' Act (Act XVII of 1875), s. 80

The local Government has no power under s. 178 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to transfer for trial to the Court of a Commissioner a criminal case duly committed for trial to the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, but the local Government has the power to transfer a case from the district of Rangoon to the Sessions Division of Pegu.

THIS was a reference under s. 80, cl (b), of the Burmah Courts' Act (Act XVII of 1875) from the special Court constituted by that Act. The question referred was whether the local Government has power to transfer for trial to the Court of a Commissioner a criminal case duly committed for trial to the Court of the

* Criminal Reference No. 1 and letter No. C. R. 9-1 from Registrar, Special Court of British Burmah, dated Rangoon, the 10th January 1884

Recorder of Rangoon. The facts of the case are fully set out in the opinions of the Judicial Commissioner of British Burmah, [644] Mr. Jardine, and of the Recorder of Rangoon, Mr. Egerton Allen, which are as follow:—

Mr. Jardine.—The prisoners in this case were prosecuted before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the town of Rangoon, the town being a district in which the Recorder of Rangoon exercises the powers of a Court of Session under s. 60 of the Burmah Courts' Act of 1875. The same section declares that for the purposes of s. 64*a* of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Court of the Recorder shall be deemed to be a High Court, and s. 61 confers on the Recorder all the powers of a High Court under the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect to the proceedings of the Magistrates of the town.

Under s. 3 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882, the reference to s. 64*a* must be taken to be made to s. 527 of the same Code. In other respects s. 1 of the same Code preserves the special legislation of the Local Courts' Act where there is no specific provision to the contrary.

The Magistrate committed the prisoners for trial before the Recorder's Court. No doubt about the jurisdiction of the Recorder to hold the trial seems to have been suggested, and no reference was made to the Judicial Commissioner under s. 185, nor any proceeding taken to quash the commitment under s. 215.

The learned Recorder wrote to the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner to request that the local Government will be pleased, under the provisions of s. 178 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the transfer of the cases to the Pegu Sessions division for trial by the Sessions Court of that division.

The order of the Chief Commissioner is contained in a letter of 20th September 1883 from his Secretary to the Recorder, directing that the cases be tried in the Sessions division of Pegu. Upon this the learned Recorder forwarded the record to the Commissioner of Pegu who, under s. 35 of the Burmah Courts' Act, "is deemed to have the powers of a Sessions Judge." The Commissioner tried the prisoners in his Sessions Court sitting at Rangoon, the prisoners appealed to me as a Judicial Commissioner, and I admitted their appeals, and then referred them to the special Court for disposal, as I had doubts about the validity of the order of transfer and the jurisdiction of the Commissioner to determine the merits of the appeals.

I am of opinion that s. 178 does not deal with transfers of cases from one Court to another, a separate chapter 44 is given to such transfers. So far as the present case is concerned ss. 526 and 527 apply. Under s. 526 the High Court can only act for specific reasons, the power of transfer being evidently one which ought to be rarely exercised under s. 527, the equivalent of the old s. 64*a*. The order of the transfer must come from the Governor-General of India in Council.

Section 178 appears to me to allow the local Government to direct the trial of cases in a place outside the local jurisdiction of the trying Court, or in a separate portion of the local jurisdiction. For example, if the Commissioner of Arakan is directed by the Government under s. 10 of the Courts' Act to hold his Civil Court in Rangoon, the Government might also under s. 178 order the same officer to hold trial of Arakan criminal commitments at Rangoon. The same as to the Recorder's Court under s. 45 of the local Act. In this way I would try to reconcile s. 178 of the Criminal Procedure Code with ss. 70 and 77 of the local Act, and s. 527 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 77 gives the Chief Commissioner a power to transfer any criminal case pending in the Recorder's Court to the special Court but not to any other Court, the principle of the law being apparently that the transfer shall not be to an inferior Court. The special Court is superior and the Commissioner's Court inferior in powers to the Recorder's Court.

I am bound to take notice of a construction of the local Act by Mr. R. Crosthwaite, Judicial Commissioner in 1880, when the Chief Commissioner passed an order under s. 59 of the local Act transferring to the Judicial Commissioner's Court a criminal case pending for trial in the Recorder's Court on a due commitment. At that time the Judicial Commissioner sat in a jurisdiction transferred from the Commissioner of Pegu and with the powers of a Sessions Judge. Mr. Crosthwaite held that s. 59 did not apply to criminal cases, and it does not seem to have occurred to either him or the local Government that s. 63 of the Criminal Procedure Code then in force (the equivalent of s. 178) was in any way relevant. The concluding part of Mr. Crosthwaite's judgment in that case (Queen-Empress v. Abdul) explains his view of the effect of s. 60 of the Burmah Courts' Act, and as I am of the same opinion I quote the passage —

"The last clause of s. 60 of the Act was apparently intended to provide for cases like the present as well as for others, for it enacts that for the purposes of s. 64a of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court of the Recorder shall be deemed to be a High Court. The present case then may, under this section, be regarded for the purpose of s. 64a of the Criminal Procedure Code as pending before a High Court, and if it is necessary to transfer the case the Governor-General in Council can do so under s. 64a. The transfer cannot, perhaps, be made to the Judicial Commissioner because he cannot try criminal cases as a High Court, and the transfer must be made from one High Court to another High Court. But as to this I need give no opinion. There is, it seems to me, a remedy provided for difficulties of the present description by the last clause of s. 60, and if under that clause the Governor-General can only transfer the trial of a criminal case from the Court of the Recorder to a chartered High Court, it is very possible that the Legislature so intended that, and it did not intend that any Court other than a chartered High Court should exercise the jurisdiction over European British subjects conferred by the Act upon the Recorder.

"I am of opinion then that, as the terms of s. 59 plainly do not relate to the transfer of criminal trials, and that as the provisions of s. 60 give [646] the Governor-General in Council the power to transfer criminal trials from the Recorder's Court where it is expedient to do so, the construction contended for would be bad in itself, and would be opposed to other provisions of the law, and I therefore conclude that I have no jurisdiction to try this case and I am bound under these circumstances to decline to try it."

The Court of the Recorder is the creature of the local Act and is unique in its powers, some of these being those of a Court of Sessions, others those of a High Court, and these considerations appear to me to give force to Mr. Crosthwaite's reasoning. If the Legislature had intended to give greater power of transfer than what s. 77 gave already, I think it would have used clearer words for that purpose. The Recorder's jurisdiction in many respects resembles the Original Side in a Presidency Town.

As my learned colleague differs in opinion, we must refer the point to the High Court of Bengal, and I would do this before disposing of the merits.

Mr. C. F. Egerton Allen.—"Whether the local Government has power to transfer for trial to the Court of a Commissioner a criminal case duly committed for trial to the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon."

In my opinion the local Government may, acting under the provisions of s. 178 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, direct that a case committed for trial to my Court acting as a Court of Session may be tried by the Court of the Sessions division presided over by the Commissioner of Pegu, subject to the proviso to s. 178

There can be no doubt that the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon is differently constituted from any other criminal Court, and therefore it is impossible to apply the section of the Criminal Procedure Code to it in all respects. But with regard to s. 178 it seems to me applicable in this way, that when the Court sits as a Court of Session it applies but not when it sits as a High Court.

In cases where I sit as a High Court, if it was desirable to transfer for trial elsewhere, a case committed to me, I think such transfer would be made not by the local Government, but by the Governor-General in Council

As I read Mr Crosthwaite's judgment the point was not decided by him, his opinion only being given. The point for decision before Mr. Crosthwaite was whether the local Government could transfer a criminal case from the Recorder's Court to a Court of Session under the provisions of s. 9 of the Burmah Courts' Act, and he held it could not be done as that section applied to civil and not to criminal cases.

The point referred by the learned Judge of the special Court was "whether the local Government has power to transfer for trial to the Court of a Commissioner a criminal case duly committed for trial to the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon"

The Advocate-General (Mr Paul) for the Crown

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) for the other side

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

[647] Prinsep, J.—This case arises out of a reference by the special Court of British Burmah made under s. 80, cl. (b), of the Burmah Courts' Act

The point submitted for decision is stated to be whether the local Government has power to transfer for trial to the Court of Commissioner a criminal case duly committed for trial to the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon

We would, however, premise by stating that the point on which the Judges of the special Court in British Burmah have differed is not accurately expressed, in so far as it has arisen from the case before them. We find rather from the record that the case really for our decision is whether the local Government has power to direct that a case duly committed to the Recorder of Rangoon in which the accused are natives shall be transferred and tried in any Sessions division, or, as in the present case, in the Sessions division of Pegu

By s. 60 of the Burmah Courts' Act the Recorder is empowered to exercise the powers of a Court of Session within the local limits of his ordinary civil jurisdiction. Thus we understand to be the powers of a Court of Session as defined in Chapter III of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In order to provide for the passing of sentence of death, which when passed by a Court of Session is subject to the confirmation of a High Court, it is provided that when a sentence of death is passed by the Recorder as a Court of Session it shall be subject to the confirmation of the special Court. These are the general powers of the Recorder's Court, except as regards the trial of European British subjects, in other respects it is deemed to be a High Court, and not a Court of Session. Clause 3 of s. 60 of the Burmah Courts' Act declares that for the purposes of s. 64a of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that is, s. 527 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court of the Recorder shall be deemed to be a High Court Under s. 61 the Recorder is given the powers of a High Court under the Code in regard to revision of proceedings of the Magistrates within his local jurisdiction. And under s. 62 of the same Act the Recorder is given the powers of a High Court for the trial of, or otherwise with reference to, European British subjects and persons charged jointly [648] with them. Looking, therefore, at these sections it appears to us that in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction or in the transfer of cases triable by him from his Court to any High Court, and in all matters connected with the trials of European British subjects and persons charged jointly with them, the Recorder possesses all the powers of a High Court But in other respects he exercises only the powers of a Court of Session

This is a case which does not fall within s 527 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure, nor is it a case connected with the revisional jurisdiction of the Court of the Recorder, nor is it a case in which a European British subject, or persons charged jointly with him, is to be tried

Therefore, in our opinion, it falls within the jurisdiction which the Recorder possesses, acting merely as a Court of Session Under s 178 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure "the local Government may direct that any case or class of cases committed for trial in any district may be tried in any Sessions division" In regard to such cases Rangoon is a district, and the Recorder's Court is the Court of Session of the Sessions division. The conclusion is therefore inevitable that under this section the local Government is empowered to direct that any ordinary case (such, for instance, as the case before us) committed for trial by the Recorder's Court at Rangoon shall be transferred for trial by the Sessions division of Pegu But if the local Government went further and directed that the case should be tried by a particular Court, we think that such direction and order cannot be sustained, as it is beyond s 178 of the Code It has been urged against this view that under s. 77 of the local Act the Chief Commissioner may direct that any criminal case pending in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon shall be transferred to and tried before the special Court, and that hence we should presume that it was not the intention of the Legislature that any such transfer should be made to a Court of Session. But the answer to this objection is obvious The special Court has been created by the local Act, it is not recognized by the Criminal Procedure Code, and if it were intended to transfer a case from the Recorder of Rangoon to the Judicial Commissioner, it could only be done by the special provisions contained in the [649] local Act This does not, as appears to have been held by the Judicial Commissioner necessarily or by implication, lead to the conclusion that the Legislature never intended any case committed to the Court of Rangoon should not be tried in another Sessions division

Strictly speaking, therefore, the answer we should give to the reference by the special Court should be that the local Government has no power under s. 178 of the Criminal Procedure Code to transfer for trial to the Court of the Commissioner a criminal case duly committed for trial by the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, but that the local Government has the power to transfer a case from the district of Rangoon to the Sessions division of Pegu.

Attorney for both parties The Government Solicitor, Mr R. S. Upton.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 24th April, 1884

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND

MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY

Kashi Nath Chukerbati . . . Plaintiff

versus

Brindahun Chukerbati . . . Defendant

Evidence of oral agreement—Fraud—Act I of 1872, s. 92 proviso 1—Contract—Unlawful consideration—Act IX of 1872, s. 23 †

Plaintiff sued to recover rent under a kabuliat. The defendant admitted execution of the kabuliat, but asserted that he executed it in order to enable the plaintiff to sell the land at a high price, the plaintiff agreeing to make over to him Rs. 282 out of the purchase money and to obtain for him from the purchaser a mourasi pottah of the land. It never having been intended that any rent should be payable under the kabuliat.

Held, that evidence of the oral agreement was admissible for the purpose of proving the fraudulent character of the transaction between the parties.

THIS was a suit to recover rent from the defendant under a registered kabuliat.

The defendant denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the land, but admitted the kabuliat, contending that there was an oral agreement between himself and the plaintiff that no rent should be paid or received, and stated that the kabuliat was executed in order [630] to enable the plaintiff to sell the land (which was in the possession of the defendant) to some third person, the plaintiff giving the defendant out of the purchase money so to be obtained Rs. 282, and obtaining for him from the purchaser a mourasi pottah of the homestead lands.

The Munsif, disbelieving the defendant's witnesses, decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 2400 of 1882 against the decree of Baboo Uma Charan Kastogiri, First Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated 28th of September 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Behari Lal Mookerji, Acting Munsif of Ramraigam, dated the 11th of November 1881.

† [Sec. 23.—The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless it is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that if permitted, it would

What considerations and objects are lawful and what not. defeat the provisions of any law, or is fraudulent, or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another, or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy.]

The defendant appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that evidence of the oral agreement was admissible under the 2nd and 3rd provisos to s. 92* of the Evidence Act; and believing the evidence of the defendant's witnesses as to the fictitious character of the kabuliat, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Moulvi Serajul Islam for the Appellant contended that evidence of the oral agreement was inadmissible, and that the defendant having admitted the kabuliat, the suit ought to have been decided in plaintiff's favour Baboo Gopinath Mookerji for the Respondents.

Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Garth, C.J. (BEVERLEY, J., concurring).—We think that the Subordinate Judge is substantially right in the conclusion at which he has arrived.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff for the rent of certain land upon a kabuliat given by the defendant, which fixed the rate of rent for two years at Rs. 16, and which kabuliat is admitted to have been given by the defendant to the plaintiff.

The defendant's answer, as alleged in his written statement, was this, that the plaintiff was not the owner of the land at all, and had nothing to do with it; and that the real owner was the defendant himself, who, as well as his father before him, had been in possession of it for many years, but that he, the defendant, had, in collusion with the plaintiff, given this kabuliat to the plaintiff in order that the plaintiff might sell it to some third person for a high price, paying the defendant Rs. 282 out of the price, and obtaining also for him from the purchaser a mourasi pottah for the homestead land. *

The Munsif did not believe this story of the defendant, but the Subordinate Judge found that it was true. There was some [631] contradictory evidence, but he found as a fact that the kabuliat was executed in order to enable the plaintiff to sell the land, which really belonged to, and was in the possession of, the defendant, for a large price, and to give the defendant out of the purchase money Rs. 282 besides securing him the homestead under a mourasi pottah. In other words, he found that this agreement was not a bona fide lease, but a fraudulent and collusive transaction entered into between the parties, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to cheat some third person, and that there never was any intention that rent should be paid by the defendant.

The word "fraudulent," it is true, is not used by the Subordinate Judge. He merely deals with the question, whether evidence ought to have been admitted for the purpose of contradicting the plain language of the kabuliat. But there is no doubt, we think, what he intends to find, and there is no doubt, if the plaintiff's story is true, that the transaction was a gross fraud.

That being so, any evidence given for the purpose of proving the fraud would be admissible. Section 23 of the Contract Act says: that where the consideration or object of an agreement is forbidden by law, or is fraudulent, the consideration or object of it is said to be unlawful and the agreement itself is void, so that neither of the parties can enforce it against the other.

* [Sec. 99, Proviso 2 —The existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent and which is not inconsistent with its terms, may be proved. In considering whether or not this proviso applies, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document.]

Proviso 3.—The existence of any separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property may be proved.]

Then the section of the Evidence Act which shows that under these circumstances evidence was admissible to prove fraud is s. 92, which, after stating that "no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted as between the parties to any instrument in writing for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from its terms," enacts in the first proviso that any fact "may be proved for the purpose of invalidating any document on the ground of fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party," and so on

It is clear, therefore, that the transaction, which is found by the Subordinate Judge to have been entered into, is a fraudulent transaction, and that evidence of the fraud was admissible

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs

Appeal dismissed

NOTES.

["The fraud must be contemporaneous and not subsequent fraud; it must be a fraud which prevented the insertion of the alleged agreement in the deed and not fraud which consists in the false denial of the agreement. For, if fraud of the latter description is to be allowed to make oral evidence admissible to contradict a document, it would render the section nugatory, the object of the section evidently being to avoid falsehood and perjury in the great majority of cases, even at the risk of allowing fraud to go undetected in a few instances," per Dr. Fash Behari Ghosh in his Mortgages, cited in 25 Cal., 603, at 606.]

[632] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL

The 10th May, 1884.

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM

Ramey... (Plaintiff) Petitioner

versus

Broughton . . . (Defendant) Opposite Party

Limitation Act XV of 1877, ss. 4, 5, and 12, sch II, Art 151—Appeal—Time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree

A plaintiff wishing to appeal from a decision passed against him on the Original Side of the High Court, dated 16th August 1883, presented for filing his memorandum of appeal to the Registrar on the 5th September 1883, but by reason of the decree not having been signed on that date, no copy of the decree was presented therewith. The Registrar refused to accept the appeal.

* Review of Judgment of GARTH, C.J. and CUNNINGHAM, J. in Original Appeal No. 33 of 1884, dated 22nd February 1884.

On the 6th September the decree was signed, and on the 7th an office copy thereof was obtained by the defendant's attorney, who, on the 8th September, served a copy at the office of the plaintiff's attorney. On the 12th September, the plaintiff applied for an office copy, which he obtained on the 13th, and on the 15th tendered such copy and his memorandum of appeal to the Registrar. The Registrar refused to accept the appeal, unless under an order of Court, it being, in his opinion, out of time.

On the 6th December 1883 a Judge sitting on the Original Side admitted the appeal. The appeal subsequently came on for hearing, when the defendant contended that the appeal was barred, it not having been filed within twenty days from the date of the decree. The Court held that the appeal was so barred.

Held on review, that the plaintiff having allowed five days to expire after the decree was signed before applying for a copy, and not having filed his appeal, after so obtaining a copy, at the earliest opportunity possible, such a delay, being entirely unaccounted for, could not be held to be "time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree," and that, therefore, the appeal was out of time.

IN 1882 the plaintiff brought a suit against the Administrator-General (the administrator of the estate of one Louis Ramey, deceased) to have it declared that he was the son and legal personal representative of the said Louis Ramey, and for the construction of a document alleged to be the last will and testament of the deceased, and for possession of the estate of the deceased and for an account.

[653] The suit came on for hearing before Mr. Justice NORRIS, and was dismissed on the 16th August 1883.

No appeal having been filed against the decree within the twenty days allowed for such appeal, the property, the subject of the suit, was advertised for sale, and the sale fixed for the 15th September 1883.

It appeared, however, that on the 5th September 1883 (the last day on which such appeal could have been filed), the plaintiff's attorney presented the memorandum of appeal to the Registrar, but the Registrar refused to file the same, inasmuch as no office copy of the decree was filed therewith. On the same day the plaintiff's attorney made enquiries at the office of the Registrar as to the original decree in the suit, and was informed that the decree was not then prepared.

On the 6th September the decree was signed, and on the 7th September a copy of the said decree was obtained by the defendant's attorney, who, on the 8th September, served a copy at the office of the plaintiff's attorney, but the latter did not for some reason become informed of the fact, and was not aware that the office copy was ready up to the 12th September, when he immediately applied for an office copy. On the 13th September such office copy was obtained, and on the 15th September the grounds of appeal, with such office copy, were tendered for filing, but were rejected as being out of time, the Registrar refusing to accept them after time without an order of Court being obtained granting permission therefor.

On the 6th December 1883 an application was made before Mr. Justice PRIGOT for the admission of the appeal, and on the above facts being stated to the Court, the appeal was admitted, and on the same date the appeal was duly filed, and notice thereof was served on the defendant's attorney.

On the 13th December 1883 the defendant obtained a rule calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the memorandum of appeal should not be taken off the file, but on the 7th December the rule was discharged on the ground that the Appeal Court (before which the appeal would be heard) was then sitting, the order of discharge being made without prejudice to any application which might be made to the Appellate Bench to take the memorandum of appeal off the file.

[654] No such application was made to the Appellate Court, but on the appeal coming on for hearing the objection was taken that the appeal was barred by limitation, and the Chief Justice, and Mr Justice CUNNINGHAM, before whom the case was heard, decided that the appeal was barred.

The plaintiffs subsequently on the 20th February 1884 obtained a review of such judgment, at the hearing of the rule, Mr Phillips (with him Mr. Amer Ali) appeared for the plaintiff.

Mr. Phillips.—We were taken by surprise when the appeal was called on.

In the first place the Court had intimated that no long case would be taken, and consequently counsel had abstained from preparing themselves and had made other engagements, and were, when the appeal was called on, actually addressing other Benches of the Court.

In the second place the plaintiff had no notice that the point of limitation would be raised, and therefore was not prepared to deal with it.

That point ought not to have been taken without previous notice. It lies upon the other side to show why the admission of the appeal by Mr. Justice PIGOT was wrong, and that must be made out upon some materials, consequently we ought to have had notice that it was intended to raise the point.

The appeal was, we submit, in time, and the memorandum ought not to have been refused by the Registrar, and was rightly admitted by the Judge.

The Act excludes from the time allowed for an appeal "the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed against." This necessarily implies that the time requisite for the decree to come into existence should be excluded, since no copy can be obtained until the decree comes into existence in a form in which it can be copied. Moreover, any other construction would involve absurdity. Suppose a decree is drawn up twenty-five days after the judgment, i.e., twenty-five days after the time has begun to run, the appellant would be barred before the decree exists in a form in which it can be copied. The exclusion of the "time necessary to obtain a copy of the decree," if that expression is treated as meaning only the time requisite, [635] after the decree has come into existence, for obtaining a copy, would be of no use to the appellant, since he is already barred. It would be useless to say you can exclude the two or three days necessary to obtain a copy.

[GARTH, C.J.—If the appellant had applied for a copy while the twenty days were running he would not be barred.]

But the Act does not make any such provision, and such an application could not make a longer time "requisite for obtaining a copy," it would shorten the time, and why should the appellant be required to ask for a copy of that which does not exist? Is not that a mere useless form?

Until a decree is drawn up the Legislature does not expect the parties to make up their minds whether they will appeal. But, if the construction suggested is adopted, parties cannot have their memorandum of appeal ready by the end of the twenty days, and must file it in order to comply with the Act, although the appeal will not be received by the Registrar, inasmuch as the appellant cannot annex thereto a copy of the decree. That happened in this case. We presented our memorandum of appeal within the twenty days, but without a copy of the decree, because it was not then drawn up.

Besides, the judgment may be ambiguous and the minutes of decree may have to be spoken to, and why should an appeal be prepared, which may be unnecessary, if the ambiguity is removed? Or the decree may be probably wrong, and the party in whose favour it is may not care to draw it up.

I submit that the Legislature intended the period to be a reasonable period after the decree is finally settled and drawn up to enable parties to judge whether they will appeal, and did not intend the period to be shortened by such accidents as the earlier or later drawing up of the decree, accidents depending upon the press of work in the Court offices. Still less did it intend that the party in whose favour the decree passes should be able, by delaying the drawing up of the decree, to deprive his antagonist of part or the whole of the time allowed him for consideration whether he should appeal. Why should the Legislature, which intends to protect parties against harassing appeals, protect a party who has not thought fit to have a decree in his favour drawn up?

[636] The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) for the Defendant

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GARTH, C.J. (CUNNINGHAM, J., concurring) — This was an application made by Mr. Phillips on behalf of the plaintiff (the appellant) for a review of our judgment on an appeal from the Original Side.

The appeal came on for hearing on the 22nd of February last, and an objection was taken by the respondent that the appeal was barred by limitation. We thought that the objection was well founded, and dismissed the appeal.

Mr. Phillips then applied for a review upon the grounds 1st, that the appellant's counsel were taken by surprise, and were not prepared to argue the point of limitation; and, 2ndly, that we had made a mistake in supposing that the appeal was barred, and that the point of limitation had not been properly understood or argued at the hearing.

We consider that, strictly speaking, Mr. Phillips ought not to have been allowed to argue the second point at all, because it was fully argued at the hearing, and there was no sufficient reason for our allowing it to be re-argued. But as the question is undoubtedly an important one, and we were most anxious that no available argument should be excluded, we have allowed Mr. Phillips to go fully into both points, and we only now observe that in strictness he had no right to be heard upon it, in order that the fact of our hearing him may not be construed into a precedent.

Now, for the purpose of understanding the points that have been raised, it is necessary that the proceedings in appeal, and the dates when they occurred, should be properly noted.

The judgment of the Court below was given against the plaintiff on the 16th of August 1883. On the 5th of September (which was twenty days after the judgment), the plaintiff's attorney applied to the officer of the Court to file his appeal. He was told that it could not be filed without a copy of the decree (see s. 541 of the Civil Procedure Code), but as the decree itself had not been then signed by the Judge, the appellant could not have obtained a copy even if he had asked for it.

On the 6th, however, the following day, the decree was [637] signed; and on the 8th a notice to that effect was given to the plaintiff's attorney. On the 12th the plaintiff's attorney bespoke a copy of the decree, and he obtained it on the next day, the 13th.

On the 15th he applied again to file his appeal, but the officer refused to admit it, on the ground that it was not in time.

No step was then taken by the appellant to get the appeal admitted until the 6th of December, when an application was made to Mr. Justice PIGOT, upon affidavit, for the admission of the appeal; and the appeal was admitted.

On the 13th of December the defendant obtained a rule, upon affidavits, calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the appeal should not be taken off the file.

On the 7th of January cause was shown against the rule, and it was discharged upon the ground that the Appeal Court was sitting, but without prejudice to any application to the Appeal Court to take the appeal off the file.

No application was made for that purpose, and on Friday, the 22nd of February, the appeal came on for hearing before this Bench. This happened to be the last day on which my brother CUNNINGHAM and myself were to sit together, as on the following Monday I was to sit with Mr Justice WILSON. We had, therefore, given notice that no long case would be taken on the Friday, and when this appeal was called on about 1 o'clock on Friday, Mr Pugh, who was one of the appellant's counsel, said that, as it was a long case, and he thought it would not have been taken, he was not prepared to argue it.

The Advocate-General, who appeared for the respondent, said that, in his opinion, it would be a short case, for that he had a preliminary objection on the ground of limitation, which he thought would dispose of it.

Under these circumstances, we determined to hear it. But as Mr. Pugh said he was not then prepared to argue the point of limitation, we postponed the hearing until after the mid-day adjournment, in order that he might have time to prepare himself.

Upon our return to the Court at a quarter to three, Mr. Pugh was not present, nor was Mr. Phillips, but Mr. Amir Ali, [638] who was the third counsel in the case, appeared and objected that no notice had been given to the appellant that the respondent was going to rely upon the point of limitation, and that no application had been made to rescind Mr Justice PIGOT's order admitting the appeal.

We explained that the point of limitation arose upon the appeal itself, quite apart from any order admitting the appeal, and that, under s 4 of the Limitation Act, we were not at liberty to hear the appeal, unless the appellant could satisfy us that he had filed it in proper time, or that, under s 5, he had sufficient cause for not presenting it within the prescribed period.

But we told Mr. Amir Ali that, in order to satisfy us upon that point, he was at liberty to use all the affidavits which were used before Mr Justice PIGOT, either on the 6th or the 13th of December. Accordingly, upon those affidavits, the point of limitation was fully argued by Mr. Amir Ali on the one side, and the Advocate-General on the other, and in the result, we dismissed the appeal upon the ground that it was barred.

Mr. Phillips has now contended on the application for review that he and his friends were taken by surprise, and ought not to have been called upon to go into the case. But the question whether the case should be taken was entirely a matter for the discretion of the Court, and as we had reason to believe, from what was stated by the Advocate-General, that the case would not be a long one, we thought it right to call it on.

The appeal had been in the paper for upwards of six weeks. There were three counsel engaged in it, and, of course, they ought to have been aware that the point of limitation was not only open to the respondent, but that it was one which the Court, whether it were taken by the respondent or not, was bound by law to entertain.

Upon the proceedings it appeared that the appeal had not been filed within twenty days from the date of the judgment, so that, prima facie, it was barred;

and the fact that it had been admitted by order of the Judge did not dispose of the point of limitation. The officer of the Court is not allowed to file any appeals which appear to be out of time, except by order of the Court, but the Court, if anything like a prima facie case for the admission is made [659] out by the appellant, is of course quite right to admit it, in order that the point of limitation may be argued at the hearing. Unless the appeal is admitted, the appellant of course is precluded from raising the point.

But the order for admission has no greater effect than that. We are constantly in the habit, on the Appellate Side, of making these orders ex parte; but it also constantly happens that when the point is argued at the hearing, we hold the appeal to be barred.

The counsel, therefore, for the appellant ought to have been fully prepared to argue the point in this case. Mr Amir Ali had all the affidavits before him for that purpose, and it was not suggested that he had any material facts to add to those which were disclosed in his affidavits.

We think, therefore, that there is no ground for Mr. Phillips first contention, that the case ought not to have been heard, or that he and his friends were taken by surprise.

But then, secondly, Mr Phillips contended that the appeal was not barred; and the point of limitation was not properly argued or understood at the hearing.

It was in this respect we considered that Mr Phillips had no right to address us. We have always held in this Court that a review is not admissible merely for the purpose of having a point argued again upon the same materials by some other counsel. If that were permitted there would be no finality in any judgment. But we permitted it, as we have already said, on this occasion, from an anxiety, that upon a point of so much importance and of such general application no argument should be excluded.

Mr Phillips contended, as I understood him, that where the decree, as in this case, was not drawn up and signed until after twenty days had expired from the delivery of the judgment, the twenty days ought to count from the time when the decree was made. But this is directly contrary to the express language of the law.

By the 151st article of the schedule to the Limitation Act the twenty days are to be reckoned from the date of the decree, and by the 20th section of the Civil Procedure Code, the decree is to bear [660] date the day on which the judgment is pronounced, so that the appeal must clearly be filed within twenty days from the day on which the judgment is pronounced.

But then it was said (and this is really the only arguable point) that, although the appeal was not brought to the office to be filed until ten days after the proper time, the additional ten days were requisite for enabling the appellant to get a copy of the decree.

If this had been so, the appellant would no doubt have brought himself within s. 12, but the facts were against him.

* [Art 151.—

Description of appeal	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
From a decree or order of any of the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay in the exercise of its original jurisdiction.	Twenty days.	The date of the decree or order]

The appeal, as we have seen, was first brought to the office on the 5th of September, and on the 20th day after the judgment was pronounced. It could not be received then, because the appellant had no copy of the decree; and no copy of the decree could then be had, because the decree itself was not signed.

I quite agree, therefore, that upon the facts disclosed on the affidavits, the appellant was entitled to as many additional days after the 5th of September as were requisite to enable him to get a copy of the decree.

But the decree was signed on the 6th of September, and it is sworn—and I see no reason to doubt the fact—that a copy of the decree was sent to the appellant's attorney on the 8th, whether he received that notice or not, the decree was ready, and it was his business to go to the office and get the copy. It clearly was not the duty of the office or of the respondent to give him any notice. He was bound himself to ascertain at the office when the decree was ready, and to bespeak a copy.

Instead of doing this, he allowed five days to expire before he applied for a copy. He applied for it on the 12th, and obtained it on the 13th, and even then he did not apply to file his appeal until the 15th.

There are then at least five or six days unaccounted for, which were clearly not requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. He might easily, if he had used due diligence, have filed his appeal on the 9th or 10th; and he does not apply to file it till the 15th.

[661] We held here not long ago on the Appellate Side of the Court, after consulting some of the other Judges, that where an appellant was too late by a single day—and for that day's delay there was no sufficient excuse—the appeal was barred. Section 4 of the Limitation Act leaves us no discretion in this respect, and unless the appellant can satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal in proper time, we have no right to hear it.

● I quite think that, where an appellant has any real difficulty in obtaining a copy of the decree, and uses due diligence to obtain it, every reasonable allowance should be made in his favour, and I confess I think there are strong reasons in favour of altering the law of limitation, so as to make the twenty days allowed for an appeal count from the signing of the decree, and not from the day when the judgment is pronounced.

As the law now stands, all we can do is to be liberal in allowing the appellant (under s. 12) a requisite time for obtaining a copy of the decree, and this I should in all cases be quite prepared to do.

But here, there is no pretence for saying that the delay which occurred in obtaining a copy of the decree was not due to the plaintiff himself. In addition to the information which the affidavits disclose, and which shows that the appellant might have obtained a copy of the decree five or six days earlier, if he had only used due diligence, we have obtained from the office the following facts, which make it clear the delay in getting the decree itself settled and signed was also due to the appellant.

The draft decree was prepared in the office on the 18th of August. It was sent to both parties for approval on the 21st. The defendant approved it on the 28th, but the plaintiff has never returned it (either approved or otherwise) up to the present time.

In consequence of the plaintiff's not returning it, the usual notice was issued to him to come and settle it on the 28th of August. He did not appear in pursuance of that notice, and consequently it was settled and passed in his absence on the 30th of August. It was given out to be engrossed on the 31st. It [662] was engrossed and examined on the 4th of September, and it was signed by the Judge on the 6th of September.

But for the plaintiff's own delay, therefore, the decree would have been prepared and signed much earlier, and a copy might have been obtained by him in ample time to file his appeal within the twenty days

But apart from these reasons, which in my opinion are conclusive, there is also another point which I consider fatal to the plaintiff's case

If an appeal is not preferred in due time, the officer of the Court, as I have already said, has no right to receive it without an order from a Judge, and the appellant must come as early as he can to the Court to make his application. This has always been the rule on the Appellate Side of the Court, and I do not see why it should not also be the rule in appeals from the Original Side. The provisions of the Limitation Act apply equally to both sides of the Court.

The 15th of September last was immediately before the vacation. But there was not the least reason why the appellant should not have applied to the Vacation Judge, and at any rate he should have applied immediately upon the Court re-opening in November

Instead of this he waits for nearly three months, and does not make his application till the 6th of December, and he gives no excuse for this delay, except that his counsel, Mr Phillips, was not at Calcutta, which, of course, is no excuse at all

The facts of the case appear to me to disclose very serious negligence on the part of the plaintiff's attorney, and if there was any good ground for the appeal on the merits, the attorney would certainly seem answerable to the plaintiff for the consequences of that negligence

I am clearly of opinion that the appellant is barred, and that there is no ground whatever for a review

Mahomed Yusuf

On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Mahomedan law—Legitimation of offspring by acknowledgment.

The acknowledgment and recognition of a natural son by a Mahomedan as his son gives him the status of a son capable of inheriting as a legitimate son, unless certain conditions exist

Mahomed Azmat Ali Khan v Lalk Begum (L R , 91 A , 8 , I.L.R , 8 Cal., 422) referred to.

Whether the offspring of an adulterous intercourse can be legitimated by any acknowledgment is an open question

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (3rd June 1880), reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of the Sarun district.

This was an appeal in one of two suits, in both of which there were decrees made by the High Court against the appellant. He was the son of Kalb Ali, a Shia Mahomedan of the Sarun district, deceased, who left, besides this son, Sadakat Hossein, two daughters also, named Khairun Nissa and Saskimun Nissa, the latter of whom was the mother of, and died before Amir Hossein, to whose share the present litigation related. Amir Hossein, the appellant's sister's son, died in 1866, leaving him surviving a grandmother, Bibi Sadra, his aunt Khairun Nissa, and his uncle, this appellant. He left no other issue than a son, Mahomed Selim, born of a woman who had been in an inferior station in his household. Whether Mahomed Selim had been legitimated by his father's treatment of him was the question on this appeal.

Bibi Sadra died in 1869, and her estate devolved on this appellant, who also succeeded to the share of his sister, Khairun Nissa, she dying childless a few months after the grandmother. The appellant thus became entitled, unless the rights of Mahomed Selim as a legitimate son should prevail, to the whole share which had belonged to Amir Hossein, as well as to the shares of his mother and sister. Mahomed Selim, on attaining his majority [664] in 1877, applied for "dakhil kharij" of the revenue-paying estates which his father had possessed. This was opposed by the appellant.

On the 17th July 1877 Mahomed Selim executed a deed of sale transferring to Mahomed Yusuf five villages, part of the estate which he claimed to have inherited from Amir Hossein, and at the end of the same year Mahomed Yusuf brought a suit to recover them, that being the suit in which the present appeal was preferred. For all the rest of the villages belonging to Amir Hossein's estate, Mahomed Selim himself had already instituted a suit against Sadakat Hossein. Both suits raised the same question, except that, besides the legitimacy of Mahomed Selim, the right of the plaintiff to sue in Mahomed Yusuf's suit was questioned. This objection was allowed by the Subordinate Judge, though afterwards in appeal held untenable. The Subordinate Judge, giving judgment in Mahomed Selim's suit, on the question of his right to inherit, decided in his favour. The Judge found that there had been a marriage between the plaintiff's mother and Amir Hossein that the plaintiff was the begotten son of the latter, and had been treated by him as his legitimate son.

On appeal a Divisional Bench of the High Court (GARTH, C.J., and MITTER, J.), after examining the evidence, stated grounds for holding that Mahomed Selim had been legitimated by treatment, and concluded thus:

"For these reasons we are of opinion that the plaintiff is the son begotten of Amir Hossein's body, and that during Amir Hossein's lifetime he was always treated as his legitimate son. It has been held by the Privy Council, that from such a uniform course of treatment, an acknowledgment of legitimacy, under the Mahomedan law may fairly be inferred, and having regard to the circumstances set forth above, such inference in this case seems to us to be just and proper. (See Ashrufood Dowlah Ahmed Hossein v. Hyder Hossein Khan, 11 Moo I.A., 94)

"The Plaintiff, therefore, though born out of wedlock, was legitimated by this acknowledgment, and is entitled to succeed to the property left by Amir Hossein as his legitimate son.

[665] " In this view of the case, it is not necessary to decide whether Mussumat Domni had been, as alleged by the defendant, married to Jummun or not.

" The appeal will be dismissed with costs."

The amount, or value, of the subject-matter in each of the suits being less than Rs. 10,000, while, taken together the amounts in both exceeded it, upon a petition by Sadakat Hossein for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and for a certificate that the case fulfilled the requirements of s. 596 of Act X of 1877, the order of the High Court admitting the appeal was preceded by a judgment (PONTIFEX, J), in which it was pointed out that a question of law might be said to have arisen. The point was thus stated in the judgment (28th January 1884) —

" Now, in Selim's suit, the first Court held that Amir Hossein was married to Domni, and that Selim was his legitimate son. The High Court on appeal held that the marriage was not proved, but that Selim was the son of Amir Hossein by Domni, and had been acknowledged by Amir Hossein, and was therefore entitled to his property. It appears, however, to have been alleged by the appellant that Domni, with whom Amir Hossein had been living, was in fact the wife of somebody else, and thus incapable of being the wife of Amir Hossein. That question does not appear to have been gone into by this Court. This Court considered that the finding that Domni had a son by Amir Hossein, who was treated by Amir Hossein as a son, was sufficient to give that son a title. But referring to the case of Khajah Hidayut Oollah v. Roy Jan Khanum (3 Moo. I. A , p 295), it appears that a substantial and at least arguable question of law may exist. At page 318 there is a quotation from Macnaghten's book, which tends to show that if the woman was married to some other person, then her son could not be legitimated because she was incapable of being the wife of Amir Hossein. That question refers to the Sunni law, and the parties here are Shialis. But this view of the law seems also to apply to Shiahs as appears by a passage in Baillie's Digest of the Imamia Law, page 289. The decision of the High Court in Selim's case, of course, also governed the other case of Mahomed Yusuf. I, therefore, think that there is [666] a substantial question of law involved in these cases, and I admit the appeals. But as it is not expedient that both appeals should proceed together before the Privy Council, I think the appeal forwarded should be that one in which Mahomed Yusuf is a respondent, as in that all questions in dispute may be decided. The whole record, however, should be translated and transmitted to the Privy Council, and the other appeal should stand over until further orders "

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q C , and Mr. R V. Doyme appeared for the Appellant

It was submitted that the title of Mahomed Selim to succeed to his father's estate, as his legitimate son, failed, because the evidence showed that there had been a marriage, before his birth, between his mother Domni and one Jummun, which was subsisting at the time of her connection with Amir Hossein. It was not competent to the latter to give to the offspring of an adulterous connection the status of a legitimate son. He had not, however, on the evidence, shown any real intention to do so

With reference to that part of the judgment of the High Court in which that Court declined to deal with the question whether or not there had been a marriage between the mother, Domni, and Amir Hossein, the father, it was argued that as legitimation of a son by evidence of treatment, or acknowledgment, took its origin in the presumptions of the Mahomedan law in regard to marriage, there could be no finding of legitimation, where the marriage of the mother was not presumed. Legitimation was effected by, and through, presumption of marriage.

[667] The respondent did not appear

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Lord Fitzgerald.—In this case some questions of importance have been raised, and their Lordships regret that they have not had the assistance of counsel appearing for the respondent. Their Lordships are, therefore, impressed with the propriety of not going beyond questions which are absolutely necessary for the purpose of their decision.

The real issue in this case, and the only issue upon which their Lordships feel it necessary to decide, is whether Selim,—who was beyond question the actual son of Amir Hossein by a woman known as Domni,—had been so recognized by Amir Hossein as to give him the status of a son capable of inheriting. The suit relates to the property of Amir Hossein. He died in the year 1866, and if Selim is in the position of having the rights of a son in reference to heirship, the plaintiff in the case, who claims as the assignee of his interest, is entitled to succeed. A question of importance was raised by the counsel for the appellant. He contended that Selim could not be treated as having acquired the status of a son capable of inheriting, because he alleged that the intercourse between Amir Hossein and Domni was an adulterous intercourse, as she had been previously married to a person then and still living, and that, consequently, whether her connection with Amir Hossein was preceded by a marriage ceremony with him or not, yet still the intercourse was adulterous, and that, according to Mahomedan law, the issue of that adulterous intercourse could not inherit as heir or acquire the status of a son by recognition. It, therefore, becomes necessary to consider, in the first instance, whether the alleged marriage of Domni to a man named Jummun has been established by satisfactory proof. Jummun appears to have been a person of somewhat the same degree in life as Domni, whose father's name was also Jummun. This marriage, if it took place at all, would have occurred shortly before or somewhat about the same period as the alleged marriage between Amir Hossein and Domni. The alleged marriage of Jummun with Domni is said to have been somewhere about 1852 or 1853, and the alleged marriage of Domni with [668] Amir Hossein must have taken place about the same period. Amir Hossein died in 1866, leaving Selim, his son, then about eight or nine years of age, which would have made him born in 1857 or 1858. Another child had been born of the intercourse between Amir Hossein and Domni about four years before; so that the marriage between Amir Hossein and Domni, if it ever took place, is referred to about the same period as the alleged marriage between Jummun and Domni.

Now the account given by Jummun is certainly one of an incredible character. The statement is that he became acquainted with Domni when he went to live in this particular village. [His Lordship then examined the evidence as to the alleged marriage between Jummun and Domni and concluded as follows :—]

Their Lordships have then come to the conclusion that the parties fail to establish this marriage between Jummun and Domni. That relieves them from offering any opinion upon the very important question of law which was raised by the counsel for the appellant, namely, whether, if there had been this marriage, the offspring of an adulterous intercourse could be legitimated by any acknowledgment. The absence of reliable proof, such as their Lordships could act upon, of the marriage of Domni and Jummun, appears to their Lordships to relieve the case from further difficulty. They do not intend in the least to depart from the statement of the law upon an appeal to the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Azmat Ali Khan v Mussumat Lalli Begum (L R, 9 I. A., 8, I. L. R., 8 Cal, 422), which is as follows — ‘ Their Lordships are relieved from a discussion of those authorities, inasmuch as the rule of Mahomedan law has not been disputed at the bar, viz, that the acknowledgment and recognition of children by a Mahomedan as his sons gives them the status of sons capable of inheriting as legitimate sons, unless certain conditions exist, which do not occur in this case.’ Their Lordships do not intend at all to depart from that rule, or to throw any doubt upon it. The Judge of the Primary Court who saw and who heard the witnesses, and the Judges of the Supreme Court who examined into the evidence afterwards, concur in opinion that there was sufficient evidence of the acknowledgment by Amir Hossein of Selim as his son, from [669] which an inference is fairly to be deduced that the father intended to recognize him and give him the status of a son capable of inheriting. Upon that point both the Courts come to one conclusion, and that conclusion their Lordships adopt. They think that the status of Selim as son has been sufficiently established by recognition so as to enable him to claim as heir. Other questions have been raised in the case, but, in accordance with what has been stated as their Lordships’ view, they think they ought not in a case of this kind to go beyond what is necessary for the decision.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal, and to affirm the decision of the Court below.

There will, of course, be no costs in this case.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 12th May, 1884

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Juggut Chunder Dutt.... Plaintiff

versus

Rada Nath Dhur. . . . Defendant.

Partnership—Suit for an account—Introduction of new member into firm—Contract Act IX of 1872, s 253, cl 6 and s 265—Jurisdiction.

The effect of cl 6 of s 253 of the Contract Act is not to render an assignment of a share in a partnership concern illegal or void as between the parties to the assignment, but only so far void as between those parties and the other partners as to cause an immediate dissolution of the partnership

If no assent is given by the other partners to the assignment, the assignee is upon dissolution at liberty to sue for an account and for distribution, not as a partner, but as assignee of the right of his assignor in the partnership property

Section 265 of the Contract Act commented on

THE plaintiff in this case stated that, in the year 1284, Rada Nath Dhur, the defendant No. 1, and one Gopal Chunder Dhur opened a shop agreeing to share profit and loss equally between them, this business being managed by Mohesh Chunder [670] Bose, Nobin Chunder Doss and Nobo Kumar Nath (defendants 2, 3 and 4), as gohmastas

That on the 12th March 1880 Gopal Chunder Dhur sold his share in the business to the plaintiff and Modhu Sudun Roy under a registered deed of sale, that, subsequently to this sale, the defendants 2, 3 and 4 colluded with Rada Nath Dhur (defendant No. 1) and collected and appropriated moneys owing to the firm, that he, the plaintiff, on the 10th Aghian 1287 (25th November 1879) purchased the share of Modhu Sudun Roy, that he demanded from the defendants the papers and books of the firm and asked for an account, but on their at first promising to comply and then failing in their promise, he filed the present suit against them on the 28th November 1880, asking for an account.

Defendant No. 1 contended that all that the plaintiff purchased in 1880 was, the articles in store and the debts due to the concern, and that the assignment was made secretly and without his consent, and further contended that the business had been closed since 1286 (April 1880), and that nothing was due to the plaintiff.

The other defendants contended that, being gohmastas only, they were not liable to be sued.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff had obtained possession of Gopal Chunder Dhur's share in the business, and that there was evidence to show that the defendants had at one time agreed to account, but that the business had closed in 1286; that the plaintiff was entitled to an account from the defendants, and after going into the accounts he made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 442-15-12.

The defendants appealed to the Deputy Commissioner, contending that a new partner could not be introduced into the business without the consent of the other partner, under s. 253, cl. 6 of the Contract Act.

The Deputy Commissioner, after stating that it appeared that Gopal Chunder Dhur had introduced the plaintiff into the business without the consent of Rada Nath, and that the plaintiff had not asked for a dissolution of the partnership by his plaint, but had sued for an account, held that the sale to the plaintiff in [671] 1880 was invalid, as it introduced a new partner into the business without the consent of the other partners, and he, therefore, reversed the decision of the Munsif.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Bhooban Mohan Dass for the appellant contended that the plaintiff was entitled to sue for an account, and that one partner was at liberty to sell his share without the consent of the other partners, and that it having been found by the Munsif that the defendants had recognized the sale by allowing the plaintiff to take possession and by promising to render him an account, s. 253 of the Contract Act should not have been applied when these facts had not been displaced.

Baboo Huri Mohun Chuckerbuti for the respondents cross objected, that under s. 265 of the Contract Act the District Judge alone had jurisdiction to try the case.

Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Garth, C. J. (BEVERLEY, J., concurring).—The plaintiff's case is that the defendant No. 1 and a person named Gopal Chunder Dhur opened a shop and carried on business in co-partnership for about three years. Gopal Chunder Dhur then sold his share to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff says that after this purchase he continued to carry on the business with the defendant No. 1, but that the defendant No. 1, in collusion with the other defendants, who are his gohmastas, have been receiving moneys due to the firm, and keeping back papers and accounts in fraud of him, the plaintiff. He, therefore, brings this suit against them for production of the papers and for an account.

Two of the defendants say they have nothing to do with the partnership, and that they are merely employed as gohmastas. But the defendant No. 1 says that the business has been closed since the end of the Bengalee year* 1286, and that nothing is due to the plaintiff.

The Munsif found, as a fact, that the business was closed at the end of the year 1286, but he considered that the plaintiff was entitled to the investigation which he claimed, and after appointing an ameen and examining the accounts, he made a decree in the plaintiff's favour for Rs. 442-15-12.

[672] The Deputy Commissioner took a different view. He considered that the purchase by the plaintiff from Gopal Chunder Dhur of the share in the partnership was invalid, and that (apparently, for that reason) the plaintiff had no right to sue the defendant for an account.

It has now been contended before us that the view taken by the Deputy Commissioner was wrong, and that the judgment of the Munsif ought to be restored.

We think it very doubtful, however, whether, upon the plaintiff's own showing, and upon the facts found by the Munsif, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree.

It is not actually stated in the plaint, although it may certainly be inferred, that the business of the partnership had been carried on up to the time when the suit was brought in November 1880.

The defendant No. 1 says that this was not so, and that the business came to a close at the end of the Bengalee year 1286, which would be about the 11th of April 1880, or about a month after the plaintiff bought his share in the concern; and the defendant No. 1 also says, though the fact is not distinctly found by either Court, that the sale of the share to the plaintiff was made secretly, and without his consent.

Now, the Deputy Commissioner is so far right in his view of the law that no partner has a right to transfer his share in the partnership to a stranger without the consent of the other partners. (See cl. 6 of s. 253 of the Contract Act.)

But the Deputy Commissioner does not quite understand the true meaning of this rule. Its effect is, not to render an assignment of a share in a partnership concern illegal or void as between the parties to the assignment, but only so far void as between those parties and the other partner or partners, as to cause an immediate dissolution of the partnership.

In other words, one partner cannot by assigning his share make any one else a partner in his stead with his co-partners, and therefore upon his assigning his share the partnership ceases to exist, unless the other partners consent to accept the purchaser as a partner in the place of the latter.

If they do so consent, the partnership may continue to be carried on as before. If they do not consent, the plaintiff would, [673] upon the dissolution, have a right to sue, not as a partner, but as an assignee of the rights of his assignor in the partnership property, for an account of that property, and for such a distribution share as belonged to his assignor.

Now, in this case, it does not appear to have been distinctly found by either of the lower Courts whether the defendant No. 1 consented to receive the plaintiff as a partner in the concern or not. The defendant No. 1 says that the transfer was made secretly and without his consent, and, although he says that the business continued to be carried on for about a month after the transfer was made, it does not appear whether the plaintiff was considered to have any share in it.

It will be found that this point has a very material bearing upon the question whether, in point of law, the plaintiff has any right to bring this suit.

If he never became a partner with the defendant No. 1, he might, as I have just now explained, have a right, not as a partner, but as an assignee of Gopal Chunder Dhur's share, to sue for an account against the defendant No. 1, and the judgment of the Munsif may then be substantially right; although it is difficult to see how the plaintiff would have any right of suit against the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 if they were only gohmastas.

If, on the other hand, the plaintiff, after the transfer to him, became a partner with the defendant No. 1 for ever so short a time, and that partnership came to an end on or about the 11th of April 1880, then we think this suit would come within section 265 of the Contract Act, and could only be brought in the Court of the District Judge.

This principle seems now to be pretty clearly established by several decisions in this Court. It has led to a good deal of inconvenience and injustice that suits of this description should only be brought in the Court of the District Judge; but so long as that section continues to be the law, the Court has no power to prevent the mischief.

It was certainly a matter of doubt at one time, both in this Court and elsewhere, whether the provisions of s. 265 were not intended to provide additional remedy otherwise than by a [674] regular suit in cases where a partnership had determined. But the Civil Procedure Code has provided no other proceeding except a regular suit, under which accounts may be taken under such circumstances, and it has accordingly been held in several subsequent cases in this Court that a regular suit is the only remedy, and that such a suit can only be brought in the Court of the District Judge. See Prosad Dass Mullick v Russick Lall Mullick (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 157), Ramayya v. Chandra Sekara Rau (I L R., 5 Mad., 256), Harrison v Delhi and London Bank (I. L. R., 4 All., 437), Sorabji Fardunji v Dulabhbhai Hargovandas (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 65), Ladubhai Premchand v Revichand Venuchand (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 143), Ram Chunder Shaha v Manick Chunder Banikya (I L R., 7 Cal., 428). We think therefore that, as the Deputy Commissioner has misconceived the effect of the plaintiff's purchase, and as neither Court has tried what appears to be a very important question in the case, namely, whether the plaintiff ever really became a partner in the concern with the defendant No 1, the case ought to go back to the Munsif's Court for re-trial, and if in the result it should turn out that the suit can only be brought in the Court of the District Judge, as being a suit by an accepted partner after determination of the partnership, the plaint should be given back to the plaintiff to be there presented. The plaintiff, we presume, will not be prejudiced, so far as limitation is concerned, because he would have brought this suit bona fide in a Court which has no jurisdiction to entertain it.

Case remanded.

Partition—Joint property consisting of several houses—Principle of partition—Commission of partition—Act XIV of 1882, s. 396.

Where in a suit for partition possession was sought of a definite share of a property consisting of a number of houses. Held, that the principle in such cases is, that if a property can be partitioned without destroying the intrinsic value of the whole property or of the shares, such partition ought to be made, but where partition cannot be made without destroying the intrinsic value of the property, then a money compensation should be given.

IN this suit the property, of which partition was claimed, was said to consist of ten houses. The houses were originally in the joint possession of three brothers, the defendants. The shares of two of these brothers, being a 10-anna 13 gunda 1 cowri 1 krant portion of the whole property, were purchased by the plaintiff at an execution sale. The principal defendant, the brother who still retained his share, contended, that partition of ymali dwelling-houses could not be legally made. The Munsif found that one of the ten houses was not then in existence, and ordered that nine of the houses should be partitioned, and directed that a valuation of the nine houses should be made, and a two-third share thereof be made over to the plaintiff who should be at liberty to remove them, but as regards the tenth house no order was made, the Munsif stating that as to this house he left the plaintiff to seek such remedy as he might be advised. The Subordinate Judge modified the decree, and ordered that the houses should be valued by an expert in execution of the decree and two-thirds of the value with interest be given to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court

[676] Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, for the Appellant, contended that the decree of the lower Court limiting the plaintiff's claim to a two-third share in the value of houses was bad in law

Baboo Boikanto Nath Doss for the Respondents

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ) was delivered by Field, J.—The plaintiff in this case purchased two-thirds of a property consisting of ten houses. One of these houses has since fallen down, or otherwise been destroyed, and the present dispute concerns nine houses only. The plaintiff sued to have a partition, and he said that he intended to break down and remove those houses, of which he would obtain possession by this partition.

The Munsif gave him a decree for six-houses out of the nine, holding that this was the arithmetically proportionate share of the property. An appeal was then preferred to the Subordinate Judge, and the Subordinate Judge, evidently influenced by the idea that the case was a hard one, directed that the houses should be valued, and that two-thirds of the value, together with legal interest, should be given to the plaintiff

* The plaintiff now contends that the Subordinate Judge had no right to give him the price of the houses instead of the houses themselves, and we think that upon this bare contention the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The principle in these cases of partition is that if a property can be partitioned without destroying the intrinsic value of the whole property, or of the shares, such partition ought to be made. If, on the contrary, no partition can be made without destroying the intrinsic value, then a money compensation should be given instead of the share which would fall to the plaintiff by partition

In the present case the defendant did not object before the Subordinate Judge that the nine houses could not be partitioned without destroying the value of the property. He did not object that no three houses could be given to him which would bear a fairly proportionate value to the whole of the property. We think, therefore, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is erroneous and must be set aside.

We have, however, to point out that the Munsif committed [677] an error in directing six houses out of the nine to be given to the plaintiff without specifying which six houses should be given. In other words, he should have proceeded under the provisions of s. 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and we direct that having determined what portion of the property ought to be given to the plaintiff as representing the two-thirds which he obtained by purchase, the Munsif do proceed to embody in his final decree the result of the Commissioner's investigation and report

We do not think that this is a case in which we ought to give costs.

Case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 21st April, 1884

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Anundo Rai and others..... Defendants

Kali Prosad Singh and another. Plaintiffs.*

Ghatwali tenures of Kharukpore—Transferability of Ghatwali tenures—Mitakshara law inapplicable to ghatwali tenure—Family custom inapplicable to ghatwali tenure.

A ghatwali tenure in Kharukpore is transferable if the zemindar assents and accepts the transfer.

Such assent and acceptance may be presumed from the fact of the zemindar having made no objections to a transfer for a period of over twelve years, and when such a fact has been found a Court ought to recognize such a transfer.

In a suit brought to recover possession of a ghatwali tenure situated in Kharukpore which had been brought to sale in execution of a decree against the previous ghatwali and purchased by the defendants, the plaintiffs sought to rely on the Mitakshara law and certain family custom for the purpose of establishing their right. The lower Court applying such law and custom found that the tenure was transferable, and that it was joint ancestral property and gave the plaintiffs a decree for two-thirds of the property and the defendants a decree for the remaining one-third, holding that to be the extent of the previous ghatwali interest which had been purchased by the defendants.

[678] Held, on appeal, that the decision of the lower Court was erroneous. That in dealing with a ghatwali tenure the Court must have regard to the nature of the tenure itself and to the rules of law laid down in regard to such tenures and not to any particular school of law or the customs of any particular family, and that a ghatwali being created for a specific purpose, has its own particular incidents and cannot be subject to any system of law affecting only a particular class or family.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 114 of 1882, against the decree of Hafiz Abdool Kurreem, Khan Bahadoor, Second Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 18th of February 1882.

IN this case the plaintiffs sought to recover possession of a ghatwali mehal named Kharna, appertaining to the mehals of Kharukpore in the district of Bhagulpore.

The plaintiffs alleged that the family of plaintiff No 1 was governed by the Mitakshara law, and by a special family custom that the eldest son became the malik of the estate, the other members of the family being entitled to maintenance. That, in accordance with such custom, Tekait Meghraj Singh, the father of plaintiff No. 1, held possession of the ghatwali mehal in question till the 13th July 1868, on which date he was nominally, though not actually, ousted by the ancestors of the defendants who purchased the mehal at a sale in execution of a decree obtained against him on the 18th July 1862. The plaintiffs further alleged that the purchasers, although they got the writ for possession, issued and gave a receipt in the usual way purporting to have obtained possession on the 19th Bysack 1276 Fuslee (15th April 1869), in reality did not take actual possession till the month of Assin 1287 Fuslee (September and October 1879), that Tekait Meghraj Singh died in Bhador 1278 Fuslee (August and September 1871), and that after his death the plaintiff No 1, in conformity with the family usage, acquired the right to take exclusive possession of the mehal now claimed.

The plaintiffs also alleged that there was no legal necessity for the debt incurred by Meghraj Singh in respect of which the mehal was brought to sale, and that it was incurred without the consent of plaintiff No 1. The alienation to the predecessors of the defendants was bad and invalid as against plaintiff No. 1, and that by their purchase at the execution sale they got only the right and share of Meghraj Singh in the mehal.

Previous to the suit being brought, plaintiff No 1 sold a 10-anna share in the mehal to plaintiff No 2, and the suit was [679] accordingly brought, by them both, and they contended that the defendants acquired no right to possession of the mehal as against them by virtue of their predecessors' purchase at the sale in execution of the decree against Meghraj Singh. The defendants opposed the plaintiffs' claim on the following amongst other grounds, viz. —

That they and their predecessors had held possession of the mehal since the date of the auction purchase, and that the suit being one for the purpose of setting aside that sale, it was barred as having been brought more than one year after the date of the sale, and that even if it were held that it was not barred on that account, it was still barred by the fact that they had held possession for more than twelve years. That although the mehal Kharna was formerly a ghatwali tenure, that tenure was abolished previous to the date of the sale. That according to the practice of the ghatwali tenures situated in the mehal of Kharukpore, the holder had a full proprietary right, and could sell or transfer the tenure, and that the son acquired no right of partnership with his father during the father's lifetime. They also denied that plaintiff No 1 alone was entitled to succeed by inheritance and pleaded that other similar ghatwali mehals belonging to Meghraj Singh had been sold in execution of decrees against him, and that plaintiff No 1 had remained silent and made no claim with respect to them, and that in respect of the mehal in suit he had been perfectly well aware of the proceeding in the suit in which the sale took place, and had not made any objection thereto.

The lower Court held that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the ghatwali tenure had not been abolished as pleaded by the defendant, that the practice alleged by the plaintiffs, that the eldest son succeeded the father as ghatwal, was proved, and that the tenure in suit was not divisible, but was transferable. The Court also found that the mehal was joint ancestral property subject to the Mitakshara law, and gave the plaintiff a decree for two-thirds of the mehal, and the defendants the remaining one-third, holding that to be the extent of Meghraj Singh's interest in the tenure

During the course of a very lengthy judgment, in which the [680] Court went very fully into the evidence and the authorities on the subject, the following cases were referred to Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198, L. R., 4. I. A., 247); Rajah Lelanund Singh Bahadoor v. The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's I. A., 101) Rajah Lelanund Singh v. The Government (S. D. Bangshi Deo* (15 W. R., 38, 6 B. L. R., 652), Jogeswar Sirkar v. Nimai Karnakar [1 B. L. R. (short notes 7)].

The defendants being dissatisfied with that decision now appealed to the High Court and the plaintiff preferred a cross-appeal

Mr. Pugh and Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Moonshi Mahomed Yusoof for the Appellants

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), Mr. Evans and Baboo Nil Madhub Sen for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by

Tottenham, J.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore made in a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents to recover possession of a ghatwali mehal named Kharna from the defendants-appellants who, or their predecessors, purchased it in 1868 at a sale held in execution of a decree against [681] the then ghatwal, Tekait Meghraj Singh, father of the plaintiff No. 1

The plaintiffs' case was that from the nature of the tenure in question and under the principles of the Mitakshara law governing the Tekait's family, the alienation was invalid, and that plaintiff No. 1 as eldest son of Meghraj Singh was entitled to hold the estate on the death of his father. Plaintiff No. 2 joined in the suit as purchaser from plaintiff No. 1 of five-eighths of the latter's interest

The case is in many respects a peculiar one, and the decision of the lower Court partakes also of that character. Both sides have objected to it by way of appeal and cross-appeal

In a case of this kind it might have been expected that the plaintiffs would have relied simply on the inalienable character of a ghatwali tenure, the purpose for which it was created necessitating its being protected from seizure and sale for debt, as well as its impartibility.

But the plaint shows that the plaintiffs rely chiefly on the Mitakshara law modified by a family custom that the eldest son alone succeeds to possession. It is alleged that the late holder, though by family usage sole possessor, was precluded by the Mitakshara law from encumbering or alienating the tenure, except for family necessity, without the consent of his son, the plaintiff, who was adult at the time the debt was incurred which formed the basis of the decree under which the sale took place.

The plaintiffs, therefore, evidently rely chiefly on the Mitakshara law, but further appeal to the nature of the tenure as rendering the sale invalid.

The peculiarity of the defence is that while it denies that plaintiff No. 1 acquired any right in the property under the Mitakshara law by his birth, and contends that the father was sole proprietor fully competent to deal with it, still it raises the plea of limitation on the ground that the right to sue accrued on the date of sale, whereas the suit was not instituted until more than twelve years afterwards.

And to get over the difficulty in regard to the seizure and sale of a ghatwali tenure, the defence alleges that the ghatwali tenure [682] was long ago abolished, and so the property became Meghraj Singh's absolutely.

The somewhat mixed character of the pleadings may be accounted for thus. Plaintiffs must have felt some diffidence in trusting simply or chiefly to the nature of the ghatwali tenure as being indivisible and inalienable, for upon their own showing one of them had sold, and the other had bought, five-eighths of it just before the plaint was filed, and they were doubtless fully aware that in fact numerous similar ghatwalis of Kharukpore, to which class the one in question belongs, had actually been sold. It was convenient, therefore, to put forward the Mitakshara law which does allow alienations for necessity, and moreover the chief inducement to bring the suit was probably the success of other suitors in recent years in recovering property sold for their fathers' debts by the application of the Mitakshara law. It was necessary, however, to fall back upon the nature of the tenure as a ghatwali in order to allow the plaintiffs to count the period of limitation from the time of Meghraj Singh's death, rather than from the date of sale, in the event of plaintiffs being unable to establish their allegation that plaintiff No. 1 was dispossessed only in 1287==(1879).

The defendants would naturally wish to eliminate the Mitakshara law, except in so far as it might help their plea of limitation, and to contend that plaintiff No. 1 had no interest whatever in his father's lifetime, and could not object to any alienation effected during that period.

The lower Court evidently took infinite pains with the case, and recorded an extremely long and elaborate judgment. It found that the ghatwali had not been abolished yet that it was transferable also that it was a joint ancestral property subject to the Mitakshara law, modified only by the custom which operated in this case to make the period of limitation run from the death of Meghraj Singh, and not from the date of sale or of the adverse possession of the defendants, and finally that it was indivisible, and upon these findings it proceeded to give the plaintiffs two-thirds of the property, and the defendants one-third, which the Subordinate Judge held was the extent of Meghraj Singh's interest in the ghatwali tenure.

It appears to us that both parties are justified in objecting to-[683] the manner in which the case has been decided, for it seems clear either that the plaintiffs should have recovered the whole tenure, or that the suit should have been dismissed altogether. The tenure being undoubtedly a ghatwali, the lower Court we think made a mistake in attempting to apply to the case the rules of the Mitakshara law.

For we concur with the learned counsel for the appellants in his contention that in dealing with a ghatwali the Court must have regard to the nature of the tenure itself, and to the rules of law laid down in regard to such tenures, and not to any particular school of law or to the customs of particular families. The incidents of a ghatwali tenure are the same whether the ghatwal be a Hindu or a Mussulman or a follower of any other system of religion, and the same ghatwali might be held successively by persons governed as to other property by totally different rules of law. A ghatwali is created for a specific purpose, has its own particular incidents, and cannot be subject to any system of law affecting only a particular class or family.

We think, therefore, that the lower Court was misled in its recourse to authorities bearing upon the effect of the Mitakshara law on ancestral joint property whether partible or impartible, and as to the obligation of sons to pay the debts of their fathers, and the authorities cited on these points seem, therefore, to us to afford no assistance in disposing of this case.

The real and only material questions for us to decide are—first, whether the sale of this ghatwali in execution of a decree against the ghatwal was invalid and liable to be set aside by reason of the tenure being in its nature inalienable, and, secondly, if the alienation was bad, are the present plaintiffs entitled to recover the property? The second question also involves one of limitation.

As to the first question there is doubtless authority for holding that ghatwali lands are not alienable either at the pleasure of the ghatwal for the time being, or for the payment of his debts at the pleasure of his creditors. For the nature of the tenure and the reason of its existence render it necessary that the holder of the office of ghatwal be secured in his enjoyment of the tenure.

* [684] The principal case cited to us by the learned Advocate-General for the plaintiffs-respondents is that of Rajah Nihmoni Singh v. Bakranath Singh (L. R., 9 I A, 104). But in that case the particular point decided by the Judicial Committee, Privy Council, was that ghatwali lands could not be seized in execution of a decree for the debts of a former ghatwal as assets by descent in the hands of his successor. Then Lordships, however, expressed an opinion that the same considerations on which the ghatwali should be held to be indivisible would make it inalienable. That case related to a jagir in West Burdwan to which Police services were attached, and it was considered to be analogous to one of the Beerbhoom ghatwalis governed by Regulation XXIX of 1814. Another case was cited to us in which a Division Bench of this Court held in a Second Appeal No. 2451 of 1880 that a Shikni ghatwali could not be seized in execution of a decree for debt. That too was a Beerbhoom ghatwali, and the objection was taken by the Shikni ghatwal before any decree was obtained.

The ghatwali in the present case is one of the Kharukpore ghatwalis, and as regards them the Judicial Committee noted, without expressing dissent, that transfers have taken place and have been recognized if made with the assent of the zamindar, while without that consent the Court has not recognized them. Precedents for these propositions are to be found in two cases mentioned by the lower Court.—Liyah Lelamund Singh v. Doorgabutty (W. R., 1864, 249) and Lalla Gooman Singh v. Grant (11 W R, 292).

These decisions have not been overruled, but the Judicial Committee point out this distinction between the ghatwalis of Beerbhoom and of Kharukpore, that the former are appointed by Government and the latter by the zamindar.

As to the Beerbhoom ghatwals, Regulation XXIX of 1814 expressly provides that they and their descendants in perpetuity shall be maintained in possession of the lands so long as they pay their revenue, and fulfil the other obligations of their tenure.

It has been argued that the Kharukpore ghatwals are on the same footing as those of Beerbhoom, but this does not appear [683] to be the case, for besides there being no statutory provision in their favour, it appears from a description given of their status in the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Raja Lelamund Singh Bahadur v The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's I A., 101) that the zamindar retained in his hands the power of appointing and dismissing the ghatwals in case of their not performing the duties. This seems to negative a right to hold from generation to generation on payment of the rent reserved. Be that as it may, we think that we must hold, upon the authority of the cases and upon the evidence of many such transfers having been effected and unquestioned, as well as in consideration of the long silence of the present plaintiff No. 1, and the silence too of his father while he lived, that a Kharukpore ghatwali is transferable, if the zamindar assents and accepts the transferee, and in the present case we think the lower Court was justified in holding that the zamindar by making no objection within twelve years of the sale acquiesced in it, and that the transfer was, therefore, one which the Court ought to recognize, and looking to the fact that the purposes for which the Kharukpore ghatwalis were created no longer exist, we should greatly regret being compelled to come to a contrary conclusion. We accordingly decide the first question in favour of the defendants-appellants, and hold that the sale was not invalid by reason of the inalienability of the ghatwali tenure.

And upon the second point, too, we think the plaintiffs must fail.

For only as ghatwals duly appointed by the zamindar could they establish any claim to possession of the tenure, and they nowhere allege that they have been appointed ghatwals. Their case was that plaintiffs had a vested interest by his birth in the ghatwali, but this we have shown to be untenable.

The result is that we decree the appeal of the defendants, and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs of both Courts.

[686] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 24th April, 1884.

PRESENT :

MR JUSTICE WILSON AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Nobin Chunder Chowdhry and another..... Defendants

versus

Dokhobala Das.Plaintiff :

Joint family — Partition — Presumption as to purchase in name of wife.

In a suit for partition of joint family property, it was found that certain property stood partly in the name of the wife of the original proprietor, and partly in that of a daughter-in-law. Held, that a wife, a member of a joint family, is, as regards property held in her name, in the same position as her husband with respect to property acquired in his name, and subject to the same presumption in favour of the joint family. Chunder Nath Mostro v. Kristo Komul Singh (15 W R 357) followed, Chowdhram v. Tanna Kant Lahuri Chowdhry (11 C L R 41) distinguished.

THE plaintiff on the allegation that she was a member of a joint family brought this suit for partition against the other members of the joint family. The defendants stated, inter alia, that certain plots of land enumerated in the schedule to the plaint were the self-acquired properties of Raimoni, the wife of the common ancestor, and Jadumoni, his daughter-in-law, and held by them under three separate kobalas or conveyances. The Court of First Instance gave a decree to the plaintiff, and with respect to the properties in the names of the ladies made this observation

“There is no independent proof as to the source from which the purchase money of the land included in the three kobalas came, whether or no it came from the stridhana, or from whom the stridhana was acquired. On account of these deficiencies in the evidence and want of reliable proof, the presumption would be against the ladies.” On appeal, the District Judge entirely concurred in the view of the lower Court.

The defendant appealed to the High Court

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose (with him Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar) for the Appellants contended that the presumption of Hindu law that property purchased in the name of one member is joint family property of all the members did not apply to the purchases by Raimoni and Jadumoni, and that the onus was on the plaintiff of proving that the purchases in question were benami acquisitions with family funds.

Babu Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Srish Chunder Chowdhry for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the High Court (WILSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J. (TOTTENHAM, J., concurring).—The only question argued before us is this, whether property acquired in the name of a Hindu lady, a member of a joint family, is presumably joint family property or not. The property in this case is found standing in the names of two ladies, members of a joint Hindu family and widows of deceased members of that family. An express decision on the point given in 1871 is that of Chunder Nath Montro v. Kristo Komul Singh (15 W R., 357). The judgment was delivered by one of the greatest masters of Hindu law who has ever administered justice in this country. And we are not aware that that view has ever been questioned until now. It is said that a recent decision of a Division Bench of this Court is in conflict with this ruling. But it does not appear to us to be so. The case referred to is Chowdrain v. Tarini Kant Lahiri Chowdhry (11 C. L. R., 41, 8 Cal., 545).

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No 765 of 1883, against the decree of S. H. C. Taylor, Esq., Judge of Beerbhoom, dated 30th December 1882, affirming the decree of Babu Minu Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 17th April 1882.

There the question considered was whether as between a husband or a purchaser at a sale in execution against the husband and the wife, there is any presumption that property standing in the name of the wife is held by her benami for her husband. That is an entirely different question from that raised in this case, whether a wife, a member of a joint family, is, as regards property held in her name, in the same position as her husband with respect to property acquired in his name, and subject to the same presumption in favour of the joint family.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Adoption—Kayasthas—Sudras—Admissions against interest—Evidence.

As a general principle Kayasthas are Hindus of the Sudra class and may, as such, adopt their sisters' son.

THIS was a suit by the plaintiffs, who were the descendants of one Pahar Singh, against Nowrungi Lal, their father, Amani, their paternal uncle, and one Bissessur Dyal, for possession, among other things, of mouzah Jalwandohi by right of inheritance under the Mitakshara law. Pahar Singh had several sons and grandsons, of whom the parties in the suit were the last surviving descendants. Amani was born blind, and made a defendant pro forma, Bissessur Dyal was the sister's son of Chandan, one of the grandsons of Pahar Singh, and was adopted by the latter by a deed of the 18th June 1856. Sometime after the adoption, Nowrungi Lal and Amani brought a suit against Chandan and Bissessur Dyal to set aside the deed of adoption, but on the 30th April 1866 filed a petition of compromise in Court, whereby they contented themselves with a small portion and gave up the rest of the ancestral property. On the 5th January 1871 Bissessur Dyal recorded his name as the owner of the property in the place of his adoptive father, and on the 26th November 1877 presented an application in the Revenue Office in pursuance of the Land Registration Act, whereupon the plaintiffs filed their objection to the registration of Bissessur's name in respect of, among other properties, Jalwandohi; but their objection was disallowed on the 8th April 1878. The plaintiffs then brought this suit on the 29th April asking for possession of 13 annas in Jalwandohi, that the compromise of the 30th April 1866 should be set aside, and that the deed of adoption might be cancelled.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 139 of 1881. Appeal preferred on the 5th of January 1879, in the Court of the Judge of Shahabad, against the decree of First Munsif of Buxar, dated 30th November 1878, and heard by the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, called up to this Court by an order, dated the 14th of June 1881.

[689] Nowrungi Lal, the father of the plaintiffs, died before the suit came on for hearing in the Munsif's Court. The defendant Bissessur contended that his adoption was good, and that he had been in possession of mouzah Jalwandohi, which was self-acquired property ever since his adoption. The Munsif dismissed the case on the ground of limitation. He, moreover, held that the family was not joint, that Jalwandohi was self-acquired property, and intimated that there was nothing illegal in Chandan's adopting his sister's son. The plaintiffs appealed to the Subordinate Judge who reversed the Munsif's decision, and held the adoption void, on the ground that Chandan being a Kayastha belonged to one of the superior classes. The defendant Bissessur appealed to the High Court, and at the hearing, the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) directed a further inquiry as to whether the plaintiffs' family belonged to either of the three higher castes, and after a formal order of remand transferred the appeal to the file of the High Court. The points argued at the hearing after such transfer to the High Court were—(1) whether Jalwandohi was acquired out of joint funds, (2) whether the adoption was valid.

Babu Golap Sarkar, Mr R. E Twidale and Babu Ram Sukha Ghose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ) was delivered by Field, J—The position of the family in this case will appear from the following genealogical tree. —

Pahar Singh had three sons-- Bhagwant Singh, Kulwanth Singh [690] and Srichand. Of these three Srichand died without issue. Bhagwant Singh had a son, Amrit. Amrit had two sons, Nowrungi Lal and Amani. Nowrungi is defendant No. 2, Amani is defendant No. 3, and is said to have been born blind and therefore incapable of inheriting. Nowrungi had five sons, who are the five plaintiffs in the present case. Kulwanth Singh had two sons, Chandan, who died in Bhadro 1276, and Banwari, who died leaving a widow, Badam Koer, since dead. Kulwanth Singh had also a daughter, and this daughter's son Bissessur Dyal is defendant No 1

The present suit arises out of certain proceedings under the Land Registration Act of 1876. The plaint, after setting out the members of the family, proceeds to allege that Chandan Lal, without the knowledge of the other members of the family, had concocted a deed of adoption, that under this deed Bissessur Dyal was adopted, and that this adoption, being that of a sister's son, was invalid. It then recites that a certain suit was brought by Nowrungi Lal and Amani as co-plaintiffs, and was terminated by a compromise on the 30th April 1866. The plaint then refers to another suit, the date of which is not given, as instituted by Nowrungi and Bissessur Dyal in collusion. It then refers to the registration proceedings and the cause of action is dated from the 26th November 1877 when the defendant No 1 intervened in those proceedings. The plaintiffs allege that they, being the five sons of Nowrungi, and members of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, cannot be affected by any of the alleged collusive proceedings of their father, Nowrungi, of Chandan Lal or Bissessur Dyal. They ask that possession may be given to them of 13 annas 4 pie out of the 16 annas of mehal Jalwandohi, pargana Chawsa, and some other property specified in the plaint, that the fraudulent compromise of the 30th April 1866 may be set aside, and that the deed of adoption, dated 18th June 1856, may be cancelled.

The Munsif, who first tried the case, dismissed it. He held that the suit was barred by limitation, that part of the property claimed, viz, Jalwandohi, was self-acquired, that the family was not joint, and without exactly deciding the question, he intimated his opinion that the deed of adoption was good, and that the plaintiffs were not in a position to contest the validity of this adoption.

[691] The case then went on appeal before the Subordinate Judge, who reversed the Munsif's decision, holding, amongst other things, that the adoption of Bissessur by Chandan, being that of a sister's son, was invalid, as the plaintiffs being Kayasthas must be deemed to rank amongst the three higher Hindu castes. A second appeal was preferred to the High Court, and on the 14th June 1881 it was heard by the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice McDONELL, who is now a member of this Bench. The portion of their judgment with which we are concerned is as follows: "We think, therefore, that it is necessary, in order to come to a proper decision of the case, to direct a further enquiry as to whether the plaintiffs' family, who are, as we understand, admitted to be Kayasthas, do belong to either of the three higher castes, and as we think that it may be a matter of some difficulty to bring before the Court in the Mofussil such evidence and information as will enable it to decide that question satisfactorily, we think that our best course will be to remand the case to the lower Court, as a matter of form, and then to bring it up to this Court and try it as a regular suit." The case is now, therefore, before us as an appeal from an original decree.

On the 18th June 1883 an application was made to this Court, the purport of which was threefold.—first, that as the value of the suit was very small, the case might be heard upon the evidence taken in the vernacular, or that it might be translated by the Court without the parties being charged the expenses of such translation; secondly, that the appellants might be allowed to put in certain documents as exhibits, and thirdly, that the appellants might be examined as witnesses orally, or upon commission.

Upon this application it was directed, first, that the documents might be put in as exhibits subject to any objection which might be made at the hearing, secondly, that the appellants might be examined in Court; and thirdly, that the case might be heard on the evidence taken in the vernacular.

The hearing of the appeal has now occupied our attention for three days. No application was made to us to examine any of the parties in Court, and in reply to our question, it was intimated to us that the pleaders, who had charge of the case, did not propose to put any of the parties into the witness-box. A considerable amount of new evidence has been taken, copies of translations of ex-[692]tracts from certain learned works have been put in, and we have been referred to a large mass of authorities. Three questions were at first stated by the appellants' vakil for argument, but as Mr. Twidale intimated to us, on behalf of the defendants, that they had decided to abandon the objection of limitation, there remain two points only to be dealt with, namely first, whether Jalwandohi was acquired out of joint funds, and, secondly, whether the adoption is invalid. We think that the finding of the Munsif upon the first of these points ought to be confirmed.

There is evidence that Jalwandohi was not family property of Pahar Singh, but was acquired by Ram Guman Singh, an important portion of this evidence consists of an admission contained in a plaint in a former suit. In the second paragraph of that plaint, which was filed by Nowrungi and Amani, there is an admission that mouzah Jalwandohi was purchased by Ram Guman Singh, son of Banwari, with his exclusive funds in the name of Ban Pershad, one of the relatives. It is contended by the learned pleader for the appellants that this admission by Nowrungi cannot bind the plaintiffs, inasmuch as they, being members of a Mitakshara family, do not derive title from their father; are not privies in title with him; and therefore cannot be bound by any admission made by him. Without deciding whether this is a good objection or not (see, however, the remarks of the Privy Council in L R, 7 I A, 191) we think that there is another principle upon which this admission must be held to be relevant evidence, and that is the principle that it was an admission against the interest of the person making it. When Nowrungi and Amani admitted that mouzah Jalwandohi was purchased by Ram Guman Singh with his exclusive funds, they made an admission against their own interest, because the effect of that admission was that they could make no claim to a share of that property. If Amani were born blind and were therefore incapable of inheriting, the admission would not be against interest so far as he was concerned, but it was clearly against the interest of Nowrungi, the father of the plaintiffs, and as he is dead, the statement containing the admission is good evidence. An admission against interest is relevant not only against privies by title, but also against strangers, and we think that taking this admission along with the oral evidence, we must [693] decide that mouzah Jalwandohi was purchased with separate funds and is not part of the joint family property.

We then come to the question of adoption. The plaintiffs contend that the adoption was invalid on two grounds. first, because the adoptive father being a Kayastha and in their view entitled to rank amongst the three superior classes, could not adopt a sister's son; secondly, because Bissessur Dyal was adopted by two persons, viz., Chandan and Badam Koer, and this double adoption was wholly invalid. We shall consider these two grounds of objection separately: first, as to the allegation that Chandan being a Kayastha and entitled to rank amongst the three superior classes, could not adopt a sister's son, we have to consider two points : first, whether, according to the Hindu law, it is competent to a member of the three superior classes to adopt a sister's son, and, secondly, whether a Kayastha is entitled to rank amongst the three superior classes. As to the first point, we think that there can be no doubt, and we take it to be settled law that a member of any of the three superior classes—Brahmins, Kshetrias and Vaisyas—cannot, according to Hindu law, adopt a sister's son. Abundant authority for this proposition will be found in the following works : Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 180 ; Strange's Hindu Law, edition of 1830, vol. I, p. 83, Norton's leading cases on Hindu Law, vol. I, pages 69 and 70 and the authorities there quoted, Baboo Shyama Churn Sirkar's Vyavastha Darpana, page 549, and the following pages of the third edition, and two cases to be found in I. L. R., 3 Bom., 73 and 298.

As to the second question, whether Kayasthas are entitled to rank amongst the three superior classes, a vast mass of authorities has been quoted to us during the hearing of this appeal. Considerable research and ingenuity of argument have been displayed in discovering these authorities and placing them before us. The following, amongst other authorities, were referred to. Padma, Purana, Yajnavalkya, Mr Mandlik's work on Hindu Law, Mitakshara, Viramirodaya, Wilson's Glossary, Ward on Hindu Law, Steele on Castes, Vivada Chintamani, Sherring on Caste, Mr. Sarradhicare's work on Hindu Law, being the Tagore Law Lectures of 1880, some census reports, and reports of local officers contained therein, Elliot's Races of British India, the Gazetteers of N.-W. Provinces and Oudh, Professor Jolly's Institutes of Narada, Max Muller's Sacred Books of the East, and the Dattaka Mimansa. Many of the arguments addressed to us rested upon the somewhat doubtful legends of Hindu mythology, and although no doubt very ingenious, were not, however, based upon modern facts, proved or undisputed, or characterized by that conclusive force, which are necessary in order to have weight with a Court of Justice in this practical age. We think that the whole question has been fairly summed up in the following passage of Babu Shyama Churn Sirkar's Vyavastha Darpana—"There is, therefore, a preponderance of authority to evince that the Kayasthas, whether of Bengal or of any other country, were Kshetrias. But since several centuries passed, the Kayasthas (at least those of Bengal) have been degenerated and degraded to Sudradom, not only by using after their proper names the surname 'Dasa' peculiar to the Sudras, and giving up their own, which is 'Barma,' but principally by omitting to perform the regenerating ceremony 'upanayana' hallowed by the Gayatri."

It has been contended that however valuable Babu Shyama Churn's opinion may be as regards Bengal proper, there is a difference as regards Behar, and the Kayasthas of Behar. It had been established by evidence to our satisfaction that there was a difference in respect of the questions essential to this enquiry, and that the Kayasthas of Behar, as a class, had generally performed those ceremonies which might be supposed to have the effect of retaining them in the ranks of the three upper classes. We might accept this evidence and might come to a different conclusion from that to which we feel constrained upon the authorities and the evidence. I shall, therefore, consider the evidence which has been placed before us to show that the Kayasthas of Behar are an exception to the general principle contained in the opinion which I have just extracted from the work of Shyama Churn Sirkar. First, there is a Vyavastha by 96 pundits of Benares. Two of these pundits were examined as witnesses in the case and we are of opinion that the value which can be attached to the Vyavastha must be measured exactly by the value which can be given to the oral testimony of these two witnesses. The Vyavastha is a recent one and there is no provision of law which allows a Court of Justice [693] to accept as evidence a written opinion delivered by persons still alive who have not been called to the witness-box. Then, as regards the testimony of the two pundits who were examined (and this is perhaps the most valuable part of the oral testimony), we have to observe that these gentlemen do not speak with direct reference to Behar, and however valuable their opinion may be, if precise upon the point, with reference to the Kayasthas of the Upper Provinces, or of Benares, we think they cannot be accepted as an authority upon the subject as regards the Kaests of Behar.

The next piece of evidence consists of the decisions of the local Courts. Two cases only have been quoted. We think that these judicial instances are too few in number to establish an usage or custom such as is contended for. Were it otherwise, we think that in a matter of this sort very little weight can be given to the decision of the Subordinate Civil Courts.

Then we have a considerable quantity of oral evidence. This evidence, with the exception of one or two witnesses, consists of the testimony of persons who are themselves Kaests and whose interest in the subject-matter of this proceeding is therefore considerable. Under the circumstances, we think that this evidence must be accepted with very considerable caution. But when we come to examine this evidence, we think that it does not, to any very material extent, advance the case of the plaintiffs. The examination of the witnesses was directed principally to show that, in four particulars, Kayasthas of Behar observed religious or other rules which would have the effect of giving them a title to rank amongst the three superior classes. These four particulars are—first, wearing the sacred thread, secondly, ability to perform the homa, thirdly, the rule as to the period of impurity and, fourthly, the rule as to the incompetence of illegitimate sons to succeed. The practice as regards adoption has also been made the subject of argument, but as this is the very point in dispute and as the instances supposed to have been established by evidence are exceedingly few, we set but little value upon this portion of the evidence. We have considered the evidence with respect to the four particulars just mentioned, and the impression which it creates on our minds is that no such uniformity has been established as amounts to legal proof of the custom or usage contended for. [696] Some of the witnesses state, as a fact, that the sacred thread was not usually worn. As regards the period of impurity observed, there is a remarkable diversity in the practice of different persons. Taking the whole evidence together, we think that it fails to establish that the Kayasthas of Behar, as a class, have observed the four rules relied upon so uniformly and so regularly that they are entitled to say that upon the basis of these observances they must rank among the three superior classes. It must be borne in mind that what has been sought to be proved in this case is not an usage in a particular family, but the custom of a class, that is, the whole class of Behar Kayasthas and regarding this custom as the point to be proved, we think that the evidence fails to establish it.

The conclusion then to which we are led upon the authorities and upon the evidence which has been submitted to us is this, that the plaintiffs have not shown that the Kayasthas of Behar rank amongst the three superior classes, and that, therefore, the adoption of a sister's son by Chandan was invalid.

But it is alleged that the adoption is invalid upon another ground, viz., that Bissessur Dyal was adopted by two persons—Chandan and Badam Koer. The original deed of adoption is not before us and no attempt has been made to give us secondary evidence of its contents. It is said that there was a copy in another record which was referred to by the Court below, but no steps have been taken to bring that copy or that record up to this Court. Reliance has been placed upon an admission made by Bissessur Dyal in a petition filed in Court by him. We think, however, that the statement there contained cannot be interpreted as an admission that he was doubly adopted, that is, adopted by the two persons Chandan and Badam Koer. There is no pretext that Badam Koer, the widow of Banwari, had any authority from her husband to adopt a son, and we think that we cannot say that Badam Koer should (upon the statement in the petition just referred to) be taken to have adopted Bissessur not to her husband but to herself, as was pressed upon us by the appellant's vakil. If Bissessur Dyal had been adopted by Chandan and at the same time by Badam Koer on behalf of her husband Banwari, there can be no doubt that upon the authorities both adoptions [697] would be invalid. But if, on the other hand, Bissessur Dyal were adopted by Chandan, and Badam Koer, being a member of that branch of the family, that is, the branch descended from Kulwanth Singh, had merely assented to such adoption, we cannot say that the fact of Badam Koer's joining in the adoption with this object would in any respect invalidate it as an adoption by Chandan. The deed of adoption is not before us, no positive evidence has been given to show that Bissessur Dyal was adopted by two persons simultaneously. The statement in the petition cannot, in our opinion, be interpreted as an admission of such a double adoption. We cannot therefore say that Bissessur's adoption by Chandan is invalid upon this ground. The result is that the decree of the Munsif dismissing the plaintiffs' suit must be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 7th May, 1884

PRESENT.

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS

Gopi Nath Chobey..... One of the defendants

versus

Bhugwat Pershad and another... . Plaintiffs

Suit for Malikana—Benamidar—Res judicata—Adverse possession—Court of Jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit—Act XIV of 1882, s. 13—Act XV of 1877, sch II, arts. 120, 131, 144.

So long as the benami system is recognized in this country, it is to be presumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that a suit instituted by a benamidar has been instituted with the full authority of the beneficial owner, and any decision made in such suit will be as much binding upon the real owner as if the suit had been brought by the real owner himself. Meheroomssa Bibee v. Hur Churn Bose (10 W. R., 220), Kallee Prosunno Bose v. Dmo Nath Bose Mullick (19 W. R., 434), and Sita Nath Shah v. Nobin Chunder Roy (5 C. L. R., 102) discussed.

In a suit for malikana the issue between the parties substantially raises the question of the proprietary right to the estate in respect of which the malikana is claimed, and when the question of the proprietary right has been decided in a previous suit between the same parties, a subsequent suit for malikana will be barred as res judicata.

[698] In s. 13 of Act XIV of 1882 the words "in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit" refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time the first suit is brought. Thus when the first suit is within the jurisdiction of a Munsif, and the subsequent suit, by reason of an increase in value of the property, is beyond his jurisdiction, such subsequent suit would nevertheless be barred, inasmuch as if the subsequent suit had been brought at the time when the first suit was brought, the Munsif would have been competent to try it.

Previous to 1825 dearah X accreted to mouzah Y, and some time before 1860 the malik of Y executed two conveyances in favour of A and B, respectively. In 1860 A sued B in the Munsif's Court for possession of a share in X which B claimed under his conveyance. In that suit A succeeded on the ground that B's conveyance did not cover the share claimed by him in X, but merely covered the share in the mouzah itself, whereas by his conveyance A had acquired the right to the share in X which he claimed. In 1866 the Collector refused to recognize B's right to malikana payable in respect of the share in X, which had been the subject of the suit in 1860, or to register his name in respect thereof, but acknowledged A's right thereto, relying on the decision of the Civil Court in the suit between A and B. Subsequently B's representatives, C and D, in 1876, sought to have their names registered in respect of the same malikana, but they were opposed by E, who alleged that A had been acting throughout as his benamidar. The Collector referred the case under s. 55 of Act VII of 1876 to the Civil Court, and the application of C and D was eventually disallowed. C and D thereupon, on the 5th November 1880, instituted the present suit against E, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, for a declaration of their right to the malikana, and for a reversal of the order refusing to allow their names to be registered in respect thereof.

Held, that inasmuch as the allegation made by E, in the proceedings held in 1876 on the application by C and D before the Collector, and afterwards upon the reference before the Civil Court, that A had been acting in the matter merely as his benamidar, was uncontradicted by C and D in their plaint in the present suit, there was sufficient evidence upon which to hold that that fact was true.

Held, also, that the suit was barred as res judicata on the ground that the right to malikana was substantially the same question as the proprietary right to the share in the dearah, and that this issue had been tried and decided in the suit in 1860 in favour of A, who must be taken to be E, that the fact that the previous suit had been brought in a Munsif's Court, whereas the present suit was brought before a Subordinate Judge, did not affect the question, inasmuch as the property was the same, and it was not shown that the present suit, if brought in 1860, would not [699] have been within the jurisdiction of the Munsif, nor was it alleged that the suit in 1860 was beyond his jurisdiction.

Held, further, that the suit was barred by limitation, being governed either by Arts. 120, 131*, or 144 of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), because—

* [Art 131 —

Description of suit.	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run.
To establish a periodically recurring right.	Twelve years ..	When the plaintiff is first refused the enjoyment of the right.]

(1) there being no allegation of dispossession, if it were contended that the suit was one for possession of an interest in immoveable property, art 144* would apply,

(2) if it were contended that the suit was for the purpose of establishing a periodically recurring right, pure and simple, art. 131 would apply, and the period must be reckoned from 1866, when the plaintiff was first refused the enjoyment of the right,

(3) if, however, it were said to be a suit to establish a periodically recurring right, and something in addition, inasmuch as the right carried with it a right to the property itself, if the parties consented to take a settlement when the time for concluding the next temporary or permanent settlement came, art 120 must be held to apply

But that, in any event, inasmuch as in the year 1866 the Collector refused to recognize B's right to the malikana and adverse possession, so far as possession could be taken of such an interest in immoveable property, was then taken by A, or in other words by E, because it must be taken that the Collector since that date had been holding for A, whose right he had then recognized, after refusing to recognize the right claimed by B, the present suit having been instituted in 1880 was equally barred whichever of the above articles was held to apply. Rao Karan Singh v Raja Bakur Ali Khan (L R, 9 I A., 99) referred to and distinguished

THE plaintiffs brought this suit to obtain a declaration of their right to 6 annas 17 d. 18 c of the malikana money of dearah Afzulpur which had formed in front of what they alleged to be their estate, and to have their names registered in the Collector's office in respect thereof in place of the defendants.

They alleged that mouzah Syedpur Mosleh consisted of several kulums or estates, and that there were 154 bighas 8 cottas of land belonging in common to the kulums of Syedpur Mosleh and dearah Afzulpur. They stated that they were the purchasers of that kulum of Syedpur Mosleh of which the touzi number was 319, and the sudder jama Rs 423-13-4, and that out of the joint land 65 bighas 10 cottas 12 dbans belonged to Syedpur Mosleh, that one Behari Mahton was the proprietor of Syedpur Mosleh, having purchased it from one Tafuzzul Hosain, and that they were the auction purchasers of the right, title and interest of Behari Mahton, [700] that as dearah Afzulpur had formed in front of Syedpur Mosleh contiguous to the joint land, they, as proprietors of the main land, had a right to the settlement thereof in proportion to their shares in the joint land; and that as the settlement of the shares had been concluded with a third party, they were entitled to get the amount sued for out of the malikana fixed.

That they had presented an application to the Collector to have their names registered, but on the defendant filing an objection to their right to the malikana money. the Collector referred the case under s 55 of Act VII of 1876 to the Judge, who in turn referred it to the Additional Subordinate Judge. The latter official on the 10th October 1879 disallowed the plaintiffs' application, and accordingly the Collector directed the registration of the names in accordance with the findings of the Additional Subordinate Judge.

Description of suit	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run
For possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not hereby otherwise specially provided for.	Twelve years	When the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff

The plaintiffs therefore brought this suit with the object above stated.

In answer thereto the defendants contended that, inasmuch as the right to the share in the dearah in respect of which the malikana money now claimed was payable, was the subject of a suit between Behari Mahton and one Sheik Rowshun Ali who, the defendants alleged, was their benamidar, and as the decision of the Court in that suit was in favour of Rowshun Ali, the present suit was barred as res judicata. They also set up a title by twelve years' adverse possession, and contended that the suit was barred by limitation, and further alleged that the dearah formed a separate mehal, and did not appertain to mouzah Syedpur Mosleh at all.

It appeared from the evidence in the case that previous to 1860 in all settlements made by the Collector in respect of dearah Afzulpur, the proprietors of Syedpur Mosleh were treated as the maliks, that some time previous to that year the owner of the share now in dispute of both Syedpur Mosleh and the dearah executed two conveyances in favour of Behari Lal and Rowshun Ali, Behari Lal's being of the earlier date, that in 1860 Rowshun Ali sued Behari Lal (the suit referred to by the defendant) for possession of the share in the dearah, and for the reversal of an order of the revenue authorities settling it with Behari Lal, and in that suit he was successful, the Court holding that Behari Lal's [701] conveyance only included the share in mouzah Syed Mosleh, and did not affect the dearah, and that Rowshun Ali by his conveyance had acquired the title claimed by him to the dearah.

In the year 1866 the question of the right to receive malikana came before the revenue authorities, and the Collector, relying upon the decision in the suit between the parties, refused to recognize Behari Lal's claim, but allowed that of Rowshun Ali.

'In the present suit, upon the above facts, the first Court found that there was nothing on the record to show that Rowshun Ali was benamidar for the defendants, and that the suit was not barred as being res judicata, but inasmuch as it considered the plaintiffs had failed to establish their proprietary right in the dearah, it dismissed the suit. In that Court the plea of limitation was not considered as being necessary for the determination of the suit on the facts found.

The lower Appellate Court found that the dearah was an increment to Syedpur Mosleh, and that the proprietors of the latter had a right to the malikana money.

On the question of res judicata, that Court held that the suit was not barred, for it considered that, although Rowshun Ali must be taken to have been only benamidar for the defendant, still in the previous suit there was no question as to a right to malikana money, and there was no evidence as to what was the title set up by Rowshun Ali, and further, that the decree in that suit was by a Munsif, and the present suit being beyond a Munsif's jurisdiction, the plea of res judicata could not be supported under Act XIV of 1882.

Upon the question of limitation, the Court held that, inasmuch as the Government acknowledged that the malikana money was due, and was prepared to pay it to whoever should prove his right to it in the Civil Court, and as there was no evidence of anyone having drawn it adversely to the plaintiffs for twelve years, coupled with the facts that the right to it was not raised in the previous suit, and that it was an annually recurring charge and might be sued for within twelve years of its becoming due—Hurmuzi Begum v. Hurdaynarain (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 921)—the suit was not barred.

The Court accordingly reversed the decree of the Court of First Instance, and gave the plaintiffs a decree as prayed for with costs.

[702] The defendants accordingly now specially appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Digumbur Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Durga Dass Dutt for the Respondents

The Judgment of the High Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—The plaintiffs (respondents before us) brought this suit for establishing their right to certain malikana money in respect of a 6 annas 17d. 18c. share of dearah Afzulpur bearing touzi No 71. The previous history of this litigation is as follows. There was a permanently-settled estate, which is recorded in the rent-roll of the Collectorate as No 319, consisting of a mouzah named Syedpur Mosleh. It is admitted in this case that dearah Afzulpur lies in front of Syedpur Mosleh. The dearah accreted some time before 1825. Before 1860 in all the settlements which the Collector concluded in respect of the dearah in question, the maliks or proprietors of the permanently-settled estate No 319 were treated as the maliks of dearah Afzulpur. Some time before 1860, the owner of the 6 annas 17d. 18c. share, viz., the share in dispute in this case, of both Syedpur Mosleh and dearah Afzulpur, executed two conveyances, one in favour of Rowshun Ali and the other in favour of one Behari Lal. Behari Lal's conveyance was of prior date. In 1860 Rowshun Ali sued Behari Lal for possession of 5 annas of the dearah in suit and for reversal of the order of the revenue authorities settling it with Behari Lal. The Court on that occasion came to the conclusion that Behari Lal had purchased only Syedpur Mosleh, and that under his conveyance he had acquired no right to dearah Afzulpur. On the other hand, the Court held that under the conveyance executed in favour of Rowshun Ali, he (Rowshun Ali) had acquired a title in the aforesaid dearah. That suit was accordingly decided in favour of Rowshun Ali. In the year 1866, on the occasion of another temporary settlement, the question as to the right to receive malikana again came before the [703] Collector, and the Collector, relying upon the Civil Court's decision in the suit of 1860, refused to recognize Behari Lal's right to malikana, allowing Rowshun Ali's right to the share of the malikana. It is not shown on this record that Behari Lal or Rowshun Ali has, since the date of the Collector's rohokari settling this malikana question, drawn the malikana in question. Behari Lal's right and interest in the property which he acquired under his conveyance were brought to sale in execution of a decree, and the plaintiffs (respondents) before us purchased them. After the new Registration Act came into operation, the plaintiffs, on the strength of their purchase, presented an application for the registration of their names in respect of a 6 annas 17d. 18c. share of the malikana money in question. They were opposed by the defendant Gopi Nath Chobey. The Collector referred the case, under s. 55, Act VII of 1876, to the Civil Court, and on the 18th October 1879 disallowed the plaintiffs' application. Thereupon the present suit was brought on the 5th November 1880.

It is alleged by the defendant Gopi Nath Chobey that Rowshun Ali was his benamidar only. The defendant Gopi Nath Chobey, who is the appellant before us, amongst other pleas, relied upon the decision in the suit of 1860 being res judicata, and also upon the plea of limitation. He contended that, under the circumstances of this case, the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation. On the merits his case was that the conveyance to Behari Lal did not transfer any right to dearah Afzulpur.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The District Judge, on appeal by the plaintiff, has reversed that decision.

The District Judge has decided all three questions in favour of the plaintiff. He holds that under his purchase, Behari Lal acquired a right to dearah Afzulpur, which was only an accretion to mouzah Syedpur Mosleh. He has overruled the pleas of res judicata and limitation. Upon all these three points this second appeal has been argued, but it is sufficient for us to notice only the pleas of res judicata and limitation, and we are of opinion that upon both these pleas this appeal should succeed, first, as regards res judicata. The District Judge has found as a fact, with reference to which finding there is an objection on the other side, that Rowshun Ali was the benamidar of the appellant Gopi Nath Chobey. Notwithstanding that finding he is of opinion that the present claim is not barred by res judicata first, because there was no question about malikana in the suit of 1860, secondly, because it is not shown that the suit of 1860 was litigated by the parties upon the same title, and, thirdly, because the Munsif who tried that suit was not competent to try the present suit. The learned vakil for the respondents has urged that the District Judge is in error in assuming without evidence that Rowshun Ali is the benamidar of Gopi Nath Chobey. He has further contended that even supposing that Rowshun Ali was the benamidar of Gopi Nath, the suit of 1860 would not preclude the plaintiffs from contesting the same matter in a subsequent suit with the real owner—Gopi Nath Chobey. We shall notice these two objections, taken before us by the learned vakil for the respondents, first. As regards the first objection, it appears to us that the cases cited in support of it do not at all bear him out. With the exception of the decision in Meheroonissa Bibee v. Hur Churn Bose (10 W. R., 220) none of the other cases really touch this point. As regards the decision in that case, the observation relied upon appears to us to be a mere obiter dictum. There the question was whether the benamidar alone was entitled to maintain the suit without bringing upon the record the beneficial owner. In the course of the decision upon this point one of the learned Judges who decided that case made some observations which no doubt support the contention of the learned vakil for the respondents. The other two cases are not in point. The decision in Kallee Prosunno Bose v. Dinonath Bose Mullick (19 W. R., 434) really turns upon the ground that all the parties interested in the suit were not plaintiffs or parties to it. There a party, not on the record, viz., one Kedar Nath Bose, stated in his deposition that the property in dispute in that case had been purchased in the benami name of his cousin, the plaintiff on the record, and he further stated that under that purchase he and his cousin, the plaintiff on the record, were jointly entitled to the property. Upon that state of things the learned Judges decided the case [705] upon the ground that all the persons entitled to the property were not joined as plaintiffs.

The other decision, viz., in the case of Sita Nath Shah v. Nobin Chunder Roy (5 C. L. R., 102) was on the question whether a benamidar alone, without joining the beneficial owner, is entitled to maintain a suit. Therefore none of the cases cited by the learned vakil for the respondents really can be relied upon as authorities upon the point now before us. But apart from authorities, it appears to us that so long as the benami system is to be recognized in this country, the proper rule, in our opinion, is that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it is to be presumed that the benamidar has instituted the suit with the full authority of the beneficial owner, and if he does so, any decision come to in his presence would be as much binding upon the real owner as if the suit had been brought by the real owner himself. That being so, we do not think that this objection is valid. The next objection that was taken was that there was no evidence upon which the learned Judge could find that Rowshun Ali was really the benamidar for Gopi Nath Chobey. It appears to us that in the proceedings before the Civil Court under s. 55, Act VII of 1876, it was taken for granted by the Judge who decided that case that Rowshun Ali was the benamidar for Gopi Nath. The Subordinate Judge who tried that case, as found by the District Judge in this case, treated the defendant (appellant) Gopi Nath Chobey as the real owner of the share which had been purchased in the name of Rowshun Ali. In the plaint it is not stated by the plaintiffs that the Subordinate Judge was not right in treating Gopi Nath, the defendant, as the benamidar of Rowshun Ali, and whether the recital in the decision of the Subordinate Judge in the proceeding under s. 55, Act VII of 1876, is any evidence upon this point or not, it is clear to us that the said recital, coupled with the fact that it is not contradicted by the plaintiffs in the plaint, is some evidence of the fact that Rowshun Ali is the benamidar for Gopi Nath. Therefore we think that this objection also must fail.

We now come to the grounds upon which the District Judge has overruled the plea of res judicata. The first ground taken [706] by the District Judge is that the former suit was for possession of the dearah itself, and that no question of malikana was in issue. It seems to us that this ground is untenable. Substantially the same question is at issue in both these suits, viz., the proprietary right to the dearah in dispute. In the suit of 1860, if Behari Lal had succeeded in establishing his proprietary right to the dearah, the suit of Rowshun Ali would have been dismissed, so also in this case, if the plaintiffs can establish as against Gopi Nath Chobey, the appellant, their proprietary right to the dearah, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a decree. The substantial question is therefore identical, viz., who is the proprietor of mouzah Afzulpur. The second ground upon which the District Judge has overruled the plea of res judicata is equally untenable. We have the decree passed in 1860 in which it was decided in favour of Rowshun Ali (and it may be taken, now that Rowshun Ali is only another name for Gopi Nath, the appellant before us), that Gopi Nath under his purchase from the common vendor of both himself and Behari Lal, had acquired a title to the dearah in dispute and that Behari Lal had no title to it. It is not shown that that title, which was established in the suit of 1860 in favour of Rowshun Ali or Gopi Nath, the appellant before us, has been extinguished. Under these circumstances, it is reasonable to presume that Gopi Nath is in this suit relying upon the same title upon which Rowshun Ali on his behalf obtained a decree in the suit of 1860. Unless the plaintiffs can show that that title has been extinguished and that Gopi Nath is really relying upon a different title, it is reasonable to presume that Gopi Nath is litigating the same question in this suit under the same title. As regards the third ground, no doubt the District Judge's view is to a great extent supported by the language of s. 13 of Act XIV of 1882. The first paragraph of the section, which alone is material, is as follows — "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised." Now the District Judge says that, as the Munsif who tried the former suit would [707] not be competent to try the present suit which is "the subsequent suit," therefore the provisions of s. 13 do not apply. We are of opinion that this construction of s. 13 is not correct. It is well known that in this country the value of landed property is increasing every day. A suit regarding a particular property may be, so far as regards the pecuniary value of it, properly cognizable by a Munsif to-day, and ten years hence a suit for that property, having regard to its pecuniary value then, might not be cognizable by the Munsif. But it would be unreasonable to hold, in a suit which might be brought ten years hence, that a decision between the same parties to-day passed by a Munsif having full jurisdiction would not be res judicata ten years hence. The reasonable construction of the words "in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit" seems to us to be that it must refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought, that is to say, if the Court which tried the first suit was competent to try the subsequent suit if then brought, the decision of such Court would be conclusive under s. 13, although on a subsequent date, by a rise in the value of such property or from any other cause, the said Court ceased to be the proper Court, so far as pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned, to take cognizance of a suit relating to that property. In this case, in the suit of 1860, there was no objection taken that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain it, and therefore the parties being the same, it may be taken as conclusively decided by that suit as between them that the Munsif in that suit had jurisdiction to entertain it. The present suit relates to the same property, it is true that it has been brought in the Subordinate Judge's Court, and no objection has been taken to the value put upon the claim, still if the first suit was cognizable by the Munsif, the second suit, which embraces the same property, must be held to have been cognizable by the Munsif also if brought in 1860. Putting this construction upon s. 13 it seems to us that the decision in the suit of 1860 comes within the purview of it. Upon all these grounds, we are therefore of opinion that the plea of res judicata taken by the defendant (appellant) should prevail.

* As regards the other plea, viz, that of limitation, it appears to us that one of the following articles, viz, 131, 144, or 120 must [708] apply to the present suit. If it can be held that this is a suit for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein, then in that case it is quite clear that article 144 must apply. Article 142 is not applicable, because that article contemplates a suit for possession of immoveable property when the plaintiff, while in possession, has been dispossessed. There is no allegation of dispossession in this suit, therefore if it is a suit for possession of an interest in immoveable property, article 144 applies. Again, if it be said that it is not a suit for possession of an interest in land, then either article 131 or 120 is applicable. Article No 131 is to this effect "For a suit to establish a periodically recurring right twelve years from the time when the plaintiff is first refused the enjoyment of the right." In this case the plaintiffs are seeking to establish, no doubt, a periodically recurring right, viz, a right to receive malikana annually, but there is also a further claim involved in the suit, because that right carries with it a right to the property itself, if the parties consent to take a settlement when the time for concluding the next temporary or permanent settlement comes. Therefore it cannot be said that it is purely a suit to establish a periodically recurring right. But if the present suit do not fall within article 144 or article 131 it must then fall under article 120. If article 144 applies, we have to determine whether in this case the possession of the defendant did not become adverse to the plaintiff for more than twelve years. In the year 1866, when the Collector refused to recognize the right of Behari Lal and recognized the right of Rowshun Ali, adverse possession, so far as possession could be taken of an interest in immoveable property like the one in dispute in this case, was taken by Rowshun Ali. Upon this point the learned vakil for the respondents strongly relied upon a decision in the case of Rao Karran Singh v. Raja Bakar Ali Khan (L R., 9 I A, 99). It was held in that suit that upon the facts found in the lower Court, article 145 of the second schedule of Act IX of 1871, which corresponds with article 144 of the present Limitation Act, was applicable, and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee further held that, with reference to the facts found in the case, adverse possession against the plaintiff had not been taken for more than twelve years. These [709] facts were as follows —One Badam Singh was entitled to the property in dispute in that case and upon his death his widow took possession. Karan Singh, who was the appellant before their Lordships, brought a suit to turn the widow out of possession, upon the ground that Badam Singh had made him his heir-at-law. That suit was defended by the widow, and after her death the grandchildren of Badam Singh, Kharag and Rudar Singh, were made parties to the suit. The claim of Karan Singh, the appellant before the Privy Council, was dismissed. Then Karan Singh brought another suit against Kharag and Rudar Singh for possession of the same property, on the ground that they, Kharag and Rudar Singh, who were the sons of a daughter, were not, according to the custom of the family, entitled to inherit the estate. While that suit was pending, the Collector, in order to secure the Government revenue, attached the property and retained possession from 1861 till October 1863, when, in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court, the possession of the property in dispute, together with the surplus profits of the estate lying in deposit in the Collectorate, were made over to Karan Singh.

Then the suit out of which arose the appeal under consideration, was brought within twelve years from October 1863, but not within twelve years from 1861 when the Collector took possession. Under these circumstances, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the Collector's possession from 1861 to October 1863 was not adverse to the plaintiff in that suit. Their Lordships observed

"It was the duty of the Collector, whilst in possession under the attachment, to collect the rents from the ryots, and having paid the Government revenue and the expenses of collection, to pay over the surplus to the real owner. If the defendant was the real owner, the surplus belonged to him, but if, on the other hand, the infants were the right owners, then the surplus belonged to them." In this case it cannot be said that the Collector, supposing that the malikana money from the year 1866 is lying in deposit in his office, was holding it for the real owner, whoever he may be. In this case the Collector, under the power vested in him by the Settlement Regulations, had to decide at the time of the settlement as to the person who was entitled to the [710] malikana, and under this power vested in him by the Regulations, he decided that question in favour of Rowshun Ali and against Behari Lal. Therefore, it is clear that after that decision he was holding for the person whose right he had recognized, he having the right to decide that question under the Settlement Regulations.

Therefore, in this case, it must be held that from the year 1866 adverse possession, so far as adverse possession can be held of a right of this description, has been held by Gopi Nath Chobey, the appellant before us. If art. 131 is applicable, the claim would be equally barred, because the plaintiffs are bound to bring their suit within twelve years from the time when they were first refused the enjoyment of the right. It is quite clear that at least in the year 1866 they were first refused the enjoyment of that right, and therefore the plaintiffs were bound to bring their suit within twelve years from that date. For similar reasons, if art. 120 be applicable, the suit should have been brought within six years from the date of refusal. We are, therefore, of opinion that the suit must be dismissed, both upon the grounds of limitation and res judicata, under s 13 of the Civil Procedure Code.

We reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 1st May, 1884

PRESENT.

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR JUSTICE BEVERLEY

Chunder Kant Roy . . . (Defendant) Appellant

versus

Krishna Sunder Roy . . . (Plaintiff) Respondent

Specific Performance—Oral Agreement—Sale to third person in contravention of Agreement—Notice—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 261-262

Where a bona fide contract, whether oral or written, is made for the sale of property, and a third party afterwards buys the property with notice of the prior contract, the title of the party claiming under the prior contract prevails against the subsequent purchaser, although the latter's purchase may have been registered, and although he has obtained possession under his purchase.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2733 of 1882, against the decree of G. G. Dey, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 23rd of September 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Debendra Nath Roy, Officiating Second Munsif of Netrokona, dated 11th of August 1881 [711] THIS was a suit for specific performance of an oral agreement to sell certain property.

The plaintiff alleged that one Brojo Sundari Dasi, defendant No. 1, orally agreed to sell to him certain property for Rs. 112, and that he had paid her Rs. 28 as earnest money in connection with this contract. That he had tendered to defendant No. 1 the whole of the purchase money, and had asked for a conveyance of the property, but she had refused to sell to him, and had since sold this very property to defendant No. 3 (who was aware of the agreement entered into between plaintiff and defendant No. 1) under a registered deed of sale. Brojo Sundari Dasi, her husband, and the vendee of the property, were all made defendants. The defendant No. 1 denied having entered into any agreement with the plaintiff for the sale of the property. Defendant No. 3 contended that he was a bona fide purchaser for value, and also denied the agreement between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1. The Munsif found that the agreement had been entered into and the earnest money paid, and that defendant No. 3 had notice of the agreement between defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff, he, therefore, set aside the sale to defendant No. 3, and ordered the defendant No. 1 to execute a kobala in favour of the plaintiff, and in default that the decree should be taken to be the kobala. Defendant No. 3 appealed to the District Judge, who upheld the decision of the Munsif, dismissing the appeal with costs.

Defendant No. 3 appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Hari Mohun Chakravarti for the Appellant.

Baboo Girish Chunder Chowdhry for the Respondent.

Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Garth, C. J. (BEVERLEY, J., concurring) —We think there is no ground for this appeal.

It is contended, that as this case does not come within s. 48 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), the Court has no right to enforce the agreement of the 20th of February 1881 as against the defendant. It is said that, although the agreement was prior to the purchase by the defendant, still as the agreement was not accompanied by possession, the title under the defendant's registered deed ought to prevail.

[712] But this argument entirely ignores the doctrine of notice. It is clear law, both in England and in this country, that where a bona fide contract, whether oral or written, is made for the sale of property, and another party afterwards buys the property with notice of the contract, the title of the party claiming under the contract prevails against the subsequent purchaser, although his purchase may have been registered, and although he has obtained possession under his purchase.

This has been decided by MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ., in the case of Nema Churn Dhalal v. Kukul Bag (I L. R., 6 Cal., 535. 7 C. L. R., 487) to which the provisions of s. 27 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877 did not apply.

But the present case comes clearly within the purview of sub-section (b) of s. 27 of that Act.

That section enacts—"Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, specific performance of a contract may be enforced against—

(a) either party to the contract, or

(b) any other persons claiming under either party to a contract by a title arising subsequently to the contract, except a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith, and without notice of the original contract

This shows, that where a party has notice of a prior contract for sale, he cannot, by any purchase that he may subsequently make, override it.

We think, therefore, that the decision of the Court below is right, with the exception of the latter portion of the decretal order, which directs, that "if on the receipt of the above sum of Rs 84 from the plaintiff, the defendant No. 1 do not execute the said kobala, this decree shall, to all intents and purposes, be deemed a kobala to the plaintiff for the property in dispute."

The lower Courts had no right to make an order of this kind.

We, therefore, set aside that portion of the decree, and direct that in the event of the defendant No. 1 failing or refusing to comply with the decree, the Court shall proceed to exercise the powers which are given by ss. 261 and 262 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the purpose of carrying out the conveyance.

The appeal is dismissed with costs

Appeal dismissed

[713] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 23rd May, 1884

PRESENT

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT , CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

The Oriental Bank Corporation and another.....Plaintiffs

versus

Gobinloll Seal and others. . Defendants

Suit by creditor on behalf of all other creditors—Administration suit—Legal personal representative—Refusal to sue—Receiver, Suit by Persons interested in the estate of a testator, not being the legal personal representatives of the testator, will not be allowed to sue persons possessed of assets belonging to the testator, unless it is satisfactorily made out that there exist assets which might be recovered, and which, but for such suit, would probably be lost to the estate.

Such a suit may be supported where the relations between the legal personal representative and the debtor to the estate present a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the legal personal representative of a suit against the debtor to recover the assets of the testator, and where there is a strong probability of the loss of such assets unless such a suit be allowed.

But where there is an administration suit already pending the proper course to pursue is to obtain an order in the administration suit, directing either a suit to be brought in the name of the legal personal representative, or appointing a Receiver to sue ; and in this country the Courts might have the power to direct such Receiver to sue in his own name.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of Mr Justice PIGOT, dated the 14th September 1883.

The suit was instituted by the Oriental Bank Corporation and the Delhi and London Bank on behalf of themselves and all other unsatisfied creditors of the late Heraloll Seal, against Gobinloll and Kannyloll Seal (as trustees of a certain indenture of settlement dated 21st February 1848, and as beneficiaries under the deed), Koosummoney Dossee, as widow, heiress and administratrix of the said Heraloll Seal, Biddomoney Dossee, the widow, heiress and administratrix of Russickloll Seal, the only son of Heraloll Seal, certain other persons as representatives of the beneficiaries under the deed of settlement, and J. C Macgregor as Receiver of the property comprised in the said deed of settlement, for the construction of the settlement of 21st February 1848, and for ascertainment of the rights of the parties thereunder, for a declaration that Heraloll Seal, deceased, was entitled [714] to an equal fifth part of the said property comprised in the said settlement, and for an account of what was due to the plaintiffs and the other unsatisfied creditors of the deceased, and for partition, etc.

The plaintiffs were the largest creditors of one Heraloll Seal, who died intestate in March 1876. administration to the estate of Heraloll was in May 1876 granted to his son Russickloll, and in the same month a creditor's suit, numbered 295 of 1876, was brought in the High Court by one Rose against Russickloll for the administration of Heraloll's estate. In June 1876 a decree for administration was made in such suit, and the usual accounts and enquiries directed. On the 25th February 1878 Russickloll died, and letters of administration de bonis non of the estate of the said Heraloll were granted to his widow Koosummoney, and the suit was revived against her and the widow of Russickloll—Biddomoney. And on the 12th August 1878 by a decree on further directions, a report, which had been previously made, finding, amongst other things, that the present plaintiffs were creditors of the estate of Heraloll, was confirmed. The properties comprised in this decree were, however, wholly insufficient to cover the plaintiffs' debt, a considerable portion of which remained unsatisfied.

It appeared that in 1848 Muttyloll Seal, the father of Heraloll, had executed a deed of settlement, by which he conveyed certain properties to trustees upon trust for the benefit of his family and that Muttyloll died in 1854.

The plaintiffs then brought this present suit (the administration suit No. 295 of 1876 being at that time, and at the hearing of the present appeal, still pending) to have it declared that the trusts of the deed of 1848 were void in law, that one-fifth part of the property affected by those trusts passed to Heraloll as one of the heirs of Muttyloll, and that such share formed a part of Heraloll's assets applicable to the payment of his debts, and after asking for partition, and certain other relief unnecessary for the purpose of this report, prayed that their suit might be taken as supplemental to suit No. 295 of 1876, without asking to reopen the decree in that suit.

They further stated that Behayloll Seal, who was interested in [715] contending that the trusts of the deed were valid, was a fit and proper person to be sued in and defend the suit on behalf of the other cestui que trust. Also that being the largest creditors (the debts due to them amounting to more than the debts of all the other creditors to the estate put together), it was fit and proper that they should sue in their own names on behalf of the other creditors, and as additional reasons stated that the defendant Koosummoney refused to take any proceedings, or to take part in any proceedings, with a view to impeach any of the provisions of the deed of settlement, alleging as her reason that under the terms of the deed of settlement any member of the family taking proceedings in a Court of Justice in any matter affecting the trusts thereof, would forfeit all right, benefit, and interest thereunder, that Koosummoney was also interested as a beneficiary under the settlement, and that the relation between her and the defendants Gobinloll and Kannyeloll Seal (who were both trustees and beneficiaries under the deed) were such as to create a substantial impediment to the prosecution by Koosummoney of the rights of the creditors of Heraloll's estate against the trustees of the settlement. Also that it was impossible that they could obtain the relief they now prayed for in suit No. 259 of 1876, and that, unless proceedings were allowed to be taken by creditors, the share of the said Heraloll comprised in the indenture (which formed the only available assets belonging to his estate, save the small and totally insufficient amount brought in under the suit 295 of 1876) could not be made available for payment of the unsatisfied claims of the plaintiffs and the other creditors.

It appeared from the pleadings, and from an order of NORRIS, J., in the administration suit, that the conduct of the administration suit of 1876, before mentioned, was in the hands of one Ram Das Coondoo (a tradesman who had dealings with the Seal family), and whose debt amounted in all to about Rs. 2,000, and that Ram Das Coondoo had in March 1883 applied in the administration suit and obtained a rule nisi for the appointment of a Receiver, with a view to bringing a suit for the same objects as the present suit. The plaintiffs in the present case opposed, contending that they were the largest creditors, that rule, however, stood over until the 23rd [716] April 1883, and in the meantime the plaintiffs obtained a rule calling upon Ram Das Coondoo and the present defendants to show cause why the plaintiffs should not bring this present suit in its present form. This rule was made absolute as against Ram Das Coondoo, but not as against the present defendants, the order expressly declaring that the present defendants were not bound by its tenor. This order was made on a petition entitled in the administration suit, and "in the matter of a suit intended to be brought," etc, the order itself, so far as is material, being as follows:—"It is ordered under the provisions of s 12 of the Charter that the said Oriental Bank Corporation, and the Delhi and London Bank, Ltd, be at liberty to institute a suit in this Court," etc., etc

The defendant Gobinloll in his written statement contended that the plaintiffs had no right or title to bring the suit in its present form; that the deed was valid, that no special circumstances had been shown entitling the plaintiffs as creditors to bring the suit.

The female defendants stated that, having regard to the provisions of the deed, that "any member of the family taking proceedings in Court in any matter affecting the trusts of the deed should forfeit all interest thereunder," they were unable to impeach the deed, and they submitted that the trusts thereof were valid.

Beharyloll contended that the trusts of the deed were valid, but denied that he was a fit person to represent the cestui que trust, many of whom were adverse to him in interest, and who contended that the said trust was not valid.

Mr. Phillips, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Stokoe for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Hill, Mr. Trevelyan, and Mr. O'Kinealy for Gobinloll Seal.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), Mr. Evans, Mr. Bonnerjee, for Kannyeloll Seal.

Mr. Paulst, Mr. Gasper, and Mr. Sale, for Beharyloll Seal.

Mr. T. A. Apear for Surrut Coomaree Dassee.

PIGOT, J. [after stating the facts of the case, continued].—I must first determine the question of the frame of the suit, and I regret to say that I shall be obliged to confine what I have to say [717] to that subject. The first objection raised by the defendants to the suit is, that this being a suit brought by creditors against persons, debtors to, or alleged to have in their possession property belonging to, the estate, it was not competent to the plaintiffs to maintain the suit, on the ground that the principle of the cases referred to at pages 2026, 2027 of Williams on Executors, where all the cases are mentioned, does not apply, and the plaintiffs are consequently not entitled to maintain the suit.

The general rule and the exception to it within which the plaintiffs contend that the present case comes are thus stated in Williams "Again the established rule has been that in ordinary cases persons who have possessed themselves of the property of the deceased or debtors to the estate generally, cannot be made parties to a bill against the executor. For regularly there can be no suit against the debtor but by the executor who has the right both in law and in equity. If he even releases, and is solvent, neither a creditor nor a residuary legatee can bring any bill against that debtor. There must be collusion or insolvency or some special case. The Court will interfere if there is such special case as collusion or insolvency, and thus the bill may be brought against both the debtor and the executors. And the general principle on which a debtor to the estate cannot be made a defendant to a bill by a creditor or residuary legatee against the executor unless collusion, insolvency or some special case be shown, has been held to apply equally to the case of a creditor overpaid by the executor. That is, if there is no collusion or special case, if the executor is not insolvent, he stands the middleman, responsible for the property misapplied by paying a man as a creditor who was not a creditor, as in the other case for the property outstanding in a debtor."

It is contended by the defendants that the circumstances of the case do not bring it within the scope of that exception from the general rule which is set forth in the passage I have just read. The plaintiffs relied on the case read in his opening by Mr. Phillips of Yeatman v Yeatman (1 R., 7 Ch D., 210).

Vice-Chancellor HALL in his judgment examines and summarises the previous decisions on this subject. It appears to me that the passage from Travis and Mithe cited by him at page 214, his [718] own summary at page 216, and the passage from the judgment of Vice-Chancellor CHATTERTON in Hilliard v. Eiffe (L R., 7 H L., 39), and the observations of BLACKBURN, M.R., in 6 Irish Equity Cases, Phillips v Phillips, sufficiently mark the boundaries of the doctrine in question for my guidance in this case. Vice-Chancellor TURNER in Travis v Mithe (9 Hare, 141) says upon an examination of the authorities "I believe it will be found that there is no instance of such a suit being maintained in the absence of special circumstances, and that collusion is clearly not the only ground on which such a bill can be supported. The cases I think may be considered to go to this extent, that such a bill may be supported in all cases where the relation between the executors and the surviving partners is such as to present a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the executors of the rights of the parties interested in the estate against the surviving partners." Now Vice-Chancellor CHATTERTON, in the case of Hilliard v. Eiffe, to which I have referred, and which is referred to in the passage I have read, says: "The rule originally was as laid down by Lord REDESDALE in his treatise and in the earlier cases, that there must be either collusion with, or insolvency of, the personal representative pleaded and proved to entitle a creditor or legatee to sue for recovery of assets. This rule was first relaxed in cases where the personal representative of a deceased partner was sued with a surviving partner, as in Bowsher v Watkins (1 R. & M., 277), for reasons unnecessary now to be considered. It was further relaxed when there was proved to have been an express refusal of the personal representative to sue, and the more readily when the assets in question were only recoverable in equity. It was said in some of the cases where this was done that such refusal might be deemed evidence of collusion within the original rule. But I think that this is too narrow a ground on which to rest the decision, as there are many cases where such a refusal could not have been ascribed to collusion. In Lancaster v. Evors (4 Beav., 158) Lord LANGDALE held that a refusal by the executors to recover certain assets was in itself sufficient to take the case out of the rule, and he also seemed to be of opinion that the rule only applied to a proceeding against a debtor to the estate, and did not extend to a proceeding to realize a specific fund in Court for the augmentation of the assets."

Then he refers to Consett v. Bell (1 Y. & C. C. C., 569), to which I need not refer, and says "The rule now appears to be subject to the exceptions of cases of collusion, of insolvency of the personal representatives, of refusal by them to sue whether collusively or bona fide or of the existence of what has been rather vaguely termed 'special' circumstances. The last exception seems to comprehend and to be confined to cases in which, from the nature of the assets or the position of the personal representatives, it would be either impossible, or at least seriously inconvenient, for the representatives to take proceedings," and Vice-Chancellor HALL in Yeatman v. Yeatman (L. R., 7 Ch. D., 210) thus closes his judgment "Notwithstanding the view that I have taken of this case with reference to the right to sue, my impression rather is that it would be a correct holding to say, that if the circumstances of any given case are such that upon an enquiry directed as to whether any and what proceedings should be taken, the Court, upon the materials before it, would come to the conclusion that it was a proper case for proceedings to be taken, although not necessarily and absolutely certain that they would be successful, there it would be a proper case to allow a party to sue in his own name."

In the case of Phillips v. Phillips [6 Ir. Eq. R., 509, (512)] the Master of the Rolls says "It is, however, contended that, although there be neither collusion or insolvency, the present is a special case, such as Lord ELDON may be supposed to have had in view in using those words in Alsager v. Rowley (6 Ves., 748), that the defence is evidence of unfair and fraudulent dealing on the part of the administrator. I confess I should have great difficulty in holding that this Court could assume a jurisdiction that does not belong to it, that is, to oblige a debtor by a suit here to pay a debt which he does not owe to the plaintiff, and for which he may not be liable in equity, unless facts were both alleged and proved by the plaintiff to warrant such an assumption. I find no case in which this jurisdiction has been exercised without making a special case for it by the bill and proving that case if the defendants controvert it." The defendants say that no case is made of such special circumstances of conduct on the part of the representatives, or of such relation between the representatives and the property sought to be recovered, as to warrant the application of the exceptional rule.

The first question is whether on the cases this contention is well founded, and at the hearing I confess it did not appear to me that the defendants made out such a case upon that point, or that it was as well sustained as upon consideration it appears to me now.

The circumstances stated by the plaintiffs are these --

That there is a clause in the deed, the precise words of which I need not recapitulate, providing that no person taking any benefit under that deed shall attempt to impeach its provisions on pain of forfeiture of his interest which clause is referred to in the defendants' written statement in the following manner.—

"These defendants are advised and believe that, having regard to the provision in the said deed that any member of the family taking any proceedings in any Court of Justice, in any matter affecting the said trust, should forfeit all the rights, benefits and interests bestowed on them by the said indenture, they cannot take part in impeaching any of the provisions of the said deed without endangering their said rights and interests, and that they ought not to be made parties to this suit, but ought to be dismissed therefrom."

It was contended by the learned Counsel for the defendant, Kanneloll Seal, that the clause referred to was an illegal provision, and contrary to the policy of the law, and that the law would not give effect to it in any way, and that I am not entitled for that reason to accept the existence of it as explaining or justifying such a reluctance on the part of the administratrix of Heraloll Seal, who takes a beneficial interest under the deed, as would be a serious obstacle to the prosecution of a suit by her, on behalf of his estate, to set aside the provisions of the trust deed so far as they affect it.

But I do not agree with this argument. I should not be prepared, perhaps, to hold the provision in question to be contrary to law. The matter has not been gone into, and I am not called on to decide the question. But supposing it to be held that such [721] a provision is void, I should not be disposed for that reason to refuse to notice the existence of such a provision as operating to create a substantial impediment to the discharge of her duty by the representative, if I thought it really had such an effect.

I think it might be that the existence of such a restraining motive as that, might well be considered sufficient to justify the application of the exceptional rule invoked by the plaintiffs in this case. Whether or not there is a "substantial impediment" to sue, again, Vice-Chancellor TURNER'S expression, depends upon the circumstances of each case, and in some cases I think the existence of such an apprehension, as Koosummoney states herself to be under, might naturally be such an impediment.

Is there such here?

That question is connected with the next branch of the argument. The defendants argue that there being an administration suit in existence the rule in question is wholly inapplicable, and it is said that no case can be cited in which it was sought to apply this rule in Courts of Equity after a decree for administration of the estate of the debtor. This argument of the defendants bears on the question whether the unwillingness of the personal representative to sue does practically constitute an obstacle to the recovery of the debt in question. It may well be that the reason why no case is cited but one is, that where there is an administration suit, and a creditor or legatee can have recourse to the Court to apply for an order that the representatives shall bring a suit, that bar to the recovery of his rights, which is the foundation of the exception to the general rule, does not exist, that he is not hampered in such a way as to constitute a ground for entitling him to sue instead of the representative. Can it be said in this case that, there being an administration suit in existence, and the representative being subject to the Court which could direct a suit to be filed in her name to recover the property, the circumstances are such as to show that unless the plaintiffs are allowed to bring this suit the claim on behalf of Heraloll's estate cannot be made good by suit?

I must answer that question in the negative, and although if no administration suit were pending I perhaps might hold the clause of forfeiture and the unwillingness of the administratrix [722] to be a substantial impediment. I cannot say that in this case the institution of the suit by creditors is justified by such circumstances as alone could entitle them to sue. Next, can the suit be brought, there being an administration suit pending?

I was unaware, until this matter came on, that any order in it had been made, and it was not until the argument had proceeded nearly to a conclusion that it was brought to my notice that other orders had been made bearing upon the institution of this suit.

If I had been aware of these orders, I should have declined to hear this suit. It is not convenient, and hardly seemly, that one Judge should be bound to deal with the effect of orders passed in another Division Court. I can only say that I shall certainly take care that no case comes before me in future which has been so affected by the order of another Judge.

It is said that even if there were any difficulty on the part of a creditor suing in his own name within the rule of Alsager v. Rowley (6 Ves., 748), the plaintiffs here represent the estate under an order of Court giving them liberty to bring this suit, an order made in the administration suit in which the Court has full seizure, an order which authorizes them, as it does, to institute a suit, and as was suggested makes them receiver for the purpose of bringing it, and it was said that as the suit was in truth brought for the benefit of the estate by an order of Court, and as all parties interested are before the Court, and by the decree all parties would be bound, why should the Court hesitate to allow the suit to proceed?

Unfortunately there is, as I must hold, insuperable difficulty to acceding to that argument.

No doubt the case of Haile v. Sidebottom (37 L. J. Ch., 503) is not precisely similar, and the legal liability sought to be enforced was initiated by the executor of the estate which was being administered, but in dealing with that suit Lord ROMILLY, a Judge of great experience, summarized the position and remedies of parties to an administration suit under circumstances which arise here. He says at page 504: "If there is no bill existing in the Court at all, a creditor may file a bill on behalf of himself and all other creditors against an executor or a legal personal representative [723] for the administration of a deceased person's estate, that is every day's practice. Also if he makes out a case of collusion between the legal personal representative and the debtor of a testator, he may make the debtor of the testator a party to that suit, but these are exceptional cases. Excepting those cases, a creditor cannot file a bill to get in the assets of a testator or an intestate. It is the business of the legal personal representative to do that, and bills are instituted every day for that purpose. If the legal personal representative, without collusion, is not active and vigorous in getting in the estate of the testator or is culpably negligent, then the Court does not allow the debtors to be made parties, but appoints a receiver, who, by the authority of the Court, gets in all the assets. But when once there is a decree in an administration suit, proceedings must be taken in that suit, and there must not be another suit for the same purpose."

And later on: "If the matter be a peculiar one, and the assets cannot be got in without a suit being instituted in the name of the legal personal representative and the legal personal representative refuses to institute any such proceedings, then the plaintiff in the suit might apply to the Judge in Chambers for leave to file a bill in the name of the legal personal representative

* indemnifying him against the costs." That was what, as it appears, the creditor in the administration suit who has the carriage of that suit, Ramdoss Coondoo, did apply to be allowed to do.

On the 1st March Mr Bonnerjee on his behalf moved for a rule nisi for the appointment of a receiver, and the rule having been obtained, appears to have been opposed on behalf of the present plaintiffs, who stated that they were large creditors. The hearing of that rule then stood over until the 23rd April, a rule was, however, granted in the interval calling upon Ramdoss Coondoo and the present defendants to show cause why the plaintiffs should not bring this suit in its present form. This rule was opposed by Counsel on his behalf, and was made absolute against him, but not as against the present defendants, who have come in now to object to the form of the suit.

The question has now been raised, and I am bound to answer it--whether the suit is well brought?

If the order entitling the plaintiff to bring the suit had been [724] made in this suit, I should have been bound by it, but it was not made in the suit. It is expressed to be made in the administration suit, and "in the matter of a suit intended to be brought" (meaning the present suit), but the learned Judge who made the order expressly declared that he did not intend by it to bind the present defendants.

Under such circumstances, can I hold that the plaintiffs, who are not entitled to sue in their own capacity, are entitled to maintain the suit because they practically represent the estate, acting in any known capacity by virtue of which they are entitled to represent it. I am bound to hold that I do not think they are.

No doubt there is one case in which such a suit as this has been instituted in this Court, Greender Chunder Ghose v Mackintosh (I. L. R., 4 Orl., 897), but the point was not raised. A creditor sought to get in the estate, suing on his own behalf and after an administration decree. But the point was not raised.

The point has, however, been raised here, and I must decide it. Is it a merely technical objection? I do not think it is. What is the difference between this suit and a suit brought in the name of the representatives? It was very justly suggested by Messrs Phillips and Stokoe, that regard to form of proceedings is a matter to which original courts of first instance would be more bound than appeal courts. The remark was made in consequence of a suggestion that they should look more to substance than to procedure, but there is a limit to this.

The objection is not a merely technical one.

Though no doubt the intention was that a suit should be brought, which should benefit the creditors of the estate, the order contemplated a suit not on behalf of the estate by the plaintiffs, but on behalf of themselves and the creditors of the estate only.

The order of the 19th March 1883 says "It is ordered under the provisions of s. 12 of the Charter that the said Oriental Bank Corporation and the Delhi and London Bank, Limited, be at liberty to institute a suit in this Court," etc.

The order is that the plaintiffs be at liberty, not that they do, but that they are at liberty, to institute a suit. I think it would be reading the proceedings with all elastic freedom, which I have [725] no right to do, to go so far as to construe this as an order appointing the Banks receivers for the purpose of bringing this suit. The remarks of TURNER, L. J., in Harrison v Richards [L. R. 1 Ch App, 473 (475)] referred to by Mr. Phillips cannot, I think, be treated as being more than figurative, for the purpose of pointing the objection to the order then under discussion

He says "The order under appeal, whatever be its form, is in substance an order for a receiver, for it takes the administration of a part of the estate out of the hands of the executor and entrusts it to some one else. Now, a receiver is not appointed against an executor unless some case of misconduct is proved. Is there any such case made out here? It is alleged against him that he applied for time to put in a voluntary answer, but it seems to me that it would have been very convenient for a voluntary answer to have been put in, since the Court would then have had materials before it enabling it to give special directions as to the dealings with Mr French which have become the subject of subsequent inquiry. The proceedings to be taken must be carried on in the name of the executor, and I find that all the information which lays a ground for those proceedings has been obtained from him or his solicitor. If the proceedings are taken out of their hands, it is not likely that the executor will voluntarily communicate with the other solicitor for the purpose of giving all the information material to the carrying on of the proceedings. In the absence of misconduct on the part of the executor, I do not think it desirable to place the business in the hands of a person with whom he is not likely to communicate freely"

I don't think that this case can be used as an authority for treating the order of the 19th March 1883 as placing the plaintiffs in the position of receivers

Upon these grounds, I come to the conclusion that in this Court I am not at liberty to allow this suit as framed, and I must dismiss it with costs.

* I have considered whether I should exempt the plaintiffs from costs by reason of the order made, but I do not think I should do [726] so. The plaintiffs have only themselves to blame for not framing the suit in the regular form. They actually opposed, and opposed with success, an application by Ramdoss Coondoo for authority to prosecute the claim set up in this suit in a regular way. It is to be regretted that they did not frame their suit in the mode in which he was advised to frame his

I must dismiss the suit with costs, but the added defendants will bear their own costs.

The plaintiffs appealed

Mr Kennedy, Mr Pugh, Mr Phillips and Mr Bonnerjee for the Appellants.

Mr. Kennedy.—The Court below has decided that the pending of the administration suit excludes any other suit. The earlier reported cases show that a Court of Equity would not entertain a suit without equities; and the only forum in which such a suit could be brought was the Court of Common Law. Collusion would give a direct cause of action, and we allege collusion, and a Court of Equity would have jurisdiction. In the case of Yeatman v. Yeatman (L. R., 7 Ch. D., 210) the plaintiffs, who were legatees, were permitted to sue; the case shows that under special circumstances the Court may say that a person who has no direct right against a defendant may be plaintiff. Under the Hindu law we should have a right to go against the person in possession, and even if the English cases are against us, the arrangement of the different suits could be settled by the process of staying all but one.

In the case of Sharland v. Mildon (5 Hare, 469) the plaintiff appears to have made no case of collusion, the executor was the proper person to get in the assets, but there the plaintiff, who was a small creditor, was held to be entitled to get in the assets. It shows that although an administration suit is pending, a suit analogous to ours may be brought

In Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 897), which was a suit after a decree for administration, against a debtor, to the estate seeking to have certain property made liable and asking for administration, shows that such suits lie. The point now raised, however, does not seem to have been raised at all in that case.

[727] In Earle v. Sidebottom (37 L. J. Ch., 503) an administration suit had been brought, and the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill to obtain the payment of certain sums into Court which had been ordered and had not been done. The defendant, the executor, had leave to sell certain property, and the order directed that the money should be paid into Court in the original suit, the defendant sold to his brother, and the whole of the money was not paid into Court, it was held the suit would not lie, but there it would not have been necessary for the executor to bring the suit; and the plaintiff filed his supplemental suit. Our suit is not a second suit to get in the assets

We obtained an order to sue, and the case of Harrison v. Richards (L. R., 1 Ch. App., 473) shows that the order to sue in an administration suit is in effect an order for a receiver.

[WILSON, J.—How can your clients be receivers, for if they recovered the property it would go into the hands of the administrators to administer, and would not go into your hands at all]

Under s. 51 of the Civil Procedure Code there would be great difficulty in the receiver bringing the suit. There must be an express authority from the plaintiff to the person who signs the plaint, and that we could not get. In Phillips v. Phillips (6 Ir. Eq., 509) there was no collusion, and it was shown that the executor was not in default; but the Court stated that, if the charge sought to be made good had been proved to be due, and the executor shown to be remiss in calling it in, the Court might direct proceedings to be taken by means of a receiver. There is a difference between the Hindu and English laws in the matter. In England the entire property vests in the executor, in India the executor is only a manager—Srimati Jaykali Devi v. Shubnath Chatterjee (2 B. L. R., 1 O. C., Col. Dig., bk. I, Ch. II, s. 220).

Mr. Hill, Mr. Trevelyan and Mr. Sale for the Defendant Gobinloll

Mr. O'Kinealy for the Defendant Beharyloll.

Mr. Hill, for Gobinloll.—The general rule is that an executor or administrator can alone sue to recover assets. Therefore in [728] ordinary cases a debtor to the estate cannot be made a party to a suit against an executor

Collusion, or the insolvency of executor, or some other special circumstance, must be made out by a creditor who sues. In the early cases, proof of collusion was held to be essential—Newland v. Champion (1 Ves. Sen., 105). In that case the Lord CHANCELLOR distinguished the case of suits by a creditor against an executor of a deceased, and surviving partner, from other cases. A surviving partner would be a party because he would have an interest in contesting the debt, and a right to be heard in taking the account. Storey's Equity Pleadings, s. 167, Thorpe v. Jackson [2 Y. & C. Exch., 553, (563)], Bowsker v. Watkin (1 R. & M., 277) is also an instance of such a suit, but as to this last case see Davies v. Davies (2 Keen, 534). Gedde v. Traill (1 R. & M., 281, note) is an authority as to collusion. Travis v. Milne (9 Hare, 141, 150) shows that collusion is not the only ground and that there must be special circumstances, some substantial impediment to the suit being brought by the executor. The rule which now obtains dates from about 1800, viz., as to collusion, insolvency or some special case. See Alsager v. Rowley (6 Ves., 748), Hilliard v. Eiffe (L. R., 7 H. L., 39, 44). As to what have been held "special circumstances," at one time the refusal of the executor to get in funds was sufficient, Wilson v. Moore (1 M. & K., 126, 337), Lancaster v. Evors (4 Beav., 158), illustration of special circumstances is afforded by Consett v. Bell (1 Y. & C. Ch., 569), also in Stanton v. The Carron Co. (18 Beav., 146, 159), Sanders v. Druce (3 Drew, 140, 156). The case of Yeatman v. Yeatman (L. R., 7 Ch. D., 210) merely amounts to saying that when it is a case for proceedings to be taken by a creditor, a creditor applying for leave to sue will be allowed to sue in his own name. In our case plaintiff alleges neither collusion nor insolvency nor inability to sue. The proper course for the plaintiff to have pursued is that indicated in Sharpe v. San Paulo Ry. Co. (L. R., 8 Ch. App., 597) The objection is not a technical one, the question of costs is sufficient ground for adherence to the general rule

[729] Mr. O'Knealy for Behariloll contended that the proper person to sue was the representative, and the cause should not be taken from her except on proof of misconduct, Samuel v. Samuel (L. R., 12 Ch. D., 152). Dowd v. Hawtin (L. R., 19 Ch. D., 61) shows that a receiver never is appointed in a case like this. Phillips v. Phillips (6 Ir. Eq., 509), and Utterson v. Mair (2 Ves., 95) were also cited Judgments of the Court were delivered by GARTH, C. J., and WILSON, J.

Wilson, J.—The case disclosed by the pleadings is this The plaintiffs were creditors of one Heraloll Seal who died intestate in March 1876 They sue on behalf of themselves and all other creditors Administration of the estate of Heraloll was in May 1876 granted to his only son Russickloll. In the same month a creditor's suit was brought in this Court for the administration of Heraloll's estate. In June 1876 a decree for administration was made and the usual accounts and enquiries ordered A report was subsequently made by which it was found that the plaintiffs were creditors of the estate for the debt now relied upon. On the 25th February 1878 Russickloll having died, administration of the unadministered estate of Heraloll was granted to his widow, the defendant Koosummoney, and the suit was revived against her and Russickloll's widow, the defendant Biddomoney On the 12th August 1878 by a decree on further directions this report was confirmed and the usual directions given That suit is still pending.

In 1848 Muttyloll Seal, the father of Heraloll and of four other sons, executed a deed by which he conveyed certain property to trustees upon trusts for the benefit of his family Muttyloll Seal died in 1854, intestate so far as the property involved in this suit is concerned. The defendant Gobinoll Seal and Kannyeloll Seal are the present trustees under the deed of 1848.

The plaintiffs contend that the trusts of the deed of 1848 are void in law; that one-fifth part of the property supposed to be affected by those trusts passed to Heraloll as one of the heirs of Muttyloll, and that that share forms part of Heraloll's assets applicable to the payment of his debts

[730] They say in their plaint.—

Paragraph 26—"The defendant Koosummoney Dossee has refused and still refuses to take any proceedings or to take part in any proceedings with a view to impeaching any of the provisions of the said indenture, alleging, amongst other things, that under the terms of the said indenture any member of the family taking any proceedings in any Court of Justice in any matter affecting the said trusts would forfeit all rights, benefits, and interests thereunder."

Paragraph 27.—"The defendant Koosummoney Dossee is also interested as one of the beneficiaries under the said indenture, and the relation between the defendant Koosummoney Dossee and the defendants Gobinloll Seal and Kannyeloll Seal, the trustees of the said indenture, who are also beneficiaries under the said indenture, is such as to create a very substantial impediment to the prosecution by the defendant Koosummoney Dossee of the rights of the creditors of the said Heraloll Seal, deceased, against the defendants Gobinloll Seal and Kannyeloll Seal in relation to the property comprised in the said indenture."

The plaintiffs ask, in substance, for a declaration in accordance with the contention above stated, that the share of Heraloll may be duly administered, and that this suit may be taken as supplemental to the existing administration suit.

They have made defendants in the suit the trustees of the impeached deed; Koosummoney, the administratrix of Heraloll, Biddomoney, the widow and heiress of Russickloll, who was himself the sole heir of Heera Lall, certain persons as representatives of the beneficiaries under the trust deed, and Mr. Macgregor, in whose hands the property is as receiver in another suit, which need not be further referred to.

The female defendants in a joint written statement take the same ground which the plaintiff in the passage already cited from the plaint alleged Koosummoney to have taken. The trustee defendants, as trustees of the deed, resist the plaintiff's claim to have the property dealt with as assets of Heraloll on a variety of grounds.

From what has been said I think the following propositions follow -- [731] (1) That the case is one in which proceedings ought to be taken to test the validity of the plaintiff's contention as to the trusts.

(2) That the administratrix has refused, and still refuses to take any such proceedings.

(3) That the trustee defendants dispute the right of the creditors in their character of trustees and for the benefit of the beneficiaries of whom the administratrix is one, and that the administratrix concurs in this action of theirs and refuses to proceed against them, because she prefers her personal interest under the trust deed to her duty as administratrix. It appears also, if that be material, that the heiress-at-law takes the same view and from the same motive. This, I think, amounts in law to collusion between these parties.

(4) There is already an administration suit pending, covering the whole of Heraloll's assets, whatever they may be.

The question we have to decide is whether on these facts the present suit is maintainable.

The general rule of law is that the executor or other representative of the deceased is the proper person to realize the assets of his estate, and that no other person can sue for them in any Court, and this rule rests upon obvious principle. The proper person to sue for a debt is the creditor. The proper person to sue to recover property is the person who has a title to it, not one who has none.

But an exception to the general rule has been admitted in certain instances. Many cases were cited to us beginning with Alsager v. Rowley (6 Ves., 748) and ending with Yeatman v. Yeatman (L. R., 7 Ch. D., 210) in which, on grounds of collusion, insolvency, or other special circumstances, a creditor of an estate has been allowed to join a debtor to the estate as defendant in a suit against the executor. I do not think it necessary to examine those cases in detail. The principle on which they rest is stated by TURNER V.C., in Travis v. Milne (9 Hare, 141, 149). "Upon an examination of the authorities I believe it will be found that there is no instance of such a suit being maintained in the absence of special circumstances, and that collusion is clearly not the only ground on which such a bill can be supported. The cases, I think, may fairly be considered to go [732] to this extent, that such a bill may be supported in all cases in which the relation between the executors and the surviving partners" (the case then before the Court was one of a deceased partner's estate), "presents a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the executors of the rights of the parties interested in estate against the surviving partners." In Stainton v. The Carron Company (18 Beav., 146) ROMILLY, M. R., stated the rule "I think it unnecessary to go in detail through all the cases to be found on this subject. I think that they may be summed up thus: that the persons interested in the estate of the testator, not being the legal representatives, will not be allowed to sue persons possessed of assets belonging to the testator, unless it is satisfactorily made out that there exist assets which might be recovered, and which, but for such suit, would probably be lost to the estate," and both these statements of the rule are cited with approval by HALL, V.C. in Yeatman v. Yeatman. In the present case, had there been no administration suit pending, there would have been, in the collusion of the administratrix and the trustees, a substantial impediment to her suing them, and a strong probability of the loss of assets, unless a suit like the present were admitted, and, in my judgment, the authorities show that it would have lain.

But the administration suit is pending, in which the Court has control of the administration of all the assets of Heraloll. In that suit an order might be made directing proceedings to be taken, in proper form and by proper parties, to recover the assets in question, and the conduct of such proceedings might be given as seemed best to the Court. Nor is any reason shown why such an order should not be applied for. The applications that were made, and the order of the Court, I shall notice later. Two courses would be open to the Court in that suit: first, to allow a suit to be brought in the name of the administratrix, secondly, to appoint a receiver to sue. It is pointed out in Dowd v. Hawtin (L. R., 19 Ch. D., 61) that the latter course would be in accordance with the older practice of the Court of Chancery, but that in recent times the former course is always adopted. But I do not understand the Court there to have held that there is power to give a receiver the conduct of a suit, if necessary; at any rate, in [733] this country under the Procedure Code, I think there clearly is such a power. Having regard to the requirements of s. 51 of the Procedure Code as to plaintiffs, the nature of the objection raised by the administratrix, and the great practical difficulty of enforcing any order against a purdahnashin woman in this country, I think the Court might well hesitate before directing proceedings in her name. But under s. 503 of the Code, I think it clear that the Court might authorise a receiver to sue in his own name.

Under these circumstances, I do not see, on principle, how it can be said that there is any substantial impediment to the bringing of a suit in a regular manner, or any danger to assets such as to necessitate the reception of the present exceptional suit.

I think, too, the weight of authority is in favour of this view. In one sense there is no direct authority upon the point. That is to say, there is no case in which such a suit has been held to lie, while an administration suit was pending, nor is there any case in which a suit has been rejected expressly on that ground. Sharland v. Mildon (5 Haro, 469) was cited for the plaintiffs. But that case is not in point. The defendant there held liable was not a mere debtor to the estate, but an executor de son tort accountable as such to those interested in the estate. In Stainton v. The Carron Company (18 Beav, 146) already referred to, an administration suit was pending, and a decree had been made, and the Master of the Rolls does not expressly dismiss the second suit on that ground, but lays down the rule in the terms already cited. He did, however, according to the Law Journal report, point out in his judgment that, if the plaintiffs had any remedy, it was in the administration suit, 23 L. J., Ch. 299. Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (1 L. R., 4 Cal., 897) was a case similar to the present, and it proceeded to decree both in the Court of First Instance and on appeal. But the point was not raised. It was indeed argued that the Judges before whom the case came must be taken to have approved of the frame of the suit, because they did not object on the ground now in question. But I do not see that it was in any way the duty of the Court to take such a point when the parties did not choose to raise it.

[734] On the other hand, in Earle v. Sidebottom (37 L. J. Ch., 503) in the passage cited in the judgment of PIGOT, J., ROMILLY, M. R., examined the question, and stated his view of the law thus: "If there is no bill existing in the Court at all, a creditor may file a bill on behalf of himself and all other creditors against an executor or a legal personal representative for the administration of a deceased person's estate. That is every day's practice. Also, if he makes out a case of collusion between the legal personal representative and the debtor of a testator, he may make the debtor of the testator a party to that suit. But these are exceptional cases. Excepting those cases, a creditor cannot file a bill to get in the assets of a testator or intestate. It is the business of the legal personal representative to do that, and suits are instituted every day for that purpose. If the legal personal representative, without collusion, is not active and vigorous in getting in the estate of the testator, or is culpably negligent, then the Court does not allow the debtors to be made parties, but appoints a receiver, who by the authority of the Court gets in all the assets. But when once there is a decree in an administration suit, proceedings must be taken in that suit, and there must not be another suit for the same purpose, and if the matter be a peculiar one and the assets cannot be got in without a suit being instituted in the name of the legal personal representative, and the legal personal representative refuses to institute any such proceedings, then the plaintiff in the suit might apply to the Judge in Chambers for leave to file a bill in the name of the legal personal representative indemnifying him against the costs." And in Dowd v. Hawtin, already referred to, the Court of Appeal states what the ordinary practice of the Chancery Division is, namely, by proceedings in the administration suit.

I therefore agree with the view of the learned Judge who heard this case, that under such circumstances as those disclosed the present suit will not lie.

It remains however to consider the applications which were made in the administration suit and the order made thereon. It appears from the proceedings brought before us, that the conduct [733] of that suit is in the hands of one Ramdoss Coondoo, that he applied for and obtained in that suit an order nisi for the appointment of a receiver, with a view to bringing a suit for the same objects as the present. The present plaintiffs obtained an order nisi giving them leave to bring this suit. The nature of the latter order is plain enough. It gives leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent to sue, though part of the property may not be within the jurisdiction. It gives leave to join causes of action under s 44, rule (a) of the Procedure Code. It gives leave to sue on behalf of all the creditors, and to sue the defendant Behariloll Seal on behalf of all the beneficiaries under s. 30 of the same Code.

The learned Judge before whom the matter came appears to have considered (and as far as I can judge, for good reason), that the now plaintiffs were fitter persons than Ramdoss Coondoo to have the control of the litigation. He dismissed Ramdoss Coondoo's application, and made the plaintiffs' order absolute. The learned Judge, as I understand him, limits his order in such a way as to show that it is an order only as between the parties in the administration suit and not one affecting the defendants in this suit.

The plaintiffs sought to use this order in two ways, First, it was said that such a suit may lie with the leave of the Court, if it could not without. I do not see how this can be. So far as the order is one under clause 12 of the Letters Patent it affects only local jurisdiction. So far as it is under s. 44 of the Code it goes only to the joinder of claims. So far as it is under s. 30 it goes only to the joinder of parties. It makes it unnecessary to join all the creditors as plaintiffs, and places the present plaintiffs in the same position they would have been in under English law without any order. From no point of view can the order, in my opinion, give a right of suit not existing without it.

Secondly, it was contended, on the strength of an expression of TURNER, L. J., in Harrison v Richards (L. R., 1 Ch. App., 473) that the effect of the order might be to constitute the plaintiffs receivers, for the purpose of bringing this suit. I think it is impossible to construe the order in any such sense.

[736] I agree, therefore, in the view taken of the case by the Court below, and I think the appeal should be dismissed.

I arrive at this conclusion with regret, because it is always unfortunate that costs of litigation should be wasted by reason of the dismissal of a suit on a ground which leaves the merits of the controversy untouched. And so far as appears, I do not suppose the defendants would be worse off, if such a suit could proceed, than in one regularly brought. In this sense the objection, to which I feel bound to give effect, is technical, but in no other sense. It rests upon clear principles, a departure from which would, I think it not in this case, in other cases lead to multiplicity of suits, increase of expense and confusion. We cannot hold this suit to lie without laying down a new rule, and establishing a precedent of general application. The objection is one which the defendants have a perfect right to raise, and the defendant Gobinloll raised it at the earliest moment by his written statement. The plaintiffs have carried on their suit through two Courts with full knowledge of the difficulty which lay in their way.

On the subject of costs I have had an opportunity of reading what the Chief Justice has written and I concur in his view.

Garth, C. J.—As my brother WILSON agrees in this case with the Court below, that we ought in this country to be guided by the rule, which appears to be observed by Courts of Equity in England, I shall defer to their judgment, although I confess I do so with reluctance, because I see no sufficient reason for introducing such a rule here.

It is expedient, no doubt, that some recognised procedure should be followed, as regards the persons who should have the conduct of a supplemental suit of this kind, and it is obviously right that, in the absence of good reason to the contrary, the legal representative of the party, whose estate is being administered, should sue to realise assets of that estate for the benefit of the creditors

And it may also be right, that where there is any valid objection to the legal representative suing, the conduct of such a suit [737] whoever may be the nominal party to it, should generally be in the hands of the plaintiff in the administration suit

But where, as in this case, there is ample reason why the legal representative should not sue, and where there is also good reason as I consider for not allowing the person who instituted the administration suit, to have anything to do with the supplemental suit, I confess I should have thought that the selection of a proper person to bring this suit on behalf of the estate might well have been entrusted to the Judge in the administration suit, without its being absolutely necessary to appoint a receiver

The learned Judge had all the facts and the parties before him, and I should have thought that he was probably the best tribunal to decide, whether it was necessary or expedient, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that a receiver should be appointed

It seems clear from the English authorities, that where there is no administration suit pending, a suit of this kind may be brought by one creditor on behalf of himself and the other creditors, and, therefore, there would seem to be no objection in substance to such a suit being brought, when there is an administration suit pending. The argument in favour of the rule, which my learned brothers are disposed to adopt, seems to be, that where a receiver can be appointed, to bring such a suit, it is always right that he should be appointed. But the rule is only one of procedure, as it seems to me, and one which we are at liberty to adopt or not in this country, as we think proper, and although in many and perhaps in most cases it may be the best course to appoint a receiver, I think there are some cases, in which such a course may be neither necessary nor expedient; and I am strongly of opinion that, although we should always pay the utmost respect to the wisdom and authority of our English Courts, we are by no means bound to adopt all the rules of procedure and practice, which the Equity Courts in England may have established

In this case, as far as I can see, there was no necessity for a receiver, nor is there any substantial reason why this suit should not have been properly tried upon its merits in its present form, without putting the parties to the frightful expense and delay of fresh proceedings

[738] No receiver, I presume, unless he were himself an interested party, would act gratuitously, and in this case, it appears, there are no means of paying a receiver. There are literally no assets, as I understand, out of which a receiver could be remunerated, unless the object of this suit were attained, and the trust funds realized for the benefit of the creditors

The consequence is, that the receiver, when appointed, must be paid either by the creditors generally, or by the plaintiffs, who are by far the largest creditors, and in either case the appointment of a receiver would be an expense to them, without being, as far as I can see, any benefit to anybody, because the plaintiffs have such a deep interest in the success of the suit, that there can be no reasonable doubt of their doing their best to win it, and as this suit is supplemental to the administration suit, any assets which may be realized in this suit would of course have to be administered in the administration suit. And, again, if a receiver were appointed, he would only sue, I presume, upon being indemnified by the plaintiffs, either with or without the aid of the other creditors

It is obvious, therefore, that when this suit is dismissed, and the Judge in charge of the administration suit is asked to appoint a receiver, it may be a question well worthy of consideration, whether the plaintiffs themselves should not be appointed receivers, inasmuch as they will virtually have to bear the expense of bringing the fresh suit. I entirely agree with Mr. Justice NORRIS, that it would have been highly improper under the circumstances to allow Ramdoss Coondoo to have the conduct of this suit in any way. A tradesman, who has had dealings with the Seal family whose debt is only a small one (some Rs 2,000), who is actually offered payment of that debt, and refuses to take the money, in the hope of being entrusted with the bringing this suit against the Seal family, is certainly not the sort of person whom any Court would select to have the conduct of such a suit. He must either have a craving after costs, which, to say the least of it, is not a good trait in a receiver, or he must have some other reason, perhaps even less creditable, for wishing the conduct of the suit to be placed in his hands

It, therefore, as far as I can see, comes to this, that when a [739] receiver is appointed, the persons after all really interested in the suit, and paying the expense of it, and winning the risk of it, will be the plaintiffs, and the real defendants will be in no better position as against the receiver, whoever he may be, than they are now against the plaintiffs. In either case, I presume, they would be entitled to security for costs, if they choose to ask for it, and in either case, they are secure, as far as I can see from being sued over again for the same cause of action

Indeed, I do not know that the defendants will have effected any other result by the objection which they have taken, than to put themselves and the other parties to the suit to a good deal of unnecessary expense.

Under these circumstances, although, as I said before, I defer to the opinion of my two learned brothers upon this, which seems to me a mere question of procedure, I do not think it right to give the respondents any costs, for two reasons—

(1) In the first place, I consider their objection to have been a technical one, advanced for no bonâ fide object, but merely for the purpose of putting the plaintiffs to expense and trouble, by obliging them to bring their suit in a different form, and

(2) (Which is to my mind the more cogent reason), because hitherto there has been no authority in this country, deciding that a suit in this form cannot be brought, whereas, on the other hand, there is a direct authority that such a suit can be brought, inasmuch as the case of Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (I L. R. 4 Cal., 897) is a precedent for such a suit in this very Court. And it must not be forgotten that the Judge in the administration suit, who, as I consider, ought to have the selection of the plaintiffs in a suit of this kind, had sanctioned the suit in this form.

For these reasons, I think that, whatever view the learned Judge may have taken as to the form of the suit, no costs ought to have been allowed to the defendants in the Court below, and I certainly do not feel justified in allowing them any costs in this Court

The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed without costs

Appeal dismissed.

[740] PRIVY COUNCIL

The 5th February, 1884

PRESENT

LORD BLACKBURN, SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER,

SIR R. COUCH AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Narotam Dass . Plaintiff

versus

Sheo Pargash Singh . Defendant

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Act XXIV of 1870 (The Oudh Taluqdars' Relief Act, 1870)—Hypothecation of lands under management

A taluqdar, the management of whose taluq at the time was vested in an officer appointed under s. 3 of Act XXIV of 1870, made an instrument purporting to hypothecate the taluq to secure payment of money borrowed by him

Held that, as the document contained no personal contract to pay out of personal estate, or any estate other than the taluq, it was unnecessary to consider whether a taluqdar, whilst his taluq is under management in pursuance of the provisions of the above Act, is competent to make a personal contract this being only an hypothecation of the property falling within s. 4, cl. 3 of the Act, and invalid within its meaning

APPEAL from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh (13th October 1881), whereby a decree of the Judge of the Fyzabad District (19th April 1881) was confirmed.

On the 18th July 1873 the respondent, a taluqdar of Oudh, the management of whose taluq was then vested in an officer appointed by the Chief Commissioner, under the provisions of s. 3 of Act XXIV of 1870 (The Oudh Taluqdars' Relief Act, 1870), executed in favour of the appellant (a shraf at Fyzabad), the instrument of which the clauses are set forth in their Lordships' judgment. Before the institution of this suit against him, for principal and interest due to the 15th July 1873, which with subsequent interest was made up to the sum of Rs. 10,981, the respondent had been restored to the possession of his taluq, under s. 12; but had made no payment.

The defence, besides denying the receipt of the money, alleged that the claim was invalid, inasmuch as the bond on which it was based had been executed while the defendant's estate was under the operation of Act XXIV of 1870, and an issue was fixed on this point.

[741] In the Court of First Instance the suit was dismissed with costs on the ground that the instrument on which the claim was based was a mortgage, and invalid under s. 4. The Judicial Commissioner dismissed the appeal for the same reason

On this appeal—

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, for the Appellant, argued that the instrument of 18th July 1863, though invalid for the purpose of charging the taluq, was evidence of a contract to pay the debt for which the taluqdar was personally liable. By reason of his estate being brought under the operation of Act XXIV of 1870, he had been rendered unable to charge the taluq, but not incompetent to contract. The instrument bore the construction that it contained a promise to pay, distinct from the hypothecation, and the transaction itself was to be so regarded. A document rendered inoperative for a particular and limited purpose might be used as evidence of a different matter; for instance, as occurred under the registration laws. A document required by law to be registered, in so far as it affected land, was admissible, even if unregistered, in evidence for any purpose with regard to which its registration was not compulsory—Lachmipat Singh Dugar v. Munza Khairat Ali [4 B.L.R., (F.B.) 18]. So a document, purporting to charge land, might be invalid for that purpose, under s. 4 of Act XXIV of 1870, but receivable for another purpose, viz., as evidence of a debt.

He referred also to the sections in "The Scinde Encumbered Estates Act," XIV of 1876, corresponding to ss. 3, 4, 8 and 12 in Act XXIV of 1870.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. H. Conell for the Respondent were not called upon.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—The issue raised in this case is, can the bond be held to be a valid document and binding upon the defendant when it was executed during the time the estate was under the operation of the Taluqdars' Relief Act, 1870 (Act XXIV of 1870)? It is not necessary to consider whether a taluqdar, whilst his taluq is under management in pursuance of that Act, is competent to make a personal contract, inasmuch as it does not arise in the [742] present case. The question depends upon the construction of the document which is set out on the record, and which their Lordships consider to be a mortgage of the estate and nothing else. It contains no personal contract by the defendant to pay out of his personal estate, but it is a mere contract to pay out of the hypothecated estate.

The contract commences by stating that he has borrowed the sum of Rs. 4,100 at a certain rate of interest. Then it goes on: "I have by this instrument hypothecated the whole of my property in taluq Chandipur Birhar, situate in Fyzabad." There he describes it as an hypothecation. "As the aforesaid taluq of Chandipur Birhar is under management under the Encumbered Estates Act, and I have already filed in the office of the Superintendent a schedule of my debts specifying the names of my creditors, I do hereby promise and give it in writing that I shall without any plea repay the principal with interest within the term of two years." But the contract does not stop there. It goes on. "The mode of payment will be, that after paying up the scheduled debts, I shall first of all pay up the debt covered by this bond, including interest"—that is to say, that he will pay this bond after he has paid the scheduled debts. "I shall thereafter appropriate the profits of the estate and attend to the liquidation of other debts. I shall not take the profits of the estate without paying up the present debt with interest, if I do take the profits, it will be for the payment of this debt. I shall, until this debt is repaid, abstain from contracting other debts from the bank or anywhere else" Up to this period it is evidently a mere hypothecation of the estate as a security for the money. Then he says lower down "When my estate is released from management under the Encumbered Estates Act, I will immediately first of all pay the debt due to the said banker, and will pay the other creditors afterwards" That is merely an intention on the part of the borrower that this debt shall be a prior charge upon the estate after payment of the scheduled debts "In both cases, that is, while the estate is under management and after it is released, the repayment of this debt will be the subject of my first consideration In the event of any breach of contract taking place on my part, the said banker is at liberty to institute [743] a suit within the time fixed in this bond and recover the money I will not transfer or mortgage to any one the hypothecated property till the principal and interest of this debt is paid up, if I do so it will be illegal." Then he goes on: "These few lines have therefore been written as an unconditional bond hypothecating my property, so that it may serve as a document and be of use when required. P. S.—I have taken this Rs. 4,100 over and above the Rs. 3,200 borrowed by me, by hypothecation of the property, by the mortgage deed attested on 17th March 1873."

Looking at the whole of this deed, their Lordships cannot place any other interpretation upon it than that it was a mere hypothecation of the taluq which was then under management.

Then with regard to s. 4, cl. 3, which says, "that, so long as such management continues, the taluqdar and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease, or alienate their immoveable property or any part thereof, or to grant valid receipts for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom," it appears to their Lordships that this deed, being a mere hypothecation of the property, falls clearly within the clause, and consequently that it was invalid. Both the Courts have held that the deed was invalid within the meaning of the Act; and their Lordships think that those decisions are right. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decision of the Court, and the appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 28th May, 1884.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR JUSTICE NORRIS.

Gopal Chunder Sircar. . . . Plaintiff

Adhiraj Aftab Chand Mahatab .Defendant.*

Cesses, Liability for—Debutter land—" Owner and holder"—Bengal Act IX of 1880, s 56.

Bengal Act IX of 1880 contemplates the payment of the cesses by persons beneficially interested in the land in respect of which the cesses are levied [744] The words "owner and holder" in s 56 of that Act are not limited to any one person nor for the purposes of that section must the owner be in actual possession. The plaintiff, who was a putnidar of the defendant, having paid certain cesses in respect of what he described in his plaint to be "debutter lakhraj lands" lying within the ambit of his putni, sued the defendant to recover the amount of such cesses. The defendant admitted that he was proprietor of the estate in which the lands were situated, but denied his liability for the cesses.

Held, that the defendant was not liable to pay the amount of the cesses, but that the person liable was the idol through its shebait, or some person in receipt of the rents and profits of the land, or some person in actual possession of the land in occupation of it

IN this case the plaintiff, who was a putnidar of the defendant, had to pay certain road and public work cess in respect of lands described in the plaint as the debutter lakhraj lands of an idol named Shib Thakoor. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant was the proprietor and in possession of the land and as such was liable to make good the amount paid in respect of the cesses.

Before the Munsif the defendant admitted his title to the land in question, but contended that he was not liable, and that the plaintiff should have sued the person who was in actual occupation of the land. The Munsif, however, gave the plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed, on the ground that he was entitled to have the amount of the cesses paid by the defendant, inasmuch as he was the proprietor of the rent-free land

On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif, and dismissed the suit on the following grounds, as stated in the judgment :—

"The plaint in this case does not appear to have been rightly framed. The property from which cess was claimed was described as the debutter lakhraj property of some idol—Shib Thakoor. Nevertheless, the plaint stated that the Maharajah-defendant was the proprietor and was in possession. If the property is actually debutter, the idol is, and must be presumed to be, the malik, and if the Maharajah is in possession he cannot but be the trustee or shebait. The suit does not seem to have been framed against the defendant in his character as shebait or trustee. The Maharajah in his written statement says that on enquiry he finds that he is not in possession, and that those in possession [746] should have been sued, and he pleaded non-liability for the plaintiff's claim. The lower Court decreed the plaintiff's claim in this state of the pleadings, saying that he has the undoubted right to sue the proprietor of the rent-free land, and therefore the defendant was liable. I think this view of that Court is not supported by the law. Section 56 of Act IX of 1880 recognizes three classes of persons as bound to pay cesses for rent-free lands —

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1686 of 1883, against the decree of Baboo Jogesh Chunder Mitter, Second Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 26th of March and 29th of March 1883, reversing the decree of Baboo Gopal Chunder Bose, Second Sudder Munsif of Burdwan, dated the 15th of December 1882

- (1) Owner and holder of any rent-free land
- (2) Every person in receipt of the rents and profits
- (3) Every person in possession and enjoyment of the land

"The Maharajah does not admit that he is in possession or enjoyment of the land, nor has the plaintiff adduced evidence to show that he is so in possession. If the Maharajah is in receipt of the rents, he is the shebait of the debutter property. This does not seem to be the plaintiff's case. Nor has it been proved by the evidence. The Maharajah may be 'owner,' but it has not been shown that he is also the 'holder.' The word 'and' in the section couples the words 'owner' and 'holder.' It does not, as urged by the respondent's pleader, disjoin them. So that there is nothing to show how the Maharajah can be held liable."

Against that decision the plaintiff now specially appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Gruja Sunkur Mazoomdar for the Appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Basunt Coomar Bose for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the High Court was as follows

Tottenham, J. (NORRIS, J., concurring) -- In this case the plaintiff, who is the appellant in this Court, was a putnidar of the Maharajah of Burdwan. As a putnidar he had to pay road cess and public work cess, in respect of certain debutter lands lying within the ambit of his putni. He sues the Maharajah to recover these cesses from him.

In the first Court there appears to have been an admission made by the Maharajah's pleader that the Maharajah had some [746] right in the lands in dispute. The Munsif says "The defendant, admitting his title to the land in question, urges in his written defence that the plaintiff should have sued the person who is in actual occupation of the lands," and the Munsif was of opinion that that defence had no foundation in law, that inasmuch as the Maharajah admitted himself to be the proprietor of the rent-free lands he was liable for the cesses. The first Court, therefore, made a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit apparently on two grounds. He thought that the plaint had not been rightly framed, for whereas the plaint described the property as debutter, i.e., the lakhray property of an idol, Shib Thakoor, the defendant Maharajah was sued in his capacity of proprietor, though the land belonged to an idol and not to the Maharajah. If the Maharajah was the holder of it at all, he must have held it as shebait. The Maharajah not being sued in that capacity, the Subordinate Judge thought that he was not liable for the amount claimed. The Subordinate Judge further differed from the first Court as to the construction to be put upon the words of the Cess Act, s. 56, Bengal Act IX of 1880. The Munsif held that it was quite enough for the defendant to admit his ownership of the land to make him liable for the cesses thereof. The Subordinate Judge says that it was not enough. The defendant must not only be proved to be the owner, but also the actual holder of the land. He points out that s. 56 recognizes three classes of persons as bound to pay cesses for rent-free lands: First, the owner and holder of any rent-free lands, secondly, any person in receipt of the rents and profits; and, thirdly, every person in possession and enjoyment of the land. The Subordinate Judge holds that the terms "owner and holder" must relate to the same person, that the owner is not liable to pay cesses unless he is also a holder; and that in the present case the Maharajah, not having admitted being in possession, nor having been proved to have been in possession in any capacity, he is not liable for the cesses claimed.

As regards the first ground stated, we think the Subordinate [747] Judge was right, and that upon the suit as framed, the plaintiff had no right to recover the cesses from the Maharajah. From the plaintiff's own showing the debutter land belongs to an idol. The party liable to those cesses is, therefore, that idol, through its shebait, or some person in receipt of the rent and profits of the land, or some person in actual possession of the land in occupation of it. The suit against the Maharajah in his capacity of proprietor must, we think, fail. He is not the proprietor of the rent-free lands if they belong to an idol, and in his capacity of proprietor of the estate within the limits of which geographically the debutter lands are situated, he would not be liable, excepting he paid the cesses in the first instance and recovered them from the idol afterwards, or from the plaintiff putnidar. Upon that ground alone, therefore, we think that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be affirmed.

As regards the other ground stated by the Subordinate Judge, we are of opinion that he is mistaken in his construction of the law. We do not take the words "owner and holder" in s. 56, when referring to rent-free lands, to be limited to any one individual, or that the owner must also be in actual possession. We think that these words are intended to apply to both classes of cases, namely, where the lakhraj land is the actual property of the owner, and where, as in the present case, the debutter being the property of an idol is held on behalf of that idol by a trustee or shebait. We think that the Act contemplates the payment of the cesses by persons beneficially interested in the land in respect of which the cesses are levied, and that in the present case, the Maharajah, neither being admitted nor found to be beneficially interested in this debutter land, the lower Court was justified in holding him free from the liability which the plaintiff seeks to impose upon him.

The appeal is dismissed with costs

Luchmeshur Singh.Decree-holder *

Limitation--Execution of decree--Limitation applicable to execution of decree passed when Act XIV of 1859 was in force--Disability of decree-holder--Minority--Limitation Act (XIV of 1859, ss 11, 14 and 20 and XV of 1877, s. 7)

In execution of a decree, dated the 29th April 1862, certain proceedings were taken which terminated on the 5th September 1866, when the execution case was struck off the file. Between that date and the 25th September 1882 no further proceedings were taken. On the latter date an application was made for execution. The decree-holder was a minor when the decree was passed and did not attain his majority till the 25th September 1879.

Held, that the words to "bring an action" as used in s 11, Act XIV of 1859, must be taken to be synonymous with the words to "bring a suit" and that the word "suit" must be construed in the same way as the word "suit" used in s 14, and following the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in Huro Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Shooroahonee Dobra (9 W. R. , 402) must be taken to include execution proceedings, Muthom a Doss v. Shambhoo Dutt (20 W. R. , 53) dissented from.

Held, therefore, that as Act XIV of 1859 was applicable to the case previous to the date on which Act XV of 1877 came into operation, and as under s 11 the decree-holder was entitled to have the time during which he was a minor deducted from the period during which limitation was running against him, his right to execution was not barred when Act XV of 1877 came into force, and that being so, and the present application being made within three years of the date on which he attained his majority, execution of the decree was not barred. Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadiapa Irsangapa (I L R. , 7 Bom. , 459) discussed, Behary Lal v. Gobeidhun Lal (I. L. R. , 9 Cal. , 446, 12 C. L. R. , 431) dissented from, Nursingh Doyal v. Hurryhur Saha (6 C. L. R. , 489), Shumbhu Nath Saha Chowdhry v. Guru Churn Lahury (6 C. L. R. , 437) approved.

THIS appeal arose out of an application for execution of a decree, dated the 29th April 1862, passed in favour of the Maharajah of Durbungah. When the decree was obtained the Maharajah was [749] a minor, and it was not disputed that he attained his majority on the 25th September 1879. The present application for execution was made on the 25th September 1882, and it appeared that certain proceedings had been taken in execution between the years 1862 and 1866, but that those proceedings terminated on the 5th September 1866 when the case was struck off the file, and that between that date and the present application no proceedings of any kind had been taken.

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 57 of 1884, against the order of A. C. Brett, Esq., Judge of Tirhoot, dated 22nd of January 1884, affirming the order of Babu Koylash Chunder Mookerji, the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated 10th of March 1883.

The first Court decided the question of limitation in favour of the decree-holder on the ground that Act XV of 1877 was applicable to the case, and that under s. 7 of that Act the decree-holder was allowed three years after attaining his majority, and that the present application was made within that period, the 25th September 1879 being excluded from such period under the provisions of s. 12.

In the lower Appellate Court it was contended on behalf of the judgment-debtor that, inasmuch as the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871 did not save applications for execution from being affected by the ordinary periods of limitation on the ground of minority of the decree-holder, but only "suits," the right to apply for execution in the present case was gone before the Act of 1877 was passed and that s. 7 of the latter Act could not apply, and the right could not be revived. The Court, however, held that Act XV of 1877 was applicable to the case, on the ground that the law applicable to proceedings in execution is not the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit, but the one in force at the time of the application as laid down in Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadrappa Irsangapa (1 L. R., 7 Bom., 459), and as the decree-holder could not have applied for execution before that Act came into force, and as the application was made within the time limited by it, he was entitled to have the decree executed.

The appeal was accordingly dismissed with costs.

Against that decision the judgment-debtor now specially appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Behari Lall Mitter for the Appellant.—The decree being one passed in the year 1862, the Limitation Act applicable is Act XIV of 1859, and s. 7 of Act XV of 1877 has no application [730] to the case. Under the Act of 1859 the right to execution was barred, as under that Act the decree-holder was not entitled to any extension of time on the ground of minority as he would be now under the provisions of Act XV of 1877, and as the decree was barred before the latter Act came into force, the right to execution cannot be revived.

In support of these contentions, the following authorities were cited :—

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry (with him Baboo Ram Charan Mitter) for the Respondent

The Limitation Law applicable to the case is Act XV of 1877 (Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadrappa Irsangapa (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 459) and the right to take out execution was not barred before that Act came into force. Though it may be said that under s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859 the right was barred before Act XV of 1877 was passed, that is not so, for s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859 must be read in conjunction with s. 11 of that Act. Under the latter section, if at the time when the "right to bring an action" first accrues, the person entitled to such right is under a disability, the "suit" may be brought by him within the same period after the disability ceases. The words "right to bring an action" is merely another way of expressing "right to sue," and the word "suit" is used in the same section in the same sense as the word "action." Now in s. 14 the word "suit" is used in precisely the same sense as the word "action" is now in s. 11, and as used in that section it has been held by the majority of a Full Bench of the Court in the case of Huro Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Shoonodhonee Debia (9 W. R., 402) to include any proceeding instituted in [751] a Court of Justice, and would thus include a right to sue out execution. Therefore the words "right to bring an action" in s. 11 must be construed in the same way and not in their restricted sense, and if that is done they would include a right to apply for execution. Then the decree-holder would under that section be entitled to three years, after he had attained his majority, in which to apply for execution, and as he did not attain his majority till the 25th September 1879, the right was not barred when Act XV of 1877 came into force. The period allowed under that Act is the same, and as the present application was made within that period the decision of the lower Courts is correct.

Baboo Behari Lal Mitter in reply.

The Judgment of the High Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) was as follows:—

Mitter, J. (NORRIS, J., concurring)—The question for decision in this case is whether the execution of a decree, dated 29th April 1862, is barred by the law of limitation or not, the present application for its execution being made on the 25th September 1882. When the decree was obtained the decree-holder was a minor and his estate was in the Court of Wards. It appears that certain proceedings relating to the execution of the decree were taken between the years 1862 and 1866, and on the 5th September 1866 the execution case was struck off. Between that date and the present application no proceeding was taken either by the Court of Wards, or by the decree-holder after he attained his majority, which the Courts below have found was on the 25th September 1879. The lower Courts have decided this question of limitation in favour of the decree-holder. It has been held that s. 7 of the Limitation Act of 1877 entitles the decree-holder to make his application within three years from the date on which he attained majority. If the Limitation Act of 1877 is the Act applicable to this case, it is not disputed that the present application is within time.

It was not disputed, probably because it has now been conclusively settled, that either the day on which the decree-holder attained his majority or the day on which the application for execution is made, must be excluded from computation. One [752] of these two days being excluded the application is made on the last day allowed by law, if the law is such as has been contended for by the learned vakeel for the respondent. Against the judgment two points have been made before us—First, that the decree being a decree of the year 1862, when the Limitation Act of 1859 was in force, s. 7 of the Limitation Act of 1877 has no application. In support of this contention the learned vakeel for the appellant has relied upon the well-known decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Mungul Pershad Dicht v. Gya Kant Lahiri (L. R., 8 I. A., 123, 1 L. R., 8 Cal., 51), he has further relied upon the decision of this Court in Behari Lal v. Gobarbhun Lal (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 446, 12 C. L. R., 431). In this latter case this Bench held, upon the authority of Mungul Pershad Dicht's case, that an application for execution made after the Limitation Act of 1877 came into force, in a suit which was pending at the time when Act XIV of 1859 was in operation, must be governed by the provisions of the latter Act. It was contended that if the law laid down in this last mentioned case be correct, then the lower Courts are not right in applying the provisions of s. 7 of the Limitation Act of 1877, but that the law applicable was the Limitation Act of 1859. That being so, it was further contended that under the Limitation Act of 1859, the execution was barred by limitation, because under that Act, it was contended, the decree-holder was not entitled to any indulgence on the ground of minority, and in support of that contention the ruling in the case of Muthoor Dass v. Shumbhoo Dutt (20 W. R. 53) was cited. The next point that was made was that the present application is barred by limitation, because at the time when the Act of 1877 came into force, the decree was altogether barred by limitation, and that contention is also based upon the ground that under Act XIV of 1859 the decree-holder is not entitled to any indulgence on the ground of minority. It was contended that if, in the year 1877 when Act XV of that year came into operation, the present decree was not capable of being enforced, nothing in the Act itself would revive the [753] right to take out execution, which right had then been extinguished under the old law. In support of this contention the learned vakeel for the appellant has relied upon two decisions of this Court, Shumbhu Nath Saha Chowdhry v. Guru Churn Lahury (6 C. L. R., 437) and Nursingh Doyal v. Hurryhur Saha (6 C. L. R., 489). As regards the first contention, the learned vakeel for the respondent, as well as the lower Courts, rely upon a decision of the Bombay High Court in Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadrappa Irsangapa (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 459). In that case the learned Judges dissented from the view laid down in Behary Lall v. Goberdhun Lall (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 446, 12 C. L. R., 431). This latter decision was a decision of this Bench, and I am free to confess that I overlooked in that case one important point, viz., whether or not, at the time when the Limitation Act of 1877 came into operation, there was any proceeding pending within the meaning of s. 6 of Act I of 1868. The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court say: "In the case quoted, Behary Lall v. Goberdhun Lall, 'proceedings' are identified with 'suit', but we think that where a decree has been obtained, the application for execution initiates a new set of proceedings." As to "proceedings" being identified with "suit" it seems to me that we held that proposition to be correct on the authority of the Privy Council decision in Mungal Pershad Dicht's case, and after hearing arguments in this case, and after considering the judgment quoted, I still adhere to that opinion, viz., that an application for execution of a decree is an application in the suit which resulted in the decree. That was distinctly held in Mungal Pershad Dicht's case, and we are bound by that decision. But at the same time it seems to me that, although it is an application in that suit, it may not be an application in a pending proceeding. The suit having matured into a decree could not properly be said to be pending thereafter. A proceeding to be a pending proceeding after the decree, must be initiated by an application for execution. But after a suit terminates in a decree, if nothing further is done, it cannot be said to be a pending proceeding. It is on that ground that I think we were not right in the deci-[754]sion in Behary Lall v. Goberdhun Lall (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 446, 12 C. L. R. 431). There we assumed as a fact that the proceedings were pending, although there was nothing on the record to show that anything in the shape of proceedings were pending. Then, as regards the next contention, it seems to us that the view taken by this Court, if I am permitted to say so, in the decisions in Shumbhu Lall Saha Chowdhry v. Guru Churn Lahury (6 C. L. R., 437), Nursingh Doyal v. Hurryhur Saha (6 C. L. R., 489) is quite correct, and I entirely concur in that view, not because the words "right to sue" in s. 2 of Act XV of 1877 necessarily mean "right to sue out execution," but because from the provisions of that section and other sections in that Act it is clear that it was the intention of the Legislature to extend the provisions of that section to proceedings in execution also. Mr. Justice PONTIFEX, at page 493, referring to s. 2, Act XV of 1877, says: "No doubt there is some foundation for this argument," viz., (the argument which was urged, then, that the words used were 'to revive any right to sue,' and that these words did not include a right to take out execution), "from the imperfect language used in the Act, but we think that s. 2 at least indicates the policy of the Act." Upon this ground it was held that it was the intention of the Legislature (as far as it could be gathered from that section and other sections of the Act) to extend the provisions of s. 2 of the Act to applications for execution also. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that if it can be shown that this application, if made just the day before Act XV of 1877 came into operation, would have been barred, then s. 7 of the Act of 1877 would have no application. The question therefore is whether the decree was barred on that date. Now, upon this point, it is quite clear that the law to be looked at is Act XIV of 1859, because that has been held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Mungal Pershad Ditchit's case. The decree is dated 1862, when Act XIV of 1859 was in force; and, although there had been an intermediate Limitation Act in 1871, it was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that, if the decree is dated at a time when Act XIV was in force, that Act alone would govern the application for execution of [755] decree. We, therefore, come to the consideration of the question whether under Act XIV of 1859 the decree-holder would have been barred if he had made his application in the year 1877. The answer to this question depends upon the construction to be put upon ss. 11 and 20 of the Limitation Act of 1859. Section 20 says. "No process of execution shall issue from any Court not established by Royal Charter to enforce any judgment, decree or order of such Court, unless some proceeding shall have been taken to enforce such judgment, decree or order, or to keep the same in force within three years next preceding the application for such execution." That is the general position, viz., that unless there is some proceeding taken within three years next before the application it would be held to be barred by limitation. It was pointed out in some cases decided under the old Act, that there is a defect in the language of the section, and that it really means that no process of execution shall issue from any Court not established by Royal Charter unless an application for execution shall have been made within three years from the date of the decree, etc. Now, in this case, if s. 20 applies, there is no doubt that the application was barred by limitation, because the date of the decree is 29th April 1862, and the last proceeding taken was struck off on the 25th September 1866, and nothing was done between that date and the date when the Act of 1877 came into operation. Therefore, clearly, under s. 20 the application made on that date should have been held to be barred by limitation. Therefore, unless the decree-holder was entitled to rely upon s. 11 of the Limitation Act of 1859, the present application must be held barred. Upon this point the learned vakeel for the respondent relied upon a Full Bench decision in Huro Chunder Roy Chowdhry v Shoorodhoney Debia (9 W. R., 402), that was a decision upon the construction of s. 14 of the Limitation Act of 1859. The same difficulty arose in applying s. 14 to execution proceedings as in applying s. 11, and it was held by the majority of the Court in that case that the word "suit" must not be construed in a restricted sense, and that it means any proceeding instituted in a Court of Justice. Having regard to the arguments used in support of this conclusion I do not see any distinction between the construction [756] tion to be put as regards this point upon s. 14 and s. 11. No doubt in s. 14 the words used are. "The time during which the claimant, or any person under whom he claims, shall have been engaged in prosecuting a suit upon the same cause of action against the same defendant, or some person whom he represents, bonâ fide and with due diligence, etc.," and in s. 11 the words used are: "If at the time when the right to bring an action first accrues the person to whom the right accrues is under a legal disability, the action may be brought by such person." But it seems to me that the words "to bring an action," may be converted into the words "right to bring a suit," and that is also clear because in the section itself the word "suit" has been subsequently used as a substitute for the word "action." If we give effect to the argument upon which this broad construction was put on the word "suit," then we are compelled to come to the same conclusion as to the construction to be put upon s. 11 as the learned Judges in the last mentioned case came to as to the construction to be put on s. 14. Therefore it seems to me that s. 11 also applies to execution proceedings. No doubt this view is opposed to that expressed in the decision in Muthoora Dass v. Shumhboo Lall (20 W. R., 53) and the cases there cited, but the decision in Huro Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Shoorodhoney Debta (9 W. R., 402) being a Full Bench decision, and we agreeing with the reasons given in that judgment, are not bound by the decision and the decisions cited therein. For these reasons I am of opinion that under Act XIV of 1859 the decree had not been barred by limitation at the time when Act XV of 1877 came into force. There is only one point which remains to be noticed, viz., that when the Act of 1877 came into operation the decree-holder was not in a position to execute the decree as he was then under the guardianship of the Court of Wards, but this would not prejudice his rights, it has been so held by the Privy Council in the case of Phoolbas Koonwar v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (I L. R., 1 Cal., 226).

On these grounds I am of opinion that the decisions of the lower Courts are correct. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[757] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 16th May, 1881

PRESENT.

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR JUSTICE BEVERLEY

Mahomed Gazee Chowdhry Plaintiff

versus

Ram Loll Sen and others Defendants.

Execution of decree—Sale—Application by judgment-creditor to be permitted to bid at sale—Refusal—Purchase by judgment-creditor—Invalidity of sale—Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, s. 294.

A mortgagee having obtained a decree, declaring his lien on certain property, put up for sale in execution of this decree the mortgaged property. The decree-holder asked for, but was refused leave to bid at the sale, but notwithstanding such refusal, purchased the property in the name of a third person.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 169 of 1882, against the decree of F. W. J. Rees, Esq., Judge of Naskhally, dated the 4th of April 1882

Possession under the sale was opposed, and the decree-holder as purchaser brought a suit for possession of the property

The defendants contended that, inasmuch as the plaintiff (decree-holder) had been refused leave to bid at the sale, his purchase could not be enforced. Held, that the plaintiff had been guilty of an abuse of the process of the Court, in bidding at the sale and buying the property bonami, and that the sale, therefore, ought not to be enforced

THIS was a suit to recover possession of a 10-anna share in a certain taluq and for mesne profits.

The plaintiff stated that in 1281 B. S. he lent a sum of money to Aktuinessa and Maimona Bibi, and that as security for this advance they executed a bond mortgaging to him the 10 annas of the taluq above referred to. That on the 23rd August 1879 he instituted a suit, and obtained a decree against them on the 9th October declaring his lien on the property

That in execution of this decree, property was sold and was purchased by his benamidar, Chunder Kant Dass, but Chunder Kant's possession was opposed by the defendants, the plaintiff, therefore, brought the present suit to recover possession.

The defendants stated that the plaintiff had asked permission from the Court to bid at the sale, and that such permission had been refused, but that notwithstanding such refusal, the plaintiff had purchased the property in the name of Chunder Kant Dass, and they contended that the sale therefore was void.

The Court of First Instance found that the Court had refused to [758] allow the plaintiff to bid at the sale, and that, therefore, the purchase through Chunder Kant Dass was fraudulent and could not be enforced, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court

Baboo Rashbehari Ghose and Moulvi Seraful Islam for the Appellants contended that, no objection having been made by the judgment-debtor to the sale under s. 294 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suit should not have been dismissed. That s. 294 did not make the sale void, but only voidable at the application of the judgment-debtor—Javherbai v. Haribhai (1 L. R., 5 Bom., 575).

Baboo Bhuban Mohan Doss and Baboo Ratneswar Sen for the Respondents relied on the case of Rukhinee Bullubh v. Brojonath Sircar (1 L. R., 5 Cal., 308) as showing that without permission of the Court such a purchase would be invalid.

Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Garth, C.J. (BEVERLEY, J., concurring)—The plaintiff in the suit was the mortgagee of certain property. He brought a suit to enforce his rights, and obtained a decree for sale, and the property was sold in execution under that decree.

The mortgagee then applied to the Court to be allowed to bid at the sale, but his application was refused. He, however, notwithstanding that refusal, purchased the property through a benamidar, and the Court, in ignorance of the fact, confirmed the sale.

The mortgagee then brought this suit against the mortgagor, and other persons who had purchased a portion of the mortgagor's interest, for possession of the mortgaged property, and for mesne profits, and the defence was that the plaintiff had bought the property, not only without the permission, but contrary to the express orders of the Court, and that consequently he had no right to enforce his sale.

The Judge of the Court below has dismissed the suit upon the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of a fraud ; and that the purchase was one which the plaintiff had no right to make, having regard to s. 294 of the Code.

Upon appeal it has been contended by the plaintiff that the [759] Court below was wrong ; and that s. 294 in its present amended form does not render such a sale absolutely void, but only voidable by an application to the Court under the last clause of the section, which runs thus : " When a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person interested in the sale, by order set aside the sale, and the costs of such application and order and any deficiency of price, which may happen on the resale, and all expenses attending it, shall be paid by the decree-holder."

It is contended that a purchase made by a mortgagee, without the permission of the Court, is not ipso facto void, but only voidable at the instance of the mortgagor, under the clause which I have just read, and in support of that view we have been referred to a case of Javherbai v. Haribhai decided by the Bombay High Court and reported in I. L. R., 5 Bom., 575, in which the Court says " In the absence of such an application (that is, an application made under the last clause of s. 294), the Code does not, in s. 294, contemplate a sale being set aside."

But in order to understand that case correctly, we must see what the nature of the suit was. A mortgagee had purchased property under a decree without the permission of the Court, and having done so, he failed to deposit the earnest money, in consequence of which the Court ordered the property to be sold again, and another person bought it for Rs. 125 less than what had been bid by the defaulting purchaser at the first sale.

- The mortgagor then sued the mortgagee, the first purchaser, for Rs. 125, upon the ground that he had been a loser to that extent by reason of the first purchaser's default, and the answer to that suit by the mortgagee was, that he had purchased without the permission of the Court, and that his purchase was consequently void

Of course this was no defence. His purchase would only be void at the option of the mortgagor. If the mortgagee chose to bid without permission, and made a bad bargain, he could not, of course, take advantage of his own wrong to throw his purchase [760] up. His purchase could only be avoided at the instance of the mortgagor, or of somebody who was interested in setting it aside.

Another case (Rukhinee Bullubh v. Brogonath Sircar) to which we were referred, and which is applicable here, is reported in I. L. R., 5 Cal., 308. That was a suit brought by a mortgagor to set aside a purchase made by a mortgagee without permission of the Court, when Act X of 1877 was in force ; and consequently before the clause, which I have just read, formed part of s. 294, and the Court held that it was competent to the plaintiff to set the purchase aside.

At that time a regular suit was the only remedy which the mortgagee (?) could take ; but now he has a further remedy. He can, if he chooses, by a summary application, not only have the sale set aside, but he may also recover the costs of the application, and any deficiency in the price which may happen on the re-sale, and all expenses attending it.

But in this case the plaintiff is in a much worse position. He has not only not obtained the permission of the Court, but he has applied to the Court and his application has been refused, and then knowing that his own bidding would not be accepted, and that the Court would not confirm any purchase which he might make, he gets a benamidar to buy for him, and is guilty of an abuse of the process of the Court, and now he asks as against the mortgagor that his sale should be enforced. It is clear that the Court below was quite right in dismissing his suit

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[761] APPELLATE CIVIL

The 6th May, 1884

PRESENT ·

MR JUSTICE WILSON AND MR JUSTICE TOTTENHAM

Sorbojit Roy and others. Defendants

versus

Gonesh Prosad Misser and others..... Plaintiffs. ¹

Jurisdiction of the High Court over Sonthal Pergunnahs—Act XXXVII of 1855, s. 2—Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, ss 1 and 3—Notifications in Gazette

An appeal lies to the High Court from the Sonthal Pergunnahs in all civil suits in which the matter in dispute is over Rs 1,000 in value.

THE plaintiffs, the sons and nephews of one Chuni Lal Misser, brought a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Deoghur in the Sonthal Pergunnahs for a declaration of their rights in respect of certain immoveable properties of the estimated value of Rs. 1,000, which had been attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained by the present defendants against Chuni Lal Misser, and had been purchased at the auction sale by the defendants

The Court of First Instance found that only the right, title and interest of Chuni Lal had passed to the defendants under their decree, and therefore gave the plaintiffs a decree declaring their right to the property claimed exclusive of the interest of Chuni Lal therein.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 806 of 1883, against the decree of W. Oldham, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of the Sonthal Pergunnahs, dated 12th January 1883, modifying the decree of S. S. Jones, Esq., Subordinate Judge, of Deoghur, dated 10th of August 1882.

The defendants (the auction purchasers) appealed to the Deputy Commissioner valuing their appeal at Rs. 825. The Deputy Commissioner affirmed the decree of the lower Court.

The defendants appealed to the High Court, and at the hearing the respondents' (plaintiffs') pleader objected—(1) that there was no provision for an appeal from the Sonthal Pergunnahs to the High Court, (2) that even if there was, the value of the present appeal (Rs. 825) was too low to allow the High Court to entertain it.

Baboo Kallu Kissen Sen for the Appellants

Baboo Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) upon the preliminary points was as follows —

[762] Wilson, J. (TOTTENHAM, J., concurring).—A preliminary objection has been argued before us in this case, viz., whether this appeal will lie.

The suit was brought in the proper Court within the Sonthal Pergunnahs in respect of property exceeding Rs 1,000 in value. It was brought on appeal before the Deputy Commissioner, and he states that the appeal is under Rs 1,000 in value. The objection has been put in two ways First, it is said that there is now no provision for an appeal from the Sonthal Pergunnahs to this Court, even in cases above Rs 1,000 in value. We think that argument is not well founded. The matter depends upon several enactments which must be noticed. The root of the special legislation is Act XXXVII of 1855. That Act says, first, in s 1, with regard to the districts now known as the scheduled districts, that they are removed from the operation of the general regulations of the Bengal Code, and of the laws passed by the Governor-General of India in Council, "except so far as is hereinafter provided." It says further "No law which shall hereafter be passed by the Governor General of India in Council shall be deemed to extend to any part of the said districts unless the same shall be specially named therein." Then it goes on to provide for special officers to administer civil justice in most cases, and whose decisions were to be final in cases not exceeding Rs. 1,000. But it provided in s. 2 "that all civil suits in which the matter in dispute shall exceed the value of Rs. 1,000 shall be tried and determined according to the general laws and regulations in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed." It therefore reserved suits of the value of Rs. 1,000 and upwards to be dealt with as they would have been before the passing of this Act under the ordinary laws. In effect such suits were at present left to be determined by the old tribunals, though a change was afterwards made, after that the Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, was passed. That Act was not by its own force put into operation in the scheduled districts. Section 385 says "This Act shall not take effect in any part of the territories not subject to the general regulations of Bengal, Madras and Bombay, until the same shall be extended thereto by the Governor-General of India in Council, or by the local Government to which such territory is subordinate and notified in the Gazette." That section, therefore, gave the local Government power to extend the Act to the scheduled districts by notification in the Gazette. Accordingly, on the 19th of August 1867, a notification appeared in the Calcutta Gazette by which Act VIII of 1859 with a subsequent amending Act were extended to the Sonthal Pergunnahs. There were in the notification certain modifications and qualifications which it is unnecessary now to notice. Between the date of that notification in 1867 and the passing of the next Procedure Code in 1877, it was repeatedly held that Act VIII of 1859 was in force in the Sonthal Pergunnahs, and under it, appeals to this Court were from time to time entertained. The cases on the point are numerous, and it is unnecessary to refer to them in detail.

Then came the Code of 1877 (Act X), and that Act said in s. 1, after giving the short title and the commencement of the Act, that "this section and s. 3 extend to the whole of British India. The other sections extend to the whole of British India except the scheduled districts." Then in s. 3 it said, "the enactments specified in the first schedule hereto annexed are hereby repealed": and amongst the Acts repealed is Act VIII of 1859. Therefore Act VIII of 1859 can no longer apply in the Sonthal Pergunnahs or elsewhere, because the repeal extended to the whole of British India. And the Code of 1877 does not, by its own proper force, apply in the scheduled districts, because it is only s. 1 and s. 3 that apply to the whole of British India. But s. 3 contains a further clause, "but when in any Act, regulation or notification, passed or issued prior to the day on which this Code comes into force, reference is made to Act VIII of 1859, Act XXIII of 1861, or the Code of Civil Procedure, or to any other Act hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be read as applying to this Code, or the corresponding part thereof." It appears to us that the effect of that is, that we should take the notification of 1867, strike out of it the words "Act VIII of 1859," and read into it in their place "Act X of 1877" subject to the qualifications contained in the notification itself.

Then followed the present Code of 1882, which contains provisions similar to those in the Code of 1877. It has a similar [764] s. 1 and a similar s. 3. It repeals the Code of 1877 with respect to the whole of British India including the scheduled districts, and it contains a similar provision that the Act itself, the Code of 1882, is to be taken as substituted in the place of Act VIII of 1859 and Act X of 1877, in any Act, regulation or notification.

We must, therefore, again go back to the notification of 1867, strike out of it what the Act of 1877 had inserted, and insert in its place the Act of 1882.

The effect is that the Act of 1882 is now in force in the Sonthal Pergunnahs subject to the qualification contained in the notification.

Then there remains a second question. It is said that even supposing that an appeal lies under the present law from the Sonthal Pergunnahs, still the value of this appeal is too low to allow this Court to entertain it. We think that is not a correct construction of the law. The question depends upon s. 2 of Act XXXVII of 1855. That section says: "All civil suits in which the matter in dispute shall exceed the value of Rs. 1,000 shall be tried and determined according to the general laws and regulations." By that section the question is made to depend on the value of the suit, not on the value of the appeal. Inasmuch as the suit in this case is over Rs. 1,000 in value, although the value of the appeal is less, there is an appeal.

[The learned Judge then proceeded to give a decision on the merits, and dismissed the appeal with costs.]

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th May, 1884.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Behary Loll Doss and others. Defendants *versus*Tej Narain... .. Plaintiff.¹*Bond, Suit on a—Penalty—Liquidated damages—Evidence—Oral evidence when admissible to show intention of parties to treat a clause in a bond as penal.*

Where a document contains covenants for the performance of several things, and then one large sum is stated to be payable in the event of a breach, such sum must be considered a penalty ; but when it is agreed [765] that if a party do or refrain from doing any particular thing, a certain sum shall be paid by him, then the sum stated may be treated as liquidated damages.

A bond for Rs. 20,000, which provided for payment of interest at the rate of Re. 1-4 per cent. per month, contained the following clause “ We hereby promise and give in writing that we shall pay year by year a sum of Rs. 3,000 on account of the interest . . . And in case of our failing to pay year by year the said sum of Rs. 3,000, the same shall be considered as principal and thereon interest shall run also at the rate of Re. 1-4 per cent. per month.”

And in a suit on such bond the defendants sought to adduce evidence to show that after the execution of the bond the plaintiff stated that the clause was intended to operate as a penal clause, and that the conditions therein would not be enforced

Held, that the clause was not penal, but in the nature of an agreement to pay liquidated damages, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount due in the bond with interest as agreed upon

Held, also, that the evidence tendered was not admissible

Bahsu Lakshmanan v Govinda Kanji (I L R , 4 Bom , 594) and Hem Chunder Soon v Kally Churn Dass (I.L.R , 9 Cal , 528) approved and distinguished

THE plaintiff brought this suit to recover the sum of Rs. 20,000 with interest due on a bond, dated the 30th June 1874

The bond provided for the payment of interest at the rate of Re. 1-4 per cent. per month, or Rs. 3,000 per year, year by year, the principal to be repaid in the month of Bhadro 1285 (August—September 1878), that in case of their failing to pay the said sum of Rs. 3,000 year by year the same was to be considered as principal, and interest was to run thereon at the same rate of Re. 1-4 per cent. per month, and that in the event of the yearly interest not being paid when due, the plaintiff was to be at liberty to recover the same by suit. The bond further mortgaged a 2-anna share in a certain taluq by way of security for the repayment of the loan, and contained clauses providing for the non-alienation of the taluq, etc., until the plaintiff should be repaid.

The defendants pleaded that the agreement to pay Rs. 3,000, year by year, and in the event of non-payment thereof that the same should be treated as principal and interest paid thereon, was in the nature of a penalty and could not be enforced, and they also set up a contemporaneous oral agreement by which the plaintiff undertook that this clause should not be enforced.

[766] They also contended that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was at liberty to recover the amount of interest due each year by suit, he was not entitled to compound interest thereon, and that as the rate of interest was exorbitant, he should only be allowed the Court rate of 6 per cent. on the principal from the date on which it became due and repayable.

They further pleaded a payment of Rs. 10,000 in respect of the principal due on the bond for which the plaintiff had made no allowance

The lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree, holding that the agreement was not a penal one, and that the defendants could not be allowed to give evidence of the oral agreement for the purpose of varying the terms of the bond under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. The Court also found that the payment alleged by the defendants had not been made in respect of this debt, but in respect of a totally different bond debt, and, holding that the plaintiff was entitled to the compound interest claimed, gave him a decree for a smaller amount than he claimed, on the ground that the compound interest had not been calculated in the proper manner.

Against that decree the defendants now appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale for the Appellant

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Juggut Chunder Banerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ) was delivered by Tottenham, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore. Two points have been raised by the learned pleader for the appellant in support of the appeal. The first point is that, upon a true construction of the bond, the clause stipulating for the payment of interest at 15 per cent. per annum upon unpaid interest should have been construed as a penalty clause and not as a clause entitling the plaintiff to such interest as liquidated damages. The words of the bond are as follows —“In case of our failing to pay year by year the said sum of Rs. 3,000 the same shall be considered as principal, and thereon interest shall run [767] also at the rate of Re. 1-4 per cent. per month.” No doubt at times some difficulty arises in deciding whether the sum named in a contract to be paid upon a breach is a penalty or liquidated damages. But we do not think there is any difficulty in this case. The law upon the construction of contracts in this respect is thus laid down in Chitty on Contracts, 7th edition, p. 782 “It has been said to be very difficult to lay down any general principle in cases of this kind, but still there is one which may be safely stated, viz, that where articles contain covenants for the performance of several things, and then one large sum is stated at the end to be paid upon breach of performance, that must be considered as a penalty, but where it is agreed that if a party do (or as in this case refrain from doing) such a particular thing, such a sum shall be paid by him then the sum stated may be treated as liquidated damages.” The rule is stated in the words used by HEATH, J, in Astley v Weldon (2 B and P., 346); and that case was said by TINDAL, C. J., in Kemble v. Farren (6 Bing, 141) “to be decided on a clear and intelligible principle”, and in Sparrow v Paris (7 H. and N., 594), BRAMWELL, B., in giving the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, says. “It is a sum payable in one event, it is not a sum to secure the performance of several matters, this is the distinction upon which the question turns, the names the parties give, the money, penalty or liquidated damages are immaterial." In this case the payment to be made depends upon the happening of one event only, viz., the non-payment of Rs. 3,000 as interest at the end of the current year in which such interest should have been paid. We are, therefore, of opinion that Mr. Twidale's first point fails.

The second point urged was that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in refusing to receive parol evidence tendered by the defendants to show that after the execution of the bond the plaintiff stated that the clause in question was intended to operate as a penalty clause, and that the conditions therein contained would not be enforced. In support of this contention we were referred to two cases, viz., Baksu Lakshman v Govinda Kanji (I.L.R., 4 Bom., 584), and Hem Chander Soor v. Kally Churn Das (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 528). If we may say so, we [768] entirely concur in those decisions; indeed, the luminous and able judgment of MELVILL, J., in the Bombay case cannot but commend itself to the mind of every lawyer. But we are of opinion that the principle upon which those cases were decided is not applicable to the present case. But suppose it is, ought it to be applied in this case? We think not. MELVILL, J., in Baksu Lakshman v Govinda Kanji says "The rule, which on a consideration of the whole matter, appears to me most consonant, both to the statute law and to equity and justice, is this, namely, that a party, whether plaintiff or defendant, who sets up a contemporaneous oral agreement, as showing that an apparent sale was really a mortgage, shall not be permitted to start his case by offering direct parol evidence of such oral agreement, but if it appear clearly and unmistakeably from the conduct of the parties that the transaction has been treated by them as a mortgage, the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage and not as a sale, and, thereupon, if it be necessary to ascertain what were the terms of the mortgage, the Court will, for that purpose, allow parol evidence to be given of the original oral agreement." Now, if we apply this rule, it is impossible to say that it appears clearly and unmistakeably from the conduct of the parties that the clause in question has been treated as a penalty clause, "the Court, therefore, will not give effect to it as a penalty clause," and will not, therefore, admit parol evidence of an alleged oral agreement that it was to be treated as such. Mr. Twidale urged that the fact of the plaintiff's abstaining from suing for the interest of each year as it became due was evidence of the intention of the parties to treat the clause as a penalty clause. We are unable to agree with him, if it is evidence of anything, we think it is evidence of a contrary intention. In our judgment the second point fails, and we think this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[769] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 9th May, 1884.

PRESENT.

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Secretary of State for India in Council.....Appellant

versus

Sham Bahadoor and another..... ..Respondents.

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), ss. 27, 28, 30, 35—Construction—Appeal from decision of Judge and Assessors, Right of—Collection charges, Amount of, to be deducted in cases of mokurrari lease.

In a case under the Land Acquisition Act, if there be a difference of opinion between the Judge and the Assessors, or any of them, upon a question of law or practice or usage having the force of law, but ultimately they agree upon the amount of compensation, s. 28 must be taken to apply, and no appeal will lie against the decision of the Court with reference to the point upon which the Court and the Assessors differed.

If, however, in addition to differing upon any question of law, &c., they ultimately differ also as to the amount of compensation to be awarded, s. 28 does not apply, but under s. 35, coupled with s. 30, in such a case an appeal will lie, and in such appeal all questions decided by the lower Court, whether the opinion of the Assessor coincided with that of the Judge or not upon these questions, are open to the parties in the Appellate Court.

When in a land acquisition case it was shown that the land to be acquired was subject to a mokurrari lease in favour of the Government, and the Court in estimating the compensation had deducted 5 per cent from the rent on account of collection charges. Held, that such deduction was excessive, and that, having regard to the fact that the amount was Rs. 85-4-0, and was collected only once in a year, 4 annas was all that should have been deducted.

THIS was an appeal against a decision passed under s. 35 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870:

The land sought to be acquired by the Government measured 13 bighas and odd cottahs situated in Bankipore, pergunnah Azimabad, and the amount of compensation tendered was Rs. 1,321-6, besides the additional compensation payable under s. 42.

The Deputy Collector, who made the reference to the District Judge, was of opinion that the whole of the land in question was covered by a mokurrari lease granted by the predecessor in title of the claimants on the 1st January 1808 in favour of the Government, when, as the claimants contended, only 7 bighas of the [770] land was subject to that lease, and that the residue was not affected by it.

Upon the basis of that lease the Collector calculated that, as the annual rent was Rs. 85-4-0, and as deductions on account of the Government revenue and collection charges should be made, the actual amount enjoyed by the proprietors was Rs. 66-1-1 1/5. And allowing twenty years' purchase for that actual profit, tendered the sum of Rs. 1,321-6-0. The collection charges were estimated by him at 10 per cent.

* Appeal from Original Decree No 320 of 1882, against the decree of H. Beveridge, Esq., Judge of Patna, dated 25th of September 1882.

The District Judge and the Assessors differed in the amount of compensation which they considered should be awarded. The latter were of opinion that the whole of the land was covered by the lease, and awarded compensation calculating the profits of the land in question upon the basis of the mokurrari rent; whereas the former was of opinion that only 9 bighas were affected by the lease, and accordingly awarded compensation upon the basis of the mokurrari rent as regards those 9 bighas and as regards the remaining 4 bighas odd cottahs upon the amount of rent which, according to the evidence, the claimants would be entitled to realize if the land was let at a reasonable rent. Upon that basis, after allowing for collection charges at 5 per cent. and estimating the value at twenty-three years' purchase, he awarded Rs. 5,129 as compensation, together with the usual 15 per cent. additional and costs.

Both parties being dissatisfied with this decision appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Annoda Pershad Banerjee (senior Government Pleader) for the Appellant.

Munshi Mahomed Yusuf and Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondents.

The main question between the parties was, whether the whole of the land in question was covered by the mokurrari lease above referred to or not, and if not, how much was unaffected by it, but there was a further question raised, viz., whether either party had a right of appeal to the High Court at all under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act

[771] Upon this latter question the Judgment of the High Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ) was as follows —

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal against a decision passed under s. 35 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870. The Assessors disagreed with the Judge as to the amount of compensation to be allowed. The District Judge has allowed Rs. 5,129, whereas the Assessors were of opinion that the claimants, the respondents before us in this case, were entitled to a sum considerably less than this. This difference of opinion between the Assessors and the District Judge has arisen in the following way. The land, which is sought to be taken for public purposes on behalf of Government under the Act in question, according to the Deputy Collector, who made the reference to the District Judge, measures 13 bighas odd cottahs. The Deputy Collector was of opinion that the whole of this land is covered by a mokurrari lease granted by the predecessors in title of the claimants on the 1st January 1808 in favour of Government. On the other hand, the claimants contended that out of the aforesaid lands only 7 bighas are covered by the said lease, and the residue, viz., 6 bighas odd cottahs, were not covered by the lease. The Assessors being of opinion that the whole of the land was covered by the lease awarded compensation calculating the profits of the land in question upon the basis of the mokurrari rent, whereas the District Judge calculated the compensation receivable by the claimants, as regards 9 bighas, upon the basis of the mokurrari rent, and as regards the remaining 4 bighas odd cottahs upon the amount of rent which, according to the evidence, the claimants would be entitled to realize if the said lands were let at a reasonable rent. Therefore, one of the questions which we have to decide, and which is also, it seems to us, the main question upon the merits, is whether the whole of the 13 bighas odd cottahs is covered by the mokurrari lease mentioned above, or only a portion of it, but a preliminary question as to whether or not in this case there is a right of appeal was discussed in the course of the argument. That question arises in the following way: Under s. 27 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 the Assessors are to record their opinion upon the whole case; then s. 28 says: "In case of a difference of opinion between [772] the Judge and the Assessors, or any of them, upon a question of law or practice or usage having the force of law, the opinion of the Judge shall prevail, and there shall be no appeal therefrom." Section 39 is to the effect that, "in case of difference of opinion between the Judge and both of the Assessors as to the amount of compensation, the decision of the Judge shall prevail, subject to the appeal allowed under s. 35." Then s. 35 says: "If the Judge differs from both the Assessors as to the amount of compensation, he shall pronounce his decision, and the Collector or the person interested (as the case may be) may appeal therefrom to the Court of the District Judge, unless the Judge, whose decision is appealed from, is the District Judge, or unless the amount which the Judge proposes to award exceeds Rs 5,000, in either of which cases the appeal shall lie to the High Court." We entertained some doubt whether, having regard to the provisions of s. 28, there was any right of appeal to either party in this case. It may be mentioned here that both the claimants and the Government being dissatisfied with the award in the lower Court have preferred appeals. No doubt at first sight it seems that if the difference be on a question of law, s. 28 prohibits an appeal, it says that in that case the opinion of the Judge shall prevail, and there shall be no appeal therefrom. But then again s. 30 says: "That in case of difference of opinion between the Judge and both the Assessors as to the amount of compensation, the decision of the Judge shall prevail, subject to the appeal allowed under s. 35." Section 35 also lays down without any restriction that an appeal will lie if there is a difference of opinion between the Judge and both the Assessors as to the amount of compensation. In this case there was a difference of opinion between the Judge and both the Assessors as to the amount of compensation, and, therefore, if we give effect to s. 35 we must come to the conclusion that there is an appeal. On the other hand, s. 28 provides that no appeal shall lie in any case in which there is a difference of opinion on a question of law between the Judge and the Assessors. We have to construe these sections in a way in which they may be reconciled with one another, we must construe them in some way in [773] which all these sections may have full effect given to them, and that can be done by putting this construction upon s. 28, viz, that if there be a difference of opinion between the Judge and the Assessors, or any of them, upon a question of law or practice or usage having the force of law, but ultimately they agree as to the amount of compensation, no appeal will lie against the decision of the Court with reference to the point upon which they differed, but if, on the other hand, they ultimately differed as to the amount of compensation, an appeal will lie under s. 35, and in that appeal all questions decided by the lower Court, whether the opinion of the Assessors coincided with that of the Judge upon these questions or not, would be open to the parties in the Appellate Court. For instance, there might be a difference of opinion between the Judge and the Assessors on a question of law, but ultimately they might agree as to the amount of compensation, there s. 28 would have full operation, and no appeal would be allowed, but if this difference of opinion on a question of law ultimately results in a difference of opinion as to the amount of compensation to be awarded, s. 35, coupled with s. 30, would allow the aggrieved party a right of appeal. We think that this is a reasonable construction of the sections cited above. Putting that construction we think that both the Government and the claimants are entitled to appeal against the decision of the lower Court. As regards the merits of these two appeals we find that the claimants do not question the rate of valuation adopted by the Judge, which is twenty-three years' purchase, we may, therefore, dismiss that point from our consideration. The claimants in their appeal urged that the lower Court is in error in allowing collection charges at the rate of 5 per cent. It seems to us that, so far as the collection of the mokurrari rent is concerned, this deduction of 5 per cent. for collection charges appears to be too high. We disagree, therefore, with the Judge upon this point. At the same time we are of opinion that some charge, no doubt, would be incurred in collecting the mokurrari rent, and will hereafter consider as to what deduction should be made for collection charges.

[His Lordship then proceeded to deal with the facts of the case and with the construction to be put upon the mokurrari lease, and '[774] after coming to the conclusion that the view taken by the Assessors was the correct one, proceeded.] In this view, although with some hesitation, my brother NORRIS concurs. Having disposed of this point, we have now to determine the amount of compensation to which the claimants are entitled. We have now come to the conclusion that the whole of the land, which the Government now seek to take for public purposes, is covered by the mokurrari lease, and, therefore, we have the fact established that Rs. 85-4 is the amount of rent which the claimants derive from the Government annually. Having regard to the fact that this amount is collected once a year, we think that annas 4 would be a sufficient deduction to make for collection charges, and we, therefore, come to the conclusion that the claimants receive Rs. 85 nett from Government. We do not make any deduction on account of Government revenue. The claimants will have in future to pay the whole of the Government revenue of the mehal, and will not be entitled to any deduction on that account, as we capitalise also the Government revenue payable by the claimants in respect of the lands now taken. The District Judge is of opinion that twenty-three years' purchase is quite sufficient compensation, and there being no appeal upon that point we must take that figure. Then we have the value of the land at twenty-three years' purchase Rs. 1,955, to which shall be added 15 per cent., or Rs 293-4, the whole making Rs 2,248-4. We accordingly award the said amount of compensation to the claimants. As we find that the amount tendered by Government was Rs 1,331-6, and as we award Rs. 2,248-4, under s. 33 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870, we think that the Government must bear the costs of the lower Court as well as of this Court

Norris, J.—I am not, as at present advised, quite certain that there is a right of appeal in this case. Upon all other points I fully agree with the judgment of my learned brother.

Appeal allowed and decree varied.

Confession—Inducement to confess—Criminal Procedure Code, Act X of 1882,

s. 163—Evidence Act—Act I of 1872, s. 24.

A Deputy Magistrate, before taking down a statement from a person brought before him by the Police, noted on the paper on which he was about to take down the statement, the following words which, after excluding the Police Officers from his presence, he had verbally addressed to the accused:—"After excluding from my presence the Police Officers who brought him, I warned the accused that what he would say would go as evidence against him, so he had better tell the truth"—Held, that the use of such language was calculated to hold out an inducement to the prisoner to confess, and that such a confession was therefore inadmissible in evidence against him.

IN this case one Uzeer was charged with murder. It appeared that when brought before the Deputy Magistrate by the Police, the accused made a statement to the following effect, viz., that owing to a refusal on the part of his wife to get him a light, he had dragged her by her hair into an inner room and slapped her, and that on his getting a light and seeing that his wife was insensible, he, in his fright, cut her throat with a dao, and told the neighbours that she had committed suicide. This statement was prefaced with the following note by the Deputy Magistrate:—"After excluding from my presence the Police Officers who brought him, I warned the accused that what he would say would go as evidence against him, so he had better tell the truth."

The accused was subsequently committed to the Sessions Court on two charges (a) murder, s. 302 of the Penal Code, (b) culpable homicide, s. 304 of the Penal Code. The Judge differed from the assessors, and mainly relying upon the confession, found the accused guilty under s. 302, but sentenced him to transportation for life, as it had not been established that the accused had any intention at the time to cause death, although he knew that he was likely to cause death.

[776] The prisoner appealed to the High Court. No one appeared on the appeal.

The Judgment of the High Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The appellant in this case, Sheikh Uzeer, has been convicted of the murder of his wife, and has been sentenced under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, to transportation for life.

We have read the proceedings of the Sessions Judge, and we are of opinion that the conviction cannot be supported. The prisoner and his wife were sleeping alone in their homestead on the night of the occurrence, the woman's throat was cut, and she died from the injury thus inflicted, and the consequent loss of blood. The theory of the prosecution is that the prisoner cut his wife's throat. The medical evidence does not support this theory. On the contrary, the native doctor considered that the wound might have been self-inflicted. It may be said that the opinion of a native doctor on a question of this kind is not of very great value, but this is the medical evidence whatever it may be worth. There is no testimony of a medical expert to support the theory of the prosecution that the wound was inflicted by the prisoner, and the only medical evidence on the record is against that theory, and in favour of the statement made by the accused on more than one occasion. The Sessions Judge permitted the witness Sarai Bibee to say that the accused said to the darogah that his wife refused to give him water when he wanted to go out and ease himself, so he struck her once and she fell insensible, and then he cut her throat. This evidence being inadmissible, the Sessions Judge should not have recorded it. The conviction is mainly based upon a confession alleged to have been made by the accused to the Deputy Magistrate. This confession is prefaced with the following note. "After excluding from my presence the Police Officers who brought him, I warned the accused that what he would say would go as evidence against him, so he had better tell the truth." A Magistrate of the first class ought to know that to tell a prisoner that he had better tell the truth is a violation of the provisions of the law (See s 163 of the Code of Criminal Procedure) The use of this language has been repeatedly decided to render a confession [777] inadmissible, and we think that in consequence of this inducement having been held out to the prisoner, the confession in the present case must be rejected. We may observe that it is no part of the duty of a Magistrate to tell an accused person that anything he may say will go as evidence against him. Putting aside the inadmissible confession and the evidence of a further confession made to the Police, there remains no legal evidence upon which the prisoner can be convicted. We therefore set aside the conviction and direct that the appellant be acquitted and released. A copy of this judgment should be sent to the committing Magistrate

* Criminal Appeal No. 198 of 1884, against the order of H. Muspratt, Esq., Sessions Judge of Sylhet, dated February 8th, 1884.

Moung Hmoon Htaw Defendant

Mah Hpwhah..... Plaintiff

[On appeal from the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon.]

Act XVII of 1875, s. 4—Buddhist law in British Burmah—Wife's claim upon husband for maintenance.

By the Buddhist law of marriage, as administered in the Courts of British Burmah, it is the duty of the husband to provide subsistence for his wife and to furnish her with suitable clothes and ornaments. If he fails to do so, he is liable to pay debts contracted by her for necessities; but it appears that this law would not be applicable where she has sufficient means of her own. No authority has been found for saying that, where the wife has maintained herself, she can sue her husband for maintenance for the period during which she has done so.

A wife, married according to Burmese rights and customs, claimed from her husband in a Court in British Burmah, a certain sum for her expenses of necessities and living for a past period during which she had maintained herself. Held, that this was a question "regarding marriage," within the meaning of the Burmah Courts Act XVII of 1875, s. 4, and that, therefore, the Buddhist law formed the rule of decision. The law, as stated above, was accordingly applicable.

Semble, that if this had been a case in which, by the above Act, a Court would have had to act according to the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience, there would have been no ground for making the husband [778] liable upon this claim regard being had to the Burmese law as to the property of married persons.

APPEAL from a decree (21st June 1881) of the Recorder of Rangoon.

The principal question raised by this appeal was whether, by the Buddhist law prevailing in British Burmah, a husband was liable to pay for the maintenance of his wife for a period during which she, having had means of her own, had maintained herself.

The facts are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The plaintiff, alleging herself to have been married to the defendant according to the customs of the Burmese, claimed from him Rs. 10,000 for the expenses of her living for five years during which she had maintained herself.

The defence was a denial of the marriage, and of the right of the plaintiff to any maintenance from the defendant.

The Recorder found the fact of marriage, and on the question of the liability of a husband, according to the law of Burmese Buddhists, to pay for the subsistence of his wife, expressed his opinion as follows:—

"There are many passages in the Menu Wonanna and Menu Thara Shwe Myeen Damathats, both recognized as of high authority, which show that a husband is bound to maintain his wife, and in the Menu Kyay Damathat, translated by the late Dr. Richardson, which is the Damathat hitherto most generally used as a guide in questions of Burmese law, probably from the fact of its being the only one translated into English, in the chapter on the different kinds of wives, paragraph 14, page 14, the liability is clearly indicated. There it is laid down in the case of a husband going on a trading trip leaving a sufficiency for his wife's subsistence, that should she marry before the expiration of eight years he may take away all her property and sell her, and if there be debts she must bear them all. But if the husband does not leave subsistence for his wife, and shall be absent eight years trading, and she has not enough for her necessary food and clothing, and publicly incur debts for her subsistence, when her husband arrives he must pay them, and cannot say that they were contracted without his knowledge. Whether or not only one wife is per-[779]missible, according to the older Damathats, on page 93 of Menu Kyay Damathat, which at any rate is an old work, in s 46, book III, it gives the law when debts are incurred by a head wife, a lesser wife, or the six kinds of concubines. When a head wife incurs the debt for necessary expenses even without the husband's knowledge, and the creditor has informed him of it during her lifetime and she dies, he has to pay it with cent per cent interest. If it be incurred by a lesser wife he has to pay principal with 50 per cent. interest, and if a concubine who had not been purchased or connected by means of money, but who did not eat out of the same dish with him, then he has to pay the principal with 25 per cent. interest. In the Menu Wonanna, page 112, s. 116, referring to the husband going to a distant country, and expecting to remain there, it says he must provide subsistence before he leaves."

"Having found that the plaintiff is the wife of the defendant, although by mutual consent and for his convenience in trade, she lived in Rangoon whilst his residence was at Moulmein, his position is somewhat analogous to that of the husband who goes for the purpose of trading into a distant or foreign land, and is bound to supply his wife with subsistence according to his means and position. I see no reason why, because a woman happens to be a second wife, his liability to maintain her should not also attach as in the case of a first wife"

The Recorder decreed the claim with costs

On this appeal—

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellant.

The principal arguments for the appellant were that, on the assumption that the parties had been married according to Buddhist usage, two broad questions remained, on which depended the liability of the appellant, viz, first, whether the marriage had not been dissolved by the husband and wife having discontinued to live together for more than three years before the suit, the husband having refused to recognize the respondent as his wife, and she having expressed her desire to be divorced from him; secondly, whether, if the marriage still subsisted, the wife was entitled to the maintenance claimed, under the Buddhist law and [780] customs, which were binding on the parties. By Buddhist law the husband and wife might be divorced without any decree or order of Court, see *Mee Hneen Gnoang v. Nga Oung and Mee Lee in which it was decided that neither a decree of Court, nor a written agreement, witnessed, were essential to divorce. Not only might divorce take place by mutual consent, which consent might be express or implied, see Mee Thet Shay v. Nga Isan (Select Decisions, Burmah, p. 3) but also, on certain terms agreed upon as to the distribution of the profits of their property, at the will of either of the parties. Sparks's Code of British Burmah, chap. 3; Shway Yin v. Mee Thoo Gneh (4 Jardine's notes on Buddhist Law, App. III).

Lord FITZGERALD stated the opinion of their Lordships that, there having been no issue raised at the hearing as to divorce, this question could not now be argued.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe continued

With regard, then, to the second question, viz., the right of the wife to maintenance under the circumstances of this case, it was submitted that this "regarded marriage," and was, therefore, to be decided according to the law indicated in Act XVII of 1875, s. 4, viz., Buddhist law. Marriage did not, of itself, independently of its form, and under all systems of law, operate as a contract entitling the wife to compel her husband to pay for her maintenance. The affirmative of that proposition appeared to have been put forward by one of the Judges of the Bombay Supreme Court in Aiduseen Cursetjee v. Perozboye (6 Moore's I A., 348), but it was not assented to by this Committee. There being then no authority for the general right under every system of law, of a wife to maintenance (as to which the observations of the Queen's Advocate, arguendo, in the case cited at p. 379, might be referred to), it followed that the wife's claim in this case could only rest on a liability on her husband's part created upon marriage by Buddhist law

[781] Marriage among Buddhists in British Burmah was merely a civil contract for co-habitation, involving the subordination of the wife to the husband, and the mutual performance of conjugal duties, see the Menu Kyay Damathât, Book XII, s. 1, and s. 30, Menu Tsaya Damathât, s. 59 (Jardine's notes on Buddhist Law, App. A, p. X), Moung Ko v. Ma Shway Gel (Sandford's Rulings on Buddhist Law, p. 15), Wagaru Damathât, part II, s. 1 (4 Jardine's notes on Buddhist Law, part III, p. 3)

According to the Buddhist law the husband and wife did not become united, so as to be regarded as one person. Nor did either husband or wife acquire any interest in the separate property of the other, whether originally belonging to such other or acquired by him or her, after marriage. Each of these kinds of property had their separate names. Husband and wife were, however, equally entitled to the joint profits of both, in other words, the profits arising from the employment by both of the separate property of either, as also were they equally entitled to all property acquired during marriage by their skill and industry. Sparks's Code of British Burmah, chap. 1, s. 14; 1 Jardine's notes on Buddhist law, part II, Menu Kyay Damathât, chap. XII, s. 3 (Menu, Richardson's translation, 1874, pp. 342, 344)

The respondent also was at best but a wife of the less degree, a first wife, or former wife, to whom the defendant had originally been married on becoming a married man, being alive, and not divorced. As to the position of such a wife, see Mah Shway Chor v. Moung Oung Gyee (4 Jardine's notes on Buddhist Law, part 5, p. V). Moreover, the wife had means of her own in this case, and carried on a trade, deriving profit from thus, employing her separate property. Even if the defendant could be held bound to maintain her, he would still have a defence in this suit on the ground that, by permitting her to use the joint profits to which he, as well as she, was entitled, he had contributed to her maintenance. Buddhist law did, no doubt, provide for the punishment of the husband or wife, who, being possessed of sufficient means, [782] neglected to maintain his, or her, disabled spouse, if the latter should be in want. Such a rule of law accorded with the legislation in our Indian Code of Criminal Procedure in this respect. But the Recorder's conclusion was not supported by the texts, as they applied only to the wife wholly without means of subsistence. Reference was made to Menu, Richardson's translation, pp. 82, 84, 93, 94, 139, and 141. 3 Jardine's notes on Buddhist Law, p. 27.

The Respondent did not appear.

On a subsequent day, 9th February 1884, their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R Couch.—The appellant was the defendant in an action brought by the respondent in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon in which the respondent alleged that she was married in Rangoon to the appellant according to Burmese rights and customs, and claimed Rs. 10,000 for her expenses of necessaries and living for five years, deducting Rs. 1,400, the amount realized by the sale of a house given to her by the appellant. The appellant denied the marriage, and that the respondent was entitled to any maintenance. The Recorder found, as a fact, that she was the wife of the defendant by a validly constituted marriage, the Burmese law recognizing a plurality of wives, and the plaintiff being what is generally called a lesser wife. Their Lordships are of opinion that this was quite in accordance with the evidence. He then considered the question of maintenance, as to which the material facts may be taken from the evidence which the plaintiff herself gave.

They were married in Tagoo 1235 (about 1873 A. D.) The defendant is a trader in timber and a forester, and has forest leases in Zimmay, the Mine-loon-gyee forest. The plaintiff carried on a business of her own at Rangoon. At the marriage the defendant gave her a dower of Rs. 20,000 and they lived together for some time, principally at Rangoon, but the defendant's business frequently took him away. He wished her to reside at Rangoon, and requested her to live in a respectable style, which she did, entertaining the relatives and friends of the defendant, and he not giving her any money towards the expenses of those entertainments. The plaintiff always carried on a business [783] of her own, dealing in mineral oil and rice, and accumulated Rs. 80,000 in different kinds of property, and lived, she said, in the same style after marrying the defendant as she had done before. In the opinion of the Recorder the plaintiff received from the defendant about Rs. 23,500, but she said she had expended all that and large sums of her own in works of merit for the defendant at his request.

Upon the question of maintenance, the Recorder said: "There are many passages in the Menu Wonnana and Menu Thara Shwe Mveen Damathâts, both recognized as of high authority, which show that a husband is bound to maintain his wife, and in the Menu Kyay Damathât, translated by the late Dr. Richardson, which is the Damathât hitherto most generally used as a guide in questions of Burmese law, probably from the fact of it being the only one translated into English, in the chapter on the different kind of wives, paragraph 14, page 14, the liability is clearly indicated." Then after stating what was there laid down, he said he was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to maintenance suitable to her position as second wife, having reference to the defendant's means and ability to pay. The judgment, from which it is unnecessary to quote more, ended by saying that the plaintiff was not estopped from claiming for the period during which she lived at her cost, provided it was not barred by the law of limitation, and giving the plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed, viz., Rs. 10,000, and costs.

Since this judgment was given, Mr. Jardine, the present Judicial Commissioner of British Burmah, has published some valuable notes on Buddhist law, with translations of the Wonnana Damathât, and several others, on marriage and divorce, and inheritance and partition, with notes, and cases illustrating the Burmese law of marriage and divorce as now administered in the British Courts. In coming to an opinion upon this appeal, their Lordships have had the advantage of his additional information about Burmese law.

For the purposes of marriage, divorce, and inheritance, the property of the married persons is considered separate or joint.

The following is defined as separate property of the husband [784] and wife by Major Sparks in his Code, which has been used in the British Courts as an authority on Burmese law.—

- (1) What belonged to either before marriage.
- (2) What has been given specially to either since marriage.
- (3) What has come into the possession of either by inheritance from his or her own family since marriage
- (4) Clothes, jewels, and ornaments.

The profits or interest arising since marriage from the employment or investment of the separate property of either husband or wife, as also the property acquired during the coverture by their mutual skill and industry, are their joint property.

It is the duty of the husband to provide subsistence for his wife and to furnish her with suitable clothes and ornaments. If he fails to do so, he is liable to pay debts contracted by her for necessities, but it appears to their Lordships that this law would not be applicable where she has sufficient means of her own. They have not found any authority for saying that, where the wife has maintained herself, she can sue her husband for maintenance for the period during which she has done so

By the Burmah Courts Act, 1875, s. 4, it is enacted that where in any suit or proceeding it is necessary for any Court under that Act to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage, or caste, or any religious usage or institution, the Buddhist law, in cases where the parties are Buddhists, shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has, by legislative enactment, been altered or abolished, or is opposed to any custom having the force of law in British Burmah. And in cases not provided for by the former part of the section, or by any other law for the time being in force, the Court shall act according to justice, equity, and good conscience. It appears to their Lordships that this is a question regarding marriage, and is to be decided according to the Buddhist law, but assuming that it is a case in which the Court is to act according to justice, equity, and good conscience, their Lordships have considered whether the decree appealed from can be supported on those grounds. The Recorder seems to have taken this view of the case, for he says: "It seems to me unjust that merely because a wife had tacitly lived at her own expense under a particular set of circumstances [78J] she should, as it were, be taken thereby to have contracted herself out of her rights, and be unable to recover them when those circumstances have become changed, and that through the fault of the husband." Their Lordships do not agree to this. Having regard to the Burmese law as to the property of married persons, they do not see in the facts of this case any ground in equity or good conscience for making the defendant liable for maintenance. It may be that he requested the plaintiff to live in a respectable manner, but she incurred no additional expenses in consequence. It did not cause any change in her style of living, and it is not possible to assign any portion of her claim to that request.

It remains to be noticed that in the reasons for the appeal it is said that there had been a divorce according to Buddhist law by the conduct of the parties. This was not made a ground of defence in the defendant's written statement, and there was no issue upon it. And consequently their Lordships intimated to the Counsel for the appellant that they could not allow this question to be argued.

For the reasons above given their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the Recorder's Court, and to order the suit to be dismissed with costs in that Court. The costs of the appeal to be paid by the respondent.

Limitation Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 109—Mesne profits—Interest.

A claim for mesne profits during a period preceding the three years next before the filing of the plaint is barred by Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 109.* An under-proprietor having been dispossessed by a manager of the superior estate, appointed under the Oudh Taluqdars' Relief Act, 1870, recovered possession under a decree, and afterwards sued for mesne profits.

* [Art. 109 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run.

[786] Held, that a person who had not himself received the mesne profits having come into possession of the taluq upon its being released from management under the above Act, would not be chargeable with sums, which, as it was alleged, might have been received by way of mesne profits, but had not been received in consequence of the manager's wilful default; there being nothing to show that such taluqdar could be charged with anything more than was actually received by him. There being no rule of law obliging the Court to allow interest upon mesne profits, it is a matter for the discretion of the Court, upon consideration of the facts, whether to allow interest or not.

APPEAL from a decree (15th December 1881) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (19th May 1881) of the Additional Judge of the Faizabad District.

In the lifetime of the late Maharaja Man Singh, taluqdar of Mehdaona in the Faizabad District, the appellant held possession in sub-settlement right ("hakh puktadari") of villages Dewariya and others, forming part of the taluq. After the death of the Maharaja, and whilst the taluqdari estates were in charge of a manager appointed by the Chief Commissioner (under powers conferred on him by the "Oudh Taluqdars' Relief Act" XXIV of 1870), the appellant was dispossessed, in January 1871, of his undertenure, for possession whereof he sued in the Court of the Settlement Officer then carrying on settlement operations in the Faizabad District. Both the manager, and the Maharani Subahao Koer, the Maharaja's widow, on whose behalf as guardian of a minor, then regarded as the probable successor to the taluqdari estates, were being managed, were made defendants. No claim was made for mesne profits. A decree in favour of the plaintiff was made by the Settlement Officer in 1873, and having been reversed by the Commissioner on appeal was, in the end, restored by order of Her Majesty in Council, dated 26th June 1879, the plaintiff regaining possession of his holding on 25th September 1879.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted on the 26th July 1880 by the present appellant against the "Mehdaona estate," to recover Rs. 5,764 on account of mesne profits from the date of his dispossession of his undertenure, viz., the 20th January 1871 to the 1st September 1879, when he recovered possession. He alleged that as the suit for possession had been [787] pending from 22nd May 1873 to 25th September 1879, he was unable to sue for mesne profits during that period, and that the cause of action had arisen at the latter date.

The taluqdari estate was, on the 1st October 1880, released from management, and was made over to the respondent, Kunwar Partab Narain Singh, to whom the estate had been adjudged by order of Her Majesty in Council, dated 13th August 1877. At the hearing the manager appointed under Act XXIV of 1870 did not appear, and on the 21st October 1880 this appellant petitioned that, as the estate had since the commencement of the suit been released from management, the respondent who had succeeded to it should be made defendant. This was ordered and the present respondent, appearing on summons as a defendant, the manager's name was struck off. Issues were fixed raising the question whether the plaintiff's suit for mesne profits, for the period anterior to the three years preceding the date of the institution of this suit, was barred by limitation, also as to the amount, and as to the costs of collecting rents; and whether any part of the realizable assets had not been received by reason of want of ordinary care on the part of the officials managing the estate under Act XXIV of 1870; and if so, to what amount, and whether, with reference to art. 3, s. 4, and ss. 17 and 23 of the above Act, the plaintiff was precluded from receiving more than the sum actually realised by the manager.

On the question of limitation the Judge held as follows.

"It appears to me that the law, as it at present stands, provided expressly for such cases where the law of limitation worked hardly on the parties, and that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have moved the Court to provide, in its decree, for the mesne profits from institution of suit till the delivery of possession (s. 211 of Act X of 1877), and that, not having done so, the plaintiff must accept such remedy as remains to him by law. That limitation is three years under art. 109, sch. II of the Limitation Act. I have carefully examined the body of the Act, and can find no section which excludes, in a suit for mesne profits, the period during which a suit for possession is pending. When a plaintiff, seeking mesne profits, has been ousted by a decree of Court, the law (art. 109, sch. II) does take the [788] period elapsing between this legal but wrongful ouster, and the time when he succeeds in recovering possession, into consideration, but it makes no such exemption when the plaintiff has been otherwise ousted, as in this case."

And on the other issues his judgment was

"Generally they may be said to be, what are the mesne profits which plaintiff can legally recover? The estate was during the whole period held under Act XXIV of 1870."

Defendant contends they are only so much as was actually collected in the books of the manager.

• Mesne profits, as defined in s. 211 of the Civil Procedure Code, include more than actual realisations: they include such profits as the person in possession might with due diligence have received. The person in possession was the manager, and neither the present defendant, the present taluqdar, nor Trilokinath, who was, for a time, recognised as such, had any power to collect at all. He having, under Act XXIV of 1870, been debarred from making any alteration whatever, no want of due diligence can then be asserted against him personally.

Let us suppose, however, that there was negligence on the part of the management. Can defendant be held responsible for this? Looking at the terms of Act XXIV of 1870, I do not see that he can. He was, for the time, absolutely in the hands of the management. He could do nothing himself. He could not, under s. 23, obtain any redress against the management, and I am of opinion that plaintiff cannot recover as against the defendant.

The Judicial Commissioner upheld this judgment.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. J. G. W. Sykes appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued, first, that art. 109 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 was inapplicable to this claim; secondly, that interest should have been allowed on such mesne profits as were recoverable. The present defendant had derived [789] benefit from the manager's having had the use of the mesne profits, because they had gone towards paying off the encumbrances on the estate, whereby it had been the sooner released from management under Act XXIV of 1870. Mesne profits being treated as sums due at the end of each year, interest thereon should have been calculated and allowed by way of damages. Reference was made to the subsequent enactment in Act XIV of 1882, ss. 211, 212, also to the interest Act XXXII of 1839.

Lord BLACKBURN having intimated that their Lordships would hear counsel for the respondent on the question of interest only—

It was argued for the respondent that it was within the discretion of the Court below to allow, or not to allow, interest. That discretion had been reasonably exercised. The respondent was no wrong-doer, and, as had been pointed out by the Additional Judge, had had no right to interfere.

In the argument on both sides reference was made to the following cases.

Chowdry Wahed Ali v. Mussumat Jumaye (19 W. R., 87), Nursing Roy v. Anderson (19 W. R., 125), Protap Chander Borooah v. Rance Surnomoyee (14 W. R., 151), Madhub Chander Dutt v. Haradhum Paul Sootiodhum (14 W. R., 294), Hurrodurga Chowdhuran v. Shariat Soonlery Dabea (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 675, I. L. R., 8 Cal., 332)

At the end of the arguments their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—The facts of this case are that on the 22nd of May 1873 the plaintiff instituted a regular suit for possession of certain villages which are named in his plaint, and he obtained from the Court of the Settlement Officer a decree for sub-settlement, right enjoyable for life. This decree was set aside by the first Court of Appeal, which was confirmed by the second Court. The plaintiff then appealed to Her Majesty in Council, and the decree in his favour was restored, so that he was declared [790] entitled to recover possession of these villages, of which, in January 1871, the manager under the Oudh Taluqdars' Relief Act, Act XXIV of 1870, had taken possession, and dispossessed the plaintiff. The present plaint is entitled "Kishnanand Misir, plaintiff, against the Mehdaona estate, defendant." but it appears from the proceedings that a summons had been issued and served upon the manager of the estate. On the 21st of October 1880, pending the suit, the estate, having been released by the Government, it was asked that a fresh summons should be issued. Although this summons does not appear on the proceedings, it would appear to have been a summons to the present respondent, who had been put in possession of the estate on its being released by the Government. His counsel appeared for him before the Judge on the 24th November 1880. It may, therefore, be taken that he became the defendant in the suit. The plaint stated that the plaintiff, having thus regained possession under the decree of Her Majesty in Council, was entitled to profits from the time of the dispossession, and during the pendency of the suit, and claimed mesne profits for nine years. No written statement was put in, but it appears from what was stated by the counsel for the defendant, when he appeared before the Judge, that the defence raised was that the suit was barred by the law of limitation, except as to the mesne profits for three years before the filing of the plaint, that is, before the 26th of July 1880. The first Court gave judgment for mesne profits for that period, and refused to allow the mesne profits for the previous time. That judgment was affirmed by the Judicial Commissioner. There was also a claim for interest, which was not allowed; both Courts saying that they did not think it reasonable to allow it.

Upon the appeal to Her Majesty in Council, which has now been heard, three questions were raised by the learned counsel for the appellant. First he contended that under the law of limitation he was entitled to a greater amount of mesne profits than had been allowed. Art. 109, sch. II, of Act IV of 1877, which was the Limitation Act in force at the time when the suit was brought, was referred to. That article is in these terms: "For the profits of immoveable [791] property belonging to the plaintiff which shall have been wrongfully received by the defendant:— When the profits are received, or, where the plaintiff has been dispossessed by a decree afterwards set aside on appeal, when he recovers possession " The learned counsel sought to show that the dispossession was in the nature of a dispossession under a decree, because the Settlement Officer, or the manager acting under the Oudh Taluqdars' Relief Act, was acting, as it were, judicially, but when he found that, in the course of the argument, he could not support such a contention, he very properly abandoned it. The question of the law of limitation may be therefore considered as disposed of.

Another question raised was that the Courts had only allowed in the mesne profits for the three years the sums which had actually been received, and it was sought to charge the present defendant, who was not the person who received the mesne profits, but who had come into possession of the estate upon its being released by the Government, with sums which might have been received except for wilful default. It seems clear that, whatever case might have been made against the manager of the estate, there is nothing to show that the defendant could be charged with anything more than was actually received by him. That disposes of the second question

• The remaining question was whether interest ought to have been allowed upon the mesne profits for the three years. It is not necessary to say anything upon the question whether in the present state of the law, having regard to the provision in the last Procedure Act, in which there is an explanation of mesne profits, interest was allowable. In the present case the claim cannot be put higher than that it is a matter for the Court to determine, under the circumstances, whether it is reasonable to allow interest. There is no rule obliging the Court to allow the interest. It is a matter in the discretion of the Court, upon the consideration of the facts of the case. In this case both the Courts have considered that it was not reasonable that interest should be allowed; and there are no facts proved which would enable their Lordships to say that this is a wrong decision. Mr. Sykes argued that the interest ought to be allowed, because the present defendant, in getting possession of the estate at an [792] earlier period than he might otherwise have done, has had the benefit of the use of the money. But there is nothing in the evidence to support this, or to show that it was the fact. The question must be left as it has been decided.

Consequently the decision of the lower Courts ought to be affirmed, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm it, and to dismiss the appeal, and the appellant will pay the costs of it.

Solicitors for the Respondent. Messrs. Watkins & Lattey.

Thakur Ishri Singh Plaintiff

versus

Thakur Baldeo Singh..... Defendant.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh]

The Oudh Estates' Act I of 1869—Will of a Taluqdar—Customary rule of succession in a family to impartible estate—Primogeniture.

However true it may be that, if there is absolutely nothing to guide to any other conclusion, impartible estate will descend in a family according to the rule of primogeniture, evidence may establish the usage in a family to be that, of several sons, one son, selected without reference to primogeniture, succeeds to the impartible estate. The eldest of three brothers had succeeded to impartible family estate, and to a taluq also impartible, which had been, during the lifetime of their father, entered in the first and second, but not in the third, of the lists prepared in conformity with s. 8 of the Oudh Estates' Act I of 1869. Before his death, this eldest brother made an instrument registered as a will, but using the word "tamlık" and stamped as a deed whereby he gave the taluq to the third brother, reserving an interest on the whole for his own life, and in half for any son that might be born to him with maintenance to his wife on her becoming a widow.

Held, with reference to the indicia of a testamentary character, there being provisions for contingencies which might not be ascertained till the death of the maker of the instrument, as compared with the technical matters attending it, that this instrument was not a transfer inter vivos, but was a will, and within the above Act.

Held, also, on the objection that a will or declaration made by the father had fixed a mode of descent which could not be altered by his successor, that s. 11 of the above Act, giving to every heir and legatee of a taluqdar power [793] to transfer, or to bequeath, his estate, is not controlled by the proviso in s. 19, declaring that nothing in that section shall affect Wills made before the passing of the Act.

The impartible family property other than the taluq descending, like the latter to a single successor, one of these brothers, the question as to which of them that one should be, depended on the custom of the family. On the evidence adduced as to the custom in this respect, the plaintiff, who was out of possession, and on whom, in order to make out his title, was the burden of proving that the rule of primogeniture prevailed, failed so to do.

APPEAL from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh (19th March 1881), affirming a decree of the District Judge of Lucknow (31d October 1880).

At the settlement of Oudh in 1858-59, the village lands of Kanhmow, Hasnapur, and Nimchaina, in the district of Faizabad, were treated as a taluq named Kanhmow, and settled with Thakur Beni Singh, who, in common with the other taluqdars of Oudh was requested in July 1861, by the Chief Commissioner, to state what was the rule of succession in his family. Beni Singh replied that the custom of his family was that the family estate should be held by one male member, selected for his fitness, and he asked that after his death the Government would select that one of his three sons, Thakur Maharaj Singh, Thakur Ishri Singh, and Thakur Baldeo Singh, whom it might deem most fit to succeed him.

That answer not having been considered satisfactory by the Government, on the 8th March 1860, Beni Singh submitted another reply, which was as follows:

"Whereas the British Government has granted to me, for generation after generation, the proprietary rights in the Ilaka Kanhmow, situate in Pargana and Tehsil Bari; Taluqa Usri, situate in Pargana Pirnagar, Tehsil Sitapur, Taluqa Hasnapur, situate in Tehsil Biswan, and Taluka Nimchaina, situate in Pargana Maholi, Tehsil Misrikh, I desire and hereby pray that after my Ilaka (Estate) be maintained entire and undivided in my family, according to the custom of 'Raj-gaddi' and that the younger brothers be entitled to receive maintenance from the person in possession of the estate (Gaddi-nashin).

(Sd) BENI SINGH, Taluqdar of Kanhmow, &c., in Tehsil Bari."

8th March 1860.

[794] No further correspondence ensued, and after the passing of the "Oudh Estates' Act," I of 1869, the taluq was entered in the first and second of the lists prepared in accordance with the requirements of that Act; but not in the third list (which last includes taluqs descending by primogeniture).

Beni Singh died on the 19th September 1870, leaving the three sons above mentioned. The eldest son, Maharaj Singh, having been recognized by the revenue authorities as his successor, obtained "dakhil kharij," or entry of his name in the settlement record, as proprietor of the taluq. This was opposed by the second son, Ishri Singh, and pending the determination of the dispute as to "dakhil kharij," Maharaj Singh executed in favour of his younger brother, Baldeo Singh, the following document, which having been marked C in the proceedings, is so referred to in their Lordships' judgment.

"I, Maharaj Singh, am the Talukdar of Kanhmow, &c., in the Sitapur District

"Whereas—I, hold and enjoy possession of my estate situate in the Sitapur District, of which the Government revenue is about Rs -16,000, I, while in the enjoyment of sound health and mind, without reluctance or coercion, assign (tamlik) the said property to my younger brother, Baldeo Singh, subject to the following conditions—

"(1) That during my lifetime, I shall hold and enjoy possession of it, and that after my death my aforesaid brother, Baldeo Singh, shall hold and enjoy the same like myself.

"(2) That, whereas I am childless, should a legitimate and self-begotten child be born to me, it shall become the owner of one-half of the estate, and Baldeo Singh shall be the owner* of the other half.

"(3) That after my death, Baldeo Singh shall be bound, like myself, to maintain and take care of my wife. Hence I have written out these few words in the way of a deed of assignment (tamliknama) so that it may witness in future. Dated 28th June 1871."

This document, C, was, on the 3rd July 1871, registered under s 41 (for the registration of wills) of the Indian Registration Act, VIII of 1871, which came into force on the 1st July of the same year.

[795] On the 14th April 1872, Ishri Singh, the second son, brought a suit against Maharaj and Baldeo, claiming the taluq. He set up a will in his favour, alleging it to have been executed by the deceased Beni Singh, on the 20th February 1860, shortly before the submission of the reply by Beni Singh above set forth. This suit was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur on the 3rd October 1872, with a declaration that the alleged will in favour of Ishri Singh was a false one, and that, Beni Singh having died intestate, Maharaj Singh had become entitled to the taluq under Act I of 1869, s. 22.

This was affirmed on appeal, and criminal proceedings having been taken against Ishri Singh, for fraudulently using a false document as true, ss 467, 471 (Indian Penal Code), he was convicted and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. Maharaj Singh died without issue on the 19th November 1879, and Baldeo Singh, being recognized as his successor by the revenue authorities, obtained an order for "dakhil kharij" in the settlement record, in his name, on 20th December 1879, whereupon he took possession of the taluq, and of the family estate. This was opposed by Ishri Singh, who claimed as the brother next in the succession to Maharaj Singh, and failing to get possession, brought, in 1880, the present suit against Baldeo.

By his plaint, which was filed in the District Court of Sitapur, the appellant claimed that the order of the Deputy Commissioner of 20th December 1879, might be set aside, that document C, of which he questioned the validity, might be declared void, and that possession of taluq Kanhmow, the property mentioned in schedule A of his plaint, might be decreed to him, as being the person entitled thereto on the death of Maharaj Singh, intestate, and without issue, under the provisions of his father's will of 8th March 1860, and clause 6 of s. 22 of Act I of 1869. He also claimed possession of the family property, moveable and immoveable, of which Maharaj Singh had died possessed, being that in schedule B, of the plaint, by right of succession, according to family custom, on the death of his brother, intestate. For the defence, as regards the taluq, it was insisted that the document of the 8th March 1860 had no reference to the succession of brother to brother, but only to that of Beni Singh's son to [796] Beni Singh, that the will of Maharaj Singh, document C, was valid under Act I of 1869, that, as regards all the family property, Maharaj Singh's right of succession had been settled in the prior litigation, and that Baldeo Singh was entitled to the whole property.

This suit was transferred from the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur to that of the District Judge of Lucknow, when it had reached the stage of the fixing of the issues, which were principally as to the effect of the "tamliknama," or document of 28th June 1871, marked C. and as to the title of the plaintiff as eldest surviving brother of Maharaj Singh to succeed both to the property in schedule A and in schedule B. The eighth issue raised the question of the plaintiff's title "by family custom or inheritance," and was afterwards altered by the addition of these words, relating to his title, viz., "to the property in B, by inheritance, according to family custom."

At the hearing, oral evidence as to the revocation of the document C, of the 28th June 1871, was excluded, as being inadmissible under s. 57 of Act X of 1865, the Indian Succession Act, or s. 92 of Act I of 1872 (the Indian Evidence Act), whether or not such evidence bore on the question of undue influence at the making of the instrument

The suit was dismissed by the District Judge of Lucknow, and on appeal the Judicial Commissioner confirmed his judgment. The latter held that the document C, of the 8th March 1860, had no effect to take away the right to control the devolution of the taluq, which was given by s. 11 of the Oudh Estates' Act to the succeeding taluqdar, who had exercised that right in making C, the instrument of 28th June 1871, which was a taluqdar's will within the contemplation of that Act. This will had not been executed under undue influence, nor had it been revoked, but it had been acted on. The finding on the eighth issue, as above set forth, was against the plaintiff, who was found not to have shown a better title to the ancestral family estate, including the taluq, than the defendant, in whose favour, accordingly, a decree was made.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellant.

[797] Mr. J. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. G. W. Sykes for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was contended that the family property, as well as the taluq, being impartible (a fact which was taken as common ground by both sides), and the family custom not having been shown to go further, it followed that, by law and custom, Ishri Singh, who was the eldest son of Thakur Beni Singh, and the elder of the brothers, was entitled to succeed Maharaj Singh. There was no burthen cast upon the appellant to establish that, by family custom, he was the one, of these two surviving sons, who was entitled to succeed, seeing that he was the elder. No other course of succession, save that indicated by the rule of primogeniture, having been shown to prevail. The wise than by marriage, or by another will or codicil, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed in the manner in which an unprivileged will is hereinbefore required to be executed, or by the burning, tearing or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction with the intention of revoking the same.]

Tippera case, Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beerchunder Thakoor (12 Moore's I. A., 523) showed that where a family custom of descent to a single heir was proved to exist, it superseded the ordinary Hindu law to that extent, but the ordinary Hindu law regulated all beyond the custom. That case might be said to show that the principle of survivorship was inapplicable to give the succession to a person who was not himself the nearest heir to the last holder at the time of his death; and Ishri Singh was entitled, not only as heir nearest to Beni Singh, but also as successor by survivorship, as the elder brother of Maharaj Singh. There was nothing in impartibility, as attaching to family property, to enable the holder of an impartible estate to defeat the rights of the other members of the family; and although the joint interest of the latter only extended to this, that one, not all, of them would at a future time succeed, it was not competent to the holder for the time being to determine which that successor should be. The rule determining that question was, prima facie, the rule of primogeniture. Reference was made to Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, paragraph 46, Achal Ram v. Uddar Partab Addiya Dat Singh (L. R. 11 I. A. 51; 1 L. R., 10 Cal., 511), Katima Natchiar v. The Raja of Shrivanganga (9 Moore's I. A., 539). Considerations applied to the property in schedule B of the plaint, different from those appli-[798]cable to schedule A. Referring now exclusively to A, neither the document made by Beni Singh, on the 8th March 1860, which was such a document as had been held to be tantamount to a will—see Hurpurshad v. Sheodyal (L. R., 3 I. A., 259)—nor the document C, executed by Maharaj Singh on 28th June 1871, operated to deprive Ishri Singh of his right to succeed to the taluq. As to the first document, Beni Singh, in declaring that his estate should descend in the mode in which impartible property descended by custom, did not thereby disinherit Ishri Singh, but had indicated a line of succession according to which that son would be entitled to succeed. As to the second document (C), Maharaj Singh had not, in the "tamlinama" C, made an effective transfer. It was not a will within the meaning of s. 2 of Act I of 1869, the Oudh Estates' Act. On the contrary, purporting to be a transfer inter vivos, it was invalid under s. 17 of that Act, not having been registered within one month from its date, and there having been no delivery of possession within six months.

The effect of document C being thus got rid of, it followed that Ishri Singh was the legal successor to the taluq, according to his title by primogeniture, which was applicable to both the schedules A and B. But document C, considered as a will, could not alter the character of the succession, which was determinable according to the rule presumed to prevail, and this had been indicated in the former will of Beni Singh, referring to the rule of descent.

It was further argued that, it being incorrect to argue from the case of the taluq to that of the other family property, the eighth issue as altered did not raise all that was in contest between the parties. It was the duty of the Court to determine the real issue—see Abuthnot v. Betts (6 B. L. R., 273). What should have been put in issue, was not only custom, but the question of the operation of ordinary Hindu law of inheritance upon the appellant's claim to the property in schedule B, in the absence of any custom, and this would have given scope to the proposition that the family estate being impartible the existence of a prima facie presumption that [799] it descended by the rule of primogeniture rested upon the general Hindu law. This proposition was maintainable, but it had not been brought out upon the issue in the distinct manner in which it should have been. Moreover, oral evidence as to the fact of the alleged annulling of document C (assuming it not to have been a will) had been incorrectly rejected, and whether it was to be taken as a will, or a document inter vivos, oral evidence bearing on the question whether or not it was made under undue influence, ought not to have been excluded. For the respondent it was argued that the impartibility of the estate did not carry with it that the estate descended according to the rule of primogeniture; and that there was no evidence to show that the property, either in A or in B, descended to the eldest son according to the custom of this family. The burthen was on the plaintiff. There was, on the contrary, some evidence tending the other way. The evidence of the appellant himself, in the litigation which went before this suit, when he stood in the position of a second son, was that in this family the eldest son did not succeed. The Courts below had rightly held that document C was a valid instrument, and the Commissioner had correctly decided that it operated as a taluqdar's will under Act I of 1869, passing the proprietary right in the property in schedule A to the respondent. As regarded the property in schedule B, the appellant had not made out his title, either by family custom, or under the ordinary law of inheritance. Impartibility implied descent to a single successor; but there was no proof in this case, that primogeniture gave the rule, nor was there any implication in favour of it. The views of Beni Singh had been in favour of a power of selection, the exercise of which had been attempted in the making of the document C, and the evidence supported the right of the respondent to maintain his possession.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe replied, arguing that, even if C was held a valid instrument, there could be no presumption (in the absence of evidence) that the property in B accompanied the taluq in A, and that the succession to the whole family property went to the taluqdar. The descent of the taluq was regulated by express enactment; and there was no reason why it should attract [800] to it the other family property. Lastly, even if the custom could, on the whole case, be held to be that the family estates should belong to a selected member of the family, there had been no selection. However, this could not arise, for there was enough in the case to raise the presumption in favour of the rule of primogeniture.

Sir A. Hobhouse—This case has been argued so recently that the introductory facts need not be recapitulated. It will be sufficient to bear in mind that the suit concerns property of two classes—that comprised in list A and that comprised in list B—to which quite different considerations apply.

With respect to the property in list A, the whole controversy turns upon the validity and the character of the instrument which is marked as Exhibit C in the cause, being an instrument executed on the 28th of June 1871, by Maharaj Singh, for the purpose of effecting a transfer of the property contained in it to Baldeo Singh, the respondent. It will be convenient first to consider the character of the instrument, because certain arguments were advanced against its validity depending entirely on the hypothesis that it is a transfer operating inter vivos, and their Lordships have come to the opposite conclusion, namely, that it must be considered as a will.

The reasons for considering it to be a will are these. It answers the definition of a will which is contained in s. 2 of Act I of 1869. It was registered as a will; and though that may have been done at the instance of the Registrar, it certainly was done with the full knowledge and assent of Maharaj Singh. It provides for contingencies which are not ascertainable, or may not be ascertained, until the death of the testator: for instance, the contingency of his having a child, which he had not at the time of the will, and the contingency of his leaving a widow surviving him. It does not purport to give to anybody any possessory or present interest until the death of Maharaj, the donor. And it makes a gift to the children of Maharaj, which, if it be a deed of transfer operating at once, cannot take effect, because no child was in existence; whereas, if it is a will, the gift may [801] perfectly well take effect. All those are very strong indicia of a testamentary character; and the question is whether they are overborne by evidence tending in the opposite direction.

As regards judicial opinion, it may be observed that the question of will or deed was an issue between Baldeo and Ishri after the death of Maharaj, before the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur, upon the application for mutation of names; and he held it to be clearly a will. The Judicial Commissioner in the present case gives no opinion upon the point. The District Judge thinks that it is a deed, though he says it is not very material whether it is held to be one or the other. His reasons for thinking it to be a deed are that the donor Maharaj uses the word "tamlik" ("assign") and calls his deed a "tamliknama," and he has it stamped as if it were a deed. It appears that the stamp is not exactly that which the instrument would bear if it were a deed of assignment, but the District Judge says it is not so far distant from it, but that it carries to his mind a conviction that the stamp, coupled with the use of the name, shows that Maharaj intended something different from a will. Then he says that it cannot be a will, because it affects the property in the lifetime of Maharaj, but that seems to their Lordships to be an assumption of the question. Of course if it affects the property in the lifetime of Maharaj it cannot have a testamentary character, but the very question is whether it does affect the property in the lifetime of Maharaj. The District Judge does not assign any additional reason for thinking it does affect the property in that way.

Mr. Woodroffe in his argument relied very strongly upon the use of the word "assign," and upon the reservation of a life-interest to the donor. No doubt both those circumstances tend towards the conclusion to which Mr. Woodroffe wished to lead their Lordships, but they are by no means conclusive. If they had been the words of an English conveyancer preparing an English instrument, they would have afforded a very strong argument, but the instrument was prepared by Lal Sundar, and we must not construe with too great nicety, or assign too much weight to the exact words that he uses for a transfer of property, as if he were accurately weighing the difference [802] between a testamentary instrument and one operating inter vivos. We must remember that wills are comparatively new in any part of India, and are of more recent introduction in Oudh in respect to this class of property. So with respect to the reservation of a life-interest. The will being not a very familiar instrument to the people who prepare it or who sign it, the testator often does express a great anxiety that he shall not be considered to have parted with anything in his lifetime, and their Lordships have seen here instruments which most unquestionably were wills, and intended to operate as such, in which nevertheless there have been expressions upon the face of them intimating that the testator intends to remain the owner of his property until he dies.

Upon the whole, therefore, looking at what are the substantial characteristics of the document which have been referred to, setting aside mere matters of form and what may be considered as technical expressions, their Lordships think that the reasons for holding it to be a will have a decided preponderance over those which would lead them to hold it to be a deed.

It remains to consider the objections to the validity of the instrument considered as a will. First, it was said that the disposition made by it was beyond the power of Maharaj Singh, because the property was governed by a previous will or declaration, whichever it may be, of Beni Singh, dated the 8th March 1860, which fixed a character upon the property that no subsequent possessor could depart from. The answer to that is that Act I of 1869, s. 11, gives not only to the original taluqdar, but to every heir and legatee of a taluqdar, power to transfer or to bequeath the estate which is granted to him. It was suggested that s. 11 is controlled by s. 19, in which there is a proviso, "that nothing herein contained shall affect wills made before the passing of this Act." But s. 19 is for the purpose of applying to wills made under Act I of 1869 a number of sections contained in the Indian Succession Act; and their Lordships are of opinion that the proviso only applies to the sections or provisions contained in s. 19, and not to those contained in the whole of Act I of 1869.

[803] Then it is said that there was undue influence used to coerce Maharaj Singh into executing the instrument. On that point there is the finding of both the Courts below against the appellant, and the subject-matter is one on which this Board would be exceedingly reluctant to disturb concurrent findings of the Court below. But it is said that they ought to be disturbed, because evidence of undue influence was tendered and rejected. It becomes important then to see whether there was any evidence tendered for the purpose of showing any undue influence. It is not shown that any such evidence was tendered, excepting what is called a revocation, or an attempt to revoke, by Maharaj, long after the date of the instrument in question. Now of course it might happen that a revocation or an attempt to revoke should be accompanied by circumstances showing that undue influence had been used in procuring the execution of the instrument or throwing light upon that question. But no such circumstances are suggested. In the argument of counsel nothing is spoken of but the bare fact of what is called the revocation, which it is said is a relevant fact corroborative of another relevant fact, viz, the undue influence. On the passage which shows how the Court dealt with the matter the same remark occurs. And the reasons given for appealing to the High Court seem to make it quite conclusive that no other evidence was tendered. There are two separate reasons—one relating to undue influence and the other relating to the revocation. The one relating to undue influence uses this language. "From the time when and the manner in which document C was executed, and the circumstances under which such an unnatural and unusual disposition of a valuable property was unnecessarily made by Maharaj Singh, the presumptions and probabilities are very strong in support of the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff in proof of the document having been obtained by means of fraud, misrepresentation, coercion, and undue influence. That raises the whole question as to what occurred at the time when the document was executed, and no evidence was excluded on that point. Then the 18th reason for appeal is "The lower Court is wrong in having excluded oral evidence of the cancellation of the document C by Maharaj Singh," and [804] it goes on to argue that oral evidence of that fact was admissible. So that it is quite clear that the fact alone was to be proved by the rejected evidence, and it is impossible to suggest that the fact standing alone would have any bearing on undue influence used on the execution of the instrument.

All the other arguments against its validity, as to its return into Maharaj's hands, its cancellation, non-delivery of possession, and so on, turn upon the hypothesis that the instrument was a transfer and not a will, and therefore it is not necessary to make any further observations upon them. The consequence is that all the objections to Exhibit C fail, and as to list A, the suit must be decided against the appellant.

Now their Lordships come to list B, which comprises things not affected by Exhibit C. With respect to that property there was an alteration in the issue settled by the first Court, and a great deal of argument was used to show that there ought to have been no such alteration, but it is quite clear that the appellant is not damnified by it, whether it was right or wrong. If he could claim the whole of the property, and when that was decided against him could fall back and claim half, he might possibly be injured by the alteration of the issue, but he cannot do that, because the impartibility of the property is and always has been common ground between him and the respondent. Treating the property as impartible, the case can be argued in favour of the appellant just as well under the issue as it stands as it could be argued under the issue as it was originally framed.

As the issue stands the argument is presented in this way. Mr. Woodroffe says that as between Beni and his three sons the latter take by way of unobstructed inheritance, that if the property had been subject to the ordinary law of the Mitakshara, on Beni's death the three sons would have taken, but it is an impartible property, and therefore the eldest son Maharaj took the whole, on the death of Maharaj the question comes, who is the heir to Beni, and again, the estate being impartible, the eldest must take the whole. And a passage was read from Mr. Mayne's "Hindu Law," referring to authorities, and saying that in general such estates—that is, impartible estates—descend by the law of primogeniture.

[805] Now, however true it may be that, if there is absolutely nothing to guide the mind to any other conclusion, an impartible estate will descend according to the law of primogeniture, it is impossible to say that there is no such guide in this case. As to the taluq, there is a great deal of evidence to the effect that the law of primogeniture has not prevailed. On the 20th February 1860, Beni Singh, the then taluqdar, being called upon to state what the law of devolution of the estate is, says "The usage established by prescription in petitioner's family is still in force, namely, that out of several sons an able one had up to this time been selected and nominated as taluqdar, without reference to seniority." and then he prays that the Government will select an able one. That is to say, according to him, the law which is familiar to us under the name of Tanistry, or something very like it, prevailed in his family.

On the 8th March 1860 Beni Singh executed an instrument by which he states his desire that after his death his estate shall be maintained in his family entire and undivided according to the custom of Raj-gaddi, the younger brothers receiving maintenance from the Gaddi-nashin, the successor to the estate for the time being. That document is not without ambiguity, but it does not assert the law of primogeniture with clearness.

The next document is a parwana issued by the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur to Beni Singh on the 19th of August 1861, and it seems to have been issued because the Government had not been told with exactitude what the rule of succession was or was to be. The parwana runs thus "You are instructed that if the rule of primogeniture or the custom of Masnad Nashin be not in force in your family, it is essentially necessary that you should execute a will naming your successor therein." Now Beni Singh does not reply to that, that the rule of primogeniture was in force in his family, and therefore he did not wish to execute a will, but he answers, "in compliance with your order conveyed in the foregoing letter, I will execute my will in favour of an heir." It does not appear that Beni Singh did execute any will, but he promised to make a will on the footing that the rule of primogeniture was not in force in his family.

[806] The next act is the formation of the lists of taluqdaries ; and in that important operation we find the taluq entered, not in list 3, which contains the primogeniture estates, but in list 2, which contains the estates which go to a single heir.

Now, in all these proceedings it is the taluq, or the property comprised in list A, which is the main object, though statements are made in general terms as to the custom of the family. But in 1872 a suit was instituted by Ishri, the present appellant, to recover from Maharaj Singh the taluq, and also moveable property valued at Rs. 84,000. Baldeo Singh was also made a defendant to the suit, so that whatever was decided in that suit was decided between the parties to this appeal. The Rs. 84,000 would seem to come under the same considerations as the moveables in list B in the present suit. It is observable that in the present suit, list A contains no moveables at all. All the moveables are in list B, and though it is not so clear as might be wished, the probability is that the moveables which were the subject of the suit of 1872 were governed by the general custom of the family.

In that suit Ishri filed a written statement in which he says " On the 20th February 1860 plaintiff's father, by a will of the same date "—meaning the statement made to the Government—" stated the family usage regarding succession, which plaintiff's father desired to be followed after his death." Then he is examined, and in his examination he says. " In my family the eldest brother has never succeeded to the taluq," and he gives one or two instances to show that such is the fact. In giving judgment, the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur observes that all he has to consider is the plaintiff's title to the taluq Kanhmow. He takes a distinction between the considerations that apply to the taluq Kanhmow and the considerations that apply to Njmchaina—something which was the subject of a subsequent grant ; but he takes no distinction between the considerations that apply to taluq Kanhmow and those which apply to the moveables on which he is deciding.

The case set up by Ishri principally consisted of a document which was held to be forged ; and it is remarkable that in that document he continues to put into Beni's mouth the assertion of the principle that the ablest person is to succeed ; and after [807] extolling the intelligence and gravity of temper and other good qualities of Ishri, Beni is made to say in the forged instrument that he desires Ishri to succeed him in preference to Maharaj or Baldeo. But the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur dismissed the suit on the ground that, though there was evidence that it was the custom of the family for the most able to succeed, there was no evidence that Ishri had been selected as such. Towards the end of his judgment he says : " There is no doubt that this was the custom in most taluqs in this district, and was probably the custom of the smaller taluqs in the greater part of Oudh. Wills, however, at that time were unknown."

That seems very like a decision with regard to property other than the taluq, that Tanistry rather than primogeniture was the governing rule of the family. Even if the decision concerns the taluq alone, their Lordships consider that the District Judge in this case is quite right when he argues from the law relating to the taluq to the law relating to all the other family property, and says there is a presumption from the actual decisions relating to the taluq that the family property followed the same law, or rather, as he puts it accurately, there is no evidence to show that the other family property followed a line of devolution different from that of the taluq.

Whether the evidence would prove the case as regards list B in favour of the respondent if he were the party claiming and the appellant were in possession, is not now the question. The question is, whether the appellant, having the onus probandi on him to show that primogeniture is the law of the family, has proved his case, and he certainly is very far indeed from proving his case, the evidence so far as it goes being the other way.

The appellant, therefore, fails on all his points, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Code of Civil Procedure, Act XIV of 1882, s. 135—Affidavit of documents—Production of documents—Inspection of documents—Specific performance of contract to purchase—Refusal to allow inspection.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract to purchase an indigo factory, the defendant denied that the agreement relied on was final, and alleged that the plaintiff had induced him to sign the agreement by means of representations regarding the nature, the extent, the value, and the net income of the property, all of which representations the defendant charged were false and fraudulent to the knowledge of the plaintiff. The plaintiff, in his affidavit of documents, set out a list of title-deeds evidencing his title to, and the books of accounts and other papers and documents relating to the property agreed to be purchased, and these he claimed to withhold from the defendant's inspection, on the ground that they were not sufficiently material at that stage of the suit.

Held, that the documents were not protected

* Original Civil Suit No. 99 of 1884

THIS was an application to consider the sufficiency of the plaintiff's affidavit in verification of his list of documents, made in a suit for specific performance instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant. The plaintiff stated that on the 6th of October 1883 the defendant had, in Calcutta, agreed in writing to purchase from the plaintiff the Ramnaghur Indigo Factory and Silk Filature situated in the districts of Moorshedabad and Nuddea for Rs. 1,25,000 as from the first of September 1883, that plaintiff guaranteed the net income to be Rs. 13,000 a year, and that the defendant was to take over the dena-powna and pay for the outlay made by the plaintiff on the concern since the 1st of September 1883. The plaintiff went on to state that the defendant refused to perform the agreement, that the defendant had laid out on the factory on the defendant's account, since the 1st of September 1883, a sum of over Rs. 15,000, and that the plaintiff was willing to perform his part of the contract. Certain correspondence which had passed between the parties and between their solicitors was annexed to the plaint.

[809] The defendant pleaded that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit; he denied the agreement set out in the plaint, save so far as in the written statement admitted, denied a refusal to perform, or that the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform. He then stated that on the 6th day of October 1883, one Cozen, whom he charged to be the plaintiff's agent, came to him and asked him to buy a zemindari, called Ramnaghur, with indigo factory and silk filature attached, alleging that it contained from 13,000 to 14,000 bighas of land, that the Government revenue was from Rs. 40,000 to Rs. 42,000, that the net annual income was Rs. 13,000 (besides the profits of the indigo factories and silk filature), and that the owner wanted Rs. 3,00,000 for it. The defendant (who denied all knowledge of the existence of the property until informed by Cozen) offered to treat for the purchase if the price were reduced. Thereupon Cozen went away from the plaintiff's house, returned again in the afternoon of the same day, and took the defendant to the plaintiff's office, at No. 1 Commercial Buildings, where they saw the plaintiff, who, the defendant alleged, confirmed the representations regarding the property which had been previously made to the defendant by Cozen. The plaintiff also stated that the ryots on the property had no mourosi right, that they paid a bonus of Rs. 5 a bigha on re-settlement, that the factory house had cost Rs. 40,000 to Rs. 50,000, and that he was prepared to prove by documents and by admission of the ryots that the net annual rental was Rs. 13,000. The defendant, in his written statement, further went on to say that "after some bargaining, which was conducted by the defendant on the basis of the information given to him by the said J. E. Cozen and the plaintiff as aforesaid, for no papers of any kind were produced or shown to him, and relying entirely upon such information and upon the assertion of the plaintiff, that the said zemindari, with the said factories and filatures attached, was worth more than Rs. 1,25,000, the defendant agreed to purchase the same for the said sum of Rs. 1,25,000, provided his attorney approved of the plaintiff's title thereto;" the defendant also agreed to purchase the zemindari as from the 1st September 1883, allowing the plaintiff all moneys laid out since that date on the factory, and also agreed to take over [810] the dena-powna at a rate agreed on. Immediately after this interview (according to the defendant's work sheet) the parties proceeded to the office of the plaintiff's solicitors, where, at the instance of the plaintiff, a draft agreement was prepared by Mr. J. C. Orr, which draft was taken away by the defendant with the plaintiff's consent, for the express purpose of having it approved by his solicitors before he signed the agreement. Before leaving the office of the plaintiff's solicitors, the defendant, at the instance of the plaintiff, signed (without reading it) a letter then and there written by Mr. Orr, which the defendant believed contained the terms agreed on between the parties as aforesaid.

The defendant then submitted that (1) the letter of the 6th of October 1883 was never intended to be a final agreement, (2) that if the said letter were found to be a final agreement, then the defendant was induced to sign by means of false and fraudulent representations concerning the nature, value, extent, and net income of the property made by the plaintiff to the defendant, and (3) supposing the letter were final and there was no fraud, then that the plaintiff's conduct in withholding from the defendant all information concerning the property, and in refusing to produce or show to the defendant any deed or document concerning the same, disentitled him to the relief claimed. In support of the last ground of defence the defendant referred to the correspondence annexed to the plaint, from which it appeared that the plaintiffs were not willing that the defendant should get possession of the deeds, documents, etc., until after he should have paid the earnest money, namely, Rs. 10,000

On the 26th of May 1884 the plaintiff filed an affidavit verifying a list of documents set out in a schedule thereto. The material portions of this affidavit are as follows

"(1) That I have in my possession or power the documents relating to the matters in question in this suit set forth in the first, second and third parts of the schedule hereto annexed

"(4) That I object to produce the said documents set forth in the third part of the said schedule hereto

"(5) That I do so object to produce the said last-mentioned documents, on the ground, as I am advised and verily believe, that the defendant is not entitled to inspect the same, which consist of [811] the title-deeds evidencing my title to, and the books of account and other papers and documents relating to, the indigo factory, silk filature and property in the agreement, dated the 6th of October 1883, in the plant in this suit mentioned, until this Honourable Court shall have decided and determined in this suit whether the said agreement constitutes a valid and binding contract in law for the sale by me of the said indigo factory, silk filature and other property to the said defendant, which is the main question raised upon the pleadings in issue between the defendant and myself in this suit "

Mr. Bonnerjee for the defendant contended that the affidavit was insufficient to guard the documents mentioned in the third part of the schedule from inspection by the defendant, regard being had to the issue raised by the pleadings in the cause.

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply

Pigot, J.—The defendant seeks inspection of certain documents of the plaintiff, which plaintiff claims that he is entitled, under section 135 of the Code, for the present to withhold.

This is a suit for specific performance in which several defences are set up: one, that no contract was ever entered into, another, that if such a contract was ever entered into, the defendant was induced to enter into it by the misrepresentation of the defendant.

The acts of misrepresentation alleged by the defendant are, perhaps, as to some of them, somewhat loosely indicated in the written statement. But as to one, which I must for the purpose of the present application at any rate treat as material, it is clear enough.

The defendant alleges that the plaintiff represented to him before the negotiation, or the contract, whichever it was, was entered into, that the property to be sold was of the net annual value of Rs. 13,000. The defendant's case is, that this was a false representation, and that at the outside the net annual value [812] was to plaintiff's knowledge very greatly below Rs. 13,000. Upon this question the parties are at issue.

Another question arises in the case with respect to the annual value of the property. In the letter of October 6th, which plaintiff alleges, and defendant denies, to have been a final agreement, it is recited that the plaintiff guarantees the net annual income to be not less than Rs. 13,000, and that if the annual income be less than Rs. 13,000, a proportionate reduction is to be made in the price.

The defendant alleges that the property offered to him was described to him as a zemindari, and that the net annual value meant the annual net rental derived therefrom over and above Government revenue, assessments and such like outgoings.

This the plaintiff denies, alleging that this stipulation referred to net annual income derived from all sources of income, including the income derived from certain mulberry cultivation carried on upon the estate, and also as I conclude the income derived from the indigo factory and silk filature on the property, that property being indeed described in the letter of October 6th, drawn up by the plaintiff's solicitor, and signed (though, as he alleges, not read) by the defendant, as the Ramnaghur Indigo Factory and Silk Filature.

The defendant in paragraph 21 of his written statement alleges that not merely did the property not yield the Rs. 13,000 net annual value in the sense attributed by him to those words, but that even as an indigo factory it had been carried on for years at a loss, as the plaintiff knew.

Those are the two chief points in dispute between the parties as to the question of greater or less money value, and the representation or guarantee said to have been made or entered into respecting it.

Then, there is another dispute closely connected with the above, namely—what it was, which was offered to the defendant.

The defendant says what plaintiff offered him for sale was a zemindari with a profit rent; with, no doubt, a factory, etc., on it; combining this, with the previous contentions, he in result, alleges that he was offered, as a profitable zemindari, what was in truth a worthless trading concern.

[813] The plaintiff says what he sold was an indigo factory, etc., with rent-paying tenants on the land and that it was a valuable property. There are no doubt other questions raised in the suit, but I do not think I need advert to them for the purpose of the matter now before me.

The documents which the plaintiff claims to withhold from inspection are those set out in part III of the schedule to his affidavit, and consist of title-deeds evidencing his title to and the books of account, and other papers and documents relating to the indigo factory, silk filature, and other property in the agreement, dated the 6th October, mentioned.

He says the defendant is not entitled to inspect these documents until it shall have been decided in this suit whether or not the agreement sued on in the suit was or was not binding on the defendant. It was argued for the plaintiff that defendant would not be allowed to go into the question of title at the hearing; that the question at the hearing would be simply, was there a binding contract, and that upon that being found, if it should be found in favour of the plaintiff, the Court would direct the usual reference as to title, until which time, the right to inspect those documents would not arise, the issue upon which their contents would be material not arising until then.

If the matter stood solely on that footing, I should accept the plaintiff's contention and refuse the discovery sought. The case of the defendant is not so framed (I will put it no further) in respect of the mere question of title, as to lead to a departure from the usual, though not absolutely invariable, practice of directing a reference.

But it is not upon a mere question of title that discovery of these documents is now sought. Upon one question, whether the contract, if made, is voidable on the ground of misrepresentation, they are or they probably are, or they may be, material to the defendant's case. So far as I can judge from the correspondence, I should think it probable that they are material. I do not like saying more than that, it is not the time to construe the letter of October 6th. But it is enough if they may reasonably be thought material to an issue which must be raised at the hearing.

* [814] It is obviously a case, which it is better not to discuss, at this stage, a jot more than is necessary, else there are one or two further considerations to which I might perhaps refer. I shall only add that I am glad to think that the burden of inconvenience here is lighter than in some cases which might be imagined in which inspection of the title-deeds might be ordered. The documents which the plaintiff seeks to withhold would have been, as I gather from the correspondence, always open to the defendant's inspection, had he paid his deposit, yet even then the present defence would have been available for him if his case be true, and he had paid the money before discovering the facts on which it is founded.

I feel the objection to ordering discovery of a party's title-deeds, when it can be avoided, that if I saw my way to it, I should let the questions of misrepresentation and the one or two other questions to which I have not particularly referred, stand over until the question of the effect of the signature by the defendant of the letter of October 6th could be determined. But I cannot do it. It would be perhaps to order two distinct trials followed by a reference as to title.

The plaintiff must give the discovery sought for, costs to be costs in the cause.

Messrs. Beeby and Rutter for the Defendant.

Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, ss. 575, 597—Decision when appeal heard by two or more Judges—Letters Patent of 1865, cls. 15, 36.

Section 575 of Act XIV of 1882 does not take away the right of appeal which is given by clause 15 of the Letters Patent

When the judgment of a lower Court has been confirmed under s. 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by reason of one of the Judges of the appeal Court agreeing upon the facts with the Court below, an appeal will lie [815] against such judgment, notwithstanding the terms of s. 575—Appaji Bhuvrar v. Shivlal Khubchand (I.L.R., 3 Bom., 204) approved

THIS was a suit to recover a temple and certain properties dedicated and belonging thereto, which was heard by Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM on the Original Side of the High Court, who made a decree in favour of the defendants, dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff appealed, the main point for decision being one of limitation, which depended on a question of fact, as to this question of fact, the Court consisting of the Chief Justice and Mr Justice WILSON differed in opinion, Mr Justice WILSON agreeing with the Court below. The appeal, therefore, was dismissed, and judgment given (in accordance with s. 575 of the Civil Procedure Code) in confirmation of the judgment of the lower Court. The plaintiff appealed under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of Mr. Justice WILSON and applied to the Chief Justice for the nomination of a Bench to hear the appeal.

The Chief Justice considered that as there was a serious difference in opinion amongst the Judges of the High Court as to whether such an appeal would lie, the question ought to be referred to a Full Bench. The question referred being—whether, where the judgment of the Court below has been confirmed under s. 575 of the Code, by reason of one of the Judges of the appeal Court agreeing upon the facts with the Court below, an appeal may still be had against that judgment, notwithstanding the terms of s. 575

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) (with him Mr. Gasper) for the Appellant.

Section 15 of the Charter gives an appeal where the Court is equally divided. Section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down the rules as to decisions where the appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges. It, however, leaves untouched s. 15 of the Charter, and this is shown by s. 597 of the Code, which gives no appeal to the Privy Council where two Judges differ in opinion.

The case of Appaji Bhuvrar v. Shivlal Khubchand (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 204) lays down that s. 36 of the Letters Patent is superseded by s. 575 of the Code, and s. 575 does not touch appeals, but only references. Clause 15 [816] is, therefore, untouched by s. 575, an appeal will therefore lie. The case of Ranee Shurno Moyee v. Luchmeput Doogur (7 W. R., F. B., 512) shows that an appeal lies under s. 15 of the Charter.

Mr. Phillips (with him Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Handley) for the Respondent.

Section 15 of the Charter was adapted to a different state of affairs to what we have now. Section 36 of the Charter gives to the senior Judge the decision whether on facts or law, if the decision is arrived at by casting vote of the senior Judge, the Charter gave an appeal. That mode of deciding appeals has been done away with by s. 575 of the Code, which lays down that unless there is a majority, the decree is not to be interfered with, this does not come within the purview of the Charter. Section 15 of the Charter gives an appeal, and the question is, is that appeal taken away by s. 595. Section 575 has made a difference by taking cases decided by the voice of a senior Judge out of the category of the Charter.

In clause 15, my argument rests on the word "judgment", "judgment" means a judgment given in the manner provided by clause 36, and has no reference to a judgment under s. 575. If this is correct, the clause goes on to give an appeal to the Privy Council. Then does s. 597, without noticing the last part of clause 15, take away the appeal to the Privy Council? I submit not.

The opinion of the Full Bench was as follows —

We think that s. 575 of the Civil Procedure Code does not take away the right of appeal which is given by clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

We agree in the view taken by the Bombay High Court in the case of Appaji Bhivray v. Shivalal Khubchand (I L R., 3 Bom., 204), that the effect of s. 575 of the Code is to supersede the provision in clause 36 of the Letters Patent, that in the event of any disagreement between two Judges of a Division Bench, the judgment of the senior Judge shall prevail, but (sic), and still that notwithstanding that section, clause 15 of the Letters Patent remains in full force.

One very cogent reason, which has induced us to take this view, and which seems almost conclusive upon the point is, that [817] if the appeal under clause 15 of the Charter were taken away, a judgment in this Court of a Judge in a Division Bench, who agreed with the Court below upon a question of fact, would be absolutely final. However important the case might be, no appeal would lie to the Privy Council from that judgment. This is clear from s. 597 of the Civil Procedure Code, which enacts that "no appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court, or of one Judge of a Division Court, or of two or more Judges of the High Court, where they are equally divided in opinion."

It is, therefore, we think, obviously intended that in any such case an appeal should be had in the first instance to a Division Bench of the High Court, before an appeal can be preferred to Her Majesty in Council, and such an appeal can only be had under clause 15 of the Charter.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 10th June, 1884.

PRESENT :

MR JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Ishan Chunder Roy.....Judgment-debtor

versus

Ashanoolah Khan.....Decree-holder

Execution of decree, Power of Court to stay—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 239, 250, 243 and 246.

It is not open to the Court to refuse to execute a decree against which no appeal has been proffered and the time for appealing against which has expired.

ONE Ashanoolah Khan obtained a decree for enhancement of the rent of certain taluqs, together with other decrees for the rents of those taluqs for the years 1279—1283. Against these decrees an appeal was preferred to the Privy Council, and pending that appeal the High Court passed an order for stay of execution. [818] Meanwhile Ashanoolah obtained an ex-parte decree for the rents of 1285—1288 in respect of the same taluqs. In the course of the execution proceedings the judgment-debtor objected that the execution of the latter decree could not proceed, as the execution of the decree for the rent of the previous years had been stayed by the order of the High Court on account of the appeal to the Privy Council. The Subordinate Judge adverted to the circumstance of the ex parte nature of the decree, and disallowed the objection mainly on the ground, it would seem, that the property attached in execution of the decree was other than the taluqs or undertenure to prevent the sale of which the execution of the prior decrees had been stayed. From that order the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court. The High Court at first refused the appeal, as a copy of its order staying execution of the previous decrees had not been placed before it, nor had the appellant tendered sufficient security. Upon a subsequent application in the same matter, the High Court granted a review of its former order and restored the appeal.

Mr. Phillips and Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Srinath Banerji and Baboo Kuloda Kinkur Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated 18th August 1883, refusing to stay the execution of a decree. The facts of the case are briefly these: The decree-holder obtained a previous decree for enhancement of the rent of certain taluqs. That decree, together with other decrees for the rents of these taluqs for subsequent years, is at present under appeal to the Privy Council. The years, the rents of which are thus sub judice, are 1279—1283, inclusive. In the case now before us an ex-parte decree was obtained for the rents of 1285, 1286, 1287 and 1288. Against that decree no appeal was preferred, and the time for preferring an appeal has now expired. Under these circumstances, the question arises

* Appeal from Order No. 841 of 1883, against the order of Baboo Roma Nath Seal, second Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 18th of August 1883.

ther the Court of First Instance had any jurisdiction to refuse to [819] execute the decree. There is no express provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for such a case. But it has been contended that there are sections in the Code which appear to contemplate the existence of such a discretion in a Court of First Instance as regards a decree against which no appeal has been preferred. Sections 239 and 250 have been referred to, and the words in the latter section—"unless he sees cause to the contrary"—have been relied upon as indicating the existence of such a discretionary power. It appears to us that these words are sufficiently explained by a reference to express provisions contained in other sections of the Code, (see, for example, s. 246) which provide for setting off cross decrees against each other, the effect being that no execution of the decree for the smaller amount will take place. We may also refer to s. 243, and we may bear in mind that when a decree-holder dies, while execution proceedings are pending, the Court may properly see cause not to issue its warrant until a proper person has been substituted on the record in the place of the deceased decree-holder. We are therefore unable to say that there are any provisions in the Code which indirectly empower a Court of First Instance to refuse to execute a decree against which no appeal has been preferred, and the time for appealing against which has expired, and we think that we would not be justified in importing into the Code a provision which the Legislature has not thought fit to insert expressly or by necessary implication. We are of opinion, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge had no power to refuse execution of this decree. It must be borne in mind that even if the judgment-debtor succeeds in his appeal to the Privy Council, inasmuch as the present decree is not under appeal and would therefore not be directly affected by the result of the appeal in the Privy Council case, the decree-holder would still be entitled to demand execution, unless and until proceedings were taken either to obtain an injunction or to obtain a modification of the decree upon review. We must therefore dismiss this appeal, but, having regard to the circumstances, we think it should be without costs. The order passed as to costs when this appeal was dismissed on the previous occasion will stand.

Appeal dismissed.

MR JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Encroachment by tenant—Landlords' right—Encroachment acquiesced in by landlord

If a tenant during his tenancy encroaches upon the land of a third person, and holds it with his own tenure until the expiration of the tenancy, he is considered to have made the encroachment not for his own benefit, but for that of his landlord, and if he has acquired a title against the third person by adverse possession, he has acquired it for his landlord and not for himself

THIS was a suit brought to recover possession of 3½ cottahs of land.

The plaintiffs were taluqdars and claimed the land as belonging to their ancestral taluq which they held under defendant No. 2.

Defendant No. 1 stated that the plaintiffs had never been in possession of the land, and that he (defendant No 1) had been put into possession by the defendant No. 2, who was his zamindar

The Munsiff found that the land did not belong to the plaintiffs' taluq, but considered that it belonged to defendant No. 2, and that as it adjoined other lands of the plaintiffs, they had at some time or other appropriated it by encroachment. But he further held that the plaintiffs had occupied the land for more than twenty years, and that they had therefore acquired a valid title both against defendant No. 1, and defendant No. 2 their landlord.

Defendant No. 1 appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the plaintiffs' case had been that they occupied the land as included within their own taluq held under defendant No. 2, but that having failed to prove that the land was so included in their taluq, they could not be permitted to turn round and plead [821] adverse possession against their own admitted landlord, and he further held that the defendant No. 1 was in possession apparently with the consent of the landlord, and that unless they could show a better title, they could not eject them, he therefore reversed the decision of the Munsiff

Baboo Dwarkanath Chakravarti for the Appellants.

Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Garth, C.J., who, after stating the facts, continued.—It has been contended on appeal that the Subordinate Judge was wrong; and that as it has been found that the plaintiff had been in possession of the land for upwards of

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2559 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Dwarka Nath Mitter, Officiating Additional, Subordinate Judge of Mymensing, dated the 6th of September 1882; reversing the decree of Baboo Jagat Chandra Das, Munsiff of Issurgunge, dated the 18th June 1881.

12 years, paying no rent for it, and as the land did not form part of his taluq, he must be considered as having held it adversely to his landlord, and as he has held it in this way for more than 12 years, he has acquired a title to it by limitation.

This case, therefore, directly raises the question, what the law of this country is with regard to encroachments made by a tenant upon his landlord's property.

There is no doubt whatever that by the English law, an encroachment made by a tenant upon land adjoining to, or even in the neighbourhood of, his holding, is presumed, in the absence of strong evidence to the contrary, to be made for the benefit of the landlord. See the recent cases of the Earl of Lisburne v. Davies (L. R., 1 C P., 259) and Whitmoir v. Humphries (L. R., 7 C. P., 1).

And this rule applies to all lands so encroached upon, whether the landlord has any interest in it or not. If a tenant, during his tenancy, encroaches upon the land of a third person, and holds it with his own tenure until the expiration of the tenancy, he is considered to have made the encroachment, not for his own benefit, but for that of his landlord, and if he has acquired a title against the third person by an adverse possession, he has acquired it for his landlord, and not for himself. See Kingsmill [822] v. Millard (11 Ex., 313); Andrews v. Hailes (2 E. and B., 349), and this doctrine appears to have been adopted here in the case of Goroo Doss Roy v. Issur Chunder Bose (22 W. R., 247), as well as in other cases.

It is true, that by the English law, if it could be distinctly proved that the tenant made the encroachment adversely to his landlord, an adverse possession for 12 years might then give the tenant a title by limitation, and probably that would be so in this country.

But that was clearly not the case in this instance, because the plaintiff himself in his plaint claims the land in question as part of his taluq.

The only possible ground, as it seems to us, upon which a person in the plaintiff's position could claim to retain possession of the land so encroached upon, would be, that the landlord had either expressly or impliedly acquiesced in the encroachment, or, in other words, that he had allowed the tenant to add the area encroached upon to his holding.

It might be supposed from the language of the judgment in the case to which we have last referred that the learned Judges there intended to lay down the rule more broadly, and to say that in all cases, whether the encroachments were made with or without the landlord's consent, the tenant making it had a right to retain the land so encroached upon till the end of his tenancy. But we have consulted our brother MITTER as to this, and we find that it was by no means the intention of the Court in that case to lay down the rule thus broadly.

It would, indeed, seem strange if, as a matter of law, a tenant were allowed, without his landlord's permission, to appropriate any land which adjoins his own tenure, and then when his landlord complained of the trespass, and required him to give the land up, he were allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, and insist upon retaining possession of it, until the expiration of his tenure.

In this particular case, however, it was no part of the plaintiffs' case that the zemindar, either expressly or impliedly, had consented to the encroachment. His case in the first instance was, [823] that the land in question formed part of his original taluq. That has been negatived by both the Courts.

He then contended that he had held it adversely to his landlord; but that, for the reasons already given, we have found to be untenable.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[ENCROACHMENT ON LANDLORD'S PROPERTY—

The presumption is that the land enclosed from waste is added to the holding whether the landlord has or has not assented to the encroachment (1871) Whitmore v. Humphries (1871) L. R., 7 C. P., 6.

Where the tenant takes in land belonging to his landlord which was not originally enclosed in his holding, but is not waste land, so that it is not subject to the above presumption, it is a question of fact to be decided on all the circumstances of the case whether he has taken it in as part of his holding; if he has, and if he has held it for more than twelve years, he is entitled to retain it till the end of his term, but must then give it up to the landlord with the original land —Tabor v. Godfrey (1895) 64 L. J. Q. B. 245. Until the tenant perfects his title to the encroachment by adverse possession for the prescribed period, the landlord may at his option treat the tenant as a trespasser in respect thereof —(1897) 25 Cal., 302 (903); (1902) 16 C. P. L. R., 36 (39); (1903) 31 Cal., 397 (402).

See as to landlord's rights under various circumstances in such cases, (1905) 2 C. L. J. 125.

As regards the limitation applicable, to a case of this sort, see (1908) 13 C. W. N., 698.]

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MITTER, MR. JUSTICE McDONELL, MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP, AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Hurry Mohan Rai.....Plaintiff

versus

Gonesh Chunder Doss and others..... Defendants.*

Hindu law—Repairs to houses held by a Hindu lady having a life interest—

Credit—Death of life tenant before payment—Liability of estate for the debt.

A daughter succeeding to the estate of her father ordered a quantity of lime for the purpose of making repairs to certain houses on the estate, the repairs were completed, but the lady died before the debt contracted by her for the lime had been paid off.

At the time of her death there remained outstanding a large sum due as rent, which the lady had neglected to collect during her lifetime.

In the suit brought by the creditor against the heir of the lady, and the reversionary heirs of her father's estate (into whose hands the estate had passed), in which he asked for a decree—(1) against the estate in the hands of the reversioners, and (2) sought for payment out of the rents uncollected in the lady's lifetime, or, in the alternative, that the lady's personal estate might be held liable on a reference being made to a Full Bench, as to whether the plaintiff could enforce his claim against the estate in the hands of the heirs of Raj Chunder generally, or as against the amount of rents, which accrued due to the lady and which remained uncollected.

Held, by MITTER, McDONELL and PRINSEP, JJ (GARTH, C. J., and WILSON, J., dissenting) that the plaintiff was certainly entitled to be paid out of the arrears of rent since collected, but that he also was entitled to enforce his claim against the heirs of the last full owner of the estate generally.

[824] ONE Raj Chunder Doss died intestate, leaving him surviving a widow, Rasmoni Dossee, and three daughters, Koomaree Dossee, Poddomoney Dossee and Juggodumba Dossee, and five grandsons by these daughters.

* Full Bench Reference on a judgment of NORRIS, J., dated 19th July 1883.

On the death of Raj Chunder, Rasmoni became entitled as his widow to all his property, and continued in possession thereof till her death in 1871. On her death (Koomaree Dossee having predeceased her mother) Poddomoney and Juggodumba became jointly entitled to the estate of their deceased father, and continued in such possession until a partition took place, when they severally enjoyed the rents, issues and profits of the shares allotted to them. In 1878 Poddomoney died and Juggodumba thereupon became entitled as the sole surviving daughter of Raj Chunder to the whole of the estate. Amongst the property, which thus from time to time fell to her, were several brick houses; and for the repair of these houses Juggodumba, through her manager, ordered from one Hurry Mohun Rai large quantities of lime. The first of such orders was made in 1873, when a hathchitta was granted to Hurry Mohun Rai duly signed by Juggodumba. Between 1873 and 1880 accounts between Juggodumba and Hurry Mohun were periodically adjusted, and the balance found due to Hurry Mohun after each such periodical adjustment was carried forward, the last of such adjustments being come to in Bysack 1287 (April and May 1880), when a balance of Rs 2,145 was found due to Hurry Mohun, the amount being carried forward and entered in a fresh hathchitta, which was duly signed by Juggodumba.

Subsequently to the last adjustment, Hurry Mohun supplied to Juggodumba a further quantity of lime, valued at Rs. 1,261, and received in part payment thereof Rs. 1,000, this transaction was then entered in the hathchitta abovementioned. Juggodumba died on 31st December 1880, and the estate thereupon devolved on the grandsons of Raj Chunder.

At the time of the death of Juggodumba there remained outstanding large sums of money due to Juggodumba as rents which had become payable to her in her lifetime, and had been uncollected, but which since her death had been realized by the [825] Receiver who had been appointed in a suit brought by the grandsons for partition of the estate.

Hurry Mohun then brought this suit against the heirs of Raj Chunder to recover Rs. 2,406 for lime supplied by him, asking that he might be paid out of the rents which had been uncollected during the lifetime of Juggodumba, and which were now in the hands of the Receiver, and which had, as he submitted, devolved on the defendants, subject to the debts and liabilities incurred by Juggodumba, and in the alternative, he asked for a decree against Troylokonath Biswas, who was the sole heir of Juggodumba, in respect of her stridhan; and further prayed, should Troylokonath not admit sufficient assets, that the estate of Juggodumba might be administered. Hurry Mohun had previously to this suit put in a claim for the amount now sued for, in the administration suit brought to administer Juggodumba's estate.

The defendants stated that the income enjoyed by Juggodumba during her lifetime had amounted to several lakhs of rupees per annum, and that the repairs ought to have been paid for out of the accumulated surplus income; and contended that the uncollected rents formed an accretion to the estate of Raj Chunder and were not, therefore, liable for the debt.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Pault for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee, Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Sale for the different Defendants.

Mr. Justice NORRIS gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff, holding that the estate of Raj Chunder was liable for the amount of the plaintiff's claims, and directed the Receiver to pay over the amounts sued for with costs to the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed.

The appeal came on for hearing before Sir RICHARD GARTH, C. J., and Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM, on the 15th February 1884, and the Court, after hearing Counsel, decided to refer the following questions to a Full Bench :—

(1) Whether, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff is entitled to enforce his claim against the estate of Raj [826] Chunder generally in the hands of the heirs of Raj Chunder.

(2) Whether the plaintiff has a right to enforce his claim against the rents due and uncollected at the death of Juggodumba.

The Advocate General (Mr. Paul) and Mr. Bonnerjee for the Appellants.

Mr. Paul.—Every debt is ordinarily payable by the person ordering the credit. If uncollected rents belong to the reversioner, it must follow that the personal debt is chargeable on the person only, and cited Ram Koomar Mitter v. Ichamoyi Dasu (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 36), Ramasami Mudaliar v. Sellattammul (I. L. R.) 4 Mad., 375), Gadgeppa Desai v. Apaaji Jivandrao (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 237).

Mr. Bonnerjee on the same side.—What is the nature of the estate a widow gets in her husband's property, or that a daughter gets in her father's property?

The widow is not a manager of the property she is full owner, and she represents no one in the estate. She can throw away the income of the property if she chooses, so long as she does not interfere with the corpus. She uses the property so as to augment her income.

As to the acts of a widow binding on the inheritance, see Vyavasthu Darpana, v 39, p. 52, of Shyama Churn's book. The question is whether doing repairs to a house are of such a beneficial character to the estate as to justify the widow alienating.

The word "sale" in Vyavasthu Darpana, vs 40, 41, p. 55, signifies also any other alienation. Is it a correct proposition of law that from the time that the debt was contracted it became a charge on her estate?

It appears that Juggodumba in her lifetime brought a suit against the representative of Poddomoney to have it declared that the rents and profits formed part of the corpus of the estate, and that suit was decided in her favour—see the judgment of WILSON, J., dated 21st April 1880

[827] The case of Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lall Sahoo [24 W. R., 307, L. R., 2 I. A., 131 (143)] shows that it is not in every case in which a man has benefited by the money of another that an obligation to repay that money arises. So that even if the reversioner has enjoyed the benefit of the repairs done by the widow he is not bound to repay the money spent.

I submit the uncollected income became the property of the next heirs of her father after Juggodumba's death, and that the repairs are payable out of income, and the remedy is against her estate and not against the estate that has been repaired Bungsee Dhur Hajra v. Thakoor Pyrag Singh (7 Sel. Rep. 114); Umroothram Byragee v. Narayandas Ruseekdas (2 Bor., 223).

Mr. Evans (with him Mr. Amir Ali) for the Respondent, Troylokonath the son of Juggodumba.—I wish it to be declared that the uncollected rents are chargeable, but as I am one of the reversionary heirs I wish the suit to be dismissed.

I will confine myself to the point as to the difference in the position of uncollected rents and the ordinary corpus of a testator's estate. Inasmuch as uncollected rents became debts due to Juggodumba out of which she could have paid for the lime they were her moneys. How do uncollected rents become to be accretions?

In Isri Dut Koer v. Mussamut Hansbutti Keram (L R., 10 I. A., 150. I. L. R., 10 Cal., 324) the question was whether property purchased by a widow out of the profits of the estate of her husband was to be considered an accretion.

The widow had no opportunity of electing whether she would spend or save the uncollected rents, as she died when they were on the way to her, can the Court then elect for her, there is no rule of Hindu law which would allow of this to be done. It must be remembered that the plaintiff has filed a claim for this debt in the administration suit, and I submit that, therefore, this suit should be dismissed.

Mr. O. C. Mullick for the Respondent Hurry Mohun—The [828] widow fully represented the estate, and was but a manager or trustee for the reversioners, subject to the restrictions on alienation. Whether she was rich or poor, or whether she applied the money to the repairs, are not points which can be considered in this reference.

[GARTH, C.J.—The question whether she had money to do the repairs must surely be considered, it is conceded that it was necessary to repair.]

Then would the widow be justified under any circumstances in leaving such a debt unpaid, it might be that she could not help leaving these debts outstanding, as to whether the heirs are liable in this suit? I submit that whoever takes the estate is responsible for the debts—See Shama Churn Sircar's Vyavastha Darpana, p. 123, under heading "Payment of debts", see p. 127. It is not the immediate succession which is in question, the principle is that the person who holds the estate takes over the debts with certain defined exceptions, see p. 539 of the revised edition of Shama Churn, also Macnaghten's Hindu Law, vol. II, ch. X, s. 283. If the reversioners are not liable to pay for the lime out of the estate, yet they are liable to pay for it out of the rents uncollected in the widow's lifetime and afterwards collected by the Receiver. As to whether accumulations are to be considered corpus see Hansbutti Keram v. Isri Dut Koer (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 512, 4 C. L. R., 511), as to the distinction between accumulations and the current year's income—see Sreemutty Puddomoney Dossee v. Dwarka Nath Biswas (25 W. R., 335).

The Opinion of the Court was as follows:—

Mitter, J.—I am of opinion that the estate of Raj Chunder Doss, to which the defendants have succeeded on the death of Juggodumba Dossee, is liable for the balance of the price of the lime supplied by the plaintiff for the repair of certain houses appertaining to that estate. The lime was ordered for the purpose of repairing some of the houses on Raj Chunder's estate, and was actually used for that purpose.

Under these circumstances the plaintiff, in my opinion, has the right to be paid out of the estate to which the houses apper-[829]tain, and Juggodumba is not personally liable for the balance of the price of the lime supplied by the plaintiff. She incurred this liability as representing the estate of Raj Chunder Doss.

The point referred to us has been argued before us as if the question for decision was, under what circumstances a Hindu female in possession of a qualified estate is competent to borrow money for the management of the estate, so as to bind it in the hands of the next heir. But it seems to me that is not the question before us.

The question before us is of a different character. It is, under what circumstances a contract or a transaction giving rise to pecuniary liability, entered into by a Hindu female representing an estate, is binding upon the heir of the last male owner after her death.

It is now settled law that a Hindu widow fully represents the estate, and when the estate is pretty large it becomes necessary to enter into various contracts or transactions with third parties in the course of its management. Circumstances may be imagined, where it would be manifestly unjust to hold that a particular contract, which a Hindu widow found it necessary to make with a third party for the benefit of the estate, was not binding upon the next heir after her death. Suppose the estate consists of Sunderbund grants in which periodically embankments are required to be constructed for their preservation.

Suppose a Hindu widow in possession of such an estate engages workmen to construct an embankment on the condition of paying for the work after it was finished; suppose the death of the widow takes place just after the work was completed. It seems to me, that it would be manifestly unjust to hold that the next heir succeeding to the estate would not be bound to pay for the work done out of that estate.

On the other hand, cases may be supposed where it would be unjust to the next heir, after the widow's death, to make him liable under a particular contract, though made by a Hindu widow in the course of the management of the estate.

Suppose a Hindu widow engages a builder to make sundry improvements in the family dwelling house while there is no [830] necessity for such improvement, and dies after the work is finished. It seems to me that it would be unjust to hold that the next heir is liable to pay for the work done out of the estate, though it is to a certain extent benefited thereby. It follows therefore that in order to bind the next heir it is not sufficient to show that the contract has conferred a benefit upon the estate, but it must be further established that the contract is of such a nature that a prudent owner in managing his estate would find such a contract necessary for the due preservation of the estate. A contract, therefore, which not only confers a benefit upon the estate, but is necessary for its good management, though made by a Hindu widow, is, in my opinion, binding upon the next heir after her death.

In the case before us both these requirements are fulfilled. The repair of the houses not only benefited the estate, but was necessary in order to prevent their deterioration in value. It is not disputed in this case, and the fact is well known, that the value of house properties considerably depends on their being kept in good repair.

It has been said that such outgoings as the costs of repairing houses appertaining to the estate must be met from the gross income of the estate. There is no doubt that it is so. But that circumstance cannot affect the rights of a third party who has a valid claim against the estate. Suppose on the last day on which revenue may legally be paid a widow finds herself unable to meet a Government demand, from deficiency in the collections of rent from the tenants. There cannot be a question that a third party, who under these circumstances lends money to the widow to meet the Government demand, is entitled to recover it out of the estate. But suppose the next day after the revenue was paid the arrears of rent were paid into her treasury, and she, without repaying the loan, squandered away the whole of the rent received, her act would not in the least degree affect the rights of the lender. The Government revenue is as much payable out of the gross income as the costs of repairing houses on the estate. The estate would be liable if there is a valid necessity for the particular transaction, although if a widow neglects to meet the liability out of the gross income [831] she would be liable to be sued by the presumptive heir on the ground of waste.

But in this case there is no such charge of waste against the deceased widow. On the other hand, it is admitted that after her death the arrears of rent that accrued due during her lifetime have been since collected. If the costs of repairing houses on the estate are to be met from the gross income, the plaintiff is at least entitled to a decree to have his claim satisfied out of the arrears of rent collected since the death of the widow. But it has been contended that the accumulations go to the heir of the husband, and are not liable for the widow's personal debts. But ex hypothesi the whole of the arrears since collected cannot be considered accumulation, because if the costs of repairing houses on the estate and similar outgoings are to come out of the gross income, that portion of it would become accumulation which would remain after meeting them. The creditors of the widow cannot prefer any claim against the arrears of rent collected after her death, because such rent does not constitute her stridhan. Therefore the arrears of rent collected since the death of the widow cannot be considered assets left by her, and available to her general creditors. It is those creditors only, who have a claim arising out of the management of the estate by the widow, that are entitled to be paid out of the said rent. The heirs of the husband are entitled to have the control of the said fund, and not the personal heirs of the widow. But the former being only entitled to the accumulations properly so called, are bound to pay out of the said fund the necessary outgoings of the estate for the time during which the widow's estate lasted.

It is therefore clear to me that at any rate the plaintiff is entitled to be paid out of the arrears of rent since collected.

But it seems to me that the plaintiff's right is higher, and, in my opinion, he is entitled to enforce his claim against the appellants as the heirs of Raj Chunder generally.

McDonell, J.—We are asked to say, whether, under the circumstances stated in the order of reference, the plaintiff had a right to enforce his claim as against the appellants. (1) as against the heirs of Raj Chunder generally, (2) as against the amount of rent [832] which accrued due to Juggodumba Dossee and which remained uncollected at her death, and which has since been collected by the Receiver on account of the aforesaid heirs

I think that both the questions should be answered in the affirmative, and generally for the reasons given by my learned brother MITTER.

It is admitted that Juggodumba Dossee ordered the lime, for the price of which this suit is brought, and that she was legally bound to pay for it.

It is further admitted that the lime was ordered by her for the express purpose of repairing some of the houses appertaining to Raj Chunder's estate, and that it was actually used for that purpose. It is clear that the repairs of these houses not only benefited the estate of her father, Raj Chunder, but were necessary in order to prevent a deterioration in their value.

Under these circumstances, the plaintiff, in my opinion, has a right to be paid out of the estate to which the houses appertained, and Juggodumba or her heirs cannot be held to be personally liable for the balance of the price of the lime supplied by the plaintiff.

It has been argued that such outgoings, as the cost of repairing houses should, be met from the income of the estate; that this is so, I think, cannot be doubtful, and if Juggodumba Dossee, having assets sufficient to meet such charges, had spent the income on her own amusements and had neglected to pay such debts as those due to the plaintiff, she might be liable to be sued by the presumptive heirs of Raj Chunder to restrain her from waste, but I argue with MITTER, J., that this would not affect the rights of a third party, such as the plaintiff, who has a valid claim against the estate, more especially in a case like the present one, where the heirs of Raj Chunder have received the amount of rent which had accrued due before the death of Juggodumba Dossee, which said amount is much more than sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim.

Prinsep, J—This is a case tried on the Original Side of this Court, which an Appellate Bench has referred for our opinion on two points involving considerations of Hindu law.

The following facts have been found, or have been admitted in the course of argument.

[833] The plaintiff, from time to time, has supplied Juggodumba (who as daughter by right of inheritance was in possession of the estate of Raj Chunder Doss) with lime for the purpose of repairing some of the houses of Raj Chunder's estate, and the lime was used for this purpose. It was the practice for Juggodumba's man of business, from time to time, to make payments to the plaintiff on this account. at Juggodumba's death moneys were due to the plaintiff for lime thus supplied and used, and he has accordingly sued the heirs of Raj Chunder Doss, who have succeeded to the estate as liable to satisfy this debt out of that estate, but at the same time he has joined as a defendant the heir of Juggodumba herself, asking as an alternative that, should relief be refused against Raj Chunder's estate, the lady's personal estate may be held liable. It further appears that there were, at the lady's death, large outstandings due in the shape of uncollected rents which formed portion of Raj Chunder's estate, these have been realised, and are in the hands of a Receiver. The plaintiff asks in the first place to be paid out of these moneys.

I agree with MITTER, J., and generally for the reasons stated by him, that the heirs of Raj Chunder Doss are liable for the debt to the plaintiff, but I would add a few observations

I will first of all consider the rights of the plaintiff as against Juggodumba as if she were now alive. On his inability to obtain a private settlement of his claims he would be entitled to obtain the assistance of the Courts by means of a suit. If he desired to make Juggodumba personally liable, that is to say, if he were satisfied with obtaining a decree against her personally, which would be enforceable only by attachment of her person, or by attachment and sale of her own personal property, that is her stridhan, he would bring the suit against her alone. But it would be open to her to reply that she was not personally liable, that her dealings with the plaintiff were as representing the estate of Raj Chunder, that the articles for which payment was sought were such as could legitimately be purchased by her in the interests of that estate; and that they were supplied and used for such purpose.

The Court would then join the reversionary heir to Raj Chunder's estate as defendant to the suit, and try the issue of the liability of that estate, or whether the widow was alone liable. If the [834] allegations made by the widow, such as I have above stated, were established, a decree would, as I understand the law, be passed declaring Raj Chunder's estate to be liable to satisfy the debt. If, however, she should fail to prove her allegations that she was not personally liable, the plaintiff would receive a personal decree against her.

But it would also be open to the plaintiff to sue the lady and the next reversionary heir together, if he desired to make his claim for payment from the estate of Raj Chunder. In that case the Court would have to determine the same points that I have just stated, as might be raised if the lady were sued alone for the money as a personal debt. It would not, as I understand the position of the parties, be for the Court to determine in such a suit the question of legal necessity, as applied to the powers of a Hindu widow to alienate some of the immoveable family property by sale, or to borrow money by creating some incumbrance on it, but simply to decide whether the articles supplied were such as could legitimately be supplied to a Hindu widow, for the purpose of enabling her to perform her duty as the temporary proprietor, and as such, borrowed to maintain the family property. Whether non-payment of such debts amounted to waste is not a matter which could be raised in that suit.

It is a matter with which the plaintiff would have no concern. His right, under the circumstances stated above, to recover the money due to him cannot be affected by the omission or refusal of the Hindu widow to pay the money due out of her current income, such conduct on her part might, however, amount to an act of waste, which would entitle the reversioner to sue her for the purpose of obtaining an adequate remedy.

The death of the lady before payment was made, does not, in my opinion, alter the rights of the plaintiff, unless we hold that he was bound to give her no credit but to require cash payments. I do not understand that this proposition is insisted on. Whether Juggodumba has been guilty of waste in her management of Raj Chunder's estate, whether, out of her ample income from this source, she should not have paid this debt before her death, are matters with which in the present suit [835] we have no concern. We have rather to consider whether the plaintiff has any claim on that estate. If he has, mere forbearance on his part in realizing the money due to him promptly would not affect his right. If the lady has, as has been suggested, been wasting that estate so as to favour the heirs of her private estate that cannot concern the plaintiff. These are matters which concern only the heirs of the respective estates in determining to which estate any funds belong. Nor do I propose to consider any hypothetical cases of the position of a reversionary heir in the event of waste on the part of a Hindu widow. If Raj Chunder's estate is liable, the plaintiff is entitled to recover from it, any waste on her part would not shift the responsibility so far as regards payment to the plaintiff, unless possibly it could be shown that by his conduct the plaintiff had connived at that waste. He has had long dealings with the family, and has not been paid in cash, but he has had his account settled at intervals, and the accident of the lady's death at a time when there was a balance due to him could not affect his position. But even if it be held that this debt should have been met out of the lady's current income—a proposition not conceded by me except for argument's sake—we have it here that at her death large sums of uncollected rents were due, more than are sufficient to meet this demand.

For these reasons I would reply to the questions put by the Appellate Bench that, under the circumstances stated, the plaintiff has a right to enforce his claim against the heirs of Raj Chunder, either generally or as against the amount of rents which accrued to Juggodumba and which remained uncollected at her death.

Garth, C.J.—As the question referred to us is peculiarly one of Hindu law, I feel some hesitation in dissenting from my brother MITTER. If I could find any authority in favour of his opinion, or any recognised principle upon which I thought it could reasonably be supported, I should be disposed to mistrust my own judgment, more especially, if I could see that any injustice would result in the majority of cases from my own view of the matter.

But as the question is admittedly now raised for the first time in a Court of law, and as there is no authority upon it, and as [836] I cannot help thinking that the position for which the plaintiff contends, will not only be inconsistent with recognised principles of Hindu law, but will give rise to a vast amount of inconvenience and litigation, I feel bound to record my own strong convictions in opposition to the views of the majority of the Court.

We have here, a Hindu lady in the enjoyment of a widow's estate in a very large property consisting in a great measure of houses in Calcutta. Her yearly income was estimated at no less than from four to five lakhs of rupees.

Her manager gives orders to the plaintiff for a quantity of lime, for the repair of these houses. The plaintiff supplies it from time to time, and is paid for it by the manager by sums on account out of the lady's income, which, of course, is very far more than sufficient to satisfy this, and every other, requirement of the estate.

There were no special terms entered into with the plaintiff. He was dealt with in the same way as any other merchant or tradesman who supplied goods or labour for the purposes of the estate by order of the lady or her manager.

Under these circumstances, it is contended that the plaintiff did not contract with the lady personally, but merely with her as representing her husband's estate for the time being, and that consequently the plaintiff, if he had sued her for the price of the lime, could not have obtained a decree against her personally, but only a decree enforceable against the estate, or, in other words, a decree under which the lady's own stridhan, if she had any, or her person, could not be taken in execution.

And, if I understand my brother MITTER rightly, such a decree could not be realised against the estate so as to affect the reversionary heirs. It could only be realised against income of the estate in her hands, or against her life interest in the property, and in case of her death after the decree was made it could not be realised against the estate in the hands of the reversionary heirs.

The consequence would be, that the creditor, having obtained such a decree, would have less security for his money than if he had contracted with the lady personally, and obtained a decree against her in the ordinary way, because, under a decree against [837] her personally, he could, not only, have proceeded against her stridhan and her person, but also, against any proceeds of the estate in her hands, or against her own life interest in the estate itself, [See Barun Dabey v. Brij Bhookan Lall Awusti (24 W. R., 307)].

The only way, so far as I can see, in which a creditor, under such circumstances, who had supplied goods upon the credit of the estate, could place himself in any better position than if he had personally contracted with the widow, would be, by suing the widow and the next reversionary heir in the same suit for the price of the goods, and having obtained a decree against both defendants, by putting up the entire estate (not only the widow's but the reversionary interest) for sale in execution, he might in this way sell the whole estate, or as much of it as would be necessary to liquidate the debt, but, of course, the reversionary heir, having notice of the proceedings, would have an opportunity, if he so pleased, of redeeming the property from sale.

In many cases, however, the reversionary heir would probably not think it worth while to redeem; as, for instance, in the case of a young widow likely to live many years, where, the reversionary heir is an old man or a bad life. In such case if the reversionary heir did not choose to redeem, the estate would be sold to the injury of the inheritance.

Now this, as it seems to me, would be allowing a widow, or any other Hindu female heir, to do indirectly precisely what the Hindu law expressly forbids, and what our Courts and their Lordships of the Privy Council have been very careful in a long series of decided cases to prevent.

If there is any point of Hindu law more clear than another, it is this, that a Hindu widow has no right to sell or charge the estate to the prejudice of the inheritance, so long as the income from the estate is sufficiently large to satisfy all its proper requirements.

In other words, in order to justify any such sale or charge, a necessity of two kinds must be shown.

1st.—A necessity for the money sought to be raised, as, for [838] instance, that it is wanted for repairs, or for paying Government revenue, or for shrads, marriages or the like, and 2nd.—That the income of the property is not sufficient to provide the requisite funds, and that consequently it is necessary to sell or mortgage.

Unless this last necessity is shown, no mortgage or sale, by a Hindu widow, is valid as against the reversionary heir.

But if the plaintiff's contention be correct, it would never be necessary in a case like the present to consider whether the income of the widow is sufficient to pay for the repairs or not, all that the widow need do, is to order the materials, or the labour, or whatever else is necessary for repairing the property, and not to pay for them. The plaintiff's remedy would then be, as I understand the plaintiff's argument is, to sue the widow and the next presumptive reversionary heir as representing the estate, and under a decree in such a suit the whole estate, or a sufficient portion of it, might be irredeemably sold, unless, the reversionary heir chose to redeem the property by paying the widow's debts out of his own money.

Meanwhile the widow may be expending the income of the estate in her own amusement, or in any way she thinks proper, and the only remedy against her, as I understand the argument is, would be by a suit by the reversionary heir to restrain her from waste, the alleged waste consisting in this, that the widow has been spending the income of the property instead of paying as she ought the creditors upon it.

But then, as it seems to me, the mischief would have been done. The sale of the property would have been completed and the interest of the reversioner would have been sacrificed.

I should have thought that if this had been the law there would surely be some cases in the books upon the subject. But not a single instance has been adduced in which a suit like the present has ever been brought against the reversioners; not one in which a decree, such as we have been discussing, against the widow as representing the estate, or against the widow and the next reversionary heirs has ever been made, and no single instance in which a suit, such as is suggested, has been brought against a widow for waste.

[839] Having regard to the numbers of cases, in which Hindu widows and other female heirs are constantly attempting to raise money by sale or mortgage of the inheritance, and the many devices which are resorted to for that purpose by mookhtears and others employed by these ladies, it is certainly remarkable, that if the law is as the plaintiff contends, we should find no single trace of it in the reports.

And, in my opinion, if this were the law, it would lead to much inconvenience and injustice; and I will proceed to explain why I think so.

If I understand my brother MITTER rightly, he considers that a contract made by a widow for goods or labour, as in the present case, would only be binding upon the estate if the goods supplied were for the purpose of repairs or other necessary expenditure for keeping up the property.

Thus, for instance, if the lime supplied by the plaintiff were required for such repairs, then the plaintiff's contract (in the absence of any special agreement to the contrary) would be made upon the credit of the estate.

But if the lime were supplied for building new houses, or for any other purpose which would amount to a necessity, the contract would be made upon the personal credit of the widow herself.

If so, it will in future be very important for contractors in the plaintiff's position, when dealing with a Hindu widow, to ascertain for what purpose the goods or labour which they supply are required. If required for one purpose, their remedy will be against the estate, if required for another, their remedy will be against the widow personally.

This very case affords a good illustration of the difficulty to which this state of the law might give rise.

Suppose, that the widow in this instance had required the lime partly for necessary repairs to her property, and partly for other purposes which would come within the category of necessities, and suppose, the order to have been given to the plaintiff, without any information as to the purpose for which the lime was required. If the plaintiff, under these circumstances, would wish to ascertain his true legal position, he must find out how [840] much of the lime was required for necessities, and how much for other purposes, and in the event of his having to sue for the price, he must shape his case accordingly.

If his proper claim is against the estate, he would have to find out who is the next reversionary heir, and to make him a defendant in the suit, and here he would expose himself to two risks, which I must say it seems to me very hard to impose upon a contractor in the plaintiff's position.

His suit would be defeated as against the alleged reversioner—

1st.—By his failing to prove that he was the next reversionary heir; and 2nd.—By its being shown that the goods were not ordered or required for necessary repairs, but for purposes which were not necessities.

It is obvious that in such a suit the alleged reversioner must be allowed to set up either or both of these defences, because, generally speaking, it would be the object of the widow to shift the burden of the debt from herself on to the estate; and whatever representations might have been made to the creditor at the time when the goods were ordered, it would be open to the reversioner to show that in point of fact the goods were not used or required for necessary repairs.

And difficulties still more serious might arise in suits, such as have been suggested, against the widow for waste.

Even assuming that the next reversionary heir lived in the neighbourhood, how could he possibly ascertain, if he was purposely kept in ignorance of the fact, whether the widow was paying her debts or not? And, again, what amount of neglect on the part of the widow to pay such debts would justify a suit for waste?

If she left them unpaid for six months or a year, or two years, would that amount to waste? Or must the reversioner wait to sue for waste, until he is actually sued for the debt, or his estate has been attached or put up for sale under a decree ?

These are all novel questions, of course, because the doctrine which gives rise to them is novel ; but I fear that if that doctrine is really to be the law of the land, we shall soon hear enough about it in the litigation which will follow.

[841] If Hindu widows find, that by shifting their debts from their own shoulders on to those of the reversionary heirs, they can manage to spend their income for their own purposes and upon their own pleasures, I am afraid that they will not be slow in availing themselves of the chances which the law affords them. And this brings us to the question, why should Hindu widows be in any different position as against tradesmen and others with whom they deal, than ladies of any other nationality who have a life estate in immoveable property ?

A European, a Mahomedan, or a Parsee lady, who has a life estate in land, contracts with tradesmen and others, as anybody else in that position would do, upon her own responsibility

The tradesman knows perfectly well that the person with whom he is dealing has only an estate for life, and if he is a wise man he looks after his own interests, and does not allow his customer to run too deeply into his debt.

There are thousands of persons in this country, officials and others, who have nothing but their salary, a life income to live upon, and their salary or income dies with them. Tradesmen and others who deal with such persons know this perfectly well, and are content to run the risk of it, and I cannot see why persons who deal with Hindu widows should be placed in any different position.

It may be, no doubt, as observed by my brother MITTER during the argument, that the legal status of a Hindu widow in former days was not so much that of a tenant for life, as of a temporary custodian of her husband's property

But that, surely, is not the state of the law now. The true nature of a widow's estate was carefully and fully discussed and considered in the Full Bench case of Kerry Kolitany v. Monceam Kolita (13 B L R., F. B., 1), and nine out of ten Judges of that Bench agreed in holding that the interest of a Hindu widow was not that of a mere custodian or trustee, but that she had an estate of inheritance in some respects larger than an ordinary estate for life under the English law.

Then why should she not be personally liable, like any other tenant for life, for goods or labour, which she orders ? And why [842] should persons contracting with her be in any worse or better position as regards their rights and remedies, than they would be as against any other tenant for life ? The question for this Full Bench is not, upon whose credit, as a matter of fact, the plaintiff contracted, that question would be one for the Division Bench, what we have to decide is this, with whom, as a matter of law, in the absence of any evidence beyond the facts found, the plaintiff contracted to supply the lime, and I am at a loss to see why a different rule should be applied to the case of a Hindu widow from that which would be applied to any other case of a tenant for life.

It may be, that in this particular instance it would be morally right that the plaintiff should be paid by the defendants, but I am strongly opposed to sacrificing principle, and introducing novel doctrines into this or any other Court in order to do justice in any particular case, and I consider that the plaintiff's contention is not only contrary to law, but that, as I have already explained, it would lead to much injustice and litigation.

There is more plausibility, and, no doubt, less danger, in the second proposition contended for by the plaintiff, but even this is very difficult to reconcile with the present state of the law.

Having regard to the discussion of their Lordships in the Privy Council in the case of Ishri Dut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 324 ; L. R., 10 I. A., 150) it is clear, that uncollected rents of a property held by a Hindu widow must belong at her death, not to her estate, but to the reversionary heirs, and, therefore, unless it could be shown that the plaintiff's debt was charged in some way or other upon these rents, it is difficult to see how they can be legally made available for its payment. If the rents were not charged with the plaintiff's debt in the widow's lifetime, it is difficult to see how they could have become so charged at her death.

An ordinary tenant for life under the English law is entitled to all rents, collected or uncollected, which became due in his or her lifetime. They belong to the estate of the life tenant and not to the reversioner.

And not only so, but by the Statute 4 & 5, William IV, c. 22, s. 2, all rents becoming due at fixed periods are made so apportion-[843]able between a tenant for life and the remainder man or reversioner, as that, on the death of the tenant for life during one of such periods, he or she is entitled to a proportionate part of the accruing rent up to the time of his or her death, and the remainder man or reversioner to the other part.

In this respect a Hindu widow is, by the present law of this country, placed at a great disadvantage, and her creditors also, because in case of her death all uncollected rents, instead of belonging to her estate, and being distributable amongst her creditors, belong to the reversionary heir.

It would undoubtedly be a very fair rule and productive, as far as I can see, of no hardship, that such uncollected rents should only be considered as belonging to the reversionary heir, subject to any debts which may have been incurred by the widow ; at any rate, debts which have been incurred by her in providing for the necessities of the family property.

But this would be such a serious qualification of the law as laid down by the Privy Council, that I, for one, do not feel justified at present in adopting such a rule.

In my opinion, therefore, the question referred to us should be answered in the negative.

It is much to be hoped, that having regard to the novelty, the importance, and the general application of this question, and the divided opinions of this Court upon it, it may be submitted, before long, either in this or some other case, for the consideration of the Privy Council.

Wilson, J.—The first question referred to us is, whether, under the circumstances stated in the reference, the plaintiff is entitled to enforce his claim against the estate of Raj Chunder Doss generally in the hands of the heirs of the latter.

I feel great hesitation in expressing an opinion upon this question at variance with that of some of my colleagues, whose experience in the administration of the Hindu law is much longer than mine. But I am unable to come to any conclusion other than that at which the Chief Justice has arrived.

I agree generally in the reasons given by the Chief Justice for that conclusion ; and I desire only to add some further considerations, which seem to me to support that view.

[844] We are asked to say whether a widow or daughter, in possession of an estate as such, who incurs a debt for necessary repairs, there being no suggestion of any deficiency at any time of income out of which to pay it, nor of any necessity to charge the inheritance; and there being no evidence of an intention on anybody's part to charge the inheritance, and no evidence of a contrary intention, is to be taken, as matter of law, to contract on her own behalf or as representing the estate.

There is nothing, I think, peculiar about repairs; whatever rule we lay down in this case, must, I conceive, apply to all contracts properly made, and all liabilities properly incurred, in relation to the estate of which the widow or daughter is in possession; in fact, to all the ordinary outgoings which in a well-managed estate make up the difference between the gross income and the net income, such as Government revenue, rent (if any), maintenance and costs of collection.

In order to answer the question, in what capacity the lady contracts, or incurs liabilities in connection with the estate? I think, we must first ask another question: In what capacity does she hold the estate? If she holds it as a trustee or manager or on behalf or for the benefit of others, it may well be inferred that she makes contracts and incurs liabilities accordingly.

If she holds it as a beneficial owner, on her own behalf, and for her own enjoyment, I think, it follows that she contracts and incurs liabilities in a like capacity.

It is, I think, now well settled that a widow or daughter in question, not as such, holds as a beneficial owner, not as a trustee; and upon this principle the question now before us seems to me to be thereby disposed of. The authorities, I think, support the same view. They deal with the case of a Hindu widow; this is, in fact, the case of a daughter. The daughter's case is certainly not one more favourable to the plaintiff's view than the widow's.

In the cases I am about to refer to, it is necessary to bear in mind that the question has arisen after decree and execution, and has related to the effect of the decree and execution, and, of course, it is one thing, to say what was the decree and what did pass under the execution sale, and another thing, to say what might or ought to have been the suit and the decree, and what might [845] or ought to have been sold in execution. But in the cases in question, as in many other classes of cases with which we are familiar, the nature and incidence of the original liability has been considered in construing the proceedings which have been employed to give effect to it.

In the case of Kistomoyee Dassce v. Prosunno Narain Chowdhry (6 W. R., 304) it appears that one of several owners of an estate paid the Government revenue upon it, and sued his co-owner for contribution.

He obtained a decree against one of them, a Hindu widow, and put up her estate for sale in execution. The defendant became the purchaser. The question was, what passed by the sale, the widow's interest or the whole estate that had been her husband's? The Court said "She was a Hindu widow in possession, and the debt contracted was by her, and her rights and interests in the property were sold." It is added: "The decree might have declared the property itself liable for the debt."

It seems to me to be held there, that the liability—a liability to contribute to Government revenue paid by a co-owner—was a personal liability of the widow; though from the nature of the liability, arising as it did from a payment made to save the whole estate, it was also a charge upon the estate. And that case is cited with approval by the Privy Council in Barjun Doobey v. Brij Bhokun Lal Awusti (L. R., 2 I.A., 279). In Mohima Chundra Roy Chowdry v. Ram Kissors Chowdry (15 B.L.R., 142), the question, again, was what passed by sales in execution of decrees against a widow. One of the decrees was in a suit for rent, the other in a suit on a bond given for arrears of rent, the rent in neither case being rent of the property sold. The rent had accrued after the death of the husband. COUCH, C J., and AINSLIE, J., held that only the widow's interest passed. Several reasons are given for this conclusion—amongst them, the want of proper parties to represent the estate. These reasons do not apply to the present case. But other reasons are given that do apply, having referred to two cases in which decrees had been obtained against widows for rent accrued during their husband's life, the Chief Justice says, what is laid down there is that where the suit is brought in respect of a debt due from the [846] husband, the decree against the widow, although it may be apparently a decree against her personally, is not to be considered as such, but as a decree against her as the representative of her husband's estate, and the decree may be executed as such. In the present case, the debt was not due from the husband, and if the estate of the husband is to be charged, either for the arrears of rent becoming due after his death, or for the bond which was given by his widow, it can only be upon the ground that the debts were necessarily contracted by the widow or under such circumstances as to make the whole estate liable, and not merely the interest of the person who contracted them. The suits were against the widow, and the decrees made in both were against her, and purported to be against her personally. The question whether the debts were necessarily incurred, so as to charge the estate, was not tried in either of the suits. It was not necessary for the plaintiff, in either of them, to prove that, in order to obtain a decree, he had a right to a decree against the widow, upon proving in the one case that the arrears of rent were due, and in the other that the bond was executed by her.

* This passage seems to me to show three things. First, that, in the opinion of the Court, the rent accruing due while the widow is in possession is a personal liability of the widow. secondly, that it cannot be made a debt against the whole estate without proof of necessity: thirdly, that the question, whether the rent is due, and the question, whether it is necessary to incur a debt in respect of it so as to charge the estate, are distinct questions.

In the note to that case is reported a case of Brij Bhookun Lall Awustee v. Mahadeo Doobey decided by LOCH and AINSLIE, JJ. In it the question was, what passed under a sale in execution of a decree against a widow for arrears of maintenance accrued due after her husband's death. It was held that the widow's interest alone passed. AINSLIE, J., in the course of the judgment says: "By the Hindu law, the claim was one to be satisfied by the holder of the property, at the time when each successive annual payment became due. I must hold that the debt was a debt incurred by Doorga Koowar (the widow) her-[847]self." He says again: "Assuming for the moment that Doorga Koowar's income from the properties of which she was tenant for life, with the right of a Hindu widow, was ample to provide for Net Koowar's allowance, as well as her own necessary expenses, it could not be asserted that there was any legal necessity sufficient to render valid an alienation by her." It is then pointed out that the maintenance, being a charge on the estate, might have been enforced against the whole estate in a suit properly framed for the purpose, and, no doubt, it might, the charge being prior to the widow's estate.

That case came on appeal before the Privy Council (L. R., 2 I. A., 275), and the judgment of this Court was affirmed. Their Lordships examine the form as well as the substance of all the proceedings. They consider, amongst other things, the nature and incidence of the original debt, and, as it seems to me, they treat this as one of the elements in the decision of the case. They say: "This was a personal debt of the widow, and there is nothing to show that the estate of Mudden Mohun (the husband) was charged by the decree. The sale against her in discharge of her personal liability was of the interest which belonged to her, and not of the estate which belonged to her husband. It was the widow's property only that was liable to be sold, or was sold, in discharge of her personal debt." And, again, they speak of the view which their Lordships have taken of this decree, that it was a decree in a suit against the widow personally, that the decree was against her personally; that the attachment was to sell her property, that is, the interest which belonged to her in the estate and which was liable to make good her default. That judgment has been again explained by the same tribunal in the recent case of Jogul Kisor v. Moharajah Jotendro Mohun Tagore (No. 51 of 1881 and No. 2 of 1882, dated 13th March 1884, unrep.).

These authorities seem to me to show, that a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate is personally bound by the contracts she makes, and the liabilities she incurs in respect of matters properly payable out of revenue.

Secondly, that some of these charges may, from their own [848] nature, also be charges on the inheritance, and may be enforced as such in a suit properly framed for the purpose

Thirdly, that the widow cannot by any act of her's throw upon the inheritance liabilities properly her own, except in case of necessity.

Fourthly, that necessity means for this purpose not merely a necessity to make a payment, but a necessity for want of funds to pay it with, for throwing it upon the inheritance.

It is right, perhaps, to say, for the sake of caution, that I am not now dealing with the nature of the proof of necessity, or of enquiry into its existence, to be required. That subject has been dealt with by the Privy Council in Hunnooman Persaud Panday v. Babooe Munraj Koonweree (6 Moo. I. A., 393); Kameshwar Pershad v. Run Bahadur Singh (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 843).

I have not found any authority for the proposition contended for in argument that all the legitimate liabilities, incurred by a Hindu widow in the management of her estate, are incurred by her as representative of the estate.

A case was cited from Macnaghten's Precedents, chap. X, case VIII, page 283. The question referred to the Pundits was as to the liability of the reversionary heir of a deceased proprietor to pay a debt incurred by the widow of the latter while in possession of her husband's estate. The answer is, supposing the proprietor, a widow, who succeeded him, to have contracted the debt for the payment of rent due to Government or other necessary disbursement to save the estate, or for the purpose of promoting her husband's spiritual welfare, or for the support of the family, or for the due execution of any conditions made by her husband, and to have died prior to the liquidation of such debt, the proprietor's heirs, that is, his brother and brother's son are bound to discharge the debt; and if the amount was borrowed for the purpose of being appropriated to any other purposes than those specified, such debt must be satisfied by him who becomes possessed of her jewels and other moveable property. The question and answer are, as usual, brief and general in their terms. If we assume that they had to do with the case of a debt [849] necessarily incurred (and we may quite as reasonably assume this as the reverse) the law laid down is quite in accord with the more recent authorities.

A case is reported in the note to Mohima Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Ram Kishore Achorage Chowdhry (15 B. L. R., 143, n; 12 W. R., 504) decided by DWARKANATH MITTER and HOBHOUSE, JJ. It has been pointed out by the Privy Council, in Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lal Awusti (L. R., 2 I. A., 281), that the decision in that case has no bearing upon any such question as the present, for it was a case of the sale of a tenure. But MITTER, J., in his judgment does use the expression, "the rent due to the zamindar cannot, under any circumstances, be treated as a personal debt of the widow." COUCH, C.J., in the case already cited (15 B. L. R., 143, n; 12 W. R., 504), at pp. 158, 159, points out that if these words referred to rent accrued after the death of the husband, and if they were pressed to the fullest extent of meaning which they might seem capable of bearing, they would be inconsistent with the Privy Council decision in Nugender Chunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dossee (11 Moore's I. A., 241). They would, if so pressed, certainly, I think, be inconsistent with the later Privy Council case which I have already cited.

There is another consideration which seems to me worthy of attention, namely, that the view taken by the Chief Justice of the question before us, and in which I concur, keeps the law upon this matter, strictly in harmony with the law upon the kindred subject of the widow's right to sell or mortgage.

I cannot see any principle of distinction satisfactory to my mind between the widow's power to charge the inheritance by a mortgage to meet a demand which cannot be postponed, such as Government revenue, and her power to charge the inheritance by obtaining credit in respect of a demand of a less stringent character, like the cost of materials for repairs. The view which we take places the two things on the same footing. According to the view contended for by the plaintiff they stand on quite a different footing. Necessity must be shown in the one case, and not in the other.

* [850] Another question, bearing upon this part of the case, was discussed before us. Whether given a case of necessity, an obligation incurred by a widow ipso facto binds the estate, or whether it is necessary further to show in some way that the estate was in fact charged at, or at least, that at the time of the transaction, the parties intended that credit should be given to the estate as distinguished from the widow and the widow's interest. Three cases were cited, which are not quite in accord Ram Koomar Mitter v. Ichamoyi Das (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 36); Gudgappa Desai v. Apaji Jivandrao (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 237), Ramasami Mudahar v. Selattammal (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 375). That question seems to me not necessarily to arise in this case.

For the reasons I have stated, in addition to those given by the Chief Justice, I would answer the first question referred in the negative.

The second question, whether the plaintiff has a right to enforce his claim against the rents due and uncollected at the death of Juggodumba, ought also, I think, to be answered in the negative. I apprehend we must understand the question as limited to this suit, and as asking whether the plaintiff can in this suit enforce his claim as suggested. I do not see how he can do so upon any view of the case.

If this be a debt binding the heirs, then the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for his money and can execute it against the estate in their hands. But he is not entitled to a decree charging the debt upon any particular property.

* If this is not a debt of the heirs, but of the deceased lady, and if these outstanding rents pass to the heirs simply, then I do not see how the plaintiff can succeed against them, unless he shows that his debt is charged upon these rents. But when did it become charged and how?

It was not a charge in Juggodumba's lifetime. She was free to spend those rents as she pleased and to make what arrangement she pleased for the payment of the plaintiff's debt.

A third view has been suggested, namely, that these rents are applicable in the first place to pay Juggodumba's debts of the class to which the plaintiff's belongs, and that only the [851] balance properly passes to the heirs. This view certainly has much to commend it on grounds of justice. But if it be correct, I do not see how we can give any effect to it in this suit. If these rents are liable to all or any class of the debts of Juggodumba, either in relief or in addition to the general assets of her estate, they may be made available for that purpose by a suit brought by the proper parties, that is to say, by the heirs of Juggodumba, who are charged with the administration of that estate and the payment of those debts.

It was stated during the argument, and, I think, admitted, that a decree has been made for the administration of Juggodumba's estate. If so, and if these rents are applicable to the payment of her debts or any other, they must, I think, be brought under the control of the Court in the administration suit.

And the Court can in that suit direct any such supplemental or ancillary proceedings as may be necessary for the purpose

[DEBTS OF THE QUALIFIED OWNER BINDING THE INHERITANCE—

In (1889) 16 Cal., 511, a decree was obtained against the holder of a life-estate for arrears of rent accruing during her lifetime. It was held by PRINSEP and WILSON, JJ., that on her death the decree could be executed only against any personal property of hers and not against the estate. The case of 10 Cal., 823, was distinguished on the ground of the contract there having been entered into under "circumstances such as were held by the majority of the Judges to bind the ancestral estate." See also 17 C. W. N., 337. In (1901) 26 Bom., 206 (F.B.). 3 Bom., L.R., 738 it was held that the trade debts, properly incurred by a widow on the credit of the assets of the business to which she has succeeded as the heiress of her deceased husband, are recoverable after her death out of the assets of the business as against the reversioners who have succeeded thereto, even in the absence of a specific charge. Limitation Act XV of 1877, art. 179, (cl. 4), sch. II—Step in aid of execution—Application for proclamation of sale.

An application to a Court to issue a proclamation of sale in respect of property already attached in execution of a decree, is an application, within the meaning of clause 4 of art. 179, sch. II, of Act XV of 1877, "to take some steps in aid of execution of the decree "

THIS was a reference made on the 7th February 1884 to a Full Bench by TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ. The order of reference was as follows :—

This is an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpur by which he overruled the judgment-debtors' plea that execution of a decree against them, dated the 4th of May 1877, was barred by limitation.

[852] The application for execution was made on the 11th April 1883, a previous one having been made in due form on the 10th June 1879.

The lower Court held that limitation was saved by an application made on the 1st of May 1880, for the issue of a proclamation of sale in respect of certain property then under attachment in pursuance of the formal application of the 10th of June 1879.

The judgment-debtors contended that the attachment was no longer subsisting, and that, therefore, the application of 1st May 1880 was not one in accordance with law.

The lower Court erroneously supposed that the case was governed by the repealed Limitation Act IX of 1871, because the decree was made before that Act was repealed. But it is quite clear to us that Act XV of 1877, which came into force and repealed the former Act on and from the 1st of October 1877, must be applied to this case. The decree-holder's position, however, appears to us to be stronger under the present Act than under Act IX of 1871, so that the change in the law does not affect the correctness of the decision of the point in question. The attachment having been held to be still subsisting on the 1st of May 1880, if the application of that date for the issue of a sale-proclamation was an application to the Court to take some step in aid of execution of the decree, within the meaning of art. 179, sch. II, then undoubtedly the present application of the 11th April 1883 being within three years was in time.

* Full Bench Reference on Miscellaneous Appeal No. 283 of 1883 from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpur, dated the 9th June 1883.

That this was so, we should not have had the least hesitation in holding, for our opinion is clear on the point, but for the decision, laid before us, of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Joobraj Singh v. Buhooria Alumbasee Koer (7 C. L. R., 424). In that case, which was also governed by Act XV of 1877, the learned Judges held that an application to the Court to sell attached property did not fall under art. 179, but under art. 178.*

We consider it so clear that such an application does in fact ask the Court to take a step in aid of execution of the decree, and that it is a step essential to execution, that we are wholly unable [853] to assent to the ruling laid before us; and we are unable materially to distinguish the present case from that before the Court on that occasion. We think we cannot with propriety decide the case before us in a manner contrary to that which has once been declared by this Court to be correct, and which has been published as such; and we accordingly feel bound to submit the case for the decision of a Full Bench; the question being whether an application to the Court to issue a proclamation of sale in respect of property already attached in execution of the applicants' decree is an application within the meaning of art. 179, sch. II, Act XV of 1877, to the Court to take some step in aid of execution of the decree.

Mr. Handley (with him Mr. Tvidale and Baboo Anund Gopaul Palit) for the Appellant.

On the 11th July 1879 the property was attached, and the judgment-debtor obtained a postponement of the sale on the 22nd August for six months, the attachment remaining in force. After the expiry of the six months, the decree-holder took no steps to execute the decree until the 1st May 1880, when he applied to have the sale proclamation issued, and his present application is dated the 11th April 1883. I submit the issue of a proclamation of sale does not come within clause 4 of art. 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act at all. If it does come within clause 4, time runs from 1st May 1880; and, if not, time runs from the 11th July 1879, and the application therefore made on the 11th April 1883 would be out of time. The lower Appellate Court have held that limitation was saved by the application of 1st May 1880, unless Act XV of 1879 extends the meaning of art. 167 of Act IX of 1871, there is nothing to point out that such an application as the present is within the Limitation Act. The case of Chunder Coomar Roy v. Bhogobutty Prosonno Roy (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 235, 1 C. L. R., 23) lays down that "an application to enforce a decree" does not include applications of an incidental kind. There was no need for the judgment-creditor to have made an application for the proclamation of sale; the issuing of it should have been done by the Court as a matter of course, it being one of the ministerial duties of the Court to do so. The Code of Civil Procedure no-[854]where provides for such an application by the judgment-creditor. As to what kind of application falls within the words of the Limitation Act—see Joobraj Singh v. Buhooria Alumbasee Koer

* [Art. 178 :—

Description of application.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
Applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule, or by the Code of Civil Procedure, section 230	Three years	When the right to apply accrues]

(7 C. L. R., 424); Govind Chunder Goswami v. Rungunmoney (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 61); Kylasa Goundan v. Ramasami Ayyan (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 172); Vithal Janardan v. Vithojirav Putla Jirav (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 586) lays down that the Limitation Act does not apply to application to a Court to do what it has no discretion to refuse, nor to the exercise of functions of a ministerial character. In Ishwardas Jaggiwandis v. Dosibai [I. L. R., 7 Bom., 316 (322)] the Judges agree with the two last cited cases. It is true that in Radha Prosad Singh v. Sundur Lall (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 644) the Court held that the deposit of nilamee fees was a step in aid of execution, but Torce Mahomed v. Mahomed Mabood Bux (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 730) lays down the contrary. In Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Sundari Debya (10 C. L. R., 272) an application by a judgment-creditor to receive a sum deposited in Court is held not to be "a step in aid of execution." There is, however, a ruling to the contrary, viz., Venkatarayalu v. Narasimha (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 174).

Nor do the sections in the Civil Procedure Code show that the issue of such a proclamation is a necessary application at all, or is the proclamation a matter which the Court should, as a matter of course, of its own accord see done? Sections 230 and 235 are to be conformed to by the judgment-creditor. Sections 245, 248, 249, 286 and 287 are to be conformed to by the Courts; the different matters required by these last sections are the duty of the Court and not of the judgment-creditor. Not one of these sections lay down that an application for proclamation of sale shall be made by the judgment-creditor, that being so, can it therefore be said that the application made on the 1st May 1880 is "a step taken in aid of execution."

Mr. O. C. Mullick and Baboo Durga Mohun Das for the Respondents were not called upon.

The Opinion of the Full Bench, which was as follows, was delivered by [855] Garth, C.J.—I think it clear that in this case the application made by the decree-holder on the 1st of May 1880 for the issue of a sale proclamation was an application "to take some step in aid of execution" within the meaning of clause 4 of art. 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

The language of that clause is somewhat more comprehensive than that of clause 4 of art. 167 of the Limitation Act of 1871, but under either Act I should consider that the application, which is the subject of the present reference, was not barred by time.

I think it very probable that the construction which was put upon the latter clause in the case of Jooobraj Singh v. Buhoora Alumbasee Koer (7 C. L. R., 424) may have been induced by the language of the Full Bench judgment in the case of Chunder Coomar Roy v. Bhogobutty Prosonno Roy (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 235; 1 C. L. R., 23).

It was said, I observe, in that judgment that the words "applying to enforce the decree" in art. 167 of the Limitation Act of 1871 meant the application (under s. 212 of the Code) by which proceedings in execution are commenced, but as I myself took part in that decision, and, in fact, delivered the judgment of the Court, I am enabled to say that this language was unduly narrow, and that it was used with reference to the particular point which was then under discussion.

That point was, whether the payment into Court of the costs of a proclamation of sale by challan within the three years, coupled with an application for sale, which was made beyond the three years, was in itself the meaning of clause 4 of art. 167 of the Act of 1871.

The Full Bench held that it was not, and it was with reference to this question that the judgment was pronounced. But there is no doubt, as I have said before, that the language of our judgment might well have been misconstrued.

I think it clear that under either Limitation Act, but certainly under the Act of 1877, an application, such as was made in the present case, is an application either "to enforce the decree" or "to take some step in aid of execution."

[886] The point that Mr. Handley, who appeared for the appellant in this case, did his best to impress upon us was this : that the application to issue a proclamation being unnecessary by law, was no application at all. He contended that under s. 287 of the Code, the Court itself was bound to have issued the proclamation, without any action being taken on the part of the decree-holder.

But in this, I think, he is in error, notwithstanding that the attachment had issued, the proceedings from time to time for the purpose of enforcing the sale must always be, and, as a matter of practice, always are, initiated by the decree-holder.

The Court cannot ascertain of its own motion what the wishes of the decree-holder are, or what portion of the property he desires to sell, unless an application is made for that purpose.

As the rest of the Court are also of opinion that the application is not barred, and as this appears to be the only question in the case, we think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[Following this case, it was held that the following were sufficient steps in aid of execution to keep the decree alive. —

An application for the sale of property under attachment then proceeding —(1889) 17 Cal., 53, (1890) 15 Bom., 405; (see also 12 M L.J., 24).

An application for execution by arrest without a prayer to issue notice under sec. 248, C. P. C., 1882 when more than one year had elapsed from the date of the decree, (1909) 10 C. L. J., 19; 'batta memorandum' for the issue of sale proclamation, distinguishing 25 Bom., 639, where there was no application oral or written (1905) 28 Mad., 399, see also (1897) 22 Bom., 722; (1895) 23 Cal., 374; payments by Collector in whose management the estate was placed, (1894) 19 Bom., 261.

Compare with these, the following —

"In some cases, it may be possible to determine by reference merely to the nature of the step which the Court is invited to take, whether it will or will not aid the execution. For example (see 10 Cal., 851) * * * On the other hand, as observed in 20 Cal., 255, 27 Cal., 285, when a decree-holder asks the Court for the postponement of a sale, he invites the Court to take a step which, if taken, does not aid but rather retard the execution. But, there may be cases in which the step which the Court is invited to take may be of an ambiguous or neutral character, if considered apart from the surrounding circumstances, and the granting of leave to a judgment-creditor to bid at an execution sale appears to me to fall within this class of cases," per MOOKERJEE, J. in (1905) 3 C. L. J., 240. 10 C. W. N., 209.

An application by a decree-holder who has purchased a property in execution of his own decree, for confirmation of the sale, is not an application to take some steps in aid of execution of the decree, (1904) 31 Cal., 1011.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th June, 1884.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Ram Charan Buhardar and others.....Plaintiffs

versus

Reazuddin and others.....Defendants.*

Res judicata—Issue advisedly left undecided in former suit.

In 1878 A, as the auction-purchaser of a taluq, sued 35 persons for possession of a part of this taluq. In this suit the issues raised were—(1) whether A had purchased the whole taluq, or an eight-anna share of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors therein ; (2) as to the correctness of the boundaries of the taluq as given in the plaint. The Court held that A had purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the taluq, and as it appeared that some of the defendants were not judgment-debtors, and as it did not appear what portions of the taluq were held by the several defendants, the Lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit within the proper time.

[557] In 1880 A brought a fresh suit against 16 of the same defendants and 19 others, for possession of a portion of the same taluq. The issues raised were—(1) whether the suit was barred under s. 13 of the Code, (2) whether A had purchased the whole or a portion of the taluq ; (3) whether the defendants were in possession of all the disputed land, and, if not, what portions of the taluq were held by the several defendants, (4) as to the correctness of the boundaries of the taluq.

The Munsiff held that the suit was not barred, and on the merits gave A a decree. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred, and refused to go into the merits.

Held that the question, whether A had purchased the whole or only a portion of the taluq, was res-judicata, but that the question, as to to what lands A was entitled to by virtue of his purchase having been left undecided in the former suit, A was entitled to a decision on that point.

In 1878 one Ram Charan Buhardar, as the auction-purchaser of a certain taluq, sued 35 persons for possession of a part of this taluq, from which he had been dispossessed.

The issues framed in this suit, were—

(1) Whether the plaintiff purchased the whole taluq in suit and obtained possession of three kanis of land only, the remainder being held and possessed by the defendants without right ; or whether the plaintiff purchased an eight-anna share of the taluq, and the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors therein ?

(2) Has the plaintiff given correct boundaries of the taluq in suit, or has he wrongly included lands of various other taluqs in his plaint ?

Evidence was taken, and the Munsiff found that the plaintiff had not purchased the tenure itself, but only the right, title, and interest of his judgment-debtors therein; and that as the plaintiff had failed to prove the specific lands held by the judgment-debtors, he dismissed the suit "without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to bring a fresh suit for possession of the lands of the taluq in suit distinctly ascertained." The plaintiff appealed against the decision, but the judgment of the lower Court was upheld by the Subordinate Judge.

On the 13th August 1880, Ram Charan Buhardar brought a fresh suit in the same character against 30 defendants, for possession of 14 plots, which he alleged belonged to the taluq he had purchased [858] Sixteen of these defendants contended that the suit was barred by the former suit of 1878, which had been brought against them and 19 others. The issues framed in this suit were—

- (1) Whether the suit is barred as res judicata ?
- (2) Whether the plaintiff has purchased the entire tenure or a portion of the taluq, and if the latter, what is the share purchased by him ?
- (3) Whether the defendants were in possession of all the disputed lands, and, if not, what portion of what plot is in whose possession ?
- (4) Whether the boundaries of the disputed land are correct ?
- (5) Whether the defendants obstructed the plaintiff in taking possession of the land ?

The Munsif found that the first suit was dismissed for "misjoinder and non-joinder," and that the subject-matter in issue had not been finally heard and determined so as to bar the second suit, and that therefore the plea of "res judicata" failed, and on the merits he found that the plaintiff had purchased the entire taluq, and he, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the suit was barred under s 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, and refused to go into the other issues

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Ratneswar Sen for the Respondents

The Judgment of the High Court was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—In this case the plaintiff sued for possession of certain lands on the allegation that they appertained to a certain taluq, which he had purchased at an auction sale in execution. The defence raised several pleas, one of which was that the suit was barred by res judicata. The first Court overruled this plea and decided the case upon its merits. The lower Appellate Court, however, has held that the plea of res judicata is fatal, and has dismissed the suit on that ground.

The plaintiff appeals to this Court

Now, what appears to have taken place in the former suit [859] is this. In 1878 the present plaintiff framed his plaint on somewhat similar allegations to those in the present case, and the issues framed in that suit related—(1) to the extent of the rights which the plaintiff had actually acquired by his purchase; and (2) to the correctness of the description of the lands sought to be recovered. As to the first point, the Munsif decided that the plaintiff had purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the entire taluq. But as to the second point, inasmuch as it appeared that some of the defendants, who were part owners of the taluq, and who were proved to be in exclusive possession of specific portions thereof, were not judgment-debtors, and as the plaintiff had not excluded the lands held by those defendants from the property described in his plaint, the Court found itself unable to give the plaintiff any relief, and accordingly dismissed the suit "without prejudice to plaintiff's bringing a fresh suit for possession of the lands of the taluq in suit distinctly ascertained."

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed, and the Subordinate Judge seems to have come to much the same conclusion as the Munsif. He found that the plaintiff could not get khas possession, as he had not specified the lands which were exclusively in the share of the judgment-debtors, and that he could not get a decree for joint possession with the other part owners, because he had not specified the extent of the shares of his judgment-debtors. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal with the remark: "According to the circumstances of the case the plaintiff can bring a fresh suit properly within time."

The effect of the former litigation, therefore, was this. It established the fact, as against some of the defendants in that suit, that the plaintiff had purchased the rights of his judgment-debtors in the entire taluq, and not only in an eight-anna share thereof, and so far that decision is res judicata. But on the further and more important point, viz., as to what lands plaintiff was entitled to possession of by virtue of his purchase, the Courts found themselves unable to come to a decision by reason of errors of form in the frame of the suit. They, therefore, refrained from deciding that point, and left it to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit, framed in such a manner that the Court might be able to [860] grant the relief sought. It may be that in the former suit both Courts ought, properly speaking, to have insisted on proper issues being raised, and to have tried those issues upon the best evidence that the parties could adduce. But we are not prepared to say that the course taken by those Courts was ultra vires. They considered, rightly or wrongly, that they were not in a position to try the main question in the cause, and it is clear that a question, which was advisedly left undecided in the former suit, cannot be said to have been heard and finally decided within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code.

As we understand, the plaintiff has now come into Court "with a plaint corrected according to what the Munsif had shown to be essential to his success," and the first Court has been able to give a decree upon that plaint.

The lower Appellate Court has refused to try the case upon its merits, having found the issue as to res judicata against the plaintiff. We think that this judgment must be set aside, and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court for trial of the remaining issues. The costs of this appeal will follow the result.

Case remanded.

PRIVY COUNCIL

The 21st February, 1884.

PRESENT :

SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Gurudas Pyne and Ram Narain Sahu.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Limitation Act, IX of 1871, sch. II, arts. 48, 60 and 118.

The defendant, as an agent, sold goods entrusted to him by his principal, who died after a decree had been made against him for their conversion ; and, as agent for the representative of the deceased, retained the proceeds, which the decree-holder had an equitable right to follow in the agent's hands. Held, that neither Art. 48* of sch II of act IX of 1871, fixing the limitation of three years to suits for moveable property acquired by dishonest misappropriation or conversion, nor art 60 † of the same schedule, fixing the limitation of three years to suits for " money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff," and to suits for " money received to the plaintiff's use," were applicable to the present suit, but that, as a suit for [861] which no period of limitation was provided elsewhere, it fell within art 118 ‡ of the same schedule, fixing for such suits the limitation of six years APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (4th July 1878), reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of the Midnapore District (12th September 1876).

The questions raised in this appeal related to the law of limitation under Act IX of 1871, to a claim for the proceeds of the sale of goods, wrongfully converted by a deceased person, against whom a decree had been obtained on that cause of suit, such proceeds being in the hands of the defendant, who held them as agent for the representative of the deceased.

* [Art. 48 -

Description of suit	Period of limitation	Time when period begins to run.
For moveable property acquired by theft, extortion, cheating or dishonest misappropriation or conversion.	Three years ..	When the property is demanded and refused]

† [Art. 60 :—

For money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff, for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use.	Three years ..	When the money is received.]
---	----------------	------------------------------

‡ [Art. 118 :—

Suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule.	Six years	When the right to sue accrues.]
--	-----------	---------------------------------

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the Appellant, the defendant in the suit, on whose behalf he contended that the sale, having taken place in 1870, and the suit having been brought in 1876, the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation under art. 48, or art. 60, of the second schedule of Act IX of 1871, the law of limitation then in force.

The Respondents did not appear.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the High Court ought to be affirmed.

It appears that, as far back as March 1865, Modhoosoodun, who was the brother of the present appellant, had taken some 1,260 logs of timber which belonged to the plaintiffs, and converted them to his own use. Soon after that a suit No. 10 of 1865 was brought by the plaintiffs against Modhoosoodun and another for the conversion of the timber, and a decree was obtained on the 30th March 1868, for the sum of Rs 25,200, in favour of the plaintiffs. That decision was appealed from to the High Court, which, in January 1869, reversed the decree. An appeal was preferred to Her Majesty in Council, and on the 12th December 1873 the decision of the High Court was reversed, and the decree of the first Court established, namely, that the plaintiffs were to recover a sum of Rs. 25,200 from Modhoosoodun and the other defendant. In the meanwhile Modhoosoodun had died, and the decree in the Privy Council was against his widow, as his representative, that the Rs 25,200 [862] should be recovered from her. Subsequently an application was made to the District Court of Midnapore to execute the decree, and certain property was attached which the present appellant claimed as his separate property. Only a very small portion of it was held liable to the decree, and the rest was ordered to be given up. Upon that, the present suit was instituted for the purpose of trying whether the plaintiffs had not a right to execute their decree against the property mentioned in the attachment, and which had been ordered to be given up. The plaintiffs, however, did not rely merely on the fact that they had obtained the decree, and that the property was liable to be seized, but they made a further allegation, and stated that "Gurudas Pyne," the present appellant, and the defendant in the suit, "was benefited by the aforesaid timber taken by the Kurta Modhoosoodun, and, after the death of Modhoosoodun, himself sold the aforesaid timbers, and appropriated the moneys obtained by the sale of the aforesaid timbers, and regularly conducted the aforesaid case. Both the brothers are, for the reasons mentioned above, answerable under the decree we have obtained in the aforesaid case for the aforementioned acts, although the name of Modhoosoodun alone was mentioned in that decree, and therefore we are fully entitled to realize the whole amount by the sale of the properties of both the brothers." Strictly speaking, the claim was to realize the decree from the property of the defendant. The first Court held that a portion of the property which was claimed by the defendant was liable to the execution, but that a great portion of it was not. Upon that an appeal was preferred by the plaintiffs to the High Court, and notice of objections was given by the defendant. The High Court held that, notwithstanding the sale of the timber by the defendant, and his receipt of the assets which were derived from the sale, he was not liable to have his property attached and sold under the execution against his brother: but they went on, and said: "But although the plaintiffs have been ill-advised in bringing their suit in the particular form adopted by them, and though we are unable to give them the particular form of relief desired, we think, that on the facts proved, we ought, if we can, and that we are able to grant them such relief as they [863] would have been entitled to obtain on a properly drawn plaint." It is quite clear that in this case the plaintiffs did rely in their plaint upon the fact that the defendant had sold the timber, and had received the proceeds.

That the defendant understood the plaint as intending to make him liable is clear, for in his answer he says "Afterwards the case of the plaintiffs was dismissed by the Honourable High Court, and an order being passed to release the timbers from attachment, I, according to the permission of Moti Dasi"—that is, the widow of Modhoosoodun—"sold the timbers and paid her the moneys that were realized by the sale of the timbers, and took a receipt, and she repaid me the moneys I had expended. But the plaintiffs, notwithstanding these facts, are unjustly placing upon me the liability by falsely alleging that I, as a sharer, conducted the aforesaid suit, and that I myself took the moneys realized by the sale of the timbers" He knew that the plaintiffs intended to make him liable because he had taken the moneys realized by the sale of the timbers. It is found by the first Court, that "the payment of money to Moti Dasi being disproved, it must be presumed to be in the hands of the defendant, who is the active male member of the house" Therefore, according to that finding, the money, which was the proceeds of the sale of the timber, was in the defendant's hands, and the plaintiff by his plaint showed that he intended to make the defendant responsible, because he had got the assets which were produced from the sale of the timber.
